

71--

Library of the Theological Seminary.

PRINCETON, N. J.

Collection of Puritan Literature

Division

SC1

Section

Number

1024

SERMONS
of Master Iohn Caluin, vpon the Booke of IOB.

* Translated out of French
by Arthur Golling.

IMPRINTED
BY LVCAS HARISON AND GEORGE BYSHOP.

TO THE RIGHT HO-NORABLE AND HIS SPECIAL
GOOD LORD, ROBERT ERLE OF LEY-CESTER, BARON OF DENBYGH, KNIGHT OF THE MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER, ONE

OF THE QUEENES MAIESTIES MOST HONORABLE priue Counsell, &c. Grace, mercie, peace and truthe in Christe.

L men can skill to complayne vvith Iob, that this short life of ours is fraught vvith many miseries, afflictions, and aduerſities, and verie experience ſheveth it to be ſo. For vve ſee dayly in others and feele alſo in ourſelues, the continual perils and croſſes that beſeege vs and perce vs to the hart, euen from the time of our birth too the giuing vp of our laſt gasp. VVe find them painful, irkſome and tedious to vs, and therefore vvee vvould faine ſhift them of. But in the meane vvhyle, do vve looke vp to the hand that ſmiteth vs? do vvee conſider the cauſes vvhy they belayd vpon vs? do vve ſeeke out the ends vvhervnto they tend? or haue vve an eye to the fruts and effects of them? Nay rather degenerating into a kind of brutiſhneſſe and hanging our heads groueling downe to the groundward, wee eyther imagin them to growe out of the earth, or impute them to the influence of the ſkies, or father the vvpon fortune, or attribute them vnto men, or vvite the vvpon the vnhappineſſe of the time, or tie the to the place, or finally ſtand amazed at the afflictions themſelues, ſurmizing any thing rather thã the truthe, as vvho ſhould ſay that God eyther could not or vvould not gouerne all things by his only vvill and prouidence, vvich is as much as to denie that there is any God at all. By reaſon vvherof vve ſeldome or neuer enter into ourſelues to conſider our ovvne ſtate and the ineſtimable goodneſſe of our God, to think hovv iuſtly vve haue deſerued too bee ſcourged for our ſinnes, and hovv fatherly he dealth vvith vs in clenſing the corruption of our infected nature, and in ſhevving the perfectneſſe of his mightie povver in theſe frayle earthen veſſels of our vveake and mortall bodies. None of theſe things do we take heede of: and therefore much leſſe do we looke ſo farre afore vs, as to conſider that the end vvhy God ſcourgeth vs, iſt to bring vs backe againe to him by repentance, that he myght ſheve himſelf a mercifull father to vs, and heape vp his benefits and graciouſe giſts vvpon vs, too our greater comfort. VVe conſider not that the end of vvorldly afflictions is alvvayes happie too ſuch as feare him, and that the ſhort induring of the troubles of this life, procureth an ineſtimable vvweight of glorie in the life to come. Finally vvee conſider not that God being our maker and gouernor, hath by good right a ſoueraine dominion ouer vs and al other his creatures, too order and diſpoze vs at his good vvill and pleaſure, and that the ſame his doing is vvrought by incompreheſible, povver, vvifdome, and rightfuſneſſe, ſo as there cannot iuſtly arrie fault or blame be found in any of his proceedings. By meanes vvherof it commeth to paſſe, that if he giue vs eaſe and proſperitie, vve be ſo farre of from thãkfulneſſe for the ſame, that vve mount vv into pryde, and not only ſtep forth to diſdeyning and ſkorning of thoſe to vvho he hath giuen leſſe abilitie: but alſo procede to the vtter forgetting & deſpiſing of his maieſtie, as though vve had al things of our ſelues, & vv ere not beholding to him for any thing. And if he touch vs eyther in our goods, bodie, name or other vvviſe to our miſſyking: then eyther vve ſtorme, chaſe and fret againſt him, (ſpecially if vve ſee not an apparant cauſe of his doings) vvherin vvee blaſpheme him by accusing him indirecťly of vn-rightuouſeneſſe: or elſe vve fal into deſpaire, thinking it vnpoſſible for vs to ſcape out of the preſent daunger, vvherin vve bereue him of his cheef glorie, vvich is to ſhevv mercie by perſeuering the afflicted, and by rayſing vp ſuch as are vnder foote. Thus (as much as in vs is) vvee vtterly ſhake off his yoke, taking him to be nother our father nor our God. Heerby it is manifeſt, that vvheras euery of vs hath the name of patience in his mouth, fewe knowe vvhat right patience

a. 11.

is, and

THE EPISTLE

is, and in maner none at all doo put it in vre. Some think it too be a stout bearing out of aduersities without admitting anie greef or hartbyting for the same. And other some take it to be a yeelding to the present affliction vpon hope too outvveare it by length of tyme. But none of these tvwayne is the true patience, vvhich is allowved of God, and meete to be in a Christen man, as vwill appeere to the diligent reader of this present vvoork. For the one is but a lingering in distresse vwithout certaintie of good issue, and the other is but a dulling and amazing of the senses, to make mannes nature more stubborne against Gods hand, vvhich is too stubborne of it selfe alreadye. God therefore knowving the frovvardnesse of mankind, & minding eyther to bring vs home to himselfe or to leaue vs vutterly vnexcusable: doeth in this booke purposely aboute al other parts of the holie Scripture, bothe defend his ovvne Maiestie in mainteyning his ryghtful soueraintie ouer al his creatures: & also set dovvn a perfect paterne of patiēce, conteyning the due obedience and subiectiō of the creature too his maker. These are the tvvoo cheef points vvherypon the vvhole booke of Iob is grounded. In the discourse vvheryof, there is shewed the incessant desirousnesse and indeuer of Satan too bring man too destruction: and mannes vnabilitie too stand against him, vwithout the speciall providence and protection of God. VWhereof, the first vvatneth vs too stand alvvayes vpon our gard, that vvee be not surprized by our so suttle and cruell enimie: and the other bereeneth vs of all selftrust, driuing vs to seeke our refuge and succour novvhere else but in God. And too the intent vvee may the more vwillingly suffer all crosses, and take all things in good vvoorth at Gods hand: it is shewed that God neuer forsaketh vs in our troubles, but vpholdeth and maynteyneth vs euen in our vutermoste extremities, by a secret and incomprehensible vvoorking, not alvvayes seene of the vvorlde, nor presently perceyued of ourselues: and that his affliction of vs is not for anye hatred or ill vvill of purpose to destroy vs, but of a fatherly louing-kindnesse, to make vs knowve better bothe our selues and him, vvhich is the soueraine goodnesse and perfect felicitie and therefore that he alvvayes giueth them a happie end, to our singular vvelfare and saluation, making vs to triumph victoriously ouer sin, death, hell, the diuell, damnation, our selues and all the assaults of the vvorlde, through the tryal of our fayth, vvhich by that meanes becommeth more fine and precieuse than golde. Again, to the end that the vvicked may not think theselues to haue sped the better by Gods long forbearing of thē, and by their hardening of their harts against his manaces, and vvarnings: it is told them, that the longer that God vvinketh at thē, the heauyer his hand vwill be vpon thē, and that vvheras these temporall afflictions are but svvete chastizements and assurances of Gods inestimable loue, and of eternall revvard too the Godlye: they are too the others sharp punishments in this vvorlde, and authentically vvarrants of Gods vutter displeasure, and as it vvere foretastes of their ovvne vnauoydable damnation in the vvorlde too come. Thus is the pryde of our rebellious nature beaten dovvne on all sides, that by learning true humilitie, vve might receyue the comfort vvhich God giueth to his chozen. Manie other notable doctrines are diuersly interlaced: as, that Gods vvonderful vvoorking in his creatures and in the order of nature, ought to leade vs to the knowvledge of the creator: That vve ought not to be inquisitive of Gods secrets further than he listeth to vtter them vnto vs, nor negligent in seeking so farre foorth as he sheweth them: That his only vvord is the absolute and only sufficient rule, to direct the religion and liues of all men in all cases and all respects: That nothing in all the vvhole vvorlde happeneth by casualtie, but all things are guided and gouerned too their appoynted ends by the foredeterminate purpose and providence of God: That man being corrupted by originall sin in the fall of Adam, hath not anye enterance of reconciliation, nor any continuance of attonement vwith God, but by the mediator, through the only free mercie and gift of God: and finally (vvith innumerable other like) that there is no difference of the Ievv or Gentile, Greeke or Barbarouse, learned or vnlearned, hygh or lowve, or of anye other state or persone before God, but that vvhe soeuer serueth him faithfully and vnfeynedly, the same is accepted of him as his deere chyld, not vvithstanding that he seeme not too bee vwithin the bounds of the visible church. Here vnto are added the duties of all degrees, states, and callings, vwith a perfect patterne of a pure and vncorrupted life, specially in those vvhom God hath aduanced to honour, vveth or authoritie, to the intent they should be as it vvere bright mirrors of Gods Maiestie vpon earth, by sheading foorth the light of their vertues to the good example of others, in preseruing the common vveth by iustice and pollicie, and in maynteyning Gods Religion. For it is manifest that Iob vvvas not of the meaner sort of men, but comparable (bothe in riches and authoritie) vwith the greatest men in his tyme, and farre aboute the most of those that beare greatest porte and countenance in these dayes. Therefore vnto all such as loue the true nobilitie, (vvhich descendeth not too posteritie by ryght of inheritance, nor is purchaced by riches, fauour, or any vworldly meanes, but is the free gift of God, consisting in the excellencie of thē mynd of the possessor, and not in the opinion of the variable multitude) it shall bee verie good too consider, not only the general

DEDICATORIE.

commendacion vvhich the holie Ghoste giueth vntoo Iob, in that he calleth him a sound man, euen such a one as feared God and eschevved euil: but also the particular protestations vvhich Iob himself maketh in the xxix. and xxxj. chapters, and in the xxv. verse of the xxx. chapter of this booke. For there in defence of his innocencie against the vvrongsfull surmises of his freendes, he setteth dovne xvij. poynts, vvhich although some do fitly agree to the common life of al Christians: yet do they all linke vvholly together intoo the nature of true nobilitie, and belong chiefly to such as are of moste preheminance: and vvhithout them no man can iustly account himself to be noble or honorable. The first point is the comly and reuerend grauitie of his persone, vvhich through he vvas feared of his interioris, honored of his equalls, esteemed of his superiours, and loued of all good and honest men. The second is his pitifulnesse tovvards the distressed, as vvell in feeling invvard compassion and greet for their miseries, as also in comforting, cheering, succoring and helping them. The third is his stoutnesse and vigilantnesse in executing of iustice, so as he ministred ryght to every man indifferently vvhithout respect of persones, boulting out the truth of things that vvere cloked or vnknowne, punishing open enormities though they vvere not presented nor complayned of, and himself pleading and maynteyning the ryghtfull caces of the ignorant and such as vvanted abilitie too help themselves. The fourth is the vndefiled chastitie of his bodie proceeding from the chastnesse of a pure hart, so as he did not cast anye leevd or vvanton fancie tovvards any mannes vyse or daughter. The fift is his playne dealing, in vvtter absteyning from all deceyt, craftinesse and guyle. The sixth is his stedfastnesse, in that he could not bee allured by the intycement of his eyes, nor prouoked by flatterie, too step aside from the truth, or too commit anye vnseemly thing. The seuenth is his gentle clemencie, in suffering his bond seruanes and vnderlings too reason their caces vvith him vvhen they thought themselves vvronged, and in yee'ding them ryght euen against himselfe. The eyght is his speedie dispatching of mennes sutes, so as he suffered them not too pyne vvith long lingring. The nynt is his liberalitie in maynteyning such as vvere destitute of liuing. The tenth is his abstinence in forbearing too doo anye man vvrong, hurt or hinderance, not vvithstanding that he myght scape vncontrolled for it. The eleuenth is his hating of couetousnesse, in that no vvellth nor riches could infect his hart. The tvvelfth is his stayednesse, in that no abundance could make him proud to disdeyne others, or to set more store by himselfe, or to haue the lesse care and regard of God. The thirteenth is the noblenesse of his hart, in that hee vvas so farre from reioycing at the fall of his enemies, that he rather pitied their miseries, and could not by anye meanes bee perswaded too bee reuenged of them, or too speake euill of them. The fouerteenth is his hospitalitie, in giuing interteynement too straungers and such as vvanted releef. The fiftenth is his loyvelinesse, in that hee vvas contented too heare of his faultes, and cloked not his sinne vvhen hee had doone amisse, but suffered him selfe too bee reproued euen of his vnderlings. The sixteenth is his iuste and vpryght dealing vvith his Tenants, in paying them truly for vvhathsoever hee tooke of them, and in not oppressing them vvith greuousse rentes, incommes, or seruices. And finally (vvhich is the verie vvellspring of all vertue, the moother of all true nobilitie, and (as ye vvould saye) the verie locke and key of all good conuersation among men) he protesteth that he had God alvvayes before his eyes, or (vvhich is all one) that he vvas of a pure, sound, and vncorrupt Religion. For too feare God, is not too bee afrayde of him as the bondman is of his Lord, the Trevvand of his Schoolemayster, or the thief of the galloves: but too conceyue such an invvard reuerence of him, by reason of his iustice, mercie, vvifdome, povver, providence, and ryghtuouesnesse, as too thinke him vvorthie of all honour and obedience, and too yeeld the same vvillingly and hartely vntoo him, so as vvee vvould bee lothe and sorie too offend him, euen though vvee myght bee sure too scape vnpunished. The onely meanes too bring vs vvher-vntoo, is the ryght knowving of his holie vvord and the stedfast cleaving therevntoo, vvithout svvaruing one vvay or other, and vvithout taking leaue too doo anye thing that is not vvarranted there. This feare of God caused Iob too drayve his eyesight alvvayes invvard, and too looke onely vntoo Gods vvill, not regarding eyther vvhat his ovvne affections and lustes stirred him too, or vvhat his povver, riches, and authoritie inabled him too doo, or vvhat any outvvard occasions and oportunities inced him too, or vvhat the intycementes of the vvorld and the persuasions of men allured him too doo, or finally, vvhat fame or infamie, gayne or losse, loue or hatred, or anye thing else prouoked him too doo, but vvhat he knewe ought too bee doone of ryght, equitie, reason, and conscience. For vvhen mennes eyes (I meene their myndes and vvittes, vvhich are in dede the very eyes or lampes of lyght too the vvhole man) are occupied outvvardly: cyther they rushe forth into all leevdnesse and become vvtterly vvicked, like vvild horses that haue cast their ryders, and run looce vvhithersoever their furie inforceth the,

THE EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

and the greater that such perſones, are the more harme do they bothe by deede and by example: or elſe they be dazeled vvith the glittering gloſſe of vainglorie, accompanied vvith feare of puniſhment or hope of reppard, and ſo finally fall into the ſound ſleepe of ſenſleſſe hypocriſie, doing all things in obedience of their ovvne vvill, and not of Gods vvill. Theſe later ſort are tolerable in the actiue and ciuil life, and oftentimes do greate good bothe to their neyghbours, and to the vvhole common vveale, but neuer to themſelues, by cauſe their good doing ſpringeth not from the right roote, vvich is the hartie obedience of God, ne tendeth to the right end vvich is the only glorie of God: and therefore they may vvell bee likened to the ſhipvvrights that builded the Ark of Noe, and yet periſhed themſelues in the flud. But the other ſort do good nothier to themſelues nor to others, except it be againſt their vvills, vvhe God maketh them an enſample of his rightful iuſtice, by giuing them the due reppard of their vvickedneſſe. Howvbeeit forasmuch as theſe things, together vvith all other points before reherſed in this epiſtle, are largely and ſubſtancially diſcuſſed by the faithfull and learned ſeruant of God Maſter Iohn Caluin in theſe Sermons of his vpon the booke of Iob, and it vvere an vnſeemly thing for an vnexpert ſcholer to vvryte the battell of Troy again after Homer, as the Prouerb ſayth: I vvil not be tedious in vvithholding your L. long from the reading of the Sermons themſelues. Neuer theleſſe I haue preſumed vpon your L. patience to ſet dovvne this foreſayd breef abstract of this vvork, to the intent your honour and all other noble men (to whom cheefly vnder our moſt graciouſe ſoueraine Ladie Queene Elizabeth, the care of Gods Religion and of this common vveale belongeth) beholding the groundvvork and as it vvere the platforme of ſo manye excellent matters, and therevpon conſidering the goodneſſe, neceſſarineſſe, and profitableneſſe therof to the vvhole church of God, and too the furtherance of eche mannes ſaluacion, might like the better of the booke, (as I doubt not but that the oftener your L. ſhall reade any part of it, the better you vvill like it) and by your vvellyking cauſe it too bee the more embraced of others to their ſingular comfort, edifying and vvelfare. For although the books of holie ſcripture take no authoritic or credit of man, but haue a ſingular kind of ſpirit, lyfe, and vvorkfulneſſe in themſelues: Yet notvvithſtanding forasmuch as it is incident to the nature vvellneere of all inferiours, to regard or neglect euen the beſt things, according as their ſuperiors ſeeme to make more or leſſe account of them, and vvhen godly and vvell diſpoſed men haue taken peines to open the Scriptures to the vnderſtanding and capacite of the people, their doings and vvritings are oftentimes more ſlightly and negligently receyued than they deſerue to be: The vvellyking of ſuch noble men and magiſtrats as God hath moreouer innobled vvith the knowlledge of his Goſpell, is a greate furtherance too the good accepting of bothe of them among all inferiour degrees, and God looketh to be ſo glorified at their hands. VVherfore I humbly commend this vvork, together vvith my translation therof, vnto your good L. accuſtomed fauour, wherof I haue had ſo often trial heretofore in accepting of diuers vvorks of mine, though conteyning good, commendable, and godly matters, yet not of like ſubſtance, importance and trauell vnto this. And my truſt is that your goodneſſe, bothe in reſpect of the newyere, (vnder the benefit wherof I am the bolder to preſent it as a token of my bound dutie and thankful mynd towards your honour,) and alſo in reſpect of the vvork it ſelf, (vvich being aduizedly red vvill doubtleſſe yeeld much more frute than can be expreſſed in vvords): vvill beare vvith my faults and imperfections vvhere any ſhall occurre. For although my conſcience beare mee vvitneſſe that I haue delt playnly and faithfully in al reſpects, and not ſtepped aſide vvillingly in any poynt from the beaten path: and although ſome may think it ſtraunge that he vvich aduentureth vpon ſo greate and vvightie vvorks, ſhould in any wiſe ſeek excuse of ignorance or ouerſight: yet notvvithſtanding forasmuch as I knowe the generall infirmite of mannes nature, how caſie it is to ſlip vnwares, and this vvork is the firſt of any greate vvayght that euer I translated out of the French toong to be publiſhed, I craue it as a ſpeciall fauour to my ſelf, and as a benefite to the Church of God, that vvhere any faults ſhall be found I may bee made priuie to them, and I vvill bee as forward as the forwardeſt to amend them. Thus beſeeching God to graunt your L. to ſee many happie and proſperouſe newyeres vpon this Realme, and vpon the Church of God furthered and aduanced by your good counſell and indeuer, to the increace of your owne honour bothe heere and in the vvorld to come, I humbly take my leaue. VVritten the laſt of December. 1573.

*Your honours moſt humble
alwayes to commaund,*

Arthur Golding.

TO AL GENTLE READERS, GREETING.

IF euery man needed to learne what patience is: surely the state of this present time ought to leade yea and to drawe them to it. For if we looke well about vs, we shall finde that there hath not bin almost any Realme or countrie, wherein God hath not vttered greate scourges. If ye demaund the cause: it is euident, so as euen the blind (as ye would say) may see it. Let the old men that are now alyue consider the wicked things which they haue seene committed commonly, since they were first able to remember, vnto this day: and must they not needs say (as it was sayd of the tyme of the generall flud) that all flesh hath corrupted his wayes vpon earth, that all is full of extorcion and outrage, and that such as beare the name of Christians do (as sayeth saint Peter) fulfill the waye of the heathen, by liuing in shamefulnesse, pride, lecherie, drunkennesse, gluttonie, quaffing and abhominable ydolatrie? But like as it is good to knowe the causes of the aduersities that happen, to the intent that men may the better bethinke themselves, to amend as well publickly as privately: so is it ryght necessarie to be fenfed with true patience, that we sink not vnder the burthen whē Gods scourges continue long vpon vs, for euen that also is one of the points of the amendment which he requireth of vs. Neuerthelesse, it is a thing that cannot be learned elswhere than in Gods woord. For although the auncient Philosophers and other wyse men of the world haue spoken of it and giuen certaine rules of it: yet was there neuer any man found that for all his learning therof in their schoole, could shewe that he knewe what it is at the neede and when it commeth too the putting of it in vre. And in verie deede euen those that tooke vpon them (as I sayd) to teach others, besids that their doctrine was vnperfect in itself, most commonly wist not where they were when it came to the point that they should haue practized it in daungers: and those that did best, shewed I wote not what a resemblance of patience, which being more neerly considered was cleane contrarie. Therefore not without cause doeth the Apostle saint Paule send vs too the whole scripture too learne patience and comfort: according also as in another text he sayeth, that the end of the scripture is to make a man perfect and readye in all good woorks. But yet among the books of Scripture, the booke of I O B is commended too vs by name for that purpose by the Apostle Sainct James. And the verie bare reading of the storie, sheweth sufficiently that it is not without cause. Neuerthelesse, it is not to bee doubted, but that the help of a good expounder is verie profitable euen to the skilfullest, and like wise necessarie in common, for the better knowing and vnderstanding of the diuersitie of the matters, and for the furtherance of a mannes owne profiting in the doctrine that is conteyned in it. That is it which hath moued certaine good men, too putfoorth this yeere The Sermons of the faithfull seruant of God and his Church Master Iohn Calvin, vpon the booke of Iob, notwithstanding that he himself which is the author of them, and at whose mouth they were gathered, withstoode it as much as he could, according as he hath doone with his other Sermons. Furthermore although other men of knowledge haue traueled too giue a more easie vnderstanding of this booke by their wrytings, yet notwithstanding, besides that these Sermons are in the common Frēche toung: his maner of handling the doctrine thereof is so playne and well framed to the capacitie of the grossest sorte (as yee would terme them) howbeit without omitting any needfull things, and moreouer so applied one way and other to the behoof of the present tyme, that surely all such as intend to iudge vprightly and without malice, shall find good helpe heere, wherwith to content themselves. For proof wherof, it is not now needful to shew a summe of the book, or of the cheef points of doctrine & of the vse of the same diuerse ways. For besides that he shall better find it here and there in reading his Sermons: the first cōteyneth a sufficient discourse, and yet verie short to be easily borne in mynd. Howsoeuer the case stand, if those that reade the whole, bee folke that haue already left idolatrie, and giuen themselves to the doctrine of the Gospell: they shal find heere wherwith to further themselves still more and more in the knowledge of God and of our Lord Iesus Christ, and specially to strengthen themselves with right patience in their aduersities. Or if they be such as haue not yet knowne or listed to discern the true Religion, to frame themselves thereafter by leauing the false Religions, what occasion so euer hath letted them, yet being warned by the doctrine of this booke so chawed to them as they shal finde it, and cheefly being wakened by Gods extraordinarie iudgement in Iobs persone, which they shall see there laydfoorth and declared at length: they shall bee prepared to bethinke themselves better, and too take profit of the greate number of aduersities which are seene nowadayes in the world, and of farre greater wherwith it is verie likely that God threateneth men for the greate and open despizing of his Gospell. For although the things that are happened this yeere, as well in his punishments layd vpon the wicked sort and the enemies of Christ, as in his chastizements layd vpon the faithfull, bee verie terrible: Yet notwithstanding forasmuch as verie fewe amende, and contrariwise most men growe more spitefull in fighting against Iesus Christ, and some hauing begonne to do well wex rechelesse againe, yea and vtterly turne away: there is none other thing too bee looked for, but that he will continue too smite still. So then, the first sort shall haue to consider, that if Iob being a sound and rightuouse man that feared God and eschewed euill, (according as it is witnessed of him) and liuing so long tyme before the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ and the greate light of the Gospell, was handled so straungely at Gods hand who loued him: and that the same was to the end that his patience should be tried: it is no maruell though wee now in these latter dayes, vnder the reigne of Iesus Christ, haue now and then many crosses to beare, and bee for our peculiar faults chastized with strype vpon strype at the hand of the liuing God, who notwithstanding loueth vs, for the seruing of whom according to his woord, we be turned from ydolls vnto him, as sayeth Sainct Paule to the Thessalonians. The secōd sort shal haue to think & bethinke, yea and to chaw as their cūdd, that if God do so shake the rodde in his hand ouer those that are alreadye reclaimed to his lure, to bridle the and make them walk right foreward throughtout: and that if he haue gone that way to woork with Iob as is reported heere, who notwithstanding had bene as an Angell in the world, in indeuering to do his dutie to God and man: VVhat is likely to light vpon themselves, if they

To the Reader.

not in generall amend and vtterly forsake their foolish, shamefull, and wicked ydolatrie, and particularly the manifest contempt of God wherof they be full, liuing at this day as Epicures and Atheists : and moreouer, some their whoredome and bauderie, some their drunkenesse and gluttonic, (according as there be some countries that are specially giuen therunto) some their ambitioue pompe, some their vayne worldlinesse, some their snatching and extortion as wel pryuate as publik, and other some their crueltie and insatiabie desire to shed mannes blud, in spight of all lawes and too the confusion of all ciuill order among men ? They shall (say I) haue this little word of saint Peters too wey, which ought to astonish them more than all the thunderclappes that euer rattled in the aire : that is to wit, that if chastizement begin at the house of God, and at those which are the true Christians : what shall the end of these bee, which rebell against Gods Gospell; and if the rightuouse do hardly scape, where shall the wicked and sinfull appere? Behold the thing that all the good seruants of God, and all faithfull preachers of the Gospell do brotherly pray for at this day, as me haue done heretofore. Behold, the thing that all the little flocks of the reformed churches disperfed heere and there do pray for : Behold, the thing that euen Iesus Christ (as yee would saye) in his owne person prayeth for : is that they may by him be reconcyled to God, and receyue his grace in such wyse, as it may not be in vayne. And it is to be hoped that God of his greate mercie will yet notwithstanding bring manye of that sort to such chaunge, as he will make them true and earnest followers of the Gospell, as he hath done oft heretofore. Notwithstanding, if any or many of them being so intreated for Iesus Christs sake, do harden themselues : let such vnderstand that they shall not scape Gods hand at the last day, and it may be that they shall feele it yet sooner to their greate confusion . For it is he whose preheminance and none others is in controuerisie at this day: and which shall of a truthe get the vpper hand of all his enimies early or late, whatsoeuer betyde. He is willing to haue pitie vpon his creatures, and by word he giueth comfort and patience to all such as are pinched: but specially he comforteth those that are alreadye vnder his banner, graunting them to haue peace in him, although they haue none in the world. Amen.

At Geneva the first day of Iune. 1563.

A TABLE OF THE PRINCIPALL MATTERS CONTEYNED IN THIS BOOKE.

*The first number sheweth the Page,
The second the number of the Lines.*

A

Belles sacrifice accepted through faith. 11. a. 17.
Abraham a stayle man. 25. b. 66.
Abraham a riche man. 7. a. 6.

Abraham the father of the faithfull. 7. b. 13.

Abrahams afflictions and trials. 24. b. 56. d. 25. a. & 293. a. 40.

Absolom.

Absoloms Incest. 34. a. 4.

Achab.

VVhat a wicked man Achab was. 21. b. 55.

Aduocate.

Christ is the only and sufficient Aduocate of all men vntoo God. 748. a. 10. b.

VVhy men know not Christ to bee the only Aduocate and mediator. 748. a. 67.

VVhy men haue made so many patrons and Aduocates. 747. a. 15. & 748. a. 45. b.

Looke more in the woorde Mediator.

Aduersitie.

VVhat things wee terme Aduersities. 95. a. 57.

Aduersities are Gods Archars. 296. a. 8.
Aduersities come of God and bycause of our sinnes. 105. b. 6.

No Aduersitie happeneth but by Gods appointment. 331. a. 1

Great Aduersitie maketh men forget themselves. 50. b. 55.

VVee must not thinke any Aduersitie to bee too sore or greuous. 513. a. 39.

VVee must not iudge men by their Aduersities. 743. b. 20.

VVhat causeth mee too torment and martir themselves in Aduersitie. 32. a. 42.

A difference betweene Gods children and the Reprobates in their Aduersities. 1. b. 37.

The meane too bee rid of Aduersities. 659. b. 21.

Our comfort in Aduersities. 43. a. 1.

Looke more in Afflictions, Chastisements, Corrections, Miseries, Punishments, Troubles, and such like.

Adultery.

Looke more in Whoredome.

Affections.

Our Affections are blind 54. a. 45.

Affections do blind our vnderstanding and knowledge. 241. a. 40

The headinesse and vnrulnesse of our Affections. 51. b. 28. & 261. b. 40.

How farre our Affections make vs too ouershoothe our felues when they ouer maister vs. 346. a. 20. & 517. a. 26 & 579. b. 42. & 580. a. b.

How Affections ought to bee repressed 305. b. 18. 60.

Afflictions.

Afflictions are termed a Cup or drinking Glasse. 107. b. 1.

Afflictions and all misfortunes and plagues, are termed Gods weapons or Artillery. 704. b. 61.

The ground and welpring of all Afflictions. 83. b. 44. & 84. a. 5. & 88. a. 7. & 298. b. 20. & 300. a. 61.

Afflictions are vniuersall, both vpon good and bad. 140. b. 41. & 347. a. 5. & 705. b. 31.

Afflictions are chastizements to Gods Children, and punishments to the wicked. 94. b. 3.

Afflictions come of Gods determinate forepurpose, and not of Sathans instigation, nor of casualty. 21. a. 28. b. 41. & 124. b. 13. & 295. b. 65.

Afflictions are sent of God, and yet stirred vp by Satan. 1. a. 64.

VVhy Afflictions are sayd to come by Satans procurement. 21. b. 3 & 22. a. 3.

Afflictions are sent of God to the godly and vngodly, to two iudry ends. 63. a. 21. & 690. b. 31.

Gods Afflicting of vs is not alwayes for our sinnes. 223. b. 4. & 639. a. 18. & 569. b. 20.

The causes why God doth ordinarily Afflict men 519. a. 42. & 743. b. 22.

Two points to be considered in Gods Afflicting of vs. 34. a. 53.

The proper and generall end of Afflictions 94. b. 29.

Gods intent in Afflicting his chosen. 26. a. 56. b. & 106. a. 1 & 113. a. 20.

The ends of Gods afflicting of the faithfull. 30. a. 20. & 32. a. 61. & 94. a. 50. & 95. a. 66. & 81. a. 63. & 134. a. 13. 15. & 179. b. 22. & 225. b. 4. & 465. a. 46. & 586. a. 52. b. & 642. b. 57. & 658. a. 47. b. & 659. a. & 662. a. 47. & 667. a. 35. & 705. b. 4.

VVhy God Afflicteth the faithfull with diuers crosses at once, or one after an other. 26. b. 57 & 27. a. 1.

To what end God Afflicteth the Reprobates. 662. a. 45.

VVherunto Afflictions serue vs. 12. a. 1. & 20. a. 2. & 57. a. 67. & 683. a. 5.

Afflictions are medicines and salues. 23. a. 3. They driue vs to God. 88. b. 53. They discouer Hypocrytes 19. b. 66 & 20. a. 22. They tame the pride of our nature. 88. a. 59. They kill vices. 20. a. 2. They make men know themselves. 20. a. 14.

The frutes of Affliction in Gods children. 88. b. 55. & 722. b. 57. & 723. a. b. & 724. a. b.

Afflictions are expedient for Gods children, and turne alwayes to their singular benefite and welfare. 21. b. 37. & 58. a. 14. & 96. a. 1. & 99. a. 60. & 278. b. 2. & 587. b. 50. & 602. a. 10. & 657. b. 53 & 658. a. b. & 659. a. b. & 662. a. 5. & 723. a. 1. & 744. b. 49. & 748. b. 6 & 749. a. b. & 750. a.

VVhy God Afflicteth our enemies. 334. b. 61.

Gods Afflicting of vs is alwayes rightfull, and must be so acknowledged. 21. b. 22. & 32. b. 30.

It is the proper and peculiar marke of Gods children to profit by Afflictions 95. a. 30.

How we ought to behaue our felues in iudging of the Afflictions of others 45. a. 47. & 489. b. 19. & 570. a. b.

How we ought to behaue our felues in iudging of our owne Afflictions 55. b. 5. & 510. b. 27. & 570. a. 50. & 579. a. 52

How too iudge of Afflictions both in our felues and in other men. 311. a. 20 & 744. b. 31.

VVhat too bee done when God Afflicteth vs but not for our sinnes. 298. a. 7.

The Afflictions of the godly last but for a time 22. b. 55. & 3. a. 59.

VVhy our Afflictions endure long. 589. a. 9. b. & 590. a.

God Afflicteth vs not about our power 57. b. 14.

God forsaketh vs not though he Afflict vs 657. b. 53.

God susteyneth vs in our Afflictions though wee perceiue it not. 593. b. 66

God createth not to loue vs though hee Afflict vs. 139. a. 26. & 140. b. 31

In the midst of our Afflictions, God giueth vs some tast of his mercy and goodnesse. 57. a. 33 & 134. a. 8.

All men are not Afflicted alike. 24. b. 32
God will punish such as vex the Afflicted 350. a. 50.

The Afflicted are not too bee comforted nor delt withal after one sort. 322. b. 45.

Afflictions are not alwayes signes of Gods wiath. 26. a. 2. & 66. b. 61. & 134. a. 8.

How wee may perceiue that God myndeth good towards vs when he Afflicteth vs. 659. a. 60.

There is iust cause why God should Afflict men though they bee neuer so godly. 579. a. 14. b. & 580. a. b.

Gods deliuering and helping of the Afflicted must establish our faith. 756. a. 27.

To be strong in Afflictions, is not to be stubburne or sencelesse 295. b. 12.

God neuer Afflicteth vs so much, but our sinnes haue well deserued it. 298. b. 20. & 30. & 300. a. 62.

Affliction prouoketh vs too impatiency howbeit not of it owne nature. 666. b. 21. & 667. a. 31.

The extremitie of the present Affliction brea-

The Table.

Beareueth men of their right vnderstanding. 609. b. 9. & 639. a. 43. & 640 b. 47.

Afflictions do men no good, except God worke in their hartes by his holy spīrite. 659. a. 1.

VVhy God driueth vs to repentance by Afflictions. 662. a. 5.

VVhen God Afflicteth vs, we must not looke what he doth to other men. 263. a. 1.

VVhy God putteth vs into the handes of the wicked, to be punished by the 658. b. 13.

Our only cōfort in Afflictions. 152. b. 9
VVe must not laint in Afflictions. 25. a. 47.

Afflictions are for Trialles. 68. b. 8.

The Afflictions of the godly are alwaies blessed, and haue alwaies a happy end 80. a. 64. & 81. a. 16. & 96. b. 33.

VVe must not looke to be priuie to Gods purpose in Afflicting mē. 623. b. 13

It is not for vs to appoint the end of our Afflictions. 125. a. 27. & 126. b. 38.

Mennes sinnes are not to be measured by their Afflictions. 569. b. 47.

VVe be loth to beare Afflictions. 123. a. 22

Afflictions are sharpe and bitter to the flesh. 44. a. 28.

VVe must bridle both our tongus and our hartes in our Afflictions. 130. a. 24

They that will not know God and honor him at the preaching of his word or other instructions and warnings, must learne to know him by force of Affliction. 585. b. 24. & 586. a.

It is to no purpose to be deliuered from our Afflictions, except God be at one with vs. 631. b. 38.

Age.

Age or Antiquitie must not preiudice things that are rightfull and necessary. 565. b. 21. & 566. a. 25.

VVhat account is to be made of Age in matters of Religion. 269. b.

VVhat maner of reuerence ought to be giue vnto Age. 564. a. 43. b. & 565. a. b. & 566. a.

Old and Ancient men are meetest for Governement. 565. b. 54.

Auncient men are meetest to be Preachers. 566. a. 18.

VVhat our middle and last Age is. 75. b. 22.

Agreablenesse.

Agreablenesse betweene the hart and our outward senses. 3. b. 44. & 4. a. 5.

Aire.

VVhy the middle roome or Region of the Aire is coldest. 671. b. 53.

Allegories.

The Scripture must not be dalyed with by transforming it into Allegories. 733. a. 32. b. 29.

Allegories must not be drawn but out of the natural sence of a text. 733. a. 35

Almes.

VVhat the word Almes importeth. 535. b. 23.

VVhe in Almes consisteth. 535. b. 49.

It is no Almes to giue to the poore, except compassion of hart go with it. 498. b. 31.

Our Almes must be giuen without delay. 536. b. 44.

Almightinesse.

VVhat maner of thing Gods Almightynesse is, and how it is to be acknowledged. 619. b. 2. & 737. b. 6. & 738. a. b.

VVhat is cōprehended vnder the word Almighty. 138. a. 49.

VVhat is to be thought or gathered of Gods Almightynesse. 614. a. 29.

Gods Almightynesse must not be sepeared from his righteousnesse. 134. b. 44. & 581. b. 20.

Gods Almightynesse and goodnesse go euermore together. 615. a. 13.

Gods goodnesse, lustice, and wisdome must alwaies be ioyned in the consideration of his Almightynesse. 675. a. 54.

Mans froward misconstruing of Gods Almightynesse. 613. a. 18. b. 8.

The misconceyung of Gods Almightynesse into impanencie. 737. b. 20.

Gods Almightynesse and his will go alwaies together. 737. b. 62. & 738. a. 35.

VVherunto Gods Almightynesse is too be applied. 738. a. 20.

The fondnesse of the Papisistes in dalying with Gods Almightynesse. 738. a. 41.

Alterations, turnings, or Changes.

All Alterations, and Changes in this worlde, do come of Gods iust iudgement. 624. b. 3.

The Alterations and Changes of the aire are not casuall, but happen by Gods appoyntment. 674. b. 20. & 677. b. 50. & 682. a. 9. & 707. b. 35.

The Alterations of the aire are instructions to our welfare and saluation. 681. a. 60.

Changes come of God and not of fortune. 259. b. 9. & 472. b. 20.

To what end God sendeth so many Alterations in the world. 680. b. 53. & 681. a. & 682. a. 5.

The Alterations and Changes of the aire are prooffe of Gods maiestie providence and soueraignie ouer all his creatures. 671. b. 24. 672. a. b. 673. a. & 675. b. 32. & 676. a. b. & 677. a. b. & 678. a. b. & 680. a. 30. b. & 681. a. b. & 682. a. b. & 683. a.

The Alterations and Changes of the aire shall beare witness against vs at the latter day. 681. a. 43.

It behoueth vs to bee subiect to many Alterations and Changes. 520. a. 44.

VVe must inure our selues to consider the Alterations and Changes of the world. 503. a. 44.

Angelles.

Angelles pitch their tents about vs. 15. a. 1. & 24. a. 27.

Angelles execute Gods vengeance on the wicked. 15. a. 5.

Angelles are not a whit the more out of Gods presence for all their seruice which they do in the world. 15. a. 5. 9

Angels do not any thing of their own selues. 15. a. 21. & 16. b. 39.

Angelles are not subiect to the Changes of this world. 74. b. 22.

Angelles come to accompt before God. 15. a. 33. 44.

Angelles appeare before God. 14. b. 62

Angelles obey God willingly and naturally without any contrary inclination. 15. a. 54. b. 57. & 16. b. 42

Angelles are euer before God. 14. b. 67.

How the Angelles are vaine and vnted fast. 73. b. 36. & 272. b. 40.

How they be immortal. 73. b. 50.
Looke more in Immortalitie.

VVhy Angelles be called Powers, Principalities, Vertues, and Highnesse.

15. a. 27. b. 18. & 35. b. 26. & 73. b. 67.

The Angelles do guide vs to the praying and glorifying of GOD. 696. a. 4. b.

VVhy Angelles are termed the children of God. 15. a. 68. b. 1. 16. 25. & 16. b. 41. & 696. a. 42

The Angelles serue for our welfare. 15. b. 28. & 24. a. 45

VVhy the Angelles doo serue vs. 15. b. 28

How Angelles may be glorified of vs. 74. a. 25

VVhat perfection is in the Angelles. 74. a. 44. b. 35

VVherin the stedfastnesse of the Angelles consisteth. 74. b. 1. & 75. a. 34

The Angelles were not redeemed by Christ. 74. b. 3

Christ is the mediator of Angelles, and why. 74. b. 5

Anger.

VVhat Anger is allowable and what not. 562. a. 33. 6. & 563. a. b

Iust causes of Anger in these dayes. 563. a. 11

To relent or release our Anger when wee see our enemie in extreame misery, ought not to be counted a vertue. 334. b. 28

Of Answering.

Hastie Answering is too bee eschewed. 121. a. 58

Arcturus. 707. a. 39.

Aristotles error concerninge the eternitie of the world. 685. b. 16.

Of Asles.

Of wyld Asses. 713. a. 61. b. & 714. a. 5. 60.

How men are in worse state than the wilde Asses. 714. a. 1

Ashes.

Ashes and dust are not the true repentance it selfe, but only signes of it. 742. a. 38

Affurances.

Affurances that God giueth vs to come to him. 306. a. 10

Authoritie.

The Authoritie of men, and how farre they be to be trusted. 275. b. 30.

The meanes whereby men climbe to Authoritie. 613. b. 27. & 618. a. 29

God dealeth not with vs by absolute Authoritie as the popish Duines haue sumised, but is vpright and iust in all his dealings. 302. b. 66.

B

Banquet and banqueting.

Looke Feast, and Feasting.

Of Barking and byting.

VVe may well Barke at God, but wee

The Table.

can not byte him. 642. a 44.

Beastes.

The Beast Behemoth. 730. b 47.
 Why the Beastes are disobedient vnto vs. 100. b 60.
 The wild Beastes do teach vs our subiection vnto God. 680. b 2.
 Why wee bee benefitt of our dominion ouer all Beastes which was giuen to Adam in his creation. 715. a 54.
 God sendeth vs to Schoole to the brute Beastes, and why. 718. a 12. b & 719. a & 731. a & 733. b 42. & 735. b 30.
 Why God keepeth and mainteyneth wild Beastes in the world, since they be not to do men seruice. 715. b 18.
 God referneth the Dominion or Lordship of all Beastes to himselfe. 712. a 48.
 Gods wonderfull prouidence and working in the ingendring and bringing forth of Beasts. 711. a 49. b & 712. a b
 Gods euident shewing of himselfe in the brute Beastes, both vpon Sea and Land, is inough to condemne our ignorance and vnthankfulnesse toward him. 733. a 38. b Beastes are reconciled to Gods children and how. 101. a 33.

Beleeve and Beleuing.

To Beleeue the Gospell is no common gift. 285. b 29.
 Wherefore the wicked cannot Beleeue. 286. a 10.
 All Christian Beleeve hath bin abolished vnder the Pope. 411. a 34.
Looke more in Faith.

Benefites.

Gods Benefites are but our bane so long as we be at odds with him. 631. b 27.
 The remembrance of Gods former Benefites ought to comfort vs in our aduersities. 52. b 42. & 264. b 43. & 662. b 40. & 646. b 42.
 All Gods temporall Benefites are a warrant to vs of his fatherly goodnesse, and a calling of vs to saluation. 683. b 63.
 How to receiue Gods temporall Benefites or blessings. 749. b 61.
 Gods particular and priuate Benefites are a more neere and forcible prouoking of vs to thankfulness and patience. 645. b 10.
 The end of all Gods Benefites bestowed vpon vs in this life. 99. b 36.
 The double vse of Gods Benefites. 647. b 10.
 Our praiers for the Benefites of this life ought to be condicionall. 241. a 20.
 The wicked inioy not Gods Benefites by right of inheritance, but by vsurpacion. 701. a 19. b.
 The Benefites that God bestoweth vpon the wicked, are to their damnation. 461. b 44.
 Why God cutteth of his Benefites that he hath bestowed vpon vs. 409. a 30.

Birdes.

Wee must be as Birds vpon a bough, to remoue hence at Gods pleasure. 502. b 68.

Beeing.

Gods euerlasting Beeing, and his vnchangeable righteousnesse are inseparable. 613. b 52.

God is vnknown in his Beeing. 14. b 59. & 727. b 34.

Of Birth and Birth dayes.

Gods prouidence in mannes Birth. 53 a 40. & 711. a 22.
 The blessing or solemnizing of Birth dayes, with the originall and right vse therof. 49. a 35. & 43. b 6.
 The solemnizing of Birth dayes is good and profitable. 49. a 65.
 The examining of our Birthstate, must leade vs to the consideration of Gods prouident liberaltie, and to patience 31. a 6.
 The heathens opinion concerning the day of Birth. 48. a 60.
 What Gods word teacheth vs concerning our Birth. 48. b 10.
 The abusing therof both by the Heathen and Christians. 49. a 40. 68. b 1.
 Iobes vnthankfulness in cursing the day of his Birth. 49. a 53.
 The remembrance of our Birth, must teach vs humilitie and obedience vnto God. 712. a 61. b.
 The prouerbe of the Heathen concerning mannes Birth, do fauour of vnthankfulness. 130. b 66.

Of Blissing and Blissednesse.

Blissing put sometime for Cursing. 13. b 3. & 14. a 35. 42.
 What it is to Blisse God. 14. a 37. & 32 a 31.
 Not to blisse God, is all one as to curse him. 14. b 4.
 Wherein our Blissednesse consisteth. 417. a 27.

Blasphemy.

Open Blasphemy and impatency are the horriblest of all finnes. 663. a 32.
 The readinesse of man to Blaspeme God, and his slownesse to honor him 51. a 55. 62.
 Blasphemy with charging God with vnreasonable dealing. 32. a 66.

Blindnesse.

Wee be vtterly Blind till God inlighten vs. 626. b 17.
 Natural Blindnesse excuseth not men of sinne. 626. b 8.
 Why God Blindeth the wise men, olde men, and men of authoritie. 568. a 31.
 When men mingle mennes traditions with Gods seruice, he Blindeth their rulers, aged men, and preachers. 508. a 30.
 What a great plague it is to be Blinded of God. 307. a 40.

Of Bringing vp.

Delicate Bringing vp of men maketh them to be vnpatient. 507. a 59.

Boldnesse.

Wherein all our Boldnesse must bee. 475. a 37.
 Our ouer great Boldnesse is hard to be corrected. 480. b 41.

Of Bringing forth.

Wee can bringe forth nothing but shreawd weedes. 504. b 43.

Of Bowing.

Bowing of the body or knees. 301. a 9.

Brotherly loue and Brotherhede.
 Brotherly loue very geozon and rare now adayes. 71. a 53.
 Brotherly loue behooffull to men, and acceptable to God. 7. b 12.
 Brotherly loue described in Iobes children. 7. a 65.
 The name of Brotherhede teacheth vs to looke vp to God. 7. b 35.

Brybery.

Bribery commeth to nought. 288. b 10.

Buryall and Burying.

The godly are not the worse for wante of Buryall, nor the vngodly the better for being Buried. 473. a 6.
 Buryall is a looking glasse of the resurrection. 472. b 57.

Looke more in Funeralls.

Burthen.

The Burthen of negligent parents and householders. 12. b 55. & 13. b 56.

Of Bynding and vnbynding.

Of Bynding and vnbynding by the preacher. 511. a 1 & 592. a 53.
 The preachers do not Bind and vnbind without expresse commission from God. 593. a 62.

Looke more in Preacher.

C.

Cace.

Good Caces may not bee marred with mishandling. 1. b 6.

Cain.

Cains sacrifice. 11. a 17.
 The complaint of Caine was blasphemous. 103. b 37.

Capping.

Capping and Curtfying. 12 a 43.

Carelesnesse.

The cause of our Carelesnesse when God letteth vs alone vnpunished. 625 b 43.
 The inconuenience that commeth of Mens Carelesnesse in this life. 76. b 45.
 A warning to beware of Carelesnesse. 623. b 47.

Ceremonies.

Ceremonies of the faithfull must bee grounded vpon the expresse word of God. 11. b 2. & 12. b 30. 57.
 Ceremonies are are a sufficient recorde to condemne all vnbeleuers. 11. b 27.
 Outward Ceremonies are not the seruice of God. 11. b 42. & 12. a 8. 55.
 Mo Ceremonies in the East countreyes than in these Countreyes. 29. a 23.
 Ceremonies of Heathen, Papistes, and vnbeleuing folke, are abhominable. 11. a 67. b 36. & 12. a 15.
 The signe and Ceremony without the thing signified is no discharge of duty. 46. a 24.
 Ceremonies to what end and vse they serue. 11. a 44. b 68.
 The Papists thinke God to be beholding to them for their seruice. Ceremonies and churchfiel. 1342. a 7.

The Table.

The trew use of outward Ceremonies in mourning. 296. a 50. and b. 60. and 297. a 20.

Mennes deuized Ceremonies are likened to Theeues Causes or Dennes. 237. a 60.

Charitie.

God tryeth our Charitie by the necessitie of other. 496 b 64. and 499. a 24.

Of Chastisements and Corrections.

Gods Chastisements are always ioyned with mercy. 94. a 11.

WVe must not accuse God of crueltie, when he Chastiseth vs. 504. a 6.

Gods Chastisements preuayle not in all men. 690. a 24.

WVe ought to pray God to Chastise vs measurably, and what reasonable Chastisement is. 258 b 15. and 26.

WVe must dispose ourselues to receyue all Gods Chastisements. 520. a 3.

God is gracious vnto vs although hee Chastise vs. 257. b 20.

To refuse the Correctiōs that are put to vs, is to labour too quenche the light of Gods Spirite. 324. a 31.

The dubble grace that God sheweth vs in Chastising vs. 97. a 58.

Gods Corrections should stirre vs to be more quicksighted in espyinge our owne fautes. 324. a 6.

WVhat becommeth of vs when GOD letteth vs alone vuchastiseth. 95 b 26

Change Looke Alteration.

Of Children and Childhood.

Children must be hild in awe by theyr parents euē after they be of full yeres of discrecion. 9. a 32. 66. b 32

Children ought to be an increasement of loue betweene man and wyfe. 332 b 17.

The cockering of Children marreth the and tendeth them too destruction. 45 b 50.

The onely Children of God are blisfed howsoeuer they fare in this worlde. 82. a 17.

None shall be accepted for gods Children, but such as praye and magnifye him earnestly. 696. b 28.

Children vterly auellesse & lawlesse in these dayes. 9 b 3. 45.

WVhy Children be disobedient & loth to be corrected. 9 b 25.

WVhy Children are sayd too beare the sinnes of their Fathers. 82. b 90.

The well ruled desire of hauinge Children. 5. a 35.

The vnrled desire too haue Children. 50. a 33.

WVhat our Childhood is. 75. b 21.

The inordinate desire of worldlings to haue men children. 50. a 17.

The punishment of that desire, pag. 50. a 23.

Chryst.

Chryst is Gods naturall and only Son. 15. b. 33.

Chryst must bee our refuge in all temptations. 19. a 20.

Iesus Chryste is the true looking glasse of Gods face. 133. b 23.

Chryst accused vnto God in the person of Iosua the hygh Priest by Sathan. 19. a 15.

The reigne of Chryst. 69. a 64. Church.

God had always a Church in the world 2 b. 65. and 10. b 55. & 11. a 8.

The Popish Church is the Diuels Synagoge. 593. b 28.

Circumcision.

Circumcision not alwayes a signe of gods Couenant. 2. b 23.

Clowdes.

The Clowdes are called gods Chariots, Pauillions or Pillers of his tents, and why. 672. b 23.

Coldnesse.

Mennes Coldnesse or Cowardlynesse in defending God & his truth now adayes. 652. b 57.

Of Comfort and Comforting

The true and vpright Comforting. 63. b 24. 50.

Two things requisite in Comfortinge, that is to say, Compassiō & Cōfort. 44. b 32.

The chiefest Comfort and reliefe that can be gyuen to the afflicted. 46. a 1.

None can Comfort, Counsell or teache others well, but such as firste are acquainted with their owne infirmities. 577. a 27.

The Crosse of Chryst and his resurrection are our Comforts. pag. 749 b. 13.

They that will Comforte the afflicted and sorowfull, must be pityful them selues, and not churlish or vakinde. 304. b 31.

How wee ought to Comfort ourselues out of the Scriptures when we be afflicted. 305. a 4.

Howe necessary Gods Comfortes are. 271. a 54.

The true meane of Comforting and gladding others or our selues. 594. b 60. & 595. a b.

All men are not to be Comforted after one fashion. 290. b 37.

Commaundements.

The Commaundements of God are inpararable and do all of them make but one righteoufnesse. 627. a 34. b. 46.

Looke more in Counsell, and in Lawe, and in Gods worde.

Compassion.

How sarre Compassion extendeth. 113. a 52.

WVe ought to haue Compassion of the afflicted. 113. a 36.

He that hath no Compassion of the afflicted hath no feare of God. 113. b. 4

If we will haue God mercifull to vs we must haue Compassion of our neighbours. 300. b 25.

Loke more in Almes, Mercy, & pitie

Of Condemnation, and Condemning.

Two sortes of healthfull Condemnation. 745. a 12.

WVe should rather Condemne our selues than other men. 80. a 30.

The diuers sortes of Condemnation which God pronounceth vpon men. 745. a 7.

WVe must learne too Condemne our selues. 524. a 65.

God should find alwayes in vs wherefore to Condemne vs if he bare not with vs of his infinite goodnesse. 517 b 21.

Confession, and Confessing.

The Confession which the Scripture requireth of vs in respect of men. 512 a 8

The true maner of cōfessing our faultes 598. a 52. b & 599. a b & 740. a 4.

He that doth contrary to that which he confesseth is double condemnable. 505. a 51.

The two causes why God will haue vs to confesse our owne giltinesse and bee acknowledge his goodnesse before men. 600. a 64. b.

The former Confessions of other men in old tyme do serue for our instructiō on and comfort. 600. b 20.

Conscience.

A good Conscience holdeth vs alwaies in stedfastnesse. 119. b 44.

A Conscience pressed with Gods iudgement is alwayes troubled and in an agonie. 126. b 21.

Constancie.

Constancie in persisting in goodnesse and in eschewing of euill. 18. b 8. 21. 62. & 27. b 54.

Constancie commended. 37. b. 5.

Of Consuming.

God can consume vs without any inferior meanes. 666. a. 62.

Gods woorking in Consuming nations without any apparant plague in the place where they dwell. 666. a. 27.

Of Contempt.

If any man be brought to Contempt, let vs consider that as much might be fall to vs. 510. a. 35.

Of Corruption.

The Corruption of mans nature, is the cause of Gods rigor. 96. b. 7.

Our Corruptions are a bottomlesse pit. 72. a. 32.

WVhence our Corruption commeth. 274 b 17.

Of the Corruption of mans nature by original sinne. 250. a. 50.

Of Couetousnesse.

Couerousnes in al mē generally. 30. b. 23.

Couerousnesse is Idolatrye. 541. a. 11.

Counsell.

WVhen God bereueth men of their wit & discrecion they can neuer receiue any good Counsell. 285. a. 62.

The Papistical differēce betweene a Couell and commaundement. 546 a. 60.

The daunger of dispusing or neglecting of good Ceūsel or admonitiō. 13. b 33

Countenance.

Looke face.

Craftinesse.

Of Craftinesse against GOD, and his word. 268 b. 10.

Of Creation & Creatures.

The right consideration of our Creation serueth to abate the pride of all states and degrees. 276. a. 39.

If a man knew the end of his Creation he would alwaies be desirous to profite in knowledge. 504. a. 58.

WVe could not rule the least liuing Creature on earth if God giue vs not power

The Table.

power ouer it. 715. a 50.
 Gods goodnesse in submitting and im-playing his Creatures to our vse and seruice. 681. b 14.
 God sheweth himselfe so manifestly in his Creatures as he leaueth vs vterly without excuse of Ignorance if wee honour him not. 214. b. 32. & 215. a. b
 The increase and multiplying of all liuing Creatures come of Gods only prouidence. 712. a 1.
 All Gods Creatures are mirrors and Images of his power, wisdom, righteousnesse, and prouidence. 719. a 37.
 b & 720. a b & 733. a b. & 734. a b. &
 735. a b. & 736. a b.
 All Gods Creatures as well fencelesse as hauing fence, do teach vs our obedience and subiection vnto God. 682. a 62. & 683. a 50. b & 712. a 10. & 713. a.
 b & 714. a b. & 715. a b & 716. a b. &
 717. a b & 718. a b & 719. a b. & 720.
 a. b. & 734. a 7. b & 735. a. b. & 736.
 a b.
 All the Creatures of God owe seruice to his children by right of their inhe-rittance. 701. a 4 4.

Cunningnesse.

Cunningnesse to ouerthrowe a good matter is a hatefull vice before God.
 121. a 35.

Of Curiositie.

The vaine Curiositie of men in ser-ching Gods secrets. 55. a. 51. & 706. b.
 32.

God will not feede our fond Curiositie.
 481. a 27.

Of Cursing.

What is it to Curse God. 14. a 37. b 4.
 15. & 32. a 22.

How horrible a thing it is too Curse
 God. 14. a 36.

The Curse of God is alwaies vpon the wicked in what prosperitie so euer
 they bee. 471. a 16.

How men Curse God to his face. 20. b.
 12.

Wee may Curse the wicked, and what is ment by Cursing. 80. b 36. & 81. a 45.

D

Of Dallying.

It is not for vs to Dally with God. 283. a 47.

To Dally with Gods word and raise vn-profitable questions and vaine dispu-tations in the handling therof, is high treason against God. 266. b 5.

Damnation.

Our Damnation shalbe the greater if we amend not at Gods warninges & chastisements. 660. a 3. & 661. a 16. b.

Darkenesse.

The kingdom of Darkenes 179. a 100.

Dauid.

Dauids numbring of the people. 22. b.
 45.

Dauid was a fraile man. 25. b 66.

Dauid ouershootes him selfe through prosperitie. 27. b 37

Dauids aduourtie punished. 34. a 37.

Dauid a paterne of pacience to all men of honour. 507. b 31.

Dauncing.

Dauncing is a cursed mirth. 373. b 57.

Day.

Our Day is sufficient too make vs in excusable. 143. b 36.

VVhich are called the dayes of the Lord
 425. b 21.

Deceiptes.

Deceipts are worse than open violence.
 526. a 14

Defence.

How needfull Gods defence is for vs.
 20. b 39. & 28 a 30.

VVe neede not bee afrayde so long as wee bee vnder the Defence and tuition of God. 736. b 1

How needfull it is for vs to bee Defended of God. 28. a 30.

How farre wee may defend our selues.
 89. b 51.

Gods Defending and protecting of vs is a corzie to Sathan and all the wicked. 17. b 53.

Gods Defence and protection, do im-bolden, encourage, strengthen, vp-hold, and warrant the godly against all temptations, perils, and assaults.
 17. b 60.

G O D will Defende vs no lesse than he did the godly in old time. 18. b 42
 & 25. b. 48.

Deliuering and Deliuers.

Only God Deliuers from aduersitie.
 99. b 66.

Gods Deliuering of vs from any one ad-uersitie or affliction must strengthen vs against all other afterward. 748. b
 63. & 750. a.

The wickednesse of the Papistes in making many Deliuers. 100. a 3.

Deserts and Deseruing.

It is a renouncing of God for a man to to truy in his owne Desertes. 543. b.
 63.

It is an Article of beliefe in Poperie, to say that men can earne or purchase heauen by their owne deseruings. 735
 a 34.

God doth not handle men in this present life according too their Deseruings. 454. a a 40.

Of Despayre.

Despayre must be taken heede of in ad-uersitie. 46. b 42.

VVe must not Despayre nor be discouraged though wee slide backe oft en-times through infirmities. 602. b 58. &
 603. a

The meanes to keepe vs from Despayre in time of afflictions. 139. a 20.

Of Death and Dying

The Death of the persecuted is a precious Death. 102. b 32.

The children of God ought too wislie for Death. 59. a 63.

VVhat measure is to bee kept in wishing for Death. 58. b 50.

Iob wislieth amill for Death. 108. a 40. 62.

In what respect the children of G O D wish Death. 108. a 40.

In what respect worldlinges wish
 Death. 108. a 53.

In what respect wee maye wishe for Death. 58. a 44. b 14.

The difference betweene the Death of
 of the Godly and the Death of the vngodly. 102. b 41 & 318. a 40.

Dominion ouer Death belongeth only too God. 67. b 12.

VVhy Death is not desired but shuned of vs. 463. a 24.

VVe ought alwaies too thinke vpon
 Death. 76. a 7.

The Death of the wicked is alwaies forcible. 462. a 32.

There is no rest for the wicked in Deth
 55. b 3.

All men must needes Die. 36. b 23.

Of preparation to Death and cheereful-nesse in Dying. 77. b 40.

VVe drawe continually vnto Death. 75
 b 63. & 76. a 19.

VVhat it is to Die without wisdom.
 77. b 62.

It is for our profit to Dye betimes. 102.
 b 12.

It is not lawfull to seeke Counsel at the dead. 143. b 7.

VVhither the Dead know what we do in this life. 265. a 20.

VVho bee the Dead. 447. a 40

In man of him selfe there is nothing but Deadlinesse. 128. b 60.

Deuotion.

Our owne Deuotions and fancies driue vs backward, from God. 419. b 62.

VVhat the Papistes call Deuotion. 419.
 b. 46.

From whence Popish Deuotions sprag
 399. a 67.

Duties of diuers fortes.

The Dutie of all Superiors. 12. b 40. &
 13. b 10 29. 43. 577. b 12. & 618. b 49.

The Dutie of such as are in authoritie.
 13 a 11. 54. & 533. a 20.

The Dutie of such as are of meane degree. 619. a 53.

The Dutie of Ministers, Preachers, and Teachers. 13. a 18. 63. & 63. b. 60. & 64
 a 32. & 65. a 3. & 574. a 25. b 62. & 577
 a 28. b.

The Dutie of men in prosperitie. 20. a.
 53.

The Dutie of old folkes that are ignorant. 566. a 56.

Dutie of Parents. 12. b 55. & 13. a 50. & 13
 b 10. & 236. a 36

Dutie of Rich men. 6. a 5.

Dutie of houtholders. 12. b 55. & 13. a 51.
 & 13. b 10.

The Dutie of Offenders. 45. b 63.

The Dutie of a true Christian. 63. b 46.
 & 64. b 6. 17.

Our Dutie towards the afflicted. 4. 4. b
 29. & 45. b 67.

Our Dutie towards such as are wrongfully oppressed. 557. b 21.

Of Difference.

It is God that hath made & set the sundrie Differences and Diuersities be-twene all things. 731. a 16. & 733. a 55

Of Discerning.

The Table.

How to Discerne a rightmeaning mind
626. a. 43.

VVe Discerne not that which belongeth to our soules, because we are to much wedded to this present life.
504. b 17.

A marke to Discerne Hipocrites from Gods children. 66 a 63.

How greatly it is for our behoofe too Discerne God from his creatures, & what inconueniences insfew of the contrary. 654 a 54. b

Disorder.

The Disorder of things in this worlde impeacheth not Gods righteoufnesse
643. a 57.

VVhy God suffereth things to be Dis-ordered in this worlde. 643. a 63. &
652 a 41.

Of Displeasing of God.

VVhen we Displease God it is al one as if we proclaymed warre against him
705. b 8.

Vnaduised Displeasing of God must be eschewed. 51. a 7.

Aduised Displeasing of God is monstrous. 51. a 20.

Of Disputing with God.

The cause why men Dispute with God and thinke his iudgements strange.
620. b 55.

Of Dissembling.

It is not lawfull for Christians in any wise to Dissemble. 460. b 54.

They that Dissemble other mens euill doings are as guiltie as the offenders themselues. 638. b 35.

Diuinitie.

Popish Diuinitie. 197 a 3. & 256. b 48.

Popish Diuinitie hath two pattes. 266. b
48. & 267. a 29.

Doctrine.

Gods Doctrine must not bee corrupted with mingling or disguising 653. b. 52

All Doctrine that tendeth to the glory of God must bee held for good and holy 653. b 35.

VVhereat the Doctrine of God beginneth to be vayleable in vs 447. a 41.

The naturall office of good Doctrine.
476. a 38.

VVe must assure our selues that the good Doctrine which God sent vnto vs for our welfare commeth from heauen 505. a 15.

VVhy God hath fitted his Doctrine to our capacitie. 582. b 20.

All good Doctrines must bee receyued without questioning. 117. b 67.

The person that bringeth vs the Doctrine of God ought to be receiued with reuerence. 654. a 30.

All they that do not submit themselues to the Doctrine of saluation, fight against God. 376. a 27.

The faithfull must trie all Doctrines before they consent to them, and the touchstone to trie them by. 575. a 59
b & 577. b 62.

Loke more in Preachers, Teachers, Scriptures, Gods word.

Of Doubting.

Even the perfectest and faithfullest men doo sometimes fall into Doubt of Gods prouidence. 640. b 25.

The Doubting of the faithfull is ioyned
with quietnes. 61. b 53

Though we see death presēt before our eyes yet must we not Doubt. 516. a. 3.

The least Doubt or grudge that we receiue against Gods righteoufnesse is blasphemy. 607. a 59. b.

No aduersitie must make vs Doubt of
God. 490. b. 6.

Of Drawing.

The meanes whereby God Draweth vs to him are his feare and loue. 487. b.
15.

Two causes for the which God ought to Drawe neare vnto vs, for our custodie & mayntenance, and for our chastisement. 252. b 2.

Dust.

VVhat is ment by casting of Dust vpon mens heads. 45. b 48.

Loke more in Ashes.

E

Eagles.

The nature of Eagles. 719. a 25. b 41.

Proofe of Gods mightie power & wise-dome and prouidence in the nature of Haukes and Eagles. 719. a 22. b &
720. a. b.

The diligence of the Eagles in seeking their pray hereneth vs of excuse if we bee slothfull in seeking the foode of our soules and the heauenly life,
720. b 18.

Eares.

To what end and vse our Eares serue.
605. a 35. b 30. 56.

VVhat is ment by gods opening of our Eares, and how he doth it. 658. b 36.
& 659. a.

Earth.

The Cituation of the Earth and the wonderfull workmanship therof.
693. b 57. & 694. a b. & 675. a.

A double measuring of the Earth. 703.
a 61.

The Earth is a looking glasse to behold Gods mightie power and wisdom
in. 695. b. 5.

Gods mightie power and wisdom vetered in the Creation of the Earth prouoke vs too praise him. 693. b 57.
& 694. a b & 695. a b

Edific, and Edifying.

VVhat Edifying is. 267. b 27.

Two principall partes of Edifying. 267
b. 4.

Our wordes ought to be profitable &
Edific. 256. a 24.

The readiest waye for the Ministers to Edifie the people. 446. a 23.

How man is said to be Edified. 297. b 66

Election.

The enemies of Election. 231. b 38. & 232
a. 53.

Elephant.

The nature and properties of the Elephant. 730. b. 64. & 731. a. b

Enemy.

Our deadly Enemies doe oftentimes profit vs more then our freends. 508.
a. 21.

VVhy God sometime sheweth himselfe
our Enemy. 245. a 3.

How too withstand those tentations,
when God seemeth to bee our Enemie, and to ouerlade vs with afflictions.
329. b 64.

End.

All things are too bee iudged by the End wherto they tend. 34. b 25.

Enuy.

VVhy men doo Enuy and spyte one another. 654. b 37

VVhy wee shoulde not Enuie the prosperitie of the wicked. 362. b 16

VVhy wicked Princes and great personages Enuy good and vertuous men
655. a. 20.

Errorr.

He that doth not withstand al Errorrs and wicked opinions, is a traytour to God 460. a 9.

Esau.

Esau and his linage accursed. 2. b 29.

Estridge.

The nature and properties of the Es-tridge. 716. a 62. b

Of Estridges 713. b 50. & 716. a 35. 61

Euill.

Euill breedeth and dwelleth within vs
57. a 33.

There commeth a double profite only by abstayning from doing of Euill in respect only of some person. 493.
a. 20.

Hee that is hardened in Euill doth scorf
at all Religion. 516. b 61.

All occasions of Euill must bee eschewed, and how. 37. a 37

VVith what minde wee must find fault with Euill and condemne it. 122. a.
18.

Of eschewing of Euill, and how to do
it. 5. a 10. 31.

Examine.

VVhy God Examineth vs so straitely in this world. 651. b 13

Example.

Each mans Example is an instruction and edefying to other. 600. b 8

Of Excusing.

Excusing of mens selues by other folks.
13. b 46.

VVe shall not be Excused by alleaging that euery man doth as wee do. 494
a. 13

Eyes.

It is impossible for vs to open our Eyes without conceyuing some offence against God. 523. a 47

To what end our Eyes were made. 529.
a 19. & 605. a 26

Ezechias.

Ezechias ouershoots himselfe through prosperitie, and is reprovued for it. 27.
b. 25.

The Table.

F

Fauor:

Gods Fauour is not to be esteemed by the present prosperity. 307. b 33.
Our state is cursed in all things, so long as we be not sure of Gods Fauour. 596. a 62. & 597. a. b.
To haue god Fauourable, we must seke him without Hypocrity. 204. a 63.
The most certayne experience of God his Fauour is in aduersitie 465. a 30
The only ease in our miserie, is to haue God Fauourable to vs 110. a 49.
God seemeth sometimes to withdrawe his Fauour from the godly, & why. 592. b 51.
The Fauour of man auayleth vs nothing in bearing out of our finnes, 69. a 12.

Face or Countenance.

What is meant by the Face or Countenance of God 629. a 23.
Gods countenance is the comfort and welfare of the faithfull, and the terror and destruction of the vnfaithfull 728. b. 24.
What is ment by Gods hyding of hys Face from vs. 629. a 26. and 630. a 2.

Fayle.

God suffereth men to Fayle vs, that we might the better resort vnto him, or else that he might humble vs. 332. a. 23. and 31.

Faire.

What soeuer is Faire or good vnder heauen, it turneth vs away from our God, whereas it ought to leade vs to him. 523. a 3.

Faultes and Faultinesse.

It is for our welfare to haue our Faults discouered and rebuked 622. a. 42.
The lothnesse of men to acknowledge or confesse their Faultes. 599. a 1.
The best thinges in man are alwayes mingled with some Faultinesse. 518. b. 3.
Other folkes Faults must teache vs too take heed to ourselues. 637. a 19.
It is impossible for vs to knowe all our Faultes. 525. b 22.
Though it be a yong child that telleth vs our Faultes, yet is hee a messenger of Gods tending. 495. b 18.

Fayth and Faythfull.

Fayth must be grounded vppon the expresse word of God. 11. a 19.
The nature of Fayth. 338. b 31. and 459 a 46.
Fayth is an vncorruptible seed. 162. b 56
Fayth ouerruleth our affections 236. b. 47.
Vwherein Fayth sheweth it selfe. 730. a 21.
The Fayth of Gods children is well established in true lowly nelsse. 178. a 24.
Fayth cannot continew without patience. 28. a 59.
The confirmacion of our Fayth 648. a. 14.
The chief exercise of the Faythfull. 410. b. 61.
The Faythfull must alwayes goe forewarde in the knowedge and practicing of Gods Doctrine, and not stand at a stay. 604. a 65. b. and 605. a. b.

One chiefe Article of the Faith of the Papistes. 505. b. 47.
Vwherein the Faythfull differ from the Faythlesse in this lyte 309. a. 52.
God will worke continuallye in his Faythfull ones. 514. a 12.
The state of the Faythfull in this world. 254. a 29.
The Fayth, simplicitie and obedience of the Papistes. 575. a. 64.
God dealeth with men accordinge to the measure of Fayth, which he giueth them. 24. b. 29. 54. and 25. a. 37.

Feare.

The Feare of God, what it is. 4. b 31. & 267. b 32.
The Feare of God comprehendeth all Religion, Seruice, and worshipping of God. 4. b 45.
Feare and wisdom, two staves of earthly kingdomes. 224. b 22.
It is no woonder though such as Feare God be subiect to sleanders. 509. a 3
How we must Feare God, and trust in God. 467. a 2.
VVe can neuer Feare God aright, onlesse we know him as he is. 487. a 43
The Feare of God ought to teach vs to shun euill. 487. b 45.
The Feare of God is the ground of true vertue, and of all good life. 4. a 50. b 2
The difference betwene the Feare of the godly and the vngodly. 319. a 30. & 360. a 52.
The deafe sound of Fearefulnesse that affrighteth the wicked. 279. a 9.
The meanes not to be alrayed out of meature. 360. a 67.
How profitable it is for vs sometime to be put in Feare 319. a 40.
VVe must not only Feare men, but specially the heauenly iudge. 493. b 29.
Vnder this word Feare, Iob comprehendeth all the anguishes that we can feele, either fro God or men 513. b 4.
They that stande not in Feare of God, are enforced to stande in Feare of his creatures. 682. a 14.
VWhen a man is once grounded in the Feare of God, all his other imperfections are borne withall at Gods hand. 743. b 44 & 744. a. b.

Feast and Feasting.

Feasting is good of it selfe. 7. b 5. & 9. a 2. 10.
Feasting, and the end and vse of Feasts. 7. b 65.
Feastes haue alwayes some disorder. 8. a 5.
Feasting full of vayne talke. 8. a 27.
The Feasting of the worldlinges and wicked fort. 8. a 41.

Feeding and Foode.

Seeing that God Feedeth and preferreth our bodies, he wil much rather Feede and preferre our Soules. 710. b 63.
Seeing that God Feedeth the beastes & foules of the aire, he wil much more Feede the faythfull. 710. a 39. b 27.
Men must not despise the Food of their soules. 504. a 23.

Feele.

There is in man a double Feeling and conceyning. 470. a 23.
Although men shut their eyes, yet dorsh God make them to Fele him in their consciences 673. a 63
To Feele no grief or remorte of conscience, is the extreemest of all miserie 676. a. 7.

Flatterie and Flattering.

The aptnesse of man to Flatter himselfe in his finnes 85. a 31.
Mennes ouerweening in Flattering themselves, and the remedie thereof. 723. a 55. 6. and 724. a 6.
VVe must not Flatter our selues in our euill dooings, how fayre colour soeuer we haue to alledge. 724. b 29.
He that Flattereth himselfe, renounceth God. 545. b. 27.
He that Flattereth the wicked, sheweth that hee hath no trust in God. 439. a 11.
The cursednes of Flattery. 307. b. 24. and 54.

Figures.

Figures themselves must cease, and yet the substance of them bee retyned still. 10. a 50.

Fooles and Folie.

What is ment by the woord Foole. 79. b. 43.
VWho are Fooles. 81. b 15.
The Folie of wyse worldlings. 477. b 31.
Our first lesson in Gods schole, is to become Fooles. 478. a 25.
How we may iudge of Fooles. 81. b. 20. 40.

Forbearing.

The reprobates gaine nothing by gods long forbearing of them. 631. a 40.

Looke more in Sparing and Suffering.

Forget.

The Forgetting of our selues, maketh vs to grudge against God 634. b 4.
What is ment by forgetting God. 145. a 33.
VVe must not Forget our selues when God spareth vs. 519. b 46.
VVe soone Forget whatsoeuer we leaue at a sermon or in the Scripture. 495. a 10.
How God is sayd to Forget vs. 257. a 57.

Forgiue and Forgiuenesse.

It belongeth alonly to God to Forgiue or to punish sinners. 630. a 47.
Gods free mercy is the cause and foundation of the Forgiuenesse of our finnes. 502. b 31 and 593. a. b. & 594. a 23. b. and 630. b. 3 65.
Forgiuenesse of finnes commeth onely by the preaching of the Gospell. 593. b 18.
Gods Forgyuing of our sins is as a razing of vs vp from death 601. a. 6.
To what ende God Forgiueth vs our finnes. 597. b 26.
The way to escape Gods heauy hande, is to seeke Forgiuenesse of our sins. 631. a 61. b 40.
The opinion of Papistes concerninge

The Table.

Gods Forgiuing of finnes 630. b 10

Frayeltie.

Our Frayeltie is set foorth in the person of Iob. 123. a 46.

God spareth vs because of our Frayelty 127. a 56.

Our Frayeltie must bee set before our eyes in our prayers. 127. b 35.

Our Frayeltie must be mentioned in our prayers, with humility. 127. b 68.

Why the scripture telleth vs that God pitieth vs in respect of our Frayeltie, 128. a 14.

In prayer to alledge our owne Frayeltie and abiectnesse, is acceptable to god. 244. a 40.

Frendship.

No Friendship but amonge the godly. 7. b 29.

Looke more in brotherly Loue.

Freewill.

Why the Papistes imagin a Freewill, 202. b 31.

The Papistes ground for Free will. 205. a 50. and 234. b 50. and 626. b 2.

The establishers of Free will, and their reasons. 231. b 8. and 232. a 47.

A brief ouerthrow of Free will. 478. a. 16.

Frowardnesse.

Our vntowardnesse and Frowardnesse make God rougher to vs than hee would be. 30. a. 26.

Funeralles.

Funeralles and Tumbes that are ouer sumptuouse, are a kynd of resistinge God and nature. 30. b 33.

Fyght

Mannes greatest Fyght is agaynst himselfe and his owne vices 255. b. 32.

G.

Gate.

What is meant by Gate 83. a 1.

What is ment by falling downe in the Gate. 82. b 68.

Generalnesse.

Generalnesse of sinne is no excuse of sinning. 4. b 5. 18. b 8. 29.

Giftes

The Giftes of the mynde, and all sciences, trades and handicraftes, come of God and not of Nature. pag. 566. b. 9.

To what ende God bestoweth his Gifts of grace vpon vs. 566. b 42.

The Giftes which God gyueth, must be communicated to our neyghbours, 12. b 33. and 341. a 64. and 345. a 20

Gods Gifts ought not to serue too any vain glorie. 342. a 6

The Giftes that God gyueth vs muste make vs the earnestest in gloryfyinge God. 12. b 22.

The despying of Gods Giftes in men, redoundeth to the iniury of god himselfe. 275. a 68.

In Iobes tyme hee that had excellent Giftes, was reuerenced of the whole people. 506. a 22.

God dooth and may iustly at his pleasure both giue and take away, 30. b 4 and 11. a 37. b.

We shall pay dearely for Gods Giftes, if they be not bestowed as thei ought to be. 498. b 36.

We must not be proud of gods Giftes in Nature, or otherwyse. pag. 729. a. 40

It is a harde matter for a man not to abuse God his Gifts. 520. a 36.

The more Gods Gifts are, the more are the afflictions and tryalles of them that haue them. 293. a 33.

Glory and Glorifie.

Wherein Gods Glorie consisteth. 215. a 67.

God gyueth vs cause too Glorifie and prayse him euen in our troubles and afflictions, how boysterouse so euer he seeme to vs. 23. a 49.

We cannot Glorifie God in our aduersities, except we bee perswaded that they be for our saluation & welfare, 639. b 58.

The meane to Glorifie God aright. 576 b. 57. and 640. b. 21.

God neuer ceaseth to gyue vs cause to Glorifie him by doing vs good. 645. a 4.

Men ought not to Glorie in their present greatnes. 56. a 2.

Of the Glorie of this world 320. a 64.

God.

What is comprehended vnder the word God. 138. a 49.

God applyeth himselfe to vs after all fashions, to the intent to winne vs. 689. a 20.

God enuieth not any mans vertuousenesse or weldoing. 654. b 54.

God neuer fayleth vs at our neede. 99. b 11.

God is not bound to vs, but wee wholly to hym 24. b. 45. 641. b 63. and 734. b 45. and 735. a b.

God is the fountayne of all equitie and right. 137. b 39.

God is not affectioned as men are. 641. b. 63. and 643. a 40. and 654. q 34.

God is not like vs, neyther hath he any part of our nature in him. 641. b. 51. and 642. b 50. 654. a 54. b & 655. a.

God is vnchangeable and a trew performer of his promises. 25. b 47. and 26. a 1.

God is likened to earthly Princes. 15. a. 20.

God is openly shewed in the person of his Sonne. 10. b 33.

God is vnpartial. 655. b 49.

God knoweth better what is meete for vs, than we our selues doo. 27. a 55.

God knoweth our wayes and reckneth our steps. 525. b 9.

God knoweth what is meete for oure small without Sathans counsell. 18. b 65.

God layeth not more vpon vs than wee be able to beare. 23. a 58.

God must haue the prayse of our worldly welfare, and of al other things. 21. a 4. and 30. b 55.

It is against Gods natur, to deale roughly or to be angry with vs. 664. a 61.

God neuer reiecteth suche as come vnto him vnfaignedly. 142. b 64.

God serueth his owne turne by Sathan and the wicked, and yet the euill remayneth still in them 22. b 35. and 33 a 31. and 34. a 46. b 19.

God and Satan work both in one act, but yet to contrary endes 34. b 30.

God neuer suffereth good men too perish. 144. b 16.

God turneth euill into good towardes his chosen. 23. a 6. 47.

Gods apparell or clothing 727. a 58.

What is ment by Gods arme. pag. 727 b 31.

Gods bearing and forbearing of vs is of his owne free mercy. 651. a 45.

What it is to be written in Gods booke 320. b 59.

Gods concealing of things fro our knowledge, is for that our capacitie is not able to conceiue them. 582. a 44.

Gods dooings are incomprehensible to vs, furtherforth than he listeth to reueale them to vs. 33. b 14.

A comparison betwene God and vs, to abate our pride in finding fault with Gods doings. 633. a 44.

God doth not any thing that is not reasonable and rightfull. 32. a 51. & 34. b 53.

Gods euerlastingnesse compared with the shortnesse of our life. 698. b.

Gods goodnesse towards vs. 15. b 28. & 23. a 6.

Gods goodnesse in giuinge seasonable weather. 709. a 31.

Gods goodnesse in humbling himselfe to our capacity, both in his doctrine and in his woorkes. 14. a 66. & 15. a 21. & 16. b 55. & 17. a 1. & 35. b 50 & 483. a 67. & 673. b 25. & 702. b 42.

Gods goodnesse extendeth it selfe euen to the wicked. 701. a 1.

God sheweth his goodnesse towards vs at all times. 465. a 23.

We must repose our selues vpon Gods goodnesse as Iob did. 513. a 22.

How we ought to conceiue the goodnesse and power of God, and beleue in him. 337. b 20.

Gods intent in vsing goodnesse toward vs. 30. a 24. & 677. a 21.

How vnmindfull we be of Gods goodnes in any of our aduersities. 25. a 53.

Gods grace is not to be measured by that that we see 142. b 18.

Gods grace is the onely stay and repayer of all things. 76. a 55.

Whereof it cometh that we be destitue of Gods grace and holy spirit. 26. a 8.

The Papists know not what Grace is. 409. b 49.

We must goe still forwarde in Gods schoole and not stande still at a stay. 737. a 35.

Gods souereintie ouer man & all other his creatures. 1. a 15. 27. & 7. a 42. & 14 a 56. & 15. a 22. 33. 42. & 22. a. 27. & 31 a. 37. & 33. a 56. & 34. a 63.

Whereunto the consideration of Gods soueraigntie leadeth vs. 87. b 21.

Gods spirite raigneth aboute the order of nature. 566. b. 6. & 567. a. b. & 668. a b.

The wonderfull alteration that Gods spirite worketh in mennes hart. 747 b 29

Gods will is the rule of all righteousnes 624. a 35.

God sheweth an incomprehensible wisedom euen in the basest and smallest things. 706. a 56.

Gods

The Table.

Gods woord is not harde of it selfe, but by reason of our dulnesse. 16. b 53
Gods woord must not be forbidden to be red of any men 16. b 60
Gods woord and trueth are dishonored when it is put to an euill vse. 2. a 22
VVith what myndes men do commonly heare and reade Gods woorde. 653 a 64.
VVhy God sendeth his woord vnto vs, 361. a 43.
It is best for vs, that God haue his eye vpon vs. 134. a 59.
The waye too come vnto GOD. 237. b 707.
VVe cannot bring any thing to God to pleasure him withall. 641. b 67. and 642. a 43.
How God sheweth himselfe vntoo vs. 158. b 54.
The things that are in God cannot be deuided the one from the other. 137 b 45.
VVhy the scripture termeth GOD our Buckler, Sheeld, wall, trench, rāpyre, bulwark, tower, fortresse, &c. 20. b 59.
VVho foecer setteth him selfe agaynst God, setteth himselfe against all right and equitie. 138. b 46.
Looke more in the tytes of Almightynesse, Afflictions, Benefites, Beings Chastitementes, Defence, Face, Goods, Gouvernement, Giftes, Glorie, Holynesse, Honour, Iustify, Justice, Iudgements, Knowing and Knowledge, Lawe, Loue, Liberalitie, Musicke, Magnifye, Providence, Power, Righteousnesse, Soueraintie, Trueth, Will, Wisedome, Worker, Word. &c.
Gouernement & Gouerners.
The mayntenance of Gouernement, common weales, and ciuill policie, is an euident prooffe of Gods prouidēce 657. a 5. b.
VVhy wicked Gouerners are to be honored and obeyed, & how. 617. a 35
The state of Gouernment commeth of God, and to what end it is ordeyned 657. a 8.
VVhy God suffereth wicked Gouerners and Officers to reigne ouer vs, 614. b 47. and 630 a 27.
The demeanor of Princes, Gouerners and Iustices in these dayes 657. a 51.
Comonly the worst and wickedest haue the Gouernement of thinges in world. 613. b 26.
It is meete that God should Gouern vs, and that we should followe his holy will. 523. b 26.
Earthly Gouerners haue need to be put in mind of their dutie, 613. b 65.
VVicked Gouerners are to be rebuked by the preachers. 617. b 36.
VVhy men are put in subiection and thralldom vnto gouerners. 714. a 44 b
All inferior meanes of Gouernement, are but instruments and seruantes of Gods souerain dominion. 614. a 53
God is not only the maker, but also the continuall and alonly Gouerner of all thinges 613. a 67. and 614. a 53. and 685. b. 5. and 712. a 29.

Gods almighty power in Gouerning all things, is an inuincible and peremp-tory prooffe of his righteousnesse 613 b. 18. and 614. b 68.
God Gouerneth, guydeth & directeth all things by his prouidēce, notwithstanding the manifold troubles and disorders in the world. 652. a 37. et 655
How God Gouerneth the worlde 401. a 61.

Godly.

Godly folke must alwayes resiste euill. 18. b 8. 15.
Godly folke are afflicted more roughly than reprobates 25. a 57.
The honor that God doth vs in giuing vs grace to be Godly, & to ouercome Satans assaults. 17. b 27.
GOD sometymes clotheth the Godly with the spoyle of the wicked. 472. b 12.

Looke more in Faythfull.

Gospell.

The Gospell is a cleare looking glasse when in we see God face to face 332. b 65.
The doctrine of the Gospell belongeth to all sortes of men, both wyse & ignorant, learned and vnlearned, hygh or lowe. 624. a 36. b.
The doctrine of the Gospell cannot bee attayned to by mans naturall vnderstanding. 566. b 68.
The cause why the Gospell is preached 574. a 54
The chief ende of the Gospell 590. b 56
The inestimable benefite and treasure of the Gospell, and of all godly comfort. 590. b 8. & 591. a b. & 593. a 29.
The singular priuiledge which God giueth too those Countries where hys Gospell is preached 591. b 41
In the Gospell we haue innumtreasures of wisdom and knowledge 595. b 23
The common manner of mens knowing of the Gospell 604. b 51
VVhy the worlde hateth the Gospell, 434. a 1

Good and Goods.

VVe must do good to suche as haue no meanes to recompence vs 497. b. 55.
God giueth vs his Goods, to the intent we should relieue our brethern with them 535 a 60
VVe must looke for Good according as God promisseth it. 550. a 22
It is an vntolerable vice for a man too trust in his goods. 541 a. 38
None of the Good turnes whiche are done in the world, are done freely. 496. b 17

Of Grudging or murmuring.

To murmur or Grudge against God for afflicting vs, is as much as to iustifie our selues aboute him, or too make ourselues more rightuouse than hee, 561 a 8
To Grudge agaynst God in afflictions is a priuie and indirect blaspheming of him 640. a 10
To Grudge at the prosperitie of the wicked or at the disorder of thinges in the world, is a blaspheming of God, 509. b 32. and 611. a 38

All that Grudge or pleade against god, shall be confounded 622. b 37.
Looke more in Impaciencie.

Ground.

The false Grounde that Iobes friendes tooke in reprobuing him 569. a 49.

H.

Hande.

It is not possible to withstand or escape the Hand of God 705. a 1
Iob sheweth that when we be helde vp by the Hand of God, wee haue as it were a strong corde to hold by 512. a 19
The faythfull that are pressed by the Hand of god, haue a terrible anguist 516. b 43
There is no other safetie for vs but the hope of succour at Gods Hand, 513. b 59

Happy.

Mans happinesse is not to be enclosed within this present lyte, 461. b 57.
The faithful are more Happy in aduersitie then the faythlesse in prosperity. 467 a 32. b

Happinesse.

A difference betweene the Happinesse of the children of God, and the children of this world 410. a 1.
How we shall iudge man to be Happy. 467. b 2

Hart.

VVhat this woord Hart importeth 204 a 24.
The rubburnes and hardnes of mans Hart. 203. b 45
Hart burning 67. a 35

Heauen.

How the Heauens are not cleane before God. 273. a 55.
Gods mighty power and wisdome vttered in the creation of the Heauens & in the order of the Skies prouoke vs to praise him. 695. b. 44. & 695. a.

Hayle.

The ingendering of Hayle. 704. b 20
VVhy Hayle is engendered in the ayre, 671. b 55

Heauinesse.

It is good reason God should caste vs into Heauinesse, seeing we abuse his benefites so shamefully 520. b 42
Hell.

VVhat is meant by Christs going down into Hell. 513. b. 3

Helpe.

Men cannot liue without many Helpe 715. b 39.
All the Helpes and sustenances of mans lyfe, do come of Gods meere prouidence. 715. b 41.
It is onely Gods office too Helpe the distressed, and too disappoynt the wicked of their purposes. 88. a 54. & 89. a 5. 35. and 90. b 64.
VVe cannot conceyue after what manner God Helpeth vs. 515. b 7.
If God gyue vs wherewith, he bindeth vs out of hand to Helpe such as wāt. 498. b 28.
There is none of vs whiche hath not need of anothers Helpe. 498 a. 68.

VVhy

The Table.

Why GOD sometye delayeth his Helpe though we pray vnto him. 327 a 55.
 VVee must not iudge of God his Helpe according to euery moment of time 515. a 43.
 How Gods assistance or Helpe is to be measured 101 a 60.
 VVhy God Helpeth vs not at our need. 643. b. & 644. a. b. & 645. a. b. & 646 a. b. & 647. a. b. & 648. a. b.
 VVhat wayes God vseth too Helpe the oppressed. 90. a. 22.

Of Hearing and Harkening.

Men muste firste Harken before they speake, and learne before they teach 637. a 38
 VVee must giue eare to the godly & lerned, and Heare them. 494. b. 6
 VVee must not thinke it strange though God trye our fayth by not seeming to Heare vs 515. b 55.
 The cause why a godly man can not be receyued and Heard 494. a 55.
 It is a detpying of the Spirit of GOD, when we touchsafe not to Heare a man that may profit vs 494. b 21.

Heresies.

The cause of Heresies and errors. 487. a 32.

Hipocrisie.

Hipocrisie described. 4. a 17.
 Hipocrisie can not bee hid from Gods eye 136. a 33. and 167. b 7.
 Hipocrisie must be shunned. 92. a 14.
 Hipocrites haue forgotten God. 145. b 25.
 VVho bee Hypocrites of hart. 660 b. 55.
 Mennes foolish Hipocrisie in clokinge their sinnes before GOD, and their lothnesse to haue them rebuked. 621 a. b. 65
 Our lyfe shall neuer be well ruled, so long as there is any feinednesse or Hipocrisie in vs. 744. a 3.
 Hipocrisie and pride keepe vs from hūbling our selues before God, & from confessinge our faultes before men. 600. a 47.
 Adam the first beginner of Hipocrisie. 552. a 41
 Hypocrites can prayse God in prosperitie. 19. b 60 and 20 a 29
 Of Hipocrites 288. a 23
 Hypocrites grudge against God in aduersitie 10. b 63. and 20. a 35
 A marke to knowe Hypocrites by. 64. b 40

Histories.

Gods will is that we exercise our selues in Histories. 342. a 60
 Iobes History was a thing done in deed and not deuized for instruction only 2. b. 46
 To what intent the History of Iob was written 1. a 15. & 2 a 61. b 33. 26. a 14.

Holynesse.

Holynesse beginneth within vs. 3 b 18.
 Trew Holynesse described 18. a 51
 A patern of all Holynesse 509. b 12.
 The vertn of Holywater 43. b 64.

Honour.

Of giuing tydes of Honour vnto men. 573. a 27.

VVho ought to be honored and honorable among vs. 81. b. 43
 The meane to attaine to true honour, praise, or glory. 577 a 2.
 VVhy God aduanceth men to Honor, and their dutie 576. b 41.

It is a naturall thing for such as haue ben in Honour to be vnable to beare their owne defacing. 507. a 31.

The free mayntayning of Gods truth is no impeachment of any mans Honor. 573. b 6

Such as Honour and reuerence the wicked are to be abhorred as Dogges. 71 b. 50.

The right Honoring of God, what it is and wherein it consisteth, and how it is to be done. 66. b. 2. & 106. a. 20. and 118. b 4. & 650. a 12.

The Honour that God requireth consisteth not in ceremonies. 160. a 200.
 He Honoreth God, that imbraceth his promise. 101. b. 6.

Looke more in Service and Worship.

Hope.

Hope. 62. b 501.
 Hope of a better life. 54. a 49.
 Of Hope for here after. 93. a 22.
 Hope ought to continew to the end. 250. a 25.
 VVee ought to Hope in God beyond Hope. 337. a 40.
 The cause why we bee so easily driuen out of the right way is want of Hope 650. a 50.

Horfes.

A prooffe of Gods mighty power in the nature of Horfes. 718. a 68.
 Gods godnesse sheweth it selfe in that Horfes are tamed and subdewed too our seruice. 718. b 62.

House.

VVee must not build our selues Houses by guile, but according to the goods that God hath giuen vs. 472 a 12.
 Iob compareth the Houses of wicked men to moths Houses 47. b. 53.

Humilitie or Lowlinesse.

VVhat true Humilitie or Lowlinesse is 545. a 47.
 Humilitie the mother and roote of all vertue 55. 376. b. 19.
 Humilitie or Lowlinesse is a most acceptable Sacrifice to God. 545. a 41.
 God will admit no counterfet Humilitie 725. b. 52.
 VVee haue neede to be continually hūbled and brought Lowe. 746. a 31.
 The Papistes Humilitie. 217. b 56. & 725 b. 56.
 An exhortation to Humilitie and repentance. 649 a 27.
 Meanesto bring men to Humilitie. 84 b. 2. 4. & 85. a 41. & 712. b. 35 & 714. a 22 b. & 715 a. b. & 716. a b & 717. a b & 718 a b & 719 a b. & 727. a 39. b. and 728. a b and 729. a b. and 730. a b. and 731. a b. and 732 a b and 733 a b. and 734. a b. and 735. a b. and 736 a. b.

Hyde and Hyding

Our Hydinge of our faultes from the world shal not auayle vs before God

621. a 38. b 34.

VVee must take heede that in 'condemning other men wee hide not our owne faultes. 496. a 57.

Though God hide himselfe from his seruants at the first, yet he neuer forgetteth them. 516. a 62.

There is no Hyding of our selues from God, for all thinges must come too accompt before him. 621. a 1.

Hynde.

The properties of Hyndes. 711. a 67. b.

7

Idoll.

An Idoll that hath no reason is a mirror of our nature. 476. b 59.

Ignorance.

Men cannot iustly pretend any excuse of Ignorance. 528. a 12. & 600. b 27.

Mens Ignorance reproued. 635. a 31.
 The Ignorance of the heathen men is wilfull, and much more of the Christians. 626. b 30.

God sheweth himselfe so manifestly in all his woorkes as wee cannot excuse our selues by Ignorance. 718. a 2.

Our owne wilfull Ignorance maketh vs bold to carp at Gods doings. 718. b 38.

VVilfull Ignorance serueth to condēne men & not to excuse them. 660 a 50.

The innumerable varietie of Gods wonderfull woorkes leaueth vs without excuse of Ignorance if wee glorifie him not. 713. a 33 b

Mans misfaldging of his owne frailtie and Ignorance. 1. a 37. & 11. a 5.

Image.

VVee are the Image of God. 76. a 31.

Immortality.

Frō whence the Immortalitie of foules procedeth. 128. b 47. & 129. a 3. & 616. b 3.

The Immortality of Angels procedeth from God. 128. b 54.

Impatiency.

VVhat Impatiency is. 314. a 20.
 The cause of our Impatiency. 106. a 7. & 581. a 38. & 611. b 26. & 725. b 42.
 Impatiency doth not vtter it selfe commonly at the first brunt of aduersity 20. a 68. b 1.

It is not for man too bee Impatient by struing against God, or to find faule with his doings. 719. a 40. & 733. a 50. & 735. b 59. & 736. a b.

VVhen God afflicteth vs, we must bee watchfull that we turne not aside vn to Impatiency. and why. 666. b 21. & 486. a 49.

Impatiency is a robbing of God of his right, and a making of our selues equal with him. 581. b 5.

Our grudging or pleading against God through Impatiency, shal not auaille vs at all. 663. b 44.

VVhofoeuer is Impatient rebelleth against God. 667. b 1.

The least Impatiency in the world, is a desying of God, and a condemning of him to be vnrighteous. 725. b 23. & 726. a b.

There is not a worse thinge, than to grudge at Gods doings through Impatiency, and why. 635. b 29.

To

The Table.

To be Impatient in aduersitie, is a blaspheming of God, a taking vpon vs to be Maisters and controllers ouer him, and a condemning of him to be vnrightuouse. 138. b. 53. and 579. b. 68. and 580. a. 58. b. & 634. b. 50. & 635. b. 41. and 725. b. 23. and 726. a. b.

The Inconueniences of Impatiency in aduersitie. 78. a. 52.

The iust frute and reward of Impaciencie. 687. b. 62. and 688. a. b. and 690. b. 61. and 691. a. b. and 692. b. 17. & 721. a. 24. b. and 722. a. b. and 723. a. and 726. a. 17.

Inferiour meanes.

God can worke our saluation without Inferiour meanes. 620. a. 20.

VWhy God vseth the inferiour meanes in sauing and prefering his faithful ones. 620. a. 52.

God needeth not these Inferiour meanes to preferre the faythful. 619. b. 56

Infirmities.

God knoweth oure Infirmities better then our selues 518. a. 41.

Iniquitie.

Iniquitie doth now so ouerflowe, that they which be moste shamelesse, are most valeant 493. b. 52.

Looke more in Sin and in Wickednesse.

Inquisitiue.

VVe must not be to Inquisitiue of gods doings 629. a. 19. 65. and 630. a. 14.

Looke more in Seeke or Searche.

Intent.

The good Intent of man is nothinge worth without Gods direction 44. a. 40.

The good Intent of the Papistes 609. a. 61.

Inuentions.

Mennes owne Inuentions muste be shunned 78. b. 32.

Mens folie in preferring their owne Inuentions before gods word 633. b. 44

Job.

Job was a frayle man as we be 25. b. 45. 66.

Job mayntayning a good case mishandleth it, and his friends mayntaining an euill case, handle it well 1. b. 32. & 743. a. 64. and 744. b. 22.

Job seemeth contrary to him selfe, but is not 488. a. 54.

Job was righteous being copared with other men 170. b. 65

Job liued in this world as it were an Angel of God 521. b. 52.

Job liued after the time of Abraham. 3. a. 5

Job condemned of wickednesse, because he had not ben patient enough 663. a. 15

Job is blessed of god in al things 7. a. 32

Job sheweth that the reproches which men did vnto him, touched him too the harte 512. b. 40.

Job renowned among the people of Israell 2. b. 5.

Job and Daud two mirrours of patience, fayth, and hope 514. a. 7.

Iobes name interpreted 2. b. 43.

Iobes antiquitie 2. a. 50.

Iobes richnesse 5. a. 67.

Iobes fault 606. b. 61. and 639. a. 32. and 744. a. 14

Iobes constancie in eschewing euill & doing good 18. b. 21. 27. b. 54

Iobes foundnesse in Religion, and vp-rightnesse of lyfe 2. a. 57. b. 38.

Iobes vertuousnesse and humilitie 5. b. 60. and 6. b. 31

Iobes vertuousnesse is a condemnaciō to the whole lande where hee liued, yea and to all vnbeleeuers and wicked liuers. 3. b. 21. 18. and 4. a. 39. and 6. a. 25. and 18. b. 14

Iobes friendes torment him vnder preence of comforting him 1. a. 59. and b. 13.

VWhy Iobes vertuouse and vpright life is repeated 18. a. 19.

VWhy Iob is sayd to haue withdrawen himselfe from euill 36. a. 62.

VWhy God afflicted Iob 188. a. b

VWhy some men haue ben of opinion that this booke of Iob was a deuyzed portrayture of patience, and not a playne storie or thing done 24. b. 27.

Ioy.

The Ioye of the world is a turning away from God 466. b. 19.

The cause why the Ioye of this worlde is cursed before God 466. b. 5. & 17.

All men desire Ioye 466. b. 3.

Looke more in Mirth.

Of Iudging and Iudgement.

Gods Iudgements are executed both vpon good and bad 22. b. 19.

God hath alwayes left some recordes of his Iudgements in this life. 343. a. 53.

Men must be Iudged by God, and not take vpon them to Iudge him 608. b. 22. and 669. a. b.

God referueth the Iudgement of mens finnes to himselfe. 623. a. 21.

Gods Iudgements are not alwayes apparant 471. b. 16.

Hypocrites do skoffe out Gods Iudgements 92. a. 23

How God Iudgeth 154. a. 5

No Court can saue the wicked fro the Iudgement of God 361. a. 10

It belongeth onely to GOD too Iudge whether we be good or euill 527. a. 41

God executeth not his Iudgements in this world, so that nothing bee out of square. 309. a. 10.

God beginneth Iudgement at his own house. 742. b. 48. and 743. a.

God his Iudgements must not lye as it were buryed and neuer to be spoken of 525. a. 22.

It is common to the beleeuers and vnbeleeuers to Iudge of things in this world. 477. a. 22.

Difference betwene the maner of gods Iudging, and the maner of worldly Iudges 623. b. 5.

Mans corrupt Iudgement 82. a. 40

Hastie Iudgement condemned 80. a. 33. and 339. a. 56

Hastie Iudgement is treason to GOD, 367. a.

The cause that men Iudge vnaduisedly of Gods workes 652. a. 26. b. and 658.

a. 27. and 702. b. 17

VVe must not Iudge of Gods dooings at the first sight 650. a. 39

VVe ought too wishe for nothinge more then to be Iudged at Goddes hands: especially if we haue recourse to his mercy 305. a. 52

God doth not execute his Iudgements to the vew of the eye 425. a. 18

Men must not thinke to comprehend Gods Iudgements in their own brayn. 476. a. 37.

VVe must not Iudge of things by their outward apparance 658. a. 38

The meanes to feele our finnes aright, is to thinke vpon Gods maiestie and Iudgements 84. b. 25

How we may be discrete Iudges of the chastisements of God 62. b. 28.

VVe must not Iudge of men according to Gods handlinge of them in thys present lyfe, 68. b. 31. and 324. b. 40. & 489. a. 50. and 489. 5

The way to consider aright of Goddes Iudgements 308. a. 67.

How to behaue our selues against thae tentation, when men giue a wrongfull Iudgement of vs 223. a. 64.

VWhat it is to fulfill the Iudgement of the wicked 662. a. 14

VWherein Iobes friendes sayled in Iudging of him 467. b. 28

God executeth his Iudgements swiftly and speedily 623. b. 10. and 624. a. 2.

Iustice.

Gods Iustice is knowen twoo wayes, 163. a. 45

Iustice consisteth of twoo partes 165. b. 59

The rightfulnessse of Gods Iustice in punishing and chastising vs 627. b. 5.

How men doe falsely measure Gods Iustice 151. a. 50

Some mayntayners of Gods Iustice, bring in free will 151. b. 59

VVe must not alwayes seeke the execution of Gods Iustice in this worlde, 474. a. 41.

The Papistes knowe not Gods Iustice, 177. b. 50.

The corruption of Iustice among men, 655. b. 57.

None that euer execute Iustice duly, except they vse the sworde agaynst the wicked. 501. a. 15.

A note for such as are in office of Iustice 499. a. 32. & in sequent.

Iustifye.

VWhy the Scripture vseth the word Iustifye. 591. a. 59.

Howe God is Iustified by vs 562. a. 18.

Hee that Iustifieth him selfe, condemneth God of vnrightuousnesse, 726. a. 37. b.

Hee that Iustifieth himselfe, fighteth agaynst God, 154. b. 26.

To giue any token that wee Iustifie the wicked, and like of their euill case, is a wilfull renouncing of God, 459. b. 38.

It is to no purpose to bee well liked or Iustified of the world, except God allow of our doings. 301. a. 42.

The performing of the Lawe were not sufficient to Iustifie vs, if god should deale with vs according to his perfect rightuousnesse. 413. a.

The Table.

The meane to be Iustified before God.
274. b 54.

Iustification.

The cause why men cannot receiue the
the Doctrine of free Iustification,
603. b 31.

Papistes can not bee perswaded of the Iustification of Fayth. 152. b 11.

K.

Keeper.

¶ What is ment by this woord Keeper.
135. b 45.

Kill.

They that for doe or kill themselves, do it as it were in despyte of God. 1249.
b 2.

Kinred.

Kinred & alliance amongst men, make a double band of loue. 333. b 67.

King.

The highest King muste haue brotherhood with the poorest Sheehearde.
511. a 45.

The excellēttest thing, that a King hath in himself, is that he is a man. 511. b 9

¶ Why, and how God is King & Iudge of the world. 617. b 41. & 618. a 37.

Knit.

God hath Knit men togyther to helpe
one another, or at the least too pitie and haue compasiō one of another.
332. a 10. and 47.

Of Knowing and Knowledge.

¶ What is ment by Gods Knowinge of
men. 680. a 30.

Knowledge puffeth men vp with pride
87. a 48.

Our Knowledge in this worlde can bee
but in part. 582. a 19.

¶ We can Knowe no more than God listh to reueale vnto vs, and why hee reuealeth things but in parte as yet.
581. b 54. and 582. a. b.

It is not for vs to desire to Know more than God vtereth vnto vs. 705. b. 3.
& 707. a. b. & 708. a. b. and 735. a 63 b

¶ We must not couet to Know any further of Gods doings than he reuea-leth to vs 735. a 63. b.

¶ Vnto what manner of Knowledge we haue of God, and where he is to bee looked vpon. 671. 10.

How God is to be Knowne aright. 85.
b 23.

God cannot be Known or comprehendeth in his Maiestie. 671. a 1.

The meane to attayne to the Knowe-ledge of Gods workes. 738. b 67.

¶ We cannot Know god to our benefir, except he enlighten our hartes by his holy Spirit. 679. b 22.

¶ We must strue to Knowe such things as may edifye vs in the feare of god.
481. a 46.

¶ We must not presume to haue any other Knowledge than God hath gyuen vs. 478. b 1.

The tenderness of our Knowledge, & howe wee maye speake well and al-lowably. 636. a 33.

The Heathen men Knew God sufficiently to their condemnation. 678. b.
27.

¶ Why wee ought to Knowe GOD aright. 86. a 13.

¶ We ought to Know God truly. 85. a.
58. b 5. 19.

The punishment for not Knowing God
aright. 85. b 6.

¶ We ought to haue a double Knowe-ledge in ourselues. 138. a 12.

Krye.

How the yong Rauens are said to Krye vnto God. 710. b.

The Krying of the saythlesse is but a howling and roaring without any trust in God. 515. a 55.

The punishment of those that gyue no care when the poore Krye. 498. a 5.

Our very sinnes themselues Krye oure vppon vs before God, though no mā else doo. 627. b 57.

Keys.

The Popes chalenging of the Keys of Heauen. 593. a 65.

L

Laddes.

The braue Laddes of this worlde are like wodden pictures. 467. a 5

Lawe.

That God is the Lawe giuer and the Iudge, are things that go ioyntly together. 527. a 65.

¶ Why God in his woord vseth many termes to expresse his Lawe thereby, as ordinances, statutes, decrees, iudgments. 243. a 32.

Gods Lawe is a sufficient, perfect rule wherby too liue a good and godly life. 186. a 27

The Lawe and Prophets of God ought to be of great authoritie among men
and why. 572. a 55.

The Lawe was qualified to the state of man before he fell. 413. a 38. & 414. a 77.

One of the principall parts which God requireth in his Lawe, is that wee shuld noway seeke our neighbours goods. 526. a 1.

¶ Wee can not stand before GOD, although we fulfil the Lawe. 172. a 22.
b 12. & 238. a 50.

God maketh waire against all sortes of men that transgresse his Lawe. 705. b 40.

¶ We owe more vnto God than by the Lawe is exacted of vs. 413. a 25.

How God hath giuen his Lawe. 239. b 21.

¶ Why the Lawe is called the message of death. 172. a 12.

Laughing.

¶ What is ment by Laughing in time of calamitie. 101. b 12.

Laying.

¶ What the Scripture meaneth by Laying ones hand vppon his mouth. 723
b 59.

Lazarus.

Lazarus. 7 a 1.

Learning and lesson.

¶ Whence we must fetch our Learning &
wisedome all our whole life. 665. a 62

¶ What wee haue to Learne of that that God hath limited our life. 252 b 20.

¶ We must not bee greued to make accompt of a good Lesson, because it is common. 290. a 34.

Leuiathan. 732. a 68.

Libertie.

¶ Wee ought too attempt nothing but that, that God hath giuen vs Liber-tie to do. 56. a 27.

Lifting vp, and Loftinesse.

Mens Loftinesse or presuming is of two sortes. 546. a b.

¶ What is ment in the Scripture by Los-tinesse. 729. b 23.

The two things that make vs too Lift vp our selues presumptuously against God, are selfe wisedome, and selferighteousnesse. 735. a 57.

Linage or offspring.

Linage is a singular honour that GOD
doth giue vnto men. 102. a 50.

The Noblest Linages are not alwayes
the best.

Liue, Liuing, & Life.

All things haue their Life, mouing,
and being of God. 615. a 17.

Mans Liue consisteth of two respectes, the one vnto God, and the other to our neighbour. 4. b 2. & 12. b. 14.

The Life of man in it selfe, may wel be called a dreame. 347. a 40.

Of the fraytie and shortnes of mans
Life. 340. a 30.

Our Life is a continuall warfare. 99. a 6
& 260. a 51.

¶ What profite we ought to take of the consideration of the shortnes of this Life. 247. b 10. & 245. a 9.

The shortnes of our Life ought to re-presse our presumptuous curiositie & carping against God. 707. a 49.

The comparing of the shortnes of our Life with Gods euerlastingnes must serue to abate our pride. 671. a 60.

Our Life is no otherwise allowable before God, than if it be duely referred to his Lawe. 299. a 36.

The Life of man is full of miseries, brittle, and transitory. 20. b 67. & 511. b.
27.

No part of mannes Life is in his owne
hand 680. b 12.

Great difference betweene things that concerne this Life, and Gods secree iudgements. 470. b 57.

So long as we couet too haue our Life allowed of men, wee shalbe full of fittle shifts. 525. b 58.

The rule of a good Life. 477. a 43. and
655. a 57.

Our desire too Liue in this world must be to serue God. 420. b 28.

Though a man Liue neuer so perfect and angelicall a Life otherwise, yet if he glorifie not God in euery poynt, all is but starke wickednesse. 607. b
65. and 608. a.

¶ What we ought to thinke of this Life.
49. a 15.

The secret to Liue and die well, is too put

The Table.

put our selues wholly into Gods tuition, and not to presume ought at all vpon our owne power or wit. 616. a 28.

The Life that is in man, is ioyned with reason and vnderstanding. 183. b 28.

In what maner it is Lawfull for a man to be wearie of this Life. 48. a 58.

It is not lawfull for the faithfull to mislike their Life. 58. a 42.

The faithfull must still hope for Life, yea euen in the extremitie of death. 303. a 62.

The cause why the Fathers of old time were satisfied with long Liuing. 750. b 31

The endes whereunto wee Liue in this world. 12. b 14. & 14. b 5. & 17. b 25. & 589. b 55.

The desirousnes of the wicked to Liue still in this world and their lothnesse to die. 750. b 41.

The opinion of the heathen concerning mans Life. 76. a 23.

All things that concerne euerslasting Life are farre about our reach. 478. a 9.

Looking & Lookes.

God Looketh not only vpon the things that are apparant to the world. 525. a 36.

Vnchaste Lookes shew the corruption of the heart. 528. a 47.

Our Lookes are as sparckles to kyl the fyre of lust within vs. 528. a 35.

Men are alwaies vnhappye if God Loke not vpon them, and bee readie too heare them. 464. a 44.

The end why we ought to Looke vnto God. 4. b 25.

Loue.

Gods tender & Fatherly Loue towards vs. 21. b 16. 26.

How needfull it is for vs to bee perswaded therof. 26. a 56. 65. & 26. a 65.

VWhy God doth not alwayes shew the signes of his Loue too his children. 370. b 47.

The wretchednes of them that doubt of Gods Loue. 251. a 55.

VWhy God trieth whether wee Loue him and serue him or no. 4. a 11.

Gods incomprehensible Loue towards vs. 7. 17. a 43. b.

VVe ought too bee perswaded of Gods Loue towards vs. 261. a 12.

Gods Loue is not the lesse towards vs for his afflicting of vs. 26. b 13. & 29. b 34.

VWhy God vttered his Loue in old time by giuing men long life and worldly prosperitie more than now a dayes. 750. a. 46.

The true Loue of God. 63. b. 44.

The Loue & seruite of our neighbour must be matched with the Loue and seruite of God, or else it is to no purpose. 37. a 2.

Fleshly selfe Loue displeaseth God. 60. b 40.

VVe ought to Loue our neighbour as our selfe. 252. a 20. 53.

The true triall of Loue. 44. b. 64.

If wee Loue our enemies, it shall turne to our owne benefite. 748. b 33.

The blasphemies of the Papistes in denying that it was alwayes Gods will that wee should Loue our enemies. 546. b 15.

Lyght.

Gods mightie power, wisdome, and goodnesse vttered in bounding and bringing forth of the Light, ought to prouoke vs to glorifie him. 698. b 51. and 699. a. b.

VWhy God suffereth the wicked to inioye the Light as well as the godly. 701. a 3.

The Daylight giueth shape, fashion, & beautie, to all things vpon earth. 700. a 13.

The day Light discouereth and restrayneth the Lewdnesse and outrage of wicked folke. 700. a 39. b.

The wicked shall not inioye the Light for euer. 701. a 19. b.

Lyghtning.

Lightning is a token of Gods presence. 27. a 30.

M

Magistrates.

The Magistrate occupieth Gods roume. 499. b. 17.

Magistrates ought to submit theselues to God with all feare and care. 267. b 35.

VWhy Magistrates are termed the children of God. 15. b 11.

After what maner men ought too beare too rayle or too speake euill of Princes and Magistrates. 617. b. 21.

Man.

VWhat man is of him selfe. 37. a 33. and 413. a 46.

Man is the womans head. 49. b. 40.

Mans strength and abilitie are wholly from aboue. 47.

Men bring nothing with the intoo the world neither shall them carye any thing with them. 30. a. 49. 64.

Mannes dulnesse and vnabilitie in conceyuing Gods sayings and dooings. 583. b. 1.

Men are by nature wholly giuen too euill. 11. b. 33. & 17. b. 40. & 19. a. 64. b. 60. & 60. a. 16.

VWherein Men differ from the brute beafts. 566. b. 15.

Men are lesse moued when God calleth them to him then the brute beafts. pa. 483. a. 3.

VWhy Men are termed the children of God. 15. b. 3. 696. a. 58.

Mē are naturally the bondslaves of the Diuell. 16. a. 53.

Men challenge more to them selues the is mete for then. pa. 526. a. 62.

All Mē are alike before God. 618. b. 45. Men are loth too bee admonished of their misdooings. 13. b. 16.

Mariage.

The mariage of children vnder yeeres of discretion is no mariage at all. 565. b. 67.

Marking.

VWhat is ment by Gods marking or beholdinge of our steppes or paces. 620. a. 63.

Measure.

VWhat measure is too bee kept in musing vpon Gods woorks. 665. b. 65. Measure hard too bee kept in feasting. 8. a. 1.

what measure we ought to kepe in the consideration of the miseries of this lyfe. 249. a. 21.

Mediator.

The only meanes too come too God is by the Mediator. 246. b. 35. & 747. a

Meeldnesse.

The meeldnesse and gentlenesse that Mē ought to haue in repprouing one anothers vices. 63. b. 47.

Job geuerh vs an example of mildenes. pa. 506. a. 35.

Merits.

Looke more in Deseruings.

How fondly the Papists do builde their Merits vpon patches of Scripture. 744. a 52.

The furie of the Papistes in alleaging their owne Merites. 172. b 55.

Mirth and Mery.

Moderate Mirth not to be condemned. 50. b 40.

Christian Mirth and reioycing. 50. b 44 & 344. a 66. & 467. a 41. & 590. a 10. & 593. a. 4.

The children of God maye, and ought to bee Merry. 344. a 28.

The Mirth, ioy, gladnesse or comfort of the worldlings and reprobats. 594. b. 66. & 595. a. 29.

Mirth of the wicked in feasting. 8. a. 41. VVordlings can not be Merie, but whē they forget God. 400. 34.

Mercy.

Mercy commeth only of God his goodnesse. 469. a 59. b 20.

God wilbe Mercifull vntoo them that serue him with a pure heart. 412. a 30

Gods shewing of Mercy is no derogation to his Iustice. 612. b. 12.

VWhat is too bee doone too haue God Mercifull. 78. a 45.

God must bee glorified continually for his Mercie. 616. a. 24.

After what maner God must bee glorified at our hands for his Mercie. 599. b. 4.

The order which it behoueth vs too vse in receyuinge Gods Mercie and in magnifying him for the same. 558. a. 10. b. & 599. a. b. & 600. b. 60.

VWhat is to be done when we haue receiued Mercy at Gods hand. 600. b 60

Mercie is one of the principall partes of our life if it be ruled by God his order. 498. a 20.

Though God kill vs we must still hope for his Mercy. 520. b 18.

Misery.

Man is subiect too infinite Miseries. 465. b 18.

All mans Miseries proceede of the corruptiō of his owne nature. 243. b 14.

The state of the godly is more miserable than the state of the vngodly. 743. a 6.

VWherefore Gods children are commonly most Miserable in this world. 512. a 23.

* *

The

The Table.

The vnbeleuers are in continual thoughtfulness when they are in miserie. 101. b. 35.

The extremest of all Miseries is to think God too bee against vs. 515. b. 56.

Mistres.

The ingendering of the Mistes. 697. a. 55.
Why the Mistes are termed the swadlingbands of the Sea. 697. a. 37.

Modestie.

Trew Modestie describ'd. 563. b. 64. & 564. a. b. & 565. a. b.

Modestie and reuerence must be vsed in considering Gods dooings and iudgments. 22. b. 21. & 33. b. 24. 59. & 34. a. 5.

If eche man examine thoroughly what is in him he shall be helde within the boundes of modestie. pa. 510. a. 47.

Moorning.

Moderate Moorning not too bee condemned. 50. b. 27.

Murmur.

Looke Grudge and Impatiencie.

No man, (no not euen the reprobate) hath the cause too Murmur against God. 646. b. 17.

N.

Nature.

The order of Nature and goddes workes therein, teacheth vs to seeke those things that are higher. 314. b. 30. 40.

The whole order and disposition of Nature proueth Gods fatherly goodnesse towards vs. 677. a. 10. b.

The whole order of Nature is in Gods hand & serueth eith' to execute his iustice or his Mercie as he listeth. 674. b. 20. & 675. b. 42. & 676. a. b. & 677. a. b. & 682. b. 36. & 683. a. b. & 707. a. 18. b. & 709. a. 15. b.

What things wee ought too learne by beholding the order of Nature. 675. a. 22. b. & 676. a. b. & 677. a. b. & 678. a. b. & 708. b. 62. & 709. a. b.

Wherunto the consideration of the whole order of Nature Leadeth vs. 87. b. 47. & 675. b. 45. & 677. a. 61.

It lyeth not in Man too ouerrule anie part of the order of Nature. 709. a. 53. b. & 718. a. 68. b. & 719. a. b. & 720. a. b.

What Men are of their owne Nature. 76. b. 38. 42. b. 43.

The vnrulinesse of Mānes Nature. 717. a. It is a Natural thing in Man to pleade against God. 153. a. 66.

Our Nature is inclined to storne and repine. 124. a. 40.

The stubbornnesse of our Nature. 664. a. 54.

The dulnesse of mens Nature in vnderstandinge thinges pertaininge to saluation. 216. a. 5.

The horrible strowardnesse of our Nature. 662. a. 5.

The weaknesse of our Nature hindereth our good desyres. 48. a. 10.

If we do but conceaue euil liking it bevvraeth the corruptnesse of Nature. 522. b. 18.

Our Nature hath a dubble cleansing. 251. b. 10.

The diuersitie of the Natures of liuing Creatures, proueth the being, the prouidence and the Maistie of the Creator or Maker. 720. a. 20. b.

Nawghtinesse.

Looke more in Euill.

Wec must not bee caryed away with other menes Nawghtinesse. 567. b. 10.

Looke more in Sin & Vyce.

Necessitie.

Why God sendeth Necessities to his saints. 116. b. 53.

Wec must relieue those in Necessity. 117. a. 7.

Looke more in Adversities Afflictions, Trubbles.

Negligence.

Mannes Negligence in considering his owne state and lyfe. 75. a. 57.

Negligence and tolie of parents in theis dayes in bringing vp their children. 9. a. 39.

The Negligence and Carelesse of Ministers for their flocks. 13. a. 37.

Nestle.

Let Men Nestle them selues vpon earth as they list, it shall not bane God fro plucking them away. 472. a. 16.

Newters.

Indifferent Newter, one that woulde make a meane betwixt the papistes and vs. 232. b. 41. and 233. a. 5.

Noc.

Noc a condemnation too the whole world. 3. a. 22.

Nyght.

The Nyght is fittest for the minding and considering of Gods woorks. 665. a. 67.

O.

Obedience.

Obedience is the salt that causeth vs to find good tast in aduersities. 107. b. 23.

Obedience is the chiefest thinge that God requireth of vs. 418. b. 44. and 419. b. 33.

Obedience to God is the trew frute of Repentance. 747. b. 50.

Childly Obedience. 15. b. 60.

There is nothing better for man then to Obey God. 505. a. 47.

Wec ought to desire no further but that God be Obeyed. 497. a. 22.

The reuerence and Obedience that we yeeld too worldly Princes and Magistrates, is a sufficient euidence to condemne them for not Obeying God. 618. a. 41.

If we will Obey God rightly we must gnie ouer all our owne customes and maner of dealinge. 421. a. 33.

A trew token of our Obeying and re-uerencing of God. 617. a. 49.

What thing letteth vs too Obey God. 748. a. 1.

It is impossible too Obey God and too glorie him in his iudgments except wee haue Hope. 650. a. 20.

Why Princes are Obeyed seing that subiection is odiousse to manes nature. 618. b. 23.

Offenders.

Looke more in Deuities.

The multitude of Offenders must not make vs to Offend. 36. b. 2.

Looke more in Sinners.

Office.

Men must not take any Office vppon them in the Churche except they bee called, and haue wherewith too furnish the same. 637. b. 10.

Opinion.

Opinions concerning the land of Hus. 2. b. 20.

Opinions concerning the wryting of the booke of Iob. 2. a. 51.

They aduance them selues aboute God that folow theyr owne Opinion. 526. b. 10.

Oppresse.

God wil not leaue the Oppressers of the poore vnpunished. 628. a. 25.

The cause why the myghtie Oppresse the weake. 628. a. 30.

Order & Ordinarie.

Order and honestie are requisite in matters of the Churche. 571. a. 28.

Order and tyme must bee obserued in all things, and specially in speaking of matters that concerne God. 571. a. 13.

The confusion of ciuil Order is a frute of our disobedience. 167. a. 67. and 168. a. 7. 63.

It is not Gods will that his faithfull ones should bee maintained by Ordinarie meanes. 92. b. 28.

Orion.

Orion. 707. a. 37.

Ouerhoote.

There is no stay with men when they haue once Ouershot themselues. 53. a. 22. & 627. 157. & 663. a. 44.

Wec must not proceede in euill by cause wee haue Ouerthor outselues alreddie. 724. b. 10.

Iobs findes Ouerthor them selues. 62. b. 37.

P.

Papist Popedome & P.

The Papistes teate Gods Maistie in peeces. 100. a. 15.

The Papistes denie the first article of our beleife. 221. b. 13.

The Papistes are bereft of all hope of saluation, and why. 206. a. 50.

The bruisinesse of the Papistes. 72. b. 40.

The

The Table.

The deuillish curiositie of the Papistes. 72.b.44.
 The londdesse of the Papists as well in curiositie of serching the things which they ougth not, as also in shunning the things which they ougth too knowe. 582.b.3.
 There is nothinge in Poperis but horrible confusion. 232.b.62.
 Confusion of the Popedom frō whome it springeth. 72.b.30.

Parents.

Parents must bring vp their children in the feare of God. 9.a.19.62.
 Their negligence and folie in bringing them vp. 9.a.39.56.
 The iust reward of their negligēce and follie. 9.a.55.b.13.
 They must hold their children in awe euen after they be men and women growen. 9.a.52.55.
 How they may purchase themselves authoritie with thir children. 9.b.17.

Looke more in Dentie.

Parttaker.

It booteth not too haue manie adherents and Parttakers agcinst God. 641.a.47.

Passions.

Passions are finnes. 190.a.55.
 The passionnes of our mynd, howe they ought too be repressed in dealing with God. 241.b.12.
 The Papistes errour in sayinge that Passions are not finnes. 190.a.55.
 Why our Passions or affections are wicked. 57.b.37.
 VVe forgo all wisdomme when we are ouer pressed with our passions. 135.a.36.
 The present passions and affections carrie men away. 53.b.10.
 The causes why lobes passionnes (which notwithstanding god doth nor allow of) are witten and set downe in his storie. 252.a.6.
 VVhen men martyr them selues in their Passions, they do but plundge them selues more and more in their miseries. 313.b.57.

Looke more in Affections.

Pacience.

VVhat the woord Pacience or Patient nesse betokeneth. 29.a.13.
 Pacience is not fencelesse nor without feeling of griefe or sorowe. 29.a.2.b.67.
 Patience is a constant and quiet bearing out of all aduersities and temptations. 25.b.20.34.& 28.b.57.
 Pacience in abyding Gods leyzure. 83.b.16.
 The pacience of all men yea euen of the best mynded mē is vnperfect and faultie in some points. 580.a.29.
 The Pacience of the faithfull. 25.a.44.& 28.a.60.& 29.a.17.30.a.1.
 The cause and grownd of trew Pacience. 26.a.20.& 28.b.59.
 Ryght proofes of Pacience. 30.b.15.38.
 Examplis of pacience. 1.a.35.& 5.b.56.& 7.a.35.& 25.a.47.b.16.& 27.b.12.
 Pacience is the vpholder and mainteyner of fayth. 28.a.59.

The meanes too make vs patient in aduersitie. 96.b.35.
 Continuance in Pacience is requisite in Gods children. 100.a.35.
 How farre we comine short of the Patientnesse that was in Iob. 667.a.21.
 VVhat Pacience it behoueth vs too haue when God hathe bin towgh with vs. 723.a.44.
 VVithowt Pacience no seruis can please God. 20.a.62.
 Lack of Pacience is the cause why we grudge at the wicked. 286.b.56.
 Mens comon opinion concerning Pacience. 28.54.
 The Patience of the vnbeleuers. 26.a.25.
 They that abuse Gods Pacience shall seele his wrath the sorer. 651.a.28.

Paule.

Paule in daunger of pryde. 23.a.14.
 Paule is buffeted by Satan. 23.a.26.

Paynimis.

The Painimis reiect Gods grace. 76.a.27.
 The Painimis blasphemed God. 76.a.34.

Peace.

Looke more in Rest.

The trew Peace that is blessed of God. 277.a.24.
 How we may haue Peace which God. 277.1.
 VVe must seke peace in God and not in worldly goods. 474.b.25.
 VVhat is meant by holdinge ones Peace. 118.b.12.

Peacocke.

Of Peacocks. 713.b.50.& 715.a.12.

Perfection.

The words Perfect and Perfection mistaken, and therefore refused of Caluin. 3.a.48.
 God onely knoweth what perfection is. 154.a.36.

Perishing.

Perishing is more than too be afflicted. 67.a.59.

Persecuter.

Persecuters are cursed of God. 81.a.15.

Perseuerance.

Perseuerance in knowledge. 54.b.6.

Pitie.

Looke more in Compassion and in mercie.

VVe must be touched with the Pitie of our neighbours. 519.b.38.
 It is a blasphemie to thinke that God Pitieth not suche as call vpon him. 521.b.8.
 To bee Pitifull to the nedie, is a token that we are Gods children. 535.b.20.

Pleade.

VVe ought not to Pleade with God although we might. 302.b.4.
 It would not boote vs or auayle vs though we had libertie to Pleade agcinst God. 66.b.43.

Pledg.

How a Pledge may be taken. 354.b.22. and 428.232.

Pleasē & Pleasures.

Of Pleasing or displeasing of men. 337.a.1.

Differēce betwene the Pleasures of the Godly & vngodly. 456.a.59.
 VVe must seke to Please God only, and to obey him in all that we doe, and say. 497.b.54.

Pleiades. 707.a.34.

Plyable.

Few yeaelde the selues Plyable to God. 479.b.37.

Poetes.

The vnreasonablenesse of Poetes. 957.a.39.

Pollicie.

Earthly Pollicie is ordeined of God. 55.a.22.
 Earthly Pollicie concerneth but this life. 56.a.24.
 VVorldly Pollicie serueth not to bring vs to that perfection that God requirerth of vs. 394.a.49.
 To what purpose wordly Pollicie shold serue. 394.a.51.

Poore folkes & Pouertie.

Poore folkes are more vnexcusable than riche folkes. 6.a.6.b.16.
 Poore folkes are in lesse daunger by temptation than riche folkes. 6.b.3.
 Both Poore and riche are called too saluation. 7.a.13.
 Pouerty bringeth store of temptations. 6.a.32.
 VVhat is to be doone when we be pinched with penurie or Pouertie. 710.b.35.
 Poorenesse of spirit. 6.a.9.
 Pouertie the trew schoolmistres of myldnesse. 92.b.4.

Power.

The Power of God. 67.a.25.
 No Power of man is able too match God. 725.b.7.
 Gods grace and Power is not too be measured after our reason. 148.b.14.
 God hathe geuen vs a great profe of his mighty Power in the person of Iob. 514.b.46.
 God his Power is not subiecte to any humane or worldly means. 514.a.40.
 Gods Power and iudgments are euermore matched with goodnesse and vpiightnesse. 606.a.63.b.
 VVhat manner of Power is too be imagined in God. 590.b.37.& 581.a.16.& 728.b.3.
 VVe neede not to go ownt of our selues too find proofes of Gods mightie Power, wisdomme and rightuowfenesse. 755.b.36.
 Proofes of Gods mightie Power wisdomme and rightuowfenesse in the Elephant. 731.a.b & 732.a.b & 733.a.b & 734.a.b.
 The Papistes blasphemie God in saying he hath an absolute Power. 455.a.44.
 Man is not able to comprehend God his mightines & Power. 514.a.67.

Pray & Prayer.

To Pray to God is a thing comon to all men. 12.b.21.
 VVhat Prayer is. 205.b.43.
 Prayer is the chiefe point of honouring God. 299.a.57.

The Table.

All Prayers without vndoubted truste in Gods mercy and goodnesse, are abominable. 596. a 5.

VVherevpon our Prayers muste bee grounded. 593. a Difference betwene the Praying of the faythfull and faythlesse. 466. a 11.

To Pray vnto God is a witnessinge of our faith. 411. a 17.

Prayer with doubting is but hypocritic, and a taking of the name of God in vayne. 411. a 21.

what ought to come before our eyes as oft as we Pray 748. a 56.

To what ende we must Pray chiefly. 465. b 36.

Of the hard & daungerous tētaciō whē God heareth not our cries, cōplains and Prayers. 326. a 62. and 327. a 30. & 515. b 35.

The meanes and wayes to succoure the afflicted by our Prayers. 46. a 4.

Prayer is signified by the stretching out of the handes. 206. a 63.

VVe must Pray in sorrow. 57. b 23.

There is no right calling vpon GOD, nor true Prayer amonge the wicked. 213. a 37.

The vse of Prayer. 267. b 57.

VVhat rule is to be obserued in Prayer 108. b 17. 57. & 109. a 37.

Job vnhalloiweth the name of God by his Prayer. 108. b 22.

Of Praying vnto Saintes. 299. b 10.

The way to come too God is Prayer. 147. a 28.

Our Prayers must not be made in Hypocritic. 141. a 30.

Two things to be obserued in Prayer. 327. b 43.

Our Prayers must procede of faith, otherwise they shall not bee hearde. 464. b 64.

The vertue and preheminece of true Prayer. 595. b 40.

VVe must Pray continually. 465. b 32.

It is not enough for vs too Pray vntoo God, but we must also bydle oure affections. 516. a 53.

Although the Hypocrites Pray with some hartie affection, yet they Pray not in truth. 464. b 20. & 465. b 6.

The Papisfes manner of Prayer. 206. a. 11. & 5. 6. a 20. & 644. b 26.

The Papisfes sonde grounde for their Praying to Saintes. 78. a 66.

VVhy God heareth not the Prayers of the world. 644. b 8.

How men may Pray aight vnto God. 595. b 56. & 644. b 34. & 648. a 47.

Predestinacion.

Our saluation is grounded in Gods euēlasting Predestinacion and election. 594. a b.

The deniers of Predestinacion denie God to be almighty. 415. b 21.

Preacher.

The reverence that is dew to the Preacher, Minister, or messenger of Gods woorde. 578. a 4.

A godly Preacher or comforter is a singular benefite of God. 591. b 10. and 592. a.

Looke more in Teache, Trnth, Woord.

Preest.

No man ought to take vpon him to be a Preest except he bee called and authorized of God. 746. b 49.

Preheminece.

He that is in any Preheminece, ought to consider that all men looke vpon him. 507. b 11.

Presumptuoufnesse, Proud-folkes & Pryde.

Presumptuoufnesse is a kind of dronknesse. 25. 62. a 2.

A Presumption in Proud folkes 477. b. 20.

Our Presumptuoufnesse keepeth vs frō the true knowledge of Gods righteousnesse. 71. a 60. & b 10.

Pryd throweth men headlong into hell or damnacion 23. a 19.

Pryde and presumption bring vs to poertie. 71. b 64.

Pryde of knowledge carrieth with it a carelesnes. 71. b 54.

The Pryde of man in controlling gods doings and workes, and his blynde ignorance in them. 686. b 56. & 687. a b. & 688. b 3. & 693. b 57. & 694. a b & 698. b 53. & 699. a b.

Of Pryde ia not humbling our selues vn to God. 272. a 34

Proud tolkes are the bondslaves of Satan. 15. a 66.

VVho bee the Proud ones. 719. a 27.

The Pryde of men in prosperitie in trusting to theselues and to their worldly helpes. 619. b 17.

All Proude tolkes are Gods vtter enemies, and hee is at deadly and vnreconcilable food with them. 728. b. 67. and 729. a b.

There is nothing more against our saluation, then Presumptuoufnesse. 239. b 48.

No man ought to be Proud of his own greatnesse. 618. b 49.

VVe cannot come vnto Chryst, till we be bereft of all Pryde. 665. b 21.

Men are neuer so thoroughly humbled, but there remaineth still some roote of Pryde in them. 724. b 65. & 725. a

The wellspring of our Pryd in pleading against God. 623. a 10.

Job rebuketh the froward Pryd of man 457. b 51.

It belongeth onely to God to root out the Proud. 728. a 63. b. & 729. a b. and 730. a b. & 731. a b.

God destroyeth the Proud, and spareth the meeke. 728. b 14. and 729. a b. and 730. a b. and 731. a b.

Meanes to pull down the Pryd of men, and to bring them to humilitie. 732. b 45 & 733. 1. b. & 734. a b. & 735. a. b. and 736. a b

Proffit.

VVe must seeke to take Profite by God his punishing of others. 470. b. 7

VVhen haue we profited well in Gods schoole. 421. a 48. and 445. b 10.

Promises.

Gods Promise must be the rule of oure imagination. 61. a 44.

VVhat GOD Promiseth vs. pag. 61. b. 20.

The Promises of comforte, helpe, and saluacion are general to all men and ages 25. b 62. and 26. a 2.

Difference betwene God his promises that belong to this life, and his spirituall promises. 470. b 60.

Prophetes and Prophecies.

The Prophets and Prophecys which Gods Church ought to leane vntoo. 571. b 14.

God setteth apparāt markes in his Prophecies, to the ende they shoulde bee the more reuerenced. 571. b 40.

The straunge illusion of the Heathen Prophetes 571. b 61.

Prosperitie

The nature of men in Prosperitie. 45. b 54.

VVe ought to call vpon God in Prosperitie as well as in aduersitie. 465. b. 23 and 466. a 25.

In Prosperitie wee muste prepare our selues to afflictions 107. a 53. & 520. a 53.

Prosperitie maketh al men forget them selues 27. b. 17. and 83. b 62. and 705. a 48.

Prosperitie maketh men both deaf and blind to all goodnesse. 66. 2. a 7.

Nothing is easier than for a man that is in Prosperitie, to beleeue that he shall continewe in it euer. 502. a 62. and 505. b 33.

VVhat soeuer Prosperitie we haue, it is no certeyne and abyding state. 503. a. 21.

How we ought to behaue our selues in Prosperitie and aduersitie 307. b 65.

Of the Prosperitie of the wicked. 315. b 6. and 319. b 54

Of the Prosperitie of the wicked, and our vnpatient grudging agaynst it. 343. b 34.

The Prosperitie of the wicked is cursed and miserable 79. a 66.

The Prosperitie of the wicked turneth to their ruine and confusion 150. b 39 and 215. b 39. and 359. a 55.

Providence.

Gods Providence is a deepe secrete and must be so acknowledged of vs. 739. a 38.

Gods continuall and euēlasting Providence dooth as well ouerrule and guyde still the Skyes, Starres, & Planets as it did guyde them their influences at the first. 707. b 55.

Gods Providence and wisdom vntered in the nature of the Eastridge. 716. a 62. b

Gods former Providence is a warrant of his Providēce hereafter 707. b 17

Gods Providence in feeding the Lyons and other wild beastes and the birds of the aire. 706. b 45. & 710. a b.

Gods Providence in restrayning the wyld beastes from deuouring mankind 709. b 61.

Seeing Gods Providence extendeth to the birds and beastes, muche more shall it extend to vs. 717. a 43.

Nothing happeneth but by Gods ordinance & Providence. 23. b 14.

The obiections of wicked worldelings against Gods Providence and Predestinacion. 584. a 48.

The Table.

The right considering of Gods providence. 614. b. 15.
VWith what reverence Gods Prouidēce and all other his secrets are to be talked of. 739. b. 1.

Punishment and Punishing.

God is righteous in Punishing men. 137 a. 36. & 51. b. 1.
 As God is slowe in Punishing, so Punisheth he the sorer. 627. b. 15.
 God doth not alwayes Punish euill doings out of hand. 611. b. 60.
 It is not necessary for vs that God should do so. 612. a. 14.
 God doth not alwayes Punish according to our deserts. 151. a. 41.
 God in Punishing men doth also beare with them, and why. 612. a. 40. & 613 a. 25.
 The wicked are sometimes Punished in their posteritie, that is like them. 82. a. 60.
 A double maner of punishing the wickednesse of the Fathers in their children. 82. b. 21.
 It agreeth well with Gods righteoufnes to punish the children for the finnes of the fathers. 349. a. 2. & 469. a. 51.
 God ought to be glorified in Punishing the wicked in their children. 469. b. 13
 God doth not alwayes so Punish the wicked in this life as men may finally discern by eye sight, that GOD iudgeth them, and the danger that may ensue vpon such an opinion. 313. a. 40.
 The Punishments layd vpon the wicked make them vterly without excuse. 94. b. 59
 The end of Gods punishing of the wicked. 83. a. 50. & 95. a. 67.
 The Punishments of the wicked are a beginning of their damnatiō. 95 a. 6.
VWhen God Punisheth an offender, we must be touched in our selues with pitie, for two causes. 333 a. 30.
 It is no resisting of God to be fory for them whom God doth not iustly Punish. 355. b. 27. and 334 a. 34.
VWhy God Punisheth the sinners. 151. b. 30.
VWe must not be disquieted when god deferreth to punish the wicked. 459. a. 5.
VWhy God doth not ordinarily Punish the wicked in this life. 344. b. 16.
 The Punishment of wilfull refusing Gods woord or good warnings. 22. a. 54.
 Other mens Punishments ought to be our instructions. 625. a. 12. & 656. a. 41. b.
 The last Punishment appoynted by God to the wicked, cannot inlethe the 471. a. 38.
Purenesse and purifying.
VWhat is meant by this woord Purenesse. 141. b. 56.
VWherein consisteth true Purenes. 310. b. 21.
Purifying or cleansing, and the maner, vse and end thereof. 5. b. 55. & so forth to the end of that Sermon. & 10. a. 27
 The Purifying of Christians ought too be continuall. 10. a. 60.

Put.

VWhat this woord Put meaneth. 24. a. 9

Q

Quitte.

The onely way to be quit before God, is to condemne our selues. 154. a. 51.
 How men may bee quit at Gods hand. 55. a. 1.

R

Rashnesse.

Our ouergreat Rashnesse in speaking of Gods woorkes before wee knowe them. 687. b. 15.

Raunsome.

The full Raunsome of all our finnes. 665. b. 1.

Rayne.

Rayne maketh the earth frutefull. 706. a. 5.
 The ingending of the Rayn. 671. b. 43. & 672. a. 60.
 The hanging of the Rayn in the clouds is a proote of Gods almightie power 672. a. 35.
 The Rayne is an executer both of gods goodnesse, and of his Iustice. 672. b. 60. & 674. b. 25.

Raife.

God Rayseth vp those whom hee had cast downe, and how. 590. a. 64. b.

Reason.

Mans Reason is not able to attaine too the depth of Gods works, no nor to haue any tast of them except it bee giuen him from aboue 685. a. 29. b. & 686. a. b. & 692. a. 63. b. & 693. b. 57. & 694. a. & 698. b. 53. & 699. a. b. & 702 a. 14. b. & 705. b. 60. & 706. a. b. & 708 a. 51. b. & 710 a. b. & 711. a. b. & 712. a. b. & 713. a. b. & 714. a. b. & 715. a. b. and 716. a. b. & 717. a. b. & 718. a. b. & 719. a. b. & 720. a. b.
 The generall benefite that God hath vouchsafed vpon vs in making vs reasonable creatures, ought of it self to suffice to make vs praise God. 645 b. 40.
Vhereto all our wit and Reason ferueth of it selfe. 633. b. 8.
VWee must vterly renounce our owne Reason in matters that concerne god and his woord. 567. a. 55.
VWe be bound vnto God for the benefite of Reason & discretion. 716. b. 29
 It is a diuelish malepertnes to meature God his woorkes by our owne Reason. 469. b. 3.
 Mans Reason may haue abilitie to iudg of things that concerne this life, but of things heauenly none at all. 476. b. 44.
 God must not be measured by our naturall Reason, nor by the things that wee see here beneath in this world. 654. b. 29 & 655. a. 54.
VWhen wee deale in Gods matters or heare them spoken of, we must mouit about our owne naturall Reason & vnderstanding. 653. a. 43. & 655. a. 54.

Gods desire is to win men by gentleness and Reason. 689. a. 6.

Gods will is the rule of all Reason. 423. b. 27.

The corruptiō of māns Reason through originall sinne. 646. a. 29.

The thing wherein we differ from brute beasts, is that we haue some Reason and vnderstanding 504. a. 48.

Rebelles.

God sendeth all Rebelles to the place of their iniquitie 140. a. 4.

Rebuke.

The lothnesse of man to bee Rebuked for his sinne. 85. a. 21.

Recklesnesse.

Mans Recklesnesse in taking holde of the things that God telleth and teacheth them by his woord. 706. b. 47.

Reconcilement.

The first step of Reconcilement vnto God, is the feeling of our ovne sins and of his wrath. 598. a. 12.

The second step of reconcilement vnto God is to beleue his promises and to rest vpon his mercy. 598. a. 27

The third point of Reconcilement vnto God, is to magnifie his goodnesse openly. 598. a. 44.

How may God be Reconciled or set at one with men. 160. b. 51.

Redresse.

Ye shall see poore folke complainē, and come shewe their right, and yet can haue no redresse. 500. b. 30.

Reformation.

Reformation is the Apic of the Christians and yet how little it is now a dayes regarded. 600. a. 6.

It is a vaine to speake of Reformation now a dayes. 638. b. 14.

Reioyce.

The meanes how to Reioyce in GOD 410. b. 41.

How and why we may Reioyce at the destruction of the wicked. 404. a. 60. & 548. b. 1.

VWhether it be lawfull for the good to Reioyce at the fall of the wicked. 475 b. 8.

Remember

VWhat is the true Remembling of God 145. b. 29.

VWe ought too wish that God shoulde continually Remember vs and draw neerer vs, than otherwise, and wherefore. 257. a. 50.

Remoue.

VWe must cōsider it to be the good will of our God to Remoue vs from time to time while we be in this world. 503. a. 32.

Rending.

VWhat is ment by Rending of our hartes 46. a. 35.

Reproue.

VWe must not reply when wee bee Reproued of our finnes, 603. b. 11.

The Table.

Repent and Repen- taunce.

Repentance is not wrought by afflictio without the helpe of Gods spirite inwardly. 94. b. 36.
Gods working in vs bringeth vs to Repentance, and not any preparation or indeuer of our owne. 594. a. 65.
Repentance is not perfected at the first brunt, and therefore it must be renewed continually. 737. a. 13.
It lyeth not in vs to Repent when wee will, wherfore we ought not to goe forward in naughtinesse, and deferre
our bettering. 348. a. 24.
To what end the outward signes of Repentance serue, and in what cases they are to be vsed. 742. a. 40.
True Repentance. 46. a. 52. & 409. b. 41
& 741. a. 63. b. 3. & 742. a. b.
True Repentance is a token of Gods mercy. 630. b. 53.
Of vsing outward tokens in Repentaunce. 297. b. 10.
The Repentance of Cain and Judas.
630. b. 46.
The Papistes Repentance. 409. b. 39.

Rest.

The Rest, Peace, or quietnesse, of the godly. 628. b. 12. and 629. a. 7.
Vve must Rest our selues on God and wayte for helpe at his handes. 514. b.
38.
The faithfull shall alwayes haue finally such Rest in them selues as they may be chearefull in aduersities. 513.
b. 33.
To rest and stay vppon thinges that we see, is to renounce faith. 381. b. 50.
Only God can giue rest and quietnesse.
628. b. 52.
The Rest peace or quietnesse of the vngodly. 628. b. 28.

Restore.

How the wicked are fayne too Restore their riches with their owne handes again. 349. b. 41.

Resurrection.

Resurrection. 77. b. 16.
VWhat our true Resurrection is. 149. b.
21.
The Resurrection is not too be found in our owne nature. 129. a. 9.
Of the Resurrection, & comfort which we take of it. 259. a. 50.
Let Christ his Resurrection be alwayes before our eyes. 519. a. 5.
The liuely Image of our last change or Resurrection, is our regeneration.
259. b. 10.

Returne

Vve must Returne too God, so sone as he visiteth vs. 14. a. 25.
It is neuer out of season to returne vnto
God. 724.

Reuale

God Reualeth his secrets vntoo vs by his spirite and by his woord. 270. b.
43. and 63.

Riches and Rich men.

Of Riches 351. a. 30
VWhat true Riches is. 351. b. 55
Of the blissing of God in entyching of his children 352. b. 25
Riches of themselues are not to be condemned 6. b. 42.
Riches are not simply a cause of euill
vnto vs 6. b. 26
Riches haue greater assaultes and temptacions than pouertie 6. a. 47. b. 9. &
13. b. 56
Riches a cause of pryde and other enormities 5. b. 64. & 18. b. 58 Riches and worldly abilities shall not saue or raunsome men fro the hand of God 665. a. 31
Riche men are vnexcusable 6. a. 63.
Riche men thinke they shal neuer part from their Riches 31. a. 21
The Rich and mighty compared to o-uerflowing riuers 113. b. 23
All strength, force, Riches and abilitie, are nothing in respect of God 664. b.
40. & 665. a
The wicked in the midst of their Riches, are nothing better then poore folke 280. a. 13
Riches and dignitie often tymes bringe nothing but foly, to rock me allecpe
480. a. 40
The Riches of the wicked, destruction to their children 470. a. 12 God taketh awaye the Riches of the godly for their good 470. a. 43
How men do trust to their Riches, credite, authoritie and other worldly helpes 665. a. 6
As well Riche as poore are called to sal-uation 7. a

Rigour.

VWherefore God sheweth all the signes of Rigour sometye agaynst vs 245.
b. 60. and 246
In what caces a Preacher or Teacher must vse vehemencie or Rigour 577.
a. 63

Reuenge.

God is the Reuenger of our wrongs & afflictions 81. a. 26

Reward.

Reward 66. a. 37

Rules.

Rules of bringing vp of children 9. a. 19 32.
Rules to bee kept at meate and meales.
8. b. 14

Ryght, Ryghtuoufe, and Ryghtuoufenesse.

VWhat Rightoufnes is 195. b. 56
Two Rightuoufneses to be considered in the scripture, a meane which god requireth in vs and the Angells, and a perfect Rightuoufnes which onely is in God him self 273. a. 8 & 27
The Rightuoufenes of the Law is a perfect Rightuoufenes, & in what sense.
186. a. 30. 51
A difference betwene the Rightuoufe-nesse of God, and the Rightuoufnes of the Lawe 186. a. 33 & 238. a. 26
How the faithfull are called Righteous
187. b. 1
God must alwayes bee acknowledged

Righteous and we humble ourselues whether he cõdemne vs for our fault, or punish vs diuersly for many faults or executeth his secret iudgements on vs, although we labour too serue him with a good cõscience 243. b. 55.
God is Righteous, euen when wee perceyue no signe or inliuk therof,
655. b. 24
VWherein Gods Rightuoufenesse consi-steth 640. a. 56
The Rightuoufenes of God is in twoo sortes 325. a. 14. & 412. b. 67. & 413. a.
1. & 455. b. 30
Gods Rightuoufnes must not bee measured by the Rightuoufnes of man
161. a. 14
The Rightuoufnes of God is a secret 71
a. 63
Gods Rightuoufnes is an infinit thing,
72. a. 51
The true maner of confessing God too bee Rightuoufnes 598. b. 4. & 610. b. 3. &
611. a. 18. b. 43. & 612. b. 37 & 624. a. 50
How and wherein Gods Rightuoufnes is to be known 611. a. 53
God his will is the rule of all equitie &
Right 469. a. 11
Howe God is sayde to berecue men of their Right 455. b. 4. & 456. b. 42
Rightuoufenesse cõsisteth of twoo parts, namely, of deute towards God, and of deute toward our neighbour 608
a. 52
The knowledge of Gods Rightuoufnes is a hydle to hold vs in patience. 138
b. 49
God preferueth the Righteous 66. b. 40 God teacheth men Rightuoufenes by executing his iudgements page. 139.
b. 2.
There is no Rightuoufnes to be found in any mortall wight. 170. a. 51
There is no Rightuoufenesse at all in man as of himselfe, neither bef. re regeneration nor after 734. a. 56. b. and
735. a. b.
How we become Rightuoufe 591. a. 21.
b. 2 & 597. a. 42. b
God not only setteth vs in the waye of Rightuoufenesse and saluation, but also holdeth, guydeth, mayntayneth and contineweth vs in the same too
the end 601. a. 55. & 602. a. b. & 603. b.
17
How the Godly are sayd to be Ryghtu-oufe 273. b. 8. & 744. a. 51 VWhat manner of Rightuoufenes that is, that is set forth in Gods Law 171.
b. 15. & 239. b. 20
If we presume vpon our owne Rightu-oufenes, we cannot stand in Goddes presence 73. b. 1
A man can not mayntayne his owne Rightuoufnesse without derogatio to Gods Rightuoufnesse. 608. b. 1
Howe wee ought to behaue our selues
whē we see the Rightuoufe afflicted, and the wicked prosper 308. b. 55
Mannes Rightuoufnesse giuē vnto him by Chryst, passeth the Rightuoufnes that the Angelles haue of their owne nature 275. a. 28
Let vs take heed we bee not spoyled of the apparell of Ryghtuoufenesse, except wee will haue our shame layed open before God and his Angels.
501.
The Papistes Ryghtuoufenesse, and the Thi-

The Table.

Philosophers is all one. 199. a 5.
Popish Righteousnesse. 196. a 13.

S.

Sackcloth.

Looke Sorrow.

Sacrifice and Sacrificing.

Sacrifices and Sacrificing ordeyned of G O D from the beginninge of the world. 11. a 13. 24.

Sacrifices serue not to cloke euil. 9. a 5.
The right vse and end of Sacrifices and Sacrificing. 11. a 31. b 68.

God did not at any tyme receyue men to mercy without Sacrifice, & why.
745. b 15. and 747. a 27.

The Sacrifices of the Heathē, Papists, and vnbeleeuers 11 a 60. & 12. a 15.

Saluation and Sauing.

The maner of Gods working to bringe vs to Saluation. 594. a. 49. 584. b. and
585. a b. & 586. a b. & 587. a b. 588. a b
& 589. a b. 590. a b. 591. a b. 592. a b.
593. a b 594. a b. & 601. a 55.

The greatest difference betwene the papistes and vs, is about the meane of our Saluation. 197. b 50.

why the tyme of Saluation is called an acceptable tyme. 594. b 26

No man is able to Saue or mayntayne himselſe. 730. a 58.

All the troubles of the worlde can not hinder our Saluation 471. a 13.

How to attayne to the knoweledge of
our Saluation. 695. b. 34.

Satan or Deuill.

Satan. 733. a 14.

why the Diuel or feend is called Satan, that is to say, aduersarie, enemy, or fo. 15. b. 2. 65. and 16. a 35. b 4.

Satan and his Angelles, Feendes, or Diuels were created of God. 16. a 12.

Sathans office and nature, and where-about he buzeth & applyeth himselſe. 16. b 46. and 17. a 10. 32. and 19.
a 60. and 23. b 30.

Satan the father of lyes and lying, and an ennemie to all truth. 20. b 28. &
21. a 8.

Satan is prince of the world. 16. a 16. 30.
51.

Satan is an accuser. 19. a 10

Satan is a roaring Lyon. 16. a 39. b 10.

Satan is Gods executioner or hangmā toward the wicked, and his rod toward the godly. 22. a 19. 22.

Satan is buzest euer with the godly. 17.
a 47.

Sathans corruptnesse or naughtinesse came of himselſe. 16. a 13. 23.

Satan turneth himselſe into an Angell of light. 20. b 31.

Satan is Gods Ape, and hath his prophecies and reuelations also. 571. b 57.

Satan dooth sometye speake truth.
20. b 27. 35.

Satan laboreth to rocke vs aslepe in hi-pocrisse. 523. a 61.

Sathans policie are infinit. 18. b 54.

wherefore God putteth vs in mynde of the power, pollicie, and crueltie of Satan. 16. a 59. b 6. 16. & 17. a 15. & 19. a 27.

Sathans dooings tend altogether to the destruction and damnation of men,

23. a 7. b 30. 38.

Sathans power ouer men in their owne
nature. 16. a 53.

Satan is alwayes practising agaynst vs
without ceassing. 17. a 46. b. 2. & 18. b
50. and 19. a 7.

Satan is to strong for vs if god preferue vs not. 23. 48.

Satan tempteth and afflicteth men mo
wayes than one at oncc. 24. a 50. 56.
and 26 b 52.

Satan finding out euery mans humour and diseale, vseth the same too the parties hurt. 19. a 67. and 20. a 48.

Satan will not suffer men too humble
themselues. 129. b 59.

Sathans hope in afflicting the godly. 21.
a 50.

How Satan is disappointed of his hope in afflicting the godly. 21. a 62. and
22. b 11.

Satan dooth sometye seduce the godly by Gods permission. 22 b 41.

why God giueth Satan leaue to afflicte
the godly 21. a 28. 44.

God granting of Satan leaue to afflicte
the godly, is not for that he is moo-ued therto by Sathans sute, or for that Satan is in any credit or fauour with him. 21. a 28. b 42.

Satan is spyted in the godly. 17. b 22. &
21. a 62.

All Sathans practises turne to the benefite of the godly. 23. a 12.

Satan knoweth not Goddes inuincible power in his chosen. 21. a 52.

As well Satan himselſe as also al his angels, are of Gods sending. 35. a 38. b

Satan is subiect vnto God, and can not do any thing without his leaue. 15. a.
43. & 16. a 8. 27. 49. b. 25. & 22. a 30.
b 15. & 35. a 10.

Sathans subiection is enforced. 15. a 62 &
16. a 1 55. b 43. 22. a 25.

VWhy Satan is let loofe agaynst vs 35. b 32.

Sathans sundry weapons against vs. 28. a 24.

Sathans power ouer the wicked. 17. a 48.
and 22. a 41.

VWhy Satan is sayd to haue dominion and to reigne ouer the wicked. 22. b.
57.

Sathans assaults are so muche the more perillous, because they be not visible.
17 a 19.

VWhy Satan is sayd to appeere or come in Gods presence with his Angells. 15.
a 38. & 16. b 33. and 35 a 19

VWhy God is sayd to demand questions of Satan. 16. b 47.

VWhat is ment by Sathans going out of Gods presence. 23. a 63. b 18.

How ware we ought too bee of Sathans pollicies, and why. 17. a 54. & 28 a 30
b 9.

By what meanes and in what wyſe Satan hath power ouer the lightnings, thunder, windes, tēpestes, & stormes
in the ayre. 27. a 64.

VVe must neyther be afeard of Satan,
nor carelesse of his assaults. 36. a 14.

The rediest waye to withstande the as-saultes of Satan. 259. a 1. and 34.

Satisfaction.

There is no attonement with God by any other Sacrifice or Satisfaction, than the onely death of Chryſt. 743

b. 28.

The Papistes Satisfaction. 196. a 47.
The meane wherby Satisfactions were brought into the Papacy. 526. b 32.

Saue.

Looke Saluation.

Sayings.

God doth not in al caces work his Sayings visibly to the eye. 321. b. 16.

Scrupulousnesse.

Scrupulousnesse in eating and drinking, and the inconueniences therof.
7. b 2.

Sea.

The Sea is as a little babe in the hand of
God. 697. a 25.

By what meanes the Sea is bounded.
697. a 20. b.

Gods mighty power, wisdom, and goodnesse vttered in bounding and ruling of the Sea, prouok vs to praise and magnifie him. 696. b 34. & 697.
a b. and 698. a b.

Secret.

Gods Secret Iudgements are to high for vs to attayne to. 214. b 25. & 739. a 18.

VVe must not be ouerwyſe in Gods Secretes. 271. a 18. & 470. a 54. & 480.
b 35.

The Secretes & misteries of Gods word and workes must be delt withall reuerently and soberly. 270. b 50. and
691. b 42. & 692. a.

How farre and in what wyſe we ought to inquire of Gods Secretes. 86. b 53.
and 584. a 29.

VWhen we passe our boundes in ſkanning and lifting of gods Secretes, we do but intangle our selues without profit. 738. b 19.

VWhy God concealeth his Secrets from
vs. 583. a 16. & 738. b. 40.

Looke more in Iudgments, Wordes, workes.

See.

Looke more in Know.

How God is Scene of vs. 358. b. 13. and
741. b. 4.

Seeke.

After what maner and where God is to be sought and seene. 648. b. 60. and
649. b 4.

The chiefe poynt in Seeking G O D aright. 648. a 41.

Separate.

The Pope Separateth the things which God hath knit together. 633 b. 49.

The feede of life Separateth Gods children from the common order of Nature. 77. a 29.

Our sinnes seperate vs from God 174 b 19.

Selfwisdome.

Selfwisdome & impacience displace
all right. 636. b. 19.

Sermons.

* * 4

Men

The Table.

Men come to Sermons but for fashion fake. 505. b. 37.

The use of Sermons 258. a. 11.

Serue.

What Seruice is acceptable to God. 11.
b. 58.

Our Seruing of God must be free and vncconstrayned 93. b. 55. and 497. a. 17
and 525. b. 58.

The true ground of the Seruice of God is single hartednesse. 205. a. 33.

The chiefe Seruice that God requireth of vs. 11. b. 44. & 12. b. 6. & 378. b. 31.

The true marke of a man that is minded to serue God. 497. a. 52.

God will haue vs to serue him through-ly and with the whole man, and not by halues. 627. a. 25.

The Seruice of God must be spirituall.
11. b. 60. & 12. a. 57.

The true Seruice of G O D abused.
12. a. 37.

Gods goodnesse in accepting our Seruice though he receiue no profit nor commoditie by it. 642. b. 16.

Of Seruing G O D vpon Vseric. 63. b.
10.

Seruice and what maner of Seruice we owe to God. 65. a. 43. and 66. a. 3. and
525. b. 58.

In Seruing of God wee must not haue regard of any worldly recompence.
496. b. 24.

The Seruing of God must be ioyned with the helping of our neighbour.
12. b. 14.

What the Papistes call Gods Seruice.
419. b. 43.

Seruetus

Seruetus denieth that the holy Ghost is come. 72. b. 59.

Seruetus error touching visions. 72. b.
59.

Shadow.

Why man is likened to a Shadowe. 47
b. 37.

Shamefastnesse.

Shamefastnesse to do euill in respect of man is no vertue of it selfe. 493. a. 43.

Shamefastnesse is quite rased out in all
men. 494. a. 12.

We must not be loth nor ashamed to acknowledge our vnauised words or opinions that we haue hild before we knew the truth. 739. b. 42.

Shewe.

God sheweth himselfe too vs in all his workes. 727. b. 39.

Shrift.

Of Popish Shrift. 593. a. 68.

The blasphemousnesse of Popish Shrift
598. b. 26.

Shyne.

What is meant by the shining of light in darkness. 646. b. 5.

Simplicite.

The opinion of the world concerning honest simple men. 91. b. 32.

What is happened in Popedome vnder colour of Simplicite. 119. a. 2.

Of the Simplicite of faith that Papistes require. 269. a. 19.

Sinne.

What Sinne is? 58. b. 30.

Sinne is not of Gods creation in man, but of the Diuels procurement. 16. a.
19.

Sinne is the cause of all our miseries. 48.
b. 46.

There are three degrees of faultinesse in Sinne although it come not to the outward deede. 521. a. 43.

Wherefore Sinne is termed by many names in the Scripture. 243. a. 66.

How all mankind is infected with originall Sinne and corruption notwithstanding our soules be not deliuered from Adam, but only our bodies. 248
b. 40.

The distinction of Sinne into wilfull Sin and Sinne of ignorance, hath no substance in it. 243. a. 27.

The very conceiuing of Sinne is Sinne.
43. a. 6. b. 32. & 724. a. 65.

Originall Sinne corrupteth euen the things that are good. 7. b. 40.

Man is nothing the more excused because Sinne is in him by nature. 247.
a. 8.

The very disposition or motion to mis-like of Sinne commeth of God. 630.
b. 39.

Of the sweetenes that wicked men find in their vices and Sinnes. 350. a. 37.

Mens Sinnes are not alwayes to be measured by their afflictions. 455. a. 8.

It is not for men to cloake their sinnes
before God. 600. b. 66.

Sin is to be shunned as a pestilent aire,
plage, or poysoned meate. 18. b. 33.

Whether a man ought to be mistrust-full and afraid of sinnes vnknoven
13. b. 60.

The blasphemouse opinion of the Papistes concerning the motion or con-ceyt of Sin. 522. a. 53.

Signes.

All the Signes and wonders that GOD wrought in old tyme, ought too bee warrants of his woord vnto vs. 690. a.
46.

Skorne

Looke Sclaunder.

Skyes.

The Skyes, and the ayre and all things in them, are altered and disposed by Gods appointemēt, and not by their owne power. 707. b. 35.

The Skyes are recordes both of Gods faour and of his wrath. 707. a. 18.

Slauerie.

The greatest Slauerie that can come to man, is to bee subiecte too his owne vices. 377. b. 52.

Sclaunder.

Sathans practise by stirring vp malicious folke to Sclaunder vs, is that we should conclude that wee haue lost our time in doing good. 508. a. 46.

We must take it in good parte when men Sclaunder vs. cad. b. 23.

By Iobs exāple we must learne to beare

Sclaunders and reproches. pag. cad.
b. 14.

When we be scorned by such as haue no commendable thinge in them, it is much more hard to vs. 510. b. 3.

Agaynst the temptation of Sclaunder.
269. a. 30.

Sleepe.

Gods preferuing of vs & his watching ouer vs whē we be asleepe, ought to prouoke vs to reioyce in him. 645. a.
4.

Slowe.

When there is any talke of Gods Iudgements, we are so slowe that it moueth vs not a whit. 524. b. 35.

Snowe.

The ingendering of Snowe. 704. b. 20.
Sunne.

The Sunne and Moone, and al the host of Heauen with the cloudes and such other things are seruantes to Gods elect people. 681. b. 11.

The wonderfull certaintie and cuennesse which the Sonne keepeth in going his dayly and yerely courses. 699.
a. 68. b.

The course of the Sunne maketh the diuersitie of seasons. 157. a. 1.

The light of the Sun is a part of the inheritance of Gods children. 701. a. 44

Sorrowe

The Sorrow that is not to be shunned.
742. b. 1.

Commendable and godly Sorrowe. 29
b. 52.

Mens inordinatnesse in Sorrowing. 29.
a. 49.

Vncommendable, hypocritly, and wicked Sorrow. 29. a. 40. b. 50.

Hartie Sorrowe will vtter it selfe perforce. 29. b. 2.

It is a thing not to be desired neuer too
haue any Sorrowe at all. 517. a. 54.

It behoueth the godly too bee touched with grief and Sorrow, when GOD layeth his hand vpon thē. 29. a. 11. b.
38. and 30. a.

Sackloth, Shearing of mennes heades, Rending of their garments, and casting of dust and ashes vpon them, were tokens of Repentance, or else of great Sorrowe among the people of the East Countries in old tyme. 29
a. 25. 30. 37. 61. 65. h. 46. 56.

Signes of Sorrow doe varye accordinge to the diuersitie of the customes of Countries. 29. a. 30.

What things ought to prouoke vs too
Sorrowe. 48. b. 56.

The common manner of putting away
Sorrowe or grief. 29. b. 12.

soueraintie.

Looke Subiectiō.

VWherein consisteth the Soueraintie that God hath ouer vs. 441. a. 32.

Looke more in Providence.

sowe and Reape.

Such as wee Sow, such shall we reape.
68. a. 14.

Soule.

The Table.

Soul.

The Soule is not immortal of itself. 184. a 33.

God breatheth the Soule in to the child 56. a 4.

The death and lyfe of the Soule. 254. a 18. and 23.

Satan neuer hathe any powr ouer the Soules of the Godly. 22. a 30.

All men are infected with original Sin, notwithstanding that our Soules be not deriued from Adam. 248. b 40.

The Sadduces denie the immortalitie of the Soule. 370. b 22.

Soundnesse.

Soundnesse, what it is 3. a 4. the image therof in Iob. 5. a 66.

A description of true Soundnesse. 3. b 52.

Soundnesse vnperfect in this lyfe. 3. b 7.

Soundnesse of hart is the first point and the very grownd of true holinesse. 18. a 23.

Soundnesse of hart is the foundation wheron wee must grownd our selues wherin the same is shewed. 36. b 26.

We ought not only inwardly too bee Souid, but also shewe our dedes that we be suche as we seeme. 370. 40.

More Soundnesse of lyfe in the old tyme than in their dayes. 2. b 58.

Spare.

Gods Sparing of vs and his dooing of vs good is not for any woorthinesse or deseruing of ours, but for his own free mercies sake or for some other cause. 582. b. 61. & 683. a b.

Seing that God spareth nor whole nations that offend, much lesse shall he spare any one man. 666. a 5.

Speake and Speach.

In what wyse God speaketh to all sorts of men and openeth their cares. 585. a 26.

Gods Speaking to vs is not to leaue vs in doubt. 627. 1.

God speaketh to vs after twoo fashyons 741. a 16.

God is fayne to speake too vs in way of skorne & mockage, & why 632. b 13. & 613. a.

VVhy God speaketh too vs by men rather than by himself immediately. 578. a 30.

God hathe diuers maners of Speaking to put vs to silence. 727. b 50. & 728. a

The twoo things that we learn by Gods speaking to vs. 583. b 52.

It ought too suffice vs roohaue heard God Spoken of. 740. b 61.

Speeche and the end and vse therof 43. b 23. & 51. a 58. & 118. b 25

Our Ouerhastinesse in Speaking we woote not what. 635. a 34. & 636. a 36.

Hastinesse to speake is to bee discommended. 564. a 2.

Men must not bee too hastie to speake or determine of Gods doings. 649. a 63. & 651. b 39.

How and when wee may safely speake. 728. a 31. & 739. b 57. & 740. a

After what maner our Speaking must bee moderated. 637. a 65. & 723. b 62. & 724. a & 740. a 36. b.

Twoo fashyons of speaking vntoo God. 740. a 25.

Of the brydlinge of our speeche in aduersitie. 43. b 10.

VVhat we ought to do when mē speak euill and condemne vs wrongfully. 301. b 54. and 362. a 17.

Men must giue others leaue too Speake as well as themselues. 637. a 65. b 16.

VVhat maner of men haue mooste libertie too Speake now adayes. 638. a b.

Speedefulnesse

VVhat Speedefulnesse of errour importeth. 22. a 65.

Speedefulnesse of Errour is the reward of them that wilfully refuze Gods truthe. 22. a 53. b 40.

Spirit.

If men be not gouerned by God his Spirit there reigneth nothing but fainednesse in their flesh. 526. a 40.

Stand.

VVhat the woord Stand betokeneth. 734. a 62.

It is vnpossible for a mortall Creature too Stand before God. 734. a 6.

Starres.

Frō whens cometh the naming of Starres. 157. a 45.

Some Starres bigger than the Moone. 157. b 24.

After what maner the Starres are sayd to sing. 695. b 42.

State.

The State of our lyfe. 74. b 24. & 75. b 47.

The State of mē after this lyfe vntill the last day. 257. a 50.

The State of the faithfull. 55. a 35. & 92. a 53.

The State of the reprobate. 55. a 40.

The State of our bodies. 74. b 16. & 75. a 43.

The State and condition of seruants in the tyme of Iob. 532. b 10.

The faythfull in considering their State ought too wayghe well both what they are, and also what God is able to do. 254. b 6.

Things can not be in their perfite State til the last day. 472. b 13.

If we thinke not of our State we shall alwayes be puffed vp with pride. 518 a 47.

Stoutnesse.

If a Magistrate wante Stoutnesse too redresse matters he shall neuer perfourme his duty. 501. a 22.

stork.

Of Storks 713. b 59. & 716. a 41.

The kindnesse that is naturally in Storks is a mirroure of the thankfulnessse that ought to be in children to wards their parents. 716. a 40.

Strength.

All our Strength, and rightowfenesse cometh only of God. 734. b 3.

It is for our profit and behofe nor too haue the Strenth and swiftnesse of birdes and beatts. 717. a 18.

Strumpet.

Looke Whore.

Caluin reprobeth sharply that a Strumpet being put in prison was presented which tartes. 342. b 47.

stubborne.

God will deale rowghly with the Stubborne. 747. a 59. b.

Such as are stubborne against God, come to confusion. 139. a 37. stryue.

It is in vayne for man to Stryue ageinst God of his truthe. 641. a 21.

subiect & Subiection.

Mannes subiection and dewtie of obedience vnto God. 1. a 19. & 30.

VVhat maner of Subiection man should haue bee in if he had not sinned. 714. a 30.

Doe the best we cā, we cā not bee so Subiecte to God as were requisite. 517. a 41

It is for our welfare to bee so in Subiection. 714. a 68.

The Subiection and seruise of beatts vnto vs is through, Gods taming and subdewing of thē to our hand. 714. b 66. & 715. a b.

The diuels are Subiect to God and cā not do any thing without his leaue 15. a 43. & 16. a 8 b 26.

Loke more in Obedience.

Submit.

we must alwayes Submit our selues to God that we be not touched with vaine presumption. 512. a 60.

It is a hard thing for man to Submit himselfe too the single will of God without asking a reason of his works 325. b 35.

Substance.

The Substance of our bodies and soules are no euill things, but the good creatures of God not withstandinge all that is in them is peruerted and euill 274. a 25.

To say that the Substance of Gods Spirit is in vs, is an heretic. 458. a 43.

Seruetus held that mens soules were partakers of the Substance of the Godhead. 458. b 4.

Sufferance & Suffering.

Gods Sufferance is not a single permissiō or giuing leaue, but an effectual appointing of things to bee doone. 34. a 13 & 18 b 29.

Simple Sufferance destroyeth the almightinesse of God. 220. b 5.

How the things that are doone by Satan & by wicked folk are doone by Gods owne woorking and appointment, and not simply by his permission or Sufferance. 34. a 16. 46.

VVhat frute, profit & confort redound to the Godly by knowing that Satā or wicked men can doo nothing but by Gods Sufferance. 16. a 28 40. 47. b 22. & 33. b 35.

VVhy God Suffereth manie things vn-punished. 165. b 57. & 166. b 37. & 655. b 27.

Such as suffer the wicked, at length seele the smart them selues. 437. b 21.

Superstition.

Superstition. 86. a 7.

From whence the Superstition springs. 399. a 18.

The Table.

Sustayned.

W<sup>e</sup> are not Sustayned by the abundance that we haue, but only by the grace of God. 318. a. 3.

Swearing and Othes.

Swearing is monstrous and against nature. 154. b. 68.

The truth and right of Swearing. 457. a. 58.

Light Othes are so many reproches too God. 457. a. 49.

Sweating.

Causēs of Sweating. 686. a. 67.

Sword.

The common drawing of the Sword now adayes. 500. b. 32.

Looke more in Gouerners.

T

Talke.

All our Talke must tend too the glory of God. 653. b. 33.

Tame.

Till wee know that God putteth vs too reproch, and giueth men leaue too persecute vs, wee shall neuer bee Tamed as we ought to be. 512. b. 24.

Teach, Teacher, Teachable Teachablenesse.

There is no Teacher like vnto God, and how to learne at his hands. 667. b. 30. & 668. a.

All the Teaching, reading, and hearing of Gods woord that can be, will not auaille vs, except he worke inwardly by his holy spirit. 667. b. 60.

The waye too bee well taught at Gods hand. 721. a. 48. & 740. b. 30

To be Teachable is a great vertue. 117. a. 50. and 118. a. 47.

W<sup>h</sup>at Teachablenesse is. 74. b. 32.

The first foundation of wisdome is Teachablenesse, that is to say, a willingness or desirousnes to be taught 616. b. 29.

W<sup>h</sup>en God Teacheth wee must giue eare to his Teaching 582. a. 7.

The Lord will haue vs only to receiue that which hee thinketh good too Teach vs. 484. b. 13.

God Teacheth vs by men & according to our capacite. 718. a. 35. & 789. a. 9.

He that will Teach others well, must first learne of God, & haue a perfect feeling of the true Doctrinē in his hart. 575. a. 2. & 576. a. 18.

The properties of a good Teacher. 444. a. 54. & 496. a. 39. 60.

The office of the Preachers and Teachers of the Gospell to forgiue sinnes 593. a. 2.

The lets are many which turne men aside from suffering themselves to be taught by God. 482. b. 6.

Very few now adayes can abide to be Taught, but euery man taketh vpon him to be a Teacher 495. a. 48.

They shall neuer bee good Teachers which will not suffer themselves too be reponed when they doo amisse. 637. b. 63.

If wee make no reckoning of the good life of suche as ought to teache vs, we reiecte the assurance that God giueth vs of his doctrine. 496. a. 25.

They that despise their teachers, offer wronge vnto God. 217. a. 19.

All Popish Teachers are scornors of God. 197. a. 40.

The condemnation of hypocritical teachers. 64. b. 65.

Temptations & Tempting.

Temptation. 62. a. 40.

Three degrees of Tentationes. 258. a. 16.

W<sup>e</sup> are sometimes Tempted without any inward affection. 528. b. 38.

Temptation, spirituall. 1. b. 27.

Temptations too any vnlawfulness come of the diuel. 17. a. 43.

Great difference betwene the being beaten downe which Tēptationes, and being shaken only and yet with stāding them. 257. b. 38. and so forth.

Temptations blot owt the remembrance of Gods benefits. 52. b. 47.

The Temptations, trialls, and trubbles of the Godly are many & manifold. 18. a. 66. & 26. b. 53.

W<sup>h</sup>y wee ought not to mislike of Gods dooing when he causeth vs too bee Tempted and tried. 17. b. 44.

The violence of Temptations and afflictions driueth euen the godliest too ouershoote themselves. 607. a. 9. b. & 608. b. 58.

The faintes which God most loued haue bene in verye great Temptatiō, and how we ought to apply this too our comfort. 292. b. 16.

W<sup>h</sup>y some men are stronger in Temptations and afflictions than others. 24. b. 38.

The greatest Temptation that can come too man is to be pressed with the feeling of Gods wrath. 103. a. 69. and 104. a. 22. b. 25. and 110. a. 2.

How the faithfull ought to strengthen them selues in Tentationes. 310. a. 20

Gods strength neuer fayleth mē in their Temptations. 48. a. 50.

Our ouercoming of Tēptations is not without leauing some marks of our infirmitie. 607. a. 28.

The Ouercoming and withstanding of Temptations and aduersities cometh of Gods power in vs and not of ourselves. 25. b. 52. 67.

Satans cheef Temptation in our afflictions. 46. b. 47.

Terrible.

Too what end God sheweth himself Terrible too vs. 677. b. 24. & 689. a. 35. b. & 690. a. b. & 734. a. 38.

Thankfulnessse.

W<sup>h</sup>at maner of Thankfulnessse it behoueth vs to yeald to God when we haue felt his mercie in forgiuing our sinnes. 597. b. 44.

All Gods creatures prouoke vs to Thāfulnessse towards Gods. 645. b. 41.

Thoughts.

The errour of the papists towching sinfull thoughts. 43. b. 48. & 607. b. 2.

Threatnings.

Looke Warning.

God denounceth not his Threatnings in vaine. 470. a. 37.

Thryce.

W<sup>h</sup>at the number of Thryce betokeneth in holy Scripture. 622. a. 7.

Thunder.

The ingendring of Thunder and lightning in the aire. 673. a. 30.

The Thunder is termed the voyce of God 676. a. 54.

The Thunder and tempestuous weather are messengers of Gods Maicesty, and proofes of his prouidence and foueraintie ouer all his creatures. 680. a. 4.

The Thunder and lightning make vs vnexcusable if we do not therby both know feare and magnifie God. 676. b. 8. & 678. a. 25.

The Thunder maketh enen the Repobates and Atheists to know and confesse that there is a God. 678. a.

Tormenter.

A man can haue no worse Tormenter then himselfe. 247. b. 63.

Trades.

All Trades are giftes of God. 477. a. 45.

Trauell.

All trauaile and turmoyle in the world can not make a man rich except God bleesse him. 470. b. 39.

Trayterousnesse.

The proud Trayterousnesse of man. 264. a. 14.

Treasure.

W<sup>h</sup>at the similitude of the woorde Treasure importeth. 704. a. 57.

Tumbe.

The heauen shall serue for a Tumbe too Gods Saints. 473. a. 26.

Looke more in Buryall.

Trubble.

Such as are bolde in Troubling others shall be danted by the hand of God. 475. a. 24.

Trust.

W<sup>e</sup> must continually trust in Gods goodness. 99. a. 4. & 730. a. 58. b.

W<sup>h</sup>at is imported by trusting in God. 93. a. 14. & 236. b. 23.

Gods bereauing vs of all trust in our owne righteousnesse is too our singular benefite and welfare. 603. b. 55.

Our Trust must not be tyed too the thinges that are seene, but we must Trust in God euen in the midst of death. 514. a. 34.

Truth.

W<sup>h</sup>en God offereth vs his Truth wee must receiue it without replying or gainfaying. 603. a. 39.

The truth of God shall neuer be suppressed. 120. b. 38 & 570. b. 9.

It is blasphemie against God, too make countenance or consent too such as maintaine an euil case & go against the Truth. 459. b. 6.

He

The Table.

He that knoweth Gods truth must not keepe it close but is bound too his neighbours. 276. a. 17.

Whensoever wee see a man strue against Gods Truth in woordes or workes, we ought to fet our selfe against him. 342. a. 36.

The feare fauour or authoritie of man, must not restraine vs from the maintayninge or settinge forth of Gods Truth. 572. b. 65 and 573. a. b. and 574. a.

We must not be afrayd to mayntaine Gods Truth, and why. 641. a. 62.

Why men dare not mayntaine the Truth and the punishment of their faynt hartednesse 570. b. 28.

God is not worshipped, if his Truth be not obeyed. 117. b. 54.

Man of his owne nature cannot call vpon God in Truth. 259. b. 45.

One cause that hindereth the simple sort to come to G O D is Truth. 480. a. 30. 611. a.

Turke.

The ground of the Turkes Religion. 72. b. 47.

Of Turning.

The welspring of all euils, and of destruction, is to Tourne away from God 625 b 7.

Why the Heathen and Paynims are said to bee Turned away from God. 625. b. 24.

V

Vanitie.

They that are giuen to Vanities are ware to heare talke of God. 466. b. 35.

Vaine glory or Ambition.

The Vaine glorious man doth not any thing but he looketh for praise. 496. b. 3.

The man that exalteth the message of Gods Doctrine is not to be condemned of Vaine glory. 654. a. 34.

The Vaine glory of Ambition of Parents. 12. b. 46.

The Vaine gloriousnes of worldlinges. 55. b. 24.

Vertue and vertuousnesse.

When a man is not grounded in the feare of God, his Vertues are but filthinesse. 743. b. 48. & 744. b. 8.

The more Vertuous that men are the better doth God like of them, and the more is hee honored and glorified thereby. 655. a. 37.

Gods Vertues are him selfe. 581. a. 18.

Vnbeliefe.

The great vnbeliefe specially in afflictions. 590. b. 20.

Vnderstanding.

Gods bountifullnesse in giuing of vnderstanding to such as craue it. 633. b. 22.

Our Vnderstanding is not perfect. 71. b. 16.

God must not be measured by our Vnderstanding. 415. b. 60.

The spirite of Vnderstanding is the gift of God, not of nature. 204. a. 22.

God hathe not set men in this worlde to bereaue them of all vnderstanding. 484. a. 62.

Looke more in Reason.

Vndutiful.

Vndutifull men are compared to drie brookes. 114. a. 6.

Vnicorne.

Of the Vnicorne. 713. b. 35. & 714. b. 50. 51.

Vnitie.

Our Vnitie ought to be in the right feare of God. 288 b 1.

Vnkindnesse.

Mens Vnkindnes ought to prouoke vs to remit our selues wholly vnto God. 508. a. 58.

Violence.

God accepteth not our prayers except our hndes be cleare from Violence 299. b. 45.

Vnquietnesse.

The Vnquietnes of the wicked. 276. b. 33.

Vnthankfulnesse.

Vnthankfulnes in men. 107. a. 22.

Vnthankfulnesse in grudging against God when he bereueth vs of his benefits. 37. b. 59. & 31. a. 53. b. 40.

Vnthankfulnesse in forgetting Gods protection. 21. a. 8.

The mannes Vnthankfulnesse is the cause of his decay. 89. a. 12.

When God giueth the wicked the vpperhand it is to punish the Vnthankfulnes of the world. 120. b. 45.

Vprightnesse.

Trew Vprightnesse. 3 b 35.

Whence Vprightnesse springeth. 18. a. 31.

Wherin Vprightnesse consisteth. 18. a. 38.

Whereto Vprightnesse tendeth. 18. a. 41.

The principal or cheef point of Vprightnesse. 18. a. 51.

The tryall of Vprightnesse. 18. a. 48.

Trew Vprightnesse the mark of and warrant of fowndnesse of hart. 4. a. 30.

It is vnpossible that man shoulde haue suche perfection as to be garnished with Vpright dealing in all pointes. 501. b. 34.

It is a wonder that a man which walketh Vprightly shoulde be honoured at this day. 508. b. 58.

Visible.

The sight of theis Visible things must leade vs too the considering of the things that are inuisible. 723 a 6.

Visions.

Visions of the fathers. 71. a. 3. 18.

Why God appeered in Visions and dreames to the men of old tyme and why he dooth not so to vs 585. a. b.

Why the Visions were with tokens to amaze men. 71. a. 7. 22.

Wee in theis daies must not looke for Visions and reuelations. 584 b 55.

Gods inward working in mennes hartes by remorse, inspirations and Visions 584. b. 8.

Visions not to be longed for. 72. b. 100.

The Vanitie of them that desire Visions. 72. b. 21

Visitacion.

God sendeth vs his woord, & we know not the due tyme of his Visitation, 504. b. 25

Vsurie.

Offeruing God vppon Vsurie. 83. b. 10

Vyce.

Euery Vice draweth man away from God. 482. a. 67

Two Vices that commonly reigne in the world, namely contempt of god, and superstition. 85. b. 54.

Two extreme Vices amongst men, one in that some are greedy to knowe all things, the other, for that some will not seeke to know that they shold, and that is euident amongst the Papists. 484. a. 17. and 27

How loth all men are to haue their Vices rebuked, and specially Princes & great men. 617. b. 61.

Shamefull & abhominable Vices may not be spoken agaynst now adayes. 638. a. 30

W.

Wualke.

What is ment or signified by Wualking generally. 3. b. 63.

What is ment by Gods Wwalkings vppon the sea. 106. b. 31.

What it is to Wwalk with God. 609. a. 14. 48. b. 1

Why Enocke is sayd to haue Wwalked with God. 609. a. 40.

What it is to walke with men. 609. a. 21.

What it is to Wwalk with the wicked. 607. b. 47. & 608. a.

So longe as man is vppon the earthe, he must needs walke amogst thornes pag. ead. b. 62.

We cannot Wualke to Gods contentacion, except wee eschew euill. 18. a. 63

How wee may walke as it becometh vs 37. a. 25.

Wwant

We shall not Wwant any thing if god take the charge of vs 367. b. 29.

Wvarenesse.

Wvarenesse needful in all states and degrees. 7. a. 30. b. 8.

Wvarenesse at feastings. 8. a. 64.

Wvarenesse in tyme of prosperitie 20 a 53. & 27. b. 68. & 28. a. 1.

Wvarenesse in preuenting and eschewing of sin and offences. 13 b. 10. and 14. a. 10.

Wvarenesse in mistrusting of secret and vnknown sins past. 14. a. 18.

we be water in daungers of the bodye, than in daungers of the soule. 17. a. 65

Wvarning.

The Wvarning that G O D giveth vs as well in his workes as in his word, ought to arme vs against all inconvenciences and temptacions 719. b. 9.

Wvatie

The Table.

- VVarre.
How the wicked are sayde to make VVarre against God. 281. a 40.
- VVashing.
VVhat is meant by VVashinge. 171. b 57.
- VWater.
VWater is the beginning or grownd-woork of the world. 677. b 2.
- VWay.
VVe must not swerue from the way that God hath shewed vs. 429. a 18.
- VVeake.
Man is not only VVeake but also corrupt, and the difference betwene these two. 274. a 8. and. 35.
- VVeale or VVelfare.
VVherein consisteth our great VVeale.
464. a 20.
- VVeldooing.
Our VVeldooing profiteth not God, neither dooth our euill dooing hurt
him. 641. b 40.
- The thinking that God is beholding to vs for our VVeldooings, is the grownd of manie superstitions. 642.
a 5.
- VVelspring.
VVe must bee fountaines or VVel-springes of liuing water, and what is meant thereby. 115. a 6. and b. 50.
- Pryde is the VVelspring of all our disordered dealings. 586. b 49.
- VVelth.
VWorldly VVelth and prosperitie shall not defend men from the hand of God. 619. b 44.
- VVhale.
The VVhale and the description of
him. 732. b 30. & 734. a b & 735. a b
736. a b.
- Proofs of Gods myghtie power, wis-dome, and rightuouynesse in the VVhale 733. b 2. & 734. a b & 735. a
b & 736. a b.
- VVhoredome.
VWho so suffreth VVhoredome too be committed, is a bawde before God.
532. a 37.
- The iust reward of adulterers 530. b 4.
- VVicked & VVickednesse.
All men of all degrees are VVicked if God restrayne them not by his holie spirit. 618. a 23.
- The VVicked are God seruants, tooles, and instruments, wherwith he serueth his own turne iustly and rightfully, and yit their VVickednesse cannot bee fathered vpon him. 33. a 28.
& 34. a 46. b 19.
- The more that God beareth with the VVicked, the more doe they harden in their finnes. 500. b 60. & 633. a 42.
- The VVicked cannot doo anie more or any other wise than God permitteth
thē. 33. a 24. & 34. a 63. & 294. b 47.
- The wicked is to bee condēned for his VVickednesse how soeuer his state standeth. 80. a b & 81. b 57. & 82. a 50.
- All the VVicked want three things.
472. a 44.
- VVhy the VVicked are sayd to be planted. 79. b 67.
- The VVicked perisheth before he be full ripe 287. a 27.
- VVhy the VVicked are suffred some times vnpunished. 370. b 40.
- VVhy God giueth the VVicked their full scope in this world. 701. b 18.
- Though the VVicked bee not trubbled yit are they not thoroughly in quiet bycause they haue an euill cō-science. 474. 60.
- Though God spare the VVicked for a time, yit he suffereth thē not to scape altogether scotfree. 743. a 20.
- God neuer fauoreth the VVicked. 150. b 36.
- God is anemie to all VVicked folk in generall. 729. a 66.
- God ouetraketh the VVicked in their owne wyles. 68. b 52. & 90. b 14.
- The VVicked shall at length bee confounded. 701. b 58. & 702. a & 289. a 64.
- VVhy God destroyeth the VVicked.
180. b 64.
- The VVicked come not willingly too
the Lorde. 465. a b.
- If VVicked men scape vnpunished in this worlde, their iudgemente is the greater. 469. a 20
- The end of the VVicked 79. a 48. & 346
a 32.
- An admonition to the VVicked. 469. a 30.
- The VVickednesse of theis present daies
82. a 30.
- VVickednes increaseth, when it is not resisted. 437. b 26.
- VVil.
The wil of God, is the fountaine of all righteousnes 222. a 9.
- Gods only VVill is vntoo vs a sufficient reason of all his dooings. 734. b 54.
- If wee enter to deepe into the lerehing of Gods will and works it will turne too our destruction. 740. b 13.
- Gods VVill and Mannes VVil cannot stand toogether and why. 635. b 58.
- VVilfulness.
VVilfulness of opinions is extreme follye 616. b 55.
- VVilfulness is a deadly plague. 118. a 34.
- The malicious VVilfulness of man. 264.
a 36.
- VVink.
VWhen God VVinketh most at our sin-nes then stand wee in woorst case.
632. a 30.
- Though God VVinke at things for a time, yet in the ende he will call for an accounte of them. 483. b 65.
- VVifedome.
The VVifedome of God is infinite. 86.
b 35.
- God hath all perfection of VVifedome
in him. 481. b 22.
- God is wise after two sortes. 218. a 31. &
222. a 26.
- VVhat is our true VVifedome, & wher-in it consisteth. 79. b 48. & 81. b 23. &
87. a 30. & 201. a 3. & 385. b 5. & 482.
a 37. & 603. a 39. & 604. 1. 14. & 633.
a 40. & 721. a 19. & 722. b 15. & 723. a
b. & 744. b 38.
- From whence VVifedome commeth.
91. b 12. & 468. b 52. & 479. a 41.
- Gods children must not bee without
- VVifedome and discretion. 119. a. a 1.
- VVhat is the principall poynt of mans VVifedome. 481. a 20.
- VVifedome is not tied too the age, nor to the state and degree of calling. 567
b. 33.
- If man had the vnderstanding of all things that are hidden yet God his VVifedome is farre higher. 475. b. 48
- The VVifedome and strength of man, is but smoke before God. 225. a 6.
- All the VVifedome, knowledge, rightuousnes, & strength of man, is nothing before God. 690. b. 61. & 691. a. b.
- A patterne of a worldly wise mā. 91. b. 22
- VVorldly VVifedome is foolishnes. 91. b 45.
- God punisheth the pride of such as trust in their owne VVifedome in inferior things. 477. b. 29.
- God blindeth the wise euen in worldly things, much more in the secrets of his Gospell, and therefore wee ought not to be offended when we see the VVife of the world haue no tast of the Gospell. 305. b. 36. & 50.
- VVish
VVe may VVish for nothing, which wee ought not to pray for. 109. a 35.
- Man is tempted to VVish his own vn-doing. 470. b 28.
- VVit.
VVe must not trust to our owne VVit
and why. 636. a 63.
- He that proudly presumeth of his own VVit, robbeth God of his honour.
477. b 51.
- God will punishe suche as apply theyr wittes to naughtie purposes. 477. b 53.
- The cause why the Papists and heretiks stand so stubly to the Articles that are in cōtroversie between them and vs, is for that they trust more too their owne VVitte than to the scriptures.
636. b 30.
- VVitnesse.
The vpright and such as are no hypocrites refuse not euen the VVines of men cōcerning their giltynes. 301. b 10.
- VWoman.
VVomē are not to be despized. 50. a 51.
- The naturall kindnesse of VVomen toward their children and whence it procedeth. 717. a 52. b.
- Gods woord or the Scripture.
Gods VVord is a cōsuming fire. 362. a 5.
- Gods VVord must be our only direction. 78. b. 41.
- Gods VVord is the Armour and weapon of Christians. 28. b 15.
- Gods word is not dark of it self. 583. a 9
- The maicste, simplicitie and easie plain-nesse of Gods VVord. 689. a 59. &
706. b 53.
- The Scripture applyeth it self to our ca-pacitie. 35. a 29. b 50.
- Gods goodnesse in shewing himselfe to vs by his VVord, and the vse and end therof. 677. b. 62.
- The authoritie & obedience that must be yeilded of all states & degrees to Gods VVord. 293. a. 29. & 494. b. 52.
574. a. 2. & 575. a. 29. & 577. b. 36.
- Gods shewing of himself in his VVord is farre excellenter than his shewing

The Table.

of himfelfe in his workes. 678 a. 60. b
VWhat maner of thing the Doctrine of Gods VVord is, and how it differeth from other Sciences. 604. b. 28.
The word without the working of gods spirit is but a dead thing 741. a. 12. b.
They that reiect and refute Gods word are worfe than the Papifts. 679.
They that difdeyne too learne at Gods woord are worfe than brute beaftes 605. a. 6.
Vherefore many take no profite by hearing Gods woord. 231. a. 51.
How wee ought to behaue our felues when we lee Gods woord to little receiued 265. b. 60.
Vee ought too bee defiroys of Gods woord and why 64. a. 10.
The profite of Gods woord when it is rightlie applied. 445. a. 8.
Vhat is to be done that we may profite by the hearing of Gods woord. 679. b. 7.
How we ought to be minded at the reading or hearing of Gods woord. 72. a. 54. & 73. a. 10. & 487. a. 23.
Vee muft content our felues with the Scriptures. 73. a. 8. & 7. 2. b. 42.
The faithfull muft continually minde the thinges that are written in Gods woord. 584. a. 13. a. 1. & 420. a. 30 & 470. a. 30.
There is no right knowledge of Gods workes to be had without his word.
To receiue Gods woord, is to receiue God himfelf. 576. a. b
The vfe of Gods woord. 63. b. 55. & 64. 685. b. 51.
Vhat a villany it is to forbid vnlearned folke the reading of the Scripture. 16. b. 60.
Men cannot barre the VVoord of God from contineyng in his full ftate. 496. a. 27.
The wickedneffe of mens liues ought not too diminiſh the authoritie of Gods VVord. 485. b. 50.
The Papiftes are falſifiers of the holy Scriptures. 78. b. 21.
VVoorkes.
Gods VVorkes are incomprehenſible in them ſelues. 26. b. 5.
VWhy all Gods VVorkes are called iudgments. 34. b. 33.
Our negligence in confidering Gods VVorkes. 87. b. 27.
Three points to be minded in the confidering of Gods VVorkes. 684. a. 60
Two ſortes of lookinge vpon Gods VVorkes. 669. a. 42
It is perfect wiſedome too marke well Gods VVorkes. 451. b. 60.
Vee muft not preſume too ſearch the bottoome of Gods VVorkes. 668. a. 19. & 67. b. 47.
Our looking at & vpon Gods VVorkes muſt ingender a reuerend feare of him in vs. 675. b. 31. & 676. a
The apparantneffe of Gods VVorkes leaue th vs without excuſe if we magnifie him not. 670. a. 40.
The depth of Gods inferior VVorkes proue that we cannot attaine to his incomprehenſible ſecrets. 674. a. 29. & 702. a. 45. b. & 703. a. 59. b. & 704.

a. b. & 716. a. 19.
The ordinary fight and woanted familiaritie of Gods VVorkes muſt not caule vs to make the leſſe accompt of them. 674. a. 3.
Mans preſumption in iudging Gods VVorkes. 85. a. 42.
Gods woonderfull VVorking in his viſible creatures ought to reſtraine vs from ruſhing into his incomprehenſible determinations, and from iudging too haſtely of his doings. 657. b. 23. & 698. a. 52. b. & 699. a. b. & 7. 2. a. 38. b. & 701. a. b. & 704. a. b.
The end of knowing Gods VVorkes. 87. a. 9.
The excellencie and maieltie of Gods VVorkes, and our durtie in reuerencing and glorifying him in the ſame. 684. b. 49. & 685. a. & 687. b. 22. and 688. b. 42. & 691. b. 51. & 694. a. b. & 695. a. b. & 696. a. b. & 697. a. b. & 698. a. b. & 699. a. b. & 700. a. b. & 703. a. 59. b. & 704. a. b. & 705. a. b. & 706. a. b. & 711. a. b. & 712. a. b. & 713. a. b. & 714. a. b. & 715. a. b. & 716. a. b. & 717. a. b. & 718. a. b. & 719. a. b. & 720. a. b. & 731. a. b.
How Gods VVorkes are to be reuerenced. 87. a. 34. & 619. b. 45.
God VVorketh after two ſortes towards vs, to the end we ſhould call vpon him. 529. b. 50.
VWhat is ment by mens own VVorkes and how God withdraweth them from them. 586. b. 1
God may rightfully reiect the VVorkes euen of the regenerate 45. b. 49.
If we haue endeoured to followe Gods will, and too ſubmit our felues therunto our workes are acceptable before him 527. b. 10.
Gods accepting of our imperfect VVorkes ought to incourage vs to do well 744. a. 65. b.
VWhat is too bee conſidered in all our VVorkes 527. a. 7.
VVorkemanship.
How we are tud to bee Gods VVorkemanshippe. 251. a. 20.
VVorld and VVorldinges
VWherof the world was made. 577. b. 2
The VVorld is governed by Gods providence and not by fortune. 14. a. 64
Vpon what condicions we are placed in this VVorld. 382. b. 30 & 514. b. 58.
God will not haue our mindes tyed to the thinges of his VVorld. 476. b. 20.
The end of our being in this VVorld. 76. b. 3.
VWith what condicion wee holde all worldly thinges. 31. b. 14.
VVorldings & vnbeleuers preſume vpon their owne power 502.
The wretched VVorld is beguiled with riche men, and of great eſtate 480. a. 20.
Vee muſt be alwayes ready and willing too forgoe the VVorld and all worldly thinges. 31. a. 28. b. 1. & 476. b. 20.
VVrath.
Of Gods VVrath how heauie it is and how much to be accompted of. 256. a. 27.

Gods VVrath is a fire 375. b. 21.
For what caule & too what end, GOD maketh vs too teele his VVrath. 664. a. 7. b.
The feeling of Gods VVrath through his ly druech away all mirth, and quietneſſe. 589. b. 10.
There is no affliction too be compared with the feeling of Gods VVrath. 126. a. 9.
The greatneſſe of Gods VVrath, and in what wife we ſhould bethinke vs of it. 588. b. 6. & 589. a. b. & 590. a.
The mightie power and righteousneſſe of Gods VVrath, and how we maye applie the ſame to our comfort and inſtruction. 650. b. 17. & 651. a. b.
VVretchedneſſe.
Our VVretchedneſſe is a great beauty too gods goodnes & meicy. 133. b. 10.
VVrong.
God cannot vſe VVrong or crueltie towards vs. 178. a. 45.
God doth not men any wrong in puniſhing or afflicting them. 611. b. 59. & 612. b. 30. 64 & 613. a. & 622. b. 47. & 624. a. 28. & 630. a. 66.
It is for our profite that God ſuffieth men to do vs VVrong. 578. a. 63.
To do VVrong to our neighbour, is to warre againſt God. 282. a. 20.

VVylneſſe.

VVylneſſe & wicked practiſes muſt be farre fro the children of God. 89. b. 18
VVynde.
The VVyndes are Gods meſſengers. 27. a. 28. 64.

Y

Youth, and Youngmen.

VWhat our Youth is 75. b. 25
A deſcription of the behauiour of the Youth in theſe dayes. 564. a. 44.
Youth is become altogether deucliſh. 494. a. 5.
VWherefore Youth is moſt giuen to ſin. 245. b. 24.
The deuilty of Yong men in preſence of their elders. 564. a. 55.
In what caes Yong men may put forth themſelues before their elders. 565. a. 24. & 505. a. 46.

Z

Zeale and Zelouſneſſe.

Men ought too bee Zealouſe in the defence of Gods truth 572. b. 16.
VWith what Zeale a Chriſtian ought to defend God and godly matters. 652. a. 59. b. & 653. a
VWhere modeſtie is not, ther Zeale and deſirouſneſſe to ſpeake are to be diſcommended. 564. a. 19.
Zelouſneſſe ought to be guided by reaſon. 563. b. 64.
Moſes, called away with zealousneſſe. 53. b. 57
P

FINIS.

Faultes escaped.

The first number signifieth the Page. The letter a. the first colunne, and b. the second colunne of the page. The second number the lines, after which followeth the correction.

Page 4. b. 51. put out, VWhen. 6. b. 4 4. put out, the period or prick. 7. a 62. read, not acquainted. 7. b. 19. and 28. for Scent read Sent. 10. a. 1. for Preisse read Freace. 10. b. 57. read, First lecture. 12. b. 7. for care, read Cace, and put out which. 13. b. 48. read As he may. 13. b. 56. for Of read If. 17. b. 1 4. for Owt, reade Not. 19. b 8. for wherof, reade therof. 21. b. 57. for is, read was. 22. b. 56. for Not read But. 24. b. 30. for Thus, read That. 25. a. 16. for Israel, read Imaell. 26. b. 57 for Carde reade Corde. 27. b. 44. for Thus reade This. 28. a. 32. for the full point make a dubble poynt. 34. b. 1. reade sayd that God. 34. b. 4. put out As. 34. b. 27. for Ayme reade Ame. 35. a 8. reade, selues contented with, &c. 35. b. 3 & 4. put out these words, As his assaying of vs hath bin the more honorable. 36. b. 36. reade, wee may bee. 37. a. 16. put out And. 37. a. 26. reade, to indeuer. 37. b. 5 4. for get in, reade gayne. 72. a. 57. for add reade and. 74. a 50. for confirmable reade conformable. 75. b. 57. in steed of the comma make a period. 76. a 67. for say, read see. 76. b. 65. for sepiyeth reade relyeth. 88. a. 13. for woord reade woode. 88. in the xi. verse of the text, for dispayred, reade dispyed. 92. a. 66. for Negleage reade Neghgence. 95. a. 5 for Sinne reade same. 138. a. 8. reade, it is his will. 157. a. 1. reade, or draweth, &c. 163. a. 39. for guydeth reade guyyed. 194. b. 12. reade, too inlighten. 214. in the nyneth verse of the text, for kooweth, reade knoweth. 240 above in the Tyle, for xlix. reade li. Sermon. 365. a. 24. put out, he sheweth. 373. b. 50 for which, reade with. 377. a. 11 put out to. 413. a. 37. reade, as though it were. 414. a. 6. for Gods, read God. 432. a. 13. for hee, read wee. 465 a 37. for asffliction, reade affliction. 466. a 17. for faythfull, reade faythlesse. 466 b 33. for preferue, reade preferre. 469. b 43. for prosperitie, reade posteritie. 472. a 45. for eva, reade yea. 472. b 10. for sobeit, reade howbeit. 476. a 52. put out, holic. 476. b 33. put out these wordes, we discern not a man from a stone. 493. a 68. for searingron, read Sear. ng yron. 507. b 38. for opey, reade openly. 57. b 39. for ananced, reade aduanced. 513 b 20. for if, reade of. 514 b 32. for woldly, reade worldly. 518. b 59 for confideliion, reade consideration. 530. a 62 put out lod. 531. b 30, reade zelous to cut off. 557. a 55 for our, reade or. 562. b 30 for skorne, reade storne. 565. a 66 for holyyest, reade holy Ghost. 565. b 65 for Snales, reade Snayles. 566. a 16 for bindeth, reade bendeth. 569 a 65 for in that, reade that in. 570. b 3. for in, reade is. 571. a 60 for boyled, reade boyleth. 572. b 25 for hee, reade is. 573. a 41 for our reade or. 574. a 50 put out to. 574. b 1 for ouerfrank reade ouerrank. 584. b 3 & 4 reade thus, to be preached vnto vs: and therefore we must not looke too bee taught. 586. b 17 for good, reade God. 588. a 5 for self, reade selues. 589. a 13 put out vt. 589. b 46. for as, reade and. 596. b 27 for may, reade way. 598. a 65 for voyden, reade wyden. 598. b 4 for soone, reade seene. 599. b 23 for ou, read our. 601. b 39 for his, reade this. 601. b 42 for one, reade once. 605. b 12 for it, reade is. 605. b 26 for but onely, reade not onely. 608. b 50 put out their. 610. b 37 for dispyzing, reade dispozing. 611. in the xii. verse of the Text, for naught, reade noughr. 612. b 23 for gnasheth, reade gnashed. 612. b 61 and 65 for naught, reade nought. 614. a 28 reade to the. 616. b 25 for and, reade as. 617. b 27. for curse, reade course. 618. b 5 for in, reade is. 619. a 56 for wee, reade they. 621. b 18 for about, reade about. 621. b 51 put out as. 623. a 2 for haue, reade had. 624. a 16 for bury, reade buryeth. 626. a 49 for which, reade with. 626. a 53. for with, reade which. 630. b 53 for applyable, reade a plyable. 634. a 59 for sayd, reade say. 635. a 51 put out J. 635. a 58 for they, reade their. 639. a 57 reade there and could. 640. a 55 put out that. 640. b 59 for see, reade say. 643 a 36 put out that. 643. in the ix. verse of the text, put out not. 644. b 65 for it, reade in, & 66. for in, reade it. 645. a 29. for had, reade haue. 646. b 31 for haue, reade hate. 649. a 58. for pleasable, reade peasable. 651. a 39. for oure, reade his. 673. a 33 for streamings, reade steamings. 676. a 41 for heare, reade hart. 676. a 65 for cleaueth, reade clyueth. 680. a 22 for frowardnesse reade forewardnesse. 680. b 67 for as, reade a. and for a, reade as. 684. a 53 for it, reade he. 686. b 46 reade doone much. 689. b 64. reade, we haue herd the. y 690. a 56. for reumpets, reade trumpets. 691. b 50 for eyther, reade neyther. 694. b 22. and 23 reade men take vpon them. 695. a 13 for his. reade this. 696. a 10 for made, reade mad. 698. a 27 reade, men too iudge. 699. a 13 reade, before your tymes. 699. b 52 for bee, reade see. 700. a 60 for detyre, reade desyret. 700. b 32 for godly, read goodly. 704. a 22 reade, which we haue. 710. a 19 for whole, reade whore. 712. a 39 for men, reade a man. 715. in the tenth verse of the text, for extercioner, reade extorcioner. 720. b 53 for thus, reade this. 724. a 20 for eue, reade euen. 725. a 39 for and yea, reade yea and. 737. h 16 for God, reade Gods. 738. a 33 for quir, reade quier. 739. b 33 for step not, reade not step. 740. b 4 for ought, reade aught. 740. b 66 put out it. 743. b 24 for present, reade preuent. 744. a 4 for finednesse, reade feynednesse. 744. b 22 for may, reade way. 746. in the second lynce of the xi. verse in the text, for eate, reade ate. 751. b 4. for hundred, reade hundredth.

The first Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

There vvas in the lande of Hus a man named Iob, sounde and vpright, fearing God, and vvithdrawvng himselfe from euill.

THE BETTER TO profit our sel-ues by that which is contained in this present booke, first and formost it behoueth vs to vnderstande the summe of it. For the storie here written, sheweth vs howe we be in Gods hande, and that it lyeth in him to determine of our lyfe, and to dispose of the same according to his good pleasure: and that it is our dutie to submit our selues vnto him with al humbleness and obedience: and that it is good reason, that we shoulde bee wholly his, bothe to liue and dye: and specially that when it pleaseth him to lay his hand vpon vs, although we perceiue not for what cause he doth it, yet we should glorify him continually, acknowledging him to be iust and vpright, and not to grudge against him, nor fall to struing with him, assuring our selues that we shal always be vanquished in pleading against him. So then, the thing that we haue briefly to beare in mynde in this storie, is, that God hath suche a soueraintie ouer his creatures, as he may dispose of them at his pleasure: and that when he sheweth any rigour which we think straunge at the first blushe, yet notwithstanding we must holde our peace, and not grudge, but rather confesse that he is rygh-tuous, and wayt till he shewe vs wherefore he chastizeth vs.
And heerewithall we haue to beholde the patientnesse of the man that is sette heere before oure eyes, according as Saint Iames exhorteth vs. For when God sheweth vs that we ought to beare all the miseries that he shall send vpon vs: wee can well asoorde to confesse that it is oure duetic so to doo: but yet therewithall wee alledge oure owne fraytie, and wee beare oure selues in hande, that that ought to serue for our excuse. VVherfore it is good for vs to haue suche examples, as shewe vnto vs how there haue bene other men as fraile as we, who neuertheless haue resisted temptations, and continued stedfastly in obedience vnto God, although he haue scourged them euen with extremitie. Thus haue we here an excellent mirrour. More-ouer, we haue to consider not only the patience of Iob: but also the issue of it, as Sa'inct Iames sayth. For had Iob continued in miserie: albeit that he had had more than an Angelicall strength in himselfe, yet had that bene no happie issue. But when we see he was not disappointed of his hope, and that he found grace, bicause he humbled himselfe before God: Vpon the sight of suche an issue we may conclude, that there is nothing better, than to submit our selues vnto God, and to suffer peaceably whatsoeuer he sendeth vs, vntill he deliuer vs of his owne mere goodnesse. And herewithall (besides the storie) we haue to consider the doctrine comprised in this booke. That is to wit, concerning those that came vnto Iob vnder pretence to comfort him, and yet tormteded him much more than did his owne miseryes: and concerning the answers that he vsed to repulse their checks, wherwith it seemed they wold haue daunted him. But first of all, as in respect of our afflictions, we haue to note, that although God send them, and that they pro-ceede from him: yet notwithstanding the diuell also stir-reth them vp in vs, according as S. Paule telleth vs, that we haue war against the spiritual powers. For when the diuell hath once kindled the fire, he hath also his bellows: that is to say, he syndeth men that are fit to pricke vs always forward, bothe to feede the euill, and to encrease it. So then we shall see howe Iob (besides the miserie that he endured) was also tormented bothe by his frendes and by his wyfe, and (about all) by suche as came to tempt him spiritually.

For I call it a spirituall temptation, not onely when we be smitten and afflicted in our bodies: but also when the diuel commes to put a toy in our head, that God is our deadly enimie, and that it is not for vs to resorte any more vnto him, but rather to assure our selues, that hencefoorth hee will not shew vs any mercie. See wher vnto al the discourse tended which Iobs frendes layd afore him. It was to make him belecue, that he was a man forsaken of God, and that he deceiued himself in imagining that God would be mercifull vnto him. Surely these spirituall battelles are farre more harder to be borne, than all the myseryes and aduersities that we can suffer by any persecution. And yet dothe God let Sathan runne so farre vpon the bydle, that he also bringeth his seruants with him, who giue vs suche assaults, as wee see Iob hath endured. Marke well this for a speciall point. But herewithall we haue further to marke, that in al this disputation, Iob maynteineth a good case, and con-trarywyse his aduersaries maynteyne an euill case. And yet it is more, that Iob maynteyning a good quarell, did handle it ill, and that the other setting forth an vniust matter, did conuey it well. The vnderstanding of this, will be as a key to open vnto vs all this whole booke. Howe is it that Iob maynteyneth the good case? It is in that hee knoweth, that God dothe not euer punishe menne according to the measure of their sinnes, but hath his secrete iudgementes, whereof he maketh not vs priuie, and therefore that it behoueth vs to wayte till he reuele vnto vs for what cause he dothe this or that. Thus is he in this whole discourse perswaded, that God doth not always punish me according to the measure of their sinnes: and therevpon assureth him selfe, that hee is not a man reiected of God, as they would make him to belecue. Beholde heere a good and true case, notwithstanding that it be ill handled. For Iob raungeth here out of his boundes, and vsesh such excessiue and outrageous talke, that in manie poyntes he seemeth a desperate person. And specially he so chafeth, as it seemeth that he would euen resist God. Thus may ye see a good case mishandled. But on the contrarie part, they that vndertake the euill case (that is to wit, that God doth alwayes punishe men according to the measure of their sinnes, haue goodly and holie sentences, and there is nothing in their whole talk which would not entice vs to receyue it as if the holy Ghooste himselfe had vttered it. For it is playne truthe: they be the groundes of religion: they treate of Gods prouidence: they treate of his iustice: they treate of mennes sinnes. Thus see wee a doctrine whiche wee must receyue without gaynsaying: and yet the drift of it is euill, namely for that these men labour thereby to cast Iob into dispaire, and to drowne him altogether. But heerby wee see, that when we haue a sure grounde, it behoareth vs to looke that wee buylde vpon it in such wyse, as all thyngs bee answerable therevnto. according as Saint

Luc. 5. 11.

Eph. 6. 12.

Paule sayeth of himselfe. that he builded well, forasmuche as he founded the Church vpon the pure doctrine of Iesus Christ, and therefore that it hath such a conformitie in it, as those that come after him, shall not make any other foundation, eyther of chaffe, or of stulble, or of any other brittle stuffe: but haue a good foundation, stedfast, and substantiall, readie layd to their hande. Likewise in our whole lyfe we haue to looke vnto this poynt: namely that if wee be grounded vpon good and rightfull reason, it behoueth eche one of vs to stande vpon his garde, that he reele not, ne wauer not one way or other. For there is nothing easier than to marre a good and rightfull matter, so sinfull is oure nature, as wee fynde by experience at all tymes. God of his grace may giue vs a good case: and yet we may bee so stinged by our enemies, that we can not holde oure selues within our boundes, nor simply followe that whiche God hath enioyned vs, without adding of som trick of our own. Seing then that we be so easly caryed away: we ought the rather to pray vnto God, that when we haue a good case, he himselfe will vntersafe to guyde vs in all singleness by his holie spirit, so as we may not passe the boundes, whiche he hath set vs by his worde. Herewithall also we be put in mynde, not to applie Gods truth to any euill vse. For in so dooing we dishonour it: lyke as these men doe heere, who although they speake holily (as wee haue shewed already, and as wee shall see more fully hereafter) are notwithstanding but traytours to God. For they corrupte Gods truth, and abuse it falsly, applying that thing to an euill end, which of it selfe is good and rightfull. So then, whensoever God giueth vs the knowledge of his woord, let vs learne to receiue it with such reuerence, as our receiuing of it may not be to deface good things, nor to sette a colour vpon euill things, as oftentimes those that bee most sharpwitted and cunning, doo ouerhoote themselues, and abuse the knowledge that God hath giuen them, vnto deceyt and naughtinesse, turning all thinges to profit vnto euill, in suche wyse as they doo nothing but snare themselues. Considering therefore how all men are giuen to suche infirmitie: it standeth vs so muche the more on hand, to pray God to giue vs the grace to applie his word to suche vse as he hath ordeyned it: that is to wit, to purenesse and simplicitie. And thus ye see what wee ought to consider in effecte. But now that we vnderstande what is in this booke: we muste laye foorth these matters more at length, in suche sort as the things that wee haue but lightly touched, may be layd forth at large according to the processe of the historie. It is sayde, that There was a man in the lande of Hus, named Iob, a sound and vpright man, and fearing God, and withdrawing himselfe from euill. We knowe not, neyther can we guesse in what tyme Iob liued: sauing that a man may perceiue he was of great antiquitie: howbeit that some of the Iewes haue ben of opinion, that Moyse was the author of this booke: and that hee did set it as a looking glasse before the people, to the intente that the childre of Abrahā (of whose race he himself came) might knowe that God had shewed fauour to others that were not of the same line, and therupon be ashamed if they themselues walked not purely in the fear of god, seing that this man (which had not the mark of Gods couenant, nor was circumcised, but was a Painim) had behaued himself so well. But forasmuch as this is not certaine: wee must leaue it in suspence. Neuertheless let vs take that whiche is out of all doubt: that is to wit, that the holie ghoste hath endited this booke, to the ende that the Iewes shoulde knowe howe God hath had people to serue him, albeit that they haue not bene separated out from the rest of the worlde: and that although they had not the signe of circumcison, yet notwithstanding they walked in all purenesse of conuersation. By the knowledge wherof, the Iewes haue had occasion to be so muche the more diligent to keepe the lawe of God: and sith he had vntersafed them suche fauour and prerogatiue, as to gather them oute from among all other strange nations, they ought to dedicate themselues wholly vnto him. Also a man may perceiue by the booke of Ezechiel, that the name of Iob was renoumed amōg the people of Israel. For in his. xiiiij. chapter we see it is said, that if Noe, Iob, & Daniel wer amōg the people that shuld perish, they should saue no mens lyues but their owne, & al the rest of the people should be destroyed. See howe the Prophet speaketh of these three men, as of suche as were knowne and renoumed among the Iewes, as I haue touched already. And therby we see what the intent of the holie ghost is: namely that the Iewes shuld haue a mirror and pattern whereby to knowe, howe they ought to keepe the doctrine of saluation that was giuen vnto them, seing that this man whiche was of a strange nation, had so kepte himselfe in such puritie. And that is the chiefe thing that wee haue to remember concerning the name that is sette downe here, when he sayeth that he was of the land of Hus. True it is, that some men doe place this land far eastward. Neuertheless in the fourth chapter of the Lamentations of Ieremie, the same word Hus is put for a part of Edom. We know that the Edomites are descended of Esau: and true it is that they also had circūcison. Howbeit forasmuche as they were strayed away from Gods church, they had it no more as the signe of his couenāt. Therefore if we take Iob to haue ben of this land of Hus, then was he an Edomite, that is to saye, of the lyne of Esau. And we know how the Prophet Malac. 14. 4 saith, that although Esau and Iacob were natural brethren, borne bothe at one burthen: yet God of his mere goodness choze Iacob, reiecting Esau, and cursing him with all his whole linage. Lo how the Prophet in speaking to magnifie Gods mercie towards the Iewes, telleth them that he choze them not for any worthinesse that was in their persons, cōsidering that he had reiected Iacobs eldest brother, to whom the birthright belonged, and had chozen him that was the yonger and inferior. So then, although that this mā was borne of Esaus line: yet notwithstanding we see howe soundly he liued, & how he serued god not only by vpright cōuersation & equitie amōg men: but also in pure religion, which he defiled not with the idolatries and superstitions of the infidels. As touching the name of Iob, some interpret it to signifie weeping or wayling. And other some take it for an vtter enemie, not suche a one as he hateth, but such a one as is as it were a white for men to shoot at. There is no cause why we shuld dout whether this man (whose cōtrey is so marked out, & whose name is expressed) were or no, or lyued or no, or whether the thinges that are written here, did come to passe or no: so as we should think it to be but a tale contriued, as if a man should vnder a counterfayte name sette oute some thyng vntoo vs that was neuer doone. For I haue alreadye alledged the recorde of Ezechiel, and also of Sainct Iames, who shewe right well that there was a Iob in deede. And further, seing that the storie it selfe declareth it, wee can not in anye wyse deface the thyng whiche the holie Ghoste meante to vtter so precysely. As for the resydue, wee haue too marke, that in that tyme, although the worlde were falne away from the true seruyng of God, and from pure Religion: yet notwithstanding there was still farre more soundnesse by a great deale, than there is at this day, specially in the papacie. And in dede we see, that in Abrahams time Melchisedech had Gods church and sacrifices which were without any defilement. And so albeit that the more parte of the world was wrapped in manyfolde erroures, and false and wicked imaginations: yet notwithstanding, God had reserved some little seede to himselfe, and he had always some that that were hild still vnder the pure truth, yea and which waited continually when God should stablish his church, and choose out one people, (that is to wit the offspring of Abraham) to the end they might knowe that they were picked out from the rest of the whole worlde. But verie true it is, that Iob liued after this tyme, howbeit that the Church of god was not then so well established as it was afterward. For we know that while the children of Israel liued in Ægypt, it was like that all shuld haue come to nought. And specially we see to what an afterdeale they were come in the end

Exod. 1. c. 16. when Pharao commaunded that their menchildren shuld be killed: and in the wildernesse where it seemed that god had reiected them. VVhen they were come into the countrey of Canaan, they had greate battels agaynste their enemies, and specially the seruice of God and his tabernacle were not yet there so well appointed as was requisite. God therefore hauing not yet settled an apparaunt state of the Church, would there shuld alwayes remaine some smal seedes of it among the Paynims, to the intent he might be worshipped: & that was also to conuince those that are turned aside out of the right way like Paynims: for Iob alone was Hbr. 11. b. enough to condemne a whole countrey. Noe also condemned the whole world (as the Scripture sayth) because he hild himself alwayes in purenesse, and walked as before God, at such time as euery man had forgotten him, and all menne were gone astray in their owne superstitions. Heere then is Noe iudge of the whole worlde, to condemne the vnbeleuers and rebelles. As muche is to be sayd of Iob, who hath condemned all the people of that countrey: in that he hath serued God purely, and the residue were full of idolatrie, shamefull dedes, and many errors. And this came to passe, because they hild scorne to know the true and liuing God, and how and after what sort it was his will to be honored. So great regard hath God alwayes had (as I haue sayde) to make the wicked and the vnbeleuers alwayes vnexcusable. And for this cause it was his will, that there shoulde alwayes be some men that should folow the things that he had shewed to the anciēt fathers. Such a one was Iob, as the scripture telth vs, & as this present story sheweth ful wel, who serued God purely, and liued vprightly among men. It is 6. 7. sayd, that He was a sound man. This word Sound in the scripture is taken for a playnnesse, when there is no poynthe of fayning, couerfaying, or hypocrisie in a man, but that he sheweth himself the same outwardly that he is inwardly, & specially when he hath no starting holes to shift himself from God, but layeth open his heart, and all his thoughts and affections, so as hee desireth nothing but to consecrate and dedicate himself wholly vnto God. The sayde worde hath also bene translated perfect, as well by the Greekes as by the Latins. But for as muche as the woorde perfect, hath afterwarde bene misconstrued: it is much better for vs to vse the worde Sound. For manie ignorant persones, not knowing howe the sayde perfection is too bee taken, have thoughte thus: Beholde heere a man that is called perfect, and therefore it foloweth, that it is possible for vs to haue perfection in oure selues, euen during the tyme that wee walke in this presente life. But they deface the grace of God, whereof wee haue neede continually. For euen they that haue liued moste vprightly, muste haue recourse to Gods mercie: and except their sinnes be forgiven them, and that God vphold them, they must needs all perishe. So then, although that they whiche haue vsed the woorde perfect, haue ment well: yet notwithstanding for as muche as there haue ben some that haue wrested it too a contrarie sense, (as I haue sayd) lette vs kepe still the word Sound. Then looke vpon Iob, who is called Sound. And how so: It is because there was no hypocrisie nor dissimulation, nor any doublenesse of heart in him. For when the scripture meaneth to sette downe the vice that is contrarie to this vertue of Soudnesse: it sayth Hart and Hart, meaning therby a double heart. Let vs marke then, that first of all this title is attributed vnto Iob, to shewe that he had a pure and simple mind, that he bare not two faces in one whoo, nor serued God by halues, but laboured to giue himselfe wholly vnto him. True it is that as nowe we can not be so founde as to attayne to the marke as were to bee wished. For as touching those that follow the right way, although they goe on forwarde limping: yet are they so launc, that they dragge their legges and their wings after them. The case then standeth so with vs, so long as wee bee wrapped in this mortall bodie, that vntill suche tyme as God haue quite discharged vs of all the miseries wherevnto we be subiect: there shall neuer be any perfecte soundnesse in vs, as I haue sayde afore. But yet for all that, it behoueth vs neuerthelessse to come to the sayd playnnesse, and to giue ouer all counterfaitnesse and leasing. And further, lette vs note, that the true holynesse beginneth within vs, infomuche that if wee shewe all the fayrest countenances in the worlde before men, and that our lyfe be so well guided that euery man shal commende vs: yet if we haue not this playnnesse and soundnesse before God, al is right noughte. For it behoueth that the fountayne bee fyrste pure, and afterwarde that the freames that runne oute of it bee pure also. Otherwysse the water may well bee cleere: and yet neuerthelessse bee bitter, or else haue some other filthie corruption in it. Therefore it behoueth vs to begin alwayes with this text, That God will be serued in spirite, and in truth: for he is a spirit, and he regardeth the truth of the heart, as it is sayd in the fifth of Hieremie. Then ought we to learne first and formoste, to frame our hearts to the obeying of God. For after that Iob hath bene reported to haue ben found, it is also sayd of him that He was vpright. This vprightnesse is ment of the lyfe that he led, whiche is as it were the frute of the said roote which the holie ghost had planted afore. Iob then had an vpright and soud hart. For his life was simple, that is to say, he walked and liued among his neybars, without hurting of any person, without doing any wrong or trouble to any bodie, without setting of his mind to any guyle or naughtinesse, and without seeking his owne profit by the hindrance of other folks. VVe see now what this vprightnesse importeth, whiche is added in this place. And hereby wee be admonished, to haue an agreeable state betweene oure hearte and oure outward senses. True it is (as I haue sayde afore) that we may well withhold our selues from yldoing, & that we may wel haue a fayre shewe before men: but that shall bee nothing, if ther be any hypocrisie or couert dissimulation before god, when it commeth to the roote that is within the hearte. VVhat must we do then? VVe must begin at the foresaid poynthe, as I haue told you afore: and then to haue perfecte soundnesse, it behoueth that our eyes, our hands, our feete, our armes, and our legges be answering thervnto: so as in our whole life we may see that our will is to serue God, and howe that it is not in wayne that wee pretende a meaning to keepe the same soundnesse within. And heere ye maye see why Saincte Paule also exhorte the Galathians too walke after the spirite, if they liue after the spirite: as if he should saye. Verily it behoueth that the spirite of God dwell in vs and gouerne vs. For it is to no purpose to haue a gay life that pleaseth men, and is had in great estimation, vnlesse we be kept by the grace of God. But what? It behoueth vs to walk: that is to say, it behoueth vs to shew in effect, & by our work, how the spirit of god reigneth in our myndes. For if our hands be stained with robberie, with crueltie, or with other annoyances: if the eyes be caried with leud & vnchast lokes, with coueting other mens goods, with

Iob. 4. c. 2. 1.
Hieron. 5. c. 1.
Gal. 5. d.
 A.ij. pride

pride, or with vanitie: or if the feete (as the scripture sayth) be swift to do euill: therby we well declare, that our hart is full of naughtinesse and corruption. For it is neither the feet nor the hands, nor the eyes that guide theselues: the guiding of them cometh of the mind & of the heart. VVherfore let vs endeuer to haue the said agreablenesse which the Scripture sheweth vs, when it sayth, that Job hauing this soundnesse and plain meaning, did also liue vprightly, that is to say was couersant among his neybons without any anoying of them, & without seeking of his own peculiar profit, & kept an euen hand with al the world. Also ye see the reason why God proueth whether we serue him faithfully or no: It is not for that he hath nede of our seruice, or of any thing that we can do: But bicause that when we deale well with oure neybons, so as we kepe our faithfulness toward al men, according as nature it self teacheth vs: in so doing we yeld assurance that we feare God. VVe see many whiche beare the face of verie zelous Christians, so long as it is but to dispute, and to hold long talke, and to beare men in hand that they study to serue God, and to honor him: and yet for all that, as soone as they haue to do with their neybons, a man shal perceiue what they haue in their harts. For they seeke their owne aduantage, and make no conscience to rake to theselues, and to beguile folk whē they haue them in their danger, by what meanes soeuer it be. Now then there is no dout, but that those which seke their owne aduantage and profit, are hypocrites, and that their hart is corrupt: and how earnest christiāns soeuer they seme outwardly, God bewrayeth that they haue nothing but dung and poyson in their hearts: And why so? For looke where soundnesse is, there must nedes be vprightnesse also: That is to say, If the affection be pure within, then wil it folow, that when we haue to deale with men, we shal procure the welfare of euery man, in such wise as we shal not be giuen to our selues and to our priuate comoditie, but shall haue that indifferencie whiche Iesus Christ auoucheth to be the rule of life, and the whole summe of the law and the prophets: namely that we do not that thing to any other man, which we wold not haue done to our selues. So then, we perceiue that by this comendation of Job many men are condemned, forasmuch as the holy Ghost declareth, that this man had not onely a soundnesse before god, but also an vprightnesse and plain dealing among men. This plain dealing which he speaketh of, shal serue to giue sentence of damnation vpon al such as are full of maliciousnesse, and vpon all suche as passe not to snatche and rake to themselues the goods of other men, or which passe not to spoyle other men of their liuings. This sorte of men are condemned by this present texte. For it foloweth, that He feared God, yea, that hee was a man which feared God, and withdrew himselfe from euill. Now seing that Job had had the prayse of keeping right and equitie among men: it behoued him also to walk before God: for without that, the rest is nothing worth. True it is (as I haue said afore) that we can not liue with our neybons to do harme to none, and to doo good to al: vnlesse we haue an eye vnto God. For as for the that folow their own nature, albeit that they be indued with goodly vertues, (for so will it seeme) yet are they ouertaken with self loue, & it is nothing else but vaingloriousnesse, or some other such respect which thrusteth them forward: in so much that all the shew of vertue which appered in them is marred therby. But although wee can not haue the sayde vprightnesse without the fearing of God: yet notwithstanding, the seruing of God, and the regarding of our neybons ar two feveral things, in likewise as god hath distinguished them in his law, at such time as it pleased him to haue them writte out in the two tables. Then let vs beare in mind, that like as heretofore vnder the worde vprightnesse, the holy Ghoste ment to shewe after what maner Job liued among men: so also when he saith that Job feared God, he meaneth to set out the religion that was in him. And hereby wee be warned, that if we will frame our life aright, we must firste haue an eye vnto god, & then to our neybons. I say we must haue an eye vnto God, to giue our selues ouer vnto him, & to yeld him his due honor: And we must haue an eye to our neybons, to discharge our selues of our dutie towards the, according to that we be comaunded to helpe them, and to liue in equitie & vprightnesse: and finally (forasmuch as god hath knit vs eche to other) that euery man study to imploye his whole abilitie to the comon comoditie of al. Thus ye see how the case standeth with vs in hauing of an eye bothe to God and mē, for the wel ording of our life: for he that looketh on himselfe, is sure that he hath nothing but vanitie in him. For if a mā wer able to order his life in such wise, as he might seeme faultlesse to the world, & yet notwithstanding, God disliked him: what shal he gain by his ouerlaboring of himself to walk in such wise as al men might magnify him? As to Godward he is nothing else but vnclennesse, & nedes must this sentence whiche is written in S. Luke be verified, namely that the thing which is most high and excellēt before men, is abhominable before God. Then let vs beare in minde, that we can neuer order oure life as we ought to doe, except we haue our eyes fastened vpon God and our neybour. Vpon God: and wherfore? To the ende we may know, that we be created to his glorie, to serue him and to worship him. For although he haue no nede of vs as our neybons haue, nor is either the better or the worse for our seruice: yet is it his will to haue reasonable creatures which shuld know him, and in knowing him, yeeld him that whiche belongeth vnto him. Furthermore, wheras he speaketh of the feare of God: we haue to vnderstand, that it is not a slauish feare (as men terme it:) but it is so termed in respect of the honour which we owe him, for that he is our father and maister: Do we feare God? Then is it certaine that we desire nothing but to honour him and to be wholly his. Doe we know him? That must be in such wyse as he hath vttered himselfe: that is to wit, that he is our maker, our maynteyner, and one that hath shewed suche fatherly goodnesse towards vs, that we of dutie ought to be as children towards him, if wee will not bee vtterly vnthankfull. Also it behoueth vs to acknowledge his dominion and superioritie ouer vs, to the end that euery of vs yeelding him his due honoure, may learne to please him in all respectes. Thus you see, how that vnder this fearing of God, here is comprehended all religion: that is to wit, all the seruice and honoure whiche the creatures owe vntoo their God. And surely it was a ryght excellent vertue in Job to feare God after that maner, considering howe the whole world was turned asyde from the righte waye. VVhen we heare thys, when we perceyue that although we liue among the veryest naughtypackes in the whole worlde, wee shall bee vtterly vnexcusable, if wee bee not giuen to the seruing of God as wee ought to bee: And this is well to be marked, bycause many men are of opinion, that when they are among the thornes, God will holde them acquit and excused: and that if afterwarde they corrupt themselues, (or as the Prouerbe sayeth) hold with the Hare, and hunt with the Hounde, (whyche is all one) God will pardon them. But contrarywise looke vppon Job, who is called a man that feared God. In what countreye? It was not in Iewrie, it was not in the Citie of Hierusalem, it was not in the Temple: but it was in a desyled place, in the middes of suche as were vtterly peruerted. Albeit then that hee were among suche people, yet had hee suche stay of himselfe, and liued in such wise, that he walked purely among his neybons, notwithstanding that at that tyme all was full of crueltie, of outrage, of robberie, and of suche other like enormities in that place. Wherevpon we haue to consider, that it shall turne so much to our greater shame, if we on our behalfe haue not a care to keepe our selues pure in the seruice of God, and of our neighbours, seing he giueth vs such occasion as we haue, that is to wit, that Gods word is continually preached vnto vs, that we be exhorted vnto it, and that he refourmeth vs when we haue done amisse. It standeth vs on hande then to giue eare to that which is shewed vs here. And therefore in conclusion let vs marke that which is added here in the text: namely that he withdrew himselfe from euill. For we see that the cause why Job ouercame all lettes and incounters that might hinder him from the seruice of God, and from liuing vprightly among men, was for that he had a stay of himself: for he knew right well, that if he had taken libertie to do like other men, he should haue bene giuen to all vices, so as he should haue bene the enimie of God. Job then walked not so in the feare of God and in such playne dealing and soundnesse, without great store of incounters, or without the Diuels heauing at him to ouerthrow him and to cast him into the filthinesse of the whole world: but he withdrew himselfe from euill, that is to say, he withheld himself. What must we do then? Although we be in the Church of God, yet we see great abundance of euils, and (how soeuer it happeneth) there shall neuer be such plainenesse and purenesse, but we shall be mingled with store of skorners and vnthriftes which are firebronds of hell and deadly plagues to infect all men. Therefore it behoueth vs to be very ware, seing there are so many stumblings blockes and so great loocenesse, whereby to trayne vs forthwith vnto vnthriftinesse. What remedie then? Let vs withdraw our selues from euill: that is to say, let vs fight against such assaults after the example of Job: and when we see abundance of vices and corruptions reigne in the world, albe:

Luc. 16. d. 15

that we be fayne to be intermedled with them, yet let vs not be defiled with them, nor say as commonly men are woont, namely that we must needs do as other men do: but rather let vs take counsell by Iobs exaple to withdraw our selues from euill, and to retyre in such sorte, as Sathan may not be able to make vs to yeelde for all the temptations that he shall cast before vs: but that we may suffer God to clenze vs from all our filthinesse and infection (according as he hath promised vs in the name of Iesus Christ,) vntill he haue pulled vs quite out of the soyle and vncleannesse of this world, to match vs with his Angels, and to make vs parttakers of that endlesse felicitie, for the which we must labour here continually.

Therefore let vs present our selues before the face of our good God, with acknowledgemēt of our sinnes, praying him to giue vs suche feeling, that in acknowledging our owne poorenesse, we may alwaies haue recourse to the remedie that he giueth vs: which is, that he pardoning al our offences, wil so gouerne vs by his holy spirit, that although Satan be named the Prince of the worlde, and haue such a scope among men, that the more parte of them are so peruerted as we see: yet notwithstanding we may not be harried away with them: but rather that our good God will hold vs backe vnder his obeyfance, and that we may know the thing wherevnto we be called, so as we may follow it, and maintayne the brotherlinesse which he hath ordeyned among vs, so linking our selues one with another, as we may desire nothing but to procure the welfare of our neighbours, to the ende we may be settled more and more in his grace which he hath graunted vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, vntill he make vs to receyue the fruite of it in his heauenly glory: and that it may please him to bestow this benefite and grace not onely vpon vs, but also vpon all people and nacions of the earth: &c.

The second Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

2. AND he had seuen sonnes borne vnto him, and three daughters.
3. AND he had a greate substance of Cattell: to wit, seuen thousand Sheepe, three thousand Camelles, fiue hundred yoke of Oxen, fiue hundred shee Asses, and a great household, in somuch that he surmounted all them of the East.
4. AND his Sonnes went and made feasts at their houses, cuery man his day, and they called their three Sisters also to eate and drinke with them.
5. WHEN they had made an end of their feasting, Job sent for his children and sanctified them: and rising vp betymes in the morning, offered sacrifices according to the number of them: for he sayde, It may be that my children haue sinned, and haue not blisfed the Lord in their hartes. And thus did Job cuery day.

Yesterday we heard the prayfes which the holy Ghost gaue vnto Job, not so much for himselfe as for our instruction, to the end we should know how we ought to rule our life: namely that wee walke in singleness of heart, so as there be no peece of counterfeitnesse in vs, and that therewithall our workes also may yeelde witness of the same singleness. And moreover, that we feare God, knowing how it is he to whom we must referre our whole life, and that his honour is the thing that we must giue our selues vnto. And further, that for asmuch as we be continually beset with many stumblings blockes, and the Diuell practizeth to thrust vs out of the right way: we should stande vpon our garde to withdraw our selues from euill, and to recouer our selues vnto God, vntill such time as we be quyte dispatched from all the defilements of the world by death. And now it infeweth in the text, That Job was an exceeding riche man: and a great part of his possessions is specially recyted to vs here. It is no small thing to haue Seuen thousand head of small Cattell, fiue hundred yoke of Oxen, as many shee Asses, and as many Camelles. Lo here a great substance for one man. And therefore it is sayde, He surmounted all them of the East. But anon we shall see wherfore this is reherfed vnto vs. For his patience was so much the more prayseworthis, for that he being bereft of so great goodes, and brought to extreame pouertie, did notwithstanding continue quiet, as if he had lost litle or nothing: See then how God hath so much the better tryed him. But herewithall we haue to consider, what a vertuouse minde was in Job, seing his riches had not blinded him with pryde, nor caused him to set too much by the world, or to discharge himselfe of the seruice of God, as we commonly see that many men by reason of their great riches, become so lostie, that it is vnpossible to tame them, abusing their credite to the oppressing of poore folke: and besides that they be full of crueltie, they be also stately and full of pompe: So that riches are accompanied with manie incōueniences. Therefore it is not in vaine that it is told vs here, that Iob being so riche, had neuerthelesse alwayes persisted in the seruing of God, and helde himselfe in the sayd singleness wherof mention is made here. For by his example the riche men of this worlde are warned of their duetie, whiche is, to take good heed that when God hath put abundance into their handes, they be not entangled by them, according also as the Psalme exhorteth them. And further (according as Saint Paule speaketh to Timothie) that they be not puffed vp with pride, nor put their trust in the transitorie things of this worlde, wherein there is no certaintie: for he that is riche to day, may become poore by too morowe, whensoever it pleaseth God. So then, seeing that the goodes of this worlde are tickle, and that wee maye soone be bereft of them: riche men (sayeth Saint Paule) oughte to take good heed, that they rest not themselves vpon them, nor make an ydoll of them, as though they were sure to possesse them, and enjoy them euer, but must be readie to yeeld them vp. And to be short (according as it is sayd in an other text) such as haue fields and vineyardes, medowes and corne ground, money and wares, must haue a care to vse them in suche sorte, as if they had none at all, so as they may be poore in heart. Thus then we see what we haue to nore vpon this sentence. For least any man might alledge, that it is verie hard to behaue himselfe so purely in the mids of so great riches, considering howe Christ himselfe calleth them thornes: therefore the example of Iob shall condemne all such as keepe not themselves vndefiled, how hardly soeuer it be to be done. It is verie certaine, that a rich man shal haue more adoo to walke in the feare of God, than shall a poore man. And true it is also, that pouertie of it self bringeth store of temptations. For when a man is in necessitie, hee falleth to thinking in himselfe, what shall become of mee? and the diuell thrusteth him forward to distrust. Herevpon he shall be induced to murmur against God, according as we see that marie fal into a rage, and it seemeth to them that God dothe them wrong, and they wot not on which side to turne themselves: whervpon they conclude thus: Siah I can not get my liuyng by my labor without doing other men wrong: I muste take an other waye to the wood. Herevpon they take leaue to rob and reave, and they do manie shrewde turnes, harmes, and damages to their neighbours. Beholde (I praye you) the temptations whiche pouertie bringeth. But if a man make cōparison betweene it and riches: it is certain that the richer sort haue far greater assaults, soasmuch as Satan is euer at their elbowe, to blindfold their eyes, to the ende they should overshoot themselves, and forgetting their state, list vp themselves against God, tye themselves wholly to the world, make a mock of the heauenly lyfe, beare them selves in hande that nothyng can hurt them, abuse their credite in sundry wise, haue regard of nothing, bee lothe to beare any yoke, bee vnwilling to yeelde to any reason, and thinke all other men too base to be in their companie, in so muche that if it were possible for them, they woulde plucke away the lighte of the Sun from the poore, so that finally they beare themselves in hand, that they deserue of good right to be shoaled out, & to be set aside, as it were on a row by themselves. VVe see now the corruptiōs and other infinite miseries that riches bring: and yet there is no excuse for thē that be rich, VVherfore? For here shall Iob be made their iudge afore god, soasmuch as he was not corrupted nor peruerted by the great abundance & quātitie of goods that he had, but alwayes serued God in singleness of heart. But if the rich men be made vnexcusable: let the poorer sort also looke well to themselves. For I haue tolde you already: that it is easyer for a man to walke simply, to whome GOD hath not giuen so greate abundance, than for suche as haue a greater raunge. The case is lyke as if a man were in some little boate and in some small riuer. It is lyke ynough that he might bee tossed, and it is lyke ynough that he might rushe agaynst some stub, or agaynst some bank of the riuer: but he is not in suche daunger, as he that is in a shippe on the middes of the sea, where the waues and stormes are farre more violent. Euen so (say I) stands the case betweene the poore and the rich. For surely so long as wee be in this worlde, we rowe vpon the water, where wee may bee tossed with tempestes, and rushe againste some thing, and euermore be in daunger. Thus are the poore as it were on a little Ryuer: but the ryche are as it were on the myddes of the sea, so as they hardly can scape synkyng in some whirlepoole or other. Nowe then if there be no excuse for the ryche sorte: what shall become of those to whome God giueth the meane to holde themselves in simplicitie? VVe see therefore that here is a generall lesson to serue for all men, as wel greates as small, and that it behoueth eche man to benefit himself by the example that is set here before our eyes. But yet herewithall the vertue of Iob is ryght commendable: for we heare the iudgement of our Lorde Iesu Christe, how it is right hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heauen. Not for that riches do of themselves hinder vs from seruing God as I haue sayde: but it hapneth through our naughtinesse and corruption, that where as it becommeth vs to take occasion to bee drawn vnto God by the benefits which he bestoweth vpon vs, wee bee the further drawne backe from him. VVherfore we see that Iob was a man of wonderfull vertue: seeing that in the midst of such riches, he had not his eyes blyndfolded too conceiue any pride in his hart, so as he should tread other folks vnder his feet, or forget God, or become a dissolute, vaine, and pom-pous person: but hild on his race which he had begon. Lo here the vertue that was commendable in him. And this is done, to the end that if we can not attain to bee full equall with him, yet euery one of vs should looke to himselfe, and goe on forwarde to the marke that is sette afore him. Furthermore wee see also, that riches of themselves are not to be condemned, as some fantastical persons surmise, who hold opinion, that a riche man can not bee a Christian. For let them fynd me any of the pore that may be compared to Iob in this vertue, and then let thē condemne riches. But when a mā shal haue sought throughout all the poore men in the worlde: hardly shal hee fynde one that shal come any thing neere this man. Seeing then that the case is so, lette vs marke that riches of themselves and of their own nature are not to be condemned, and specially that it is a great blasphemie against God, if a man find such fault with riches, that he thinketh the partie which possesseth them, to be vterly mard. For from whence come riches but from God? Therefore when a man condemneth them, hee setteth hymselfe agaynst God. And further, it behoueth vs too marke, that God must nedes work farre more maruelously in a rich man than in a pore man, as I haue sayde afore. For I haue already shewed the difficultie that a man hath to mayntayne himselfe in simplicitie and vpryghtnesse, when hee hath abundance of goodes. Then had God neede to vtter a singular force of his holie Spirit to preserue riche menne from corrupting of themselves. But if a man despyze suche a grace of God, dothe he not lyfte vp himselfe against God? Hereby then wee bee warned, not too condemne Ryches in them selves, lyke also as we see how our Lord Iesus Christ hath shewed vs, by matching the pore & the rich together in the kingdome of

Luke. 16. d. of heauen, when he speaketh of Lazarus in saint Luke.
19. He sayeth there, that the Angels caried Lazarus: For albeit it that he was an outcast among men, and a poore creature of whome no account was made, in somuch that he was forsaken of al men: yet neuerthelesse behold how the An-Gen. 13. b. 6. gels carie his soule into Abrahams bosom. And what was 24. d. 35. this Abraham? A man riche both in cattell and in money, and in houshold, and in all other things sauing houfes and lands, for those were not lawful for him to haue, bicause it Act. 7. 4. 5. behoued him to tary Gods leiture, til he gaue him the land of Canaan to inherite. True it is, that he purchased a burying place, but he had not any inheritance, notwithstanding that his mouables were very greate. Therefore when we sec the soule of Lazarus caried by Angels into the bo-some of Abraham, who is the father of the faithfull: wee perceyue that God of his infinite grace and goodnesse calleth both riche and poore to saluation. And vnto this pur-
1. Tim. 2. b. 4 pose maketh that also which S. Paule sayeth: namely that God wil haue al men to be saued. For he speket of kings and princes, who of ordinarie do missebehaue themselues in their greatnesse, and can not find in their harts to stoupe vnto God: yea it seemeth to themselues that they be no mortall men: and yet God picketh out some of them to himself, and will not haue all to be lost and to perish. Thus ye see what we haue to marke. Yet for all this, the rich me must not flatter themselues, but rather knowe howe they stand as it were vpon yce, where they may soon slide, and that they be as it were among thornes, so as it behoueth them to looke diligently to themselues for being pricked.
Lo howe che one of vs ought to be touched with carefullnesse to comend our selues vnto God, that we may waike according to his will. And vpon this saying, That Iob had seuen sones, and three daughters, Inote howe it doth vs to wit, that God had sent his blissing vpon him, to make him prosper by all meanes. And (as I haue touched heretofore) we shal hereafter better see the cause why al this is expressed, and the intent of the holie Ghost: that is to wit, that it was an incomparable vertue in Iob, to beare patiently Gods taking away of all the things which he had put into his hand. And it is verie wel declared also, how his children behaued themselues, and how he himself also on his part gouerned them in the fear of god. And this is done to the end that we should vnderstand, that when God afflicteth vs, he sheweth by effect, that he can dispose of his creatures at his owne pleasure, and that although we be at our wits ende, and see not the reason why God handleth men so roughly: yet it becommeth vs to cast downe our eyes, and to confesse that he is righteous, and to wayt his leysure, vntil he discover vnto vs the cause why he dispo-seth things so. But now let vs proceede with that which is reherised to vs here. It is sayd, That Iobs children feasted one another day by d. y. euerie one in his turne, and that they cal- led their sisters to beate them companie. True it is, that nature may well suire vp brethren to loue one an other: but yet are men become so euill, as there be very fewe that consider what brotherhood importeth. For the prooffe hereof wee shal see manye brethren that agree lyke cattes and dogges. They be brethren, and yet for all that, they cease not to spite and malice one another, as if one of them woulde eate an other. VVe see then by suche (according as men grow out of kynde into crueltie) that brethren are acquainted with concorde and louingnesse: and although it be not so with all of them: yet is euery man so addicted to himself, as there be verie fewe that loue one an other in such wyse as God teacheth. Thus doth the holie Ghoste set a looking glasse before our eyes, to make vs to beholde
 the good agreemēt and loue that was among Iobs childrē, and specially howe they exercised themselues continually therein, to the ende they would not giue any occasion of euill mistrust one to an other. For the feastes that they made, were to none other end, but to yeld record of their brotherlynesse and agreement. And see how it is said precisely, that they wente to seeke their sisters, to the intente that their frendship might vtter it selfe in all pointes. Behold here a great vertue. Albeit a man may perceiue that Iob feared not that there was any fault in the thing that was ordeined for a good purpose, and to a good ende: yet neuerthelesse we see how he thought in himself euen then that God mighte bee offended in it. Surely this is a verie notable example. And out of all doubt, good agreement and frendship among me, and specially among brethren, is as pleasant a thing vnto God as any can be. VVe heare howe it is sayde in the Psalme: It is a ioyfull thing when brethren agree in one: It is lyke the deawe that falleth downe to giue foyzon and nourishment to the grounde, and lyke the oyle that droppethe downe from Aarons bearde, so as the scente of it was shead oute ouer all his rayment. Lo what two similitudes here be to shewe how God loueth peace and amitie among men, and aboute all things among brethren. They doe vs too vnderstande, that when men embrace one an other with heartie loue,

 it is all one as when the fieldes and herbes receyue nourishment by the deawe of heauen: and also that it is a thyng that yeeldeth a verie sweete sauoure afore God, as a good and acceptable Sacrifyze vnto him, euen lyke the scent of the holie oyle that was poured vpō Aarons head.
 Neuerthelater: this is spoken of such as imbrace one an other after a godly maner. For it may well be, that wicked men shall beare an affection of loue one towardes an other, and they maye peradventure lynke themselues together to accomplishe their appoyntmentes: but all this is naught: frendship must come from god, and go to God.
 And marke here how the name of brotherhood is sette downe, to the ende we shoulde be taught to lifte vp oure eyes vnto God, and to looke vnto him as ofte as there is any question of louing one an other. Furthermore we see here, that the best things in the world may esfoones bee corrupted by the naughtinesse of men: And hereby wee see also what our nature is, euer since Adam sinned: that is to saye, that euer since he ouershot him selfe: hitherto good hath bene turned into euill, notwithstanding that our intent or meanyng be good. As for example: VVen a husbnde loueth his wyfe, or when a father loueth his children, they be good, holie, and commendable thynges:
 and yet neuerthelesse there is not a mā to be found in the whole worlde that loueth his wyfe in suche measure, as nothing may be founde faulte with in his loue, or that lo-ueth his children with so pure and heartie loue: but that there shall alwayes bee some medlie of corruption. And why so? For seing that God hath ordeined, that the man shall loue his wyfe, and that it is precisely sayd, Loue your wyues as youre owne bodies: shall their so dooing be imputed to them for a faulte? Can the good bee turned into euill? Doubtlesse that commeth of oure cursed nature: lyke as one grayne of saite, or one droppe of vine-ger fayleth not to marre a greate deale of wyne: Euen so is it with men, for holding them selues in measure, they haue not their affections so well ruled, as there maye no faulte bee founde in them, or not to bee condemned in manye respectes. Then is it no straunge case, that Iob thoughte in himselfe, that his chylde mighte haue offended God in the thing that of it selfe was good and cō-mendable. Not for that he cōdemmed the feasting of brethren togither, specially sith their making of good cheere one with an other, was to mainteyn theselues in mutual a-mitie. That was not the thing that Iob founde faulte with:

But for asmuch as he was throughly acquaynted with mans infirmitie: he knew it was very harde to keepe measure, so as no vice should be intermedled with it by the way. And therefore he tooke good heede to himself, and sanctified his children. But yet neuertheless we haue further to note, that Iob had well marked and borne away the thing, which experience sheweth vnto vs: namely that in all feasts and banquetts there is some disorder, where-through God is not so wel honored as he ought to be. First of all, in such meetings there will be alwayes some superfluitie of meates, and they that come thither, do for companie sake eate and drinke more than their ordinarie. And hardly could a man thinke of the excesse that is there: in so much that euen the holiest men that feare God best, are ouerseene there. True it is that they play not the gluttons in stuffing of the paſche, nor in cramming themselves like swine, and much lesse wil they be so drunken as to be out of their wits like beaſts: no not so: but so much may be done, as they may somewhat passe measure. And how so: for we see that a man ouerhoothes himselfe in that case ere he be aware. So then we see that some incouenience hapneth in feasts, notwithstanding that they be made for a good cause, and that the intent as well of him that biddeth his frends, as of those that come to keepe him companie, be good. For hardly can it be escaped, but that there shall be some faulte, wherof the very doer himselfe shall not be priuie. And furthermore whē a man is there, what a deale of vain and fond talke shall he haue to hold him withall? VVhere a man ought to eate as in the presence of God, and to be merrie as it were with the Angels: there shall be store of vanities, which shall carie men in suche wyse, as many of the (yea euen of the good men themselves) shall thinke, that they make no good chere, except they disguyse themselves I can not tell howe: There are yet many other euill incoueniēces, wherby we see that God is offended diuers wayes, according as men finde in themselves afterwarde. So then, let vs marke wel, that Iob did not without cause mistrust and doubt least his children had sinned agaynste God, seing they made feastes in such wyse, notwithstanding that they were of the faithful sort, as I haue sayde afore. Now if it so be that where feastes and banquetts are best ruled, yet there is some fault that God misliketh: how is it with them that driue God out of their cōpanie, & frō their table, as men are commonly wont to doo? For if we shall speake of feasting: wherat do men begin? At calling vpon the name of God? Nay, that woulde be thoughte too sad a matter. Therefore the name of God must be buried. Hath a man well suffized his appetite? then is it no tyme to say grace. For it behoueth them to remembre the good chere that they haue made, that is to saye, that they be swine. For if a man make mention of God, it will be thought, that all the pleasure which they haue taken in their feasting, is turned into sorow. And afterward all must runne ryot, in suche sort as there shall be no talke, but of ribawdrie and wantōnesse, or rather of trecherie and malice, so as there shall be none other newes, but of backbitting their neyghboure, and of practising deuises agaynst this man and that man. See what banquetting breedeth. Nowe then sith that men are so inclined to vice, it is not possible but there must be some faulte, notwithstanding that they giue not themselves the bydle in all poyntes. I pray you then, must it not needes be as it were a gulfe of hell, where they meete together to make cōpactes of wickednesse and treason? Therefore let vs marke well this sentence, to the end that sith we know men to be so much inclined to vices, that they marre the thing that is good, and turne it into cuill: wee may take the more heede to our selues, that when we eate and drinke one with an other, we confesse oure selues alway sinners, for offending God thereby. True it is in deede, that we muste not bee scrupulous and superstitious, as some bee which eate not a bit of breade with quietnesse of conscience: If a man tell them, that they ought to aduise themselves what they doo: therevpon they conclude that men can neyther eate nor drinke withoute offending of God. And when they are once come to suche scrupulousnesse, as to thinke that they sinne in all things that they doo: they fall to concluding: VVell, then let vs set all at randon: I say, there are suche as these to be found. But this is not as we oughte to doo, this is not as the Scripture leadeth vs. Therefore let vs wake and keepe sure watche, that we be not taken vnwares. VVhen wee be set at the table to drinke and to eate, let vs pray vnto God, beseeching him of his gracious goodnesse, to keepe vs in suche sobrietie, that being nourished by his giftes, wee may bee the better disposed to serue him: so as our meates may not serue to ouercharge vs, but to susteyn vs, and to giue vs strength, that we may be the better able to occupie our selues in the seruice of our God. And that he will graunte vs the grace so to passe through these corruptible things, as we may always labour for the heauenly lyfe, whereto he calleth vs by his woorde. For God mayntayneth vs not in this world to liue for a day, or for ten, or for fiftie yeares: but to the intent we should come to the sayd heauenly glorie. Let vs then consider how wee oughte to behaue our selues: and when wee be at the table, let vs feede for our repaste in such wyse, as if God himselfe dieted vs. And althoughe we be in this worlde taking our nourishment of the focde that we knowe: let vs looke vp vnto God, who sheweth himselfe a father towards vs, and hath witnessed vnto vs that wee be his children, in so much as he hath a care of these our poore bodies here, and will haue his loue extend euen vnto them, notwithstanding that they be but rottennesse. Therefore when we see that God doth so nourish and susteyne vs, we may be the meryer and the better assured of his goodnesse and fatherly loue towards vs. And hereby we see why S. Paule sayeth, that whither we drinke or whither wee eate, wee must doo it altogether in the name of God. There are many which suppose that there should bee no thinking vpon God when men come too eating and drinking: whereas in very deede we should therefore thinke so much the more of God. Seing that God giueth such vertue vnto bread by his woorde, that we be sustayned by it, will he not haue vs to acknowledge his presence, and how he hath his hand stretched out ouer vs? So then it is rather a cause that wee should thinke the more vpon God. For we see that our eating and drinking are sanctified by yeelding all honor to his name. And therefore when it commeth to saying of grace, let vs acknowledge that some fault may haue escaped vs: and then will God surely forgie vs all our misdoing, if so be that we repayre vnto him. Thus you see the cause why it is sayd here precyſely, that when Iobs children had made an end of feasting eche other by turnes, Iob commaunded them to sanctifie themselves, and afterward offered a solemne sacrifice for eche one of them, saying: It may be that my children haue sinned, and that they haue not blisfed God. But wee will speake of this whole matter in the ende. VVee see then that Iob was none of that sorte, which after they haue made nycesse for a whyle, do finally conclude to set all at randon. But he goeth to the remedie: that is to say, that God will beare with vs in our infirmities. Albeit (sayeth he) that my children haue not done their duetie in all poyntes: yet am I sure that God will haue pitie bothe vpon them and vpon me. And therefore let vs aske him forgiveness. But yet for all this, Iob forbade not his children

1. Cor. 10. 8.

31.

Coloſ. 3. c. 17

1. Tim. 4. b.

5.

dren to vse their accustomed feasting: And wherefore? for the thing of it selfe was good, as I haue sayd afore. If Iob had sayde, I see here a leawd matter: truly he had not made sacrifice: for that had bene to abuse Gods name, and to make it a cloke of euill. Sacrifices were not ordeyned to mainteyne vs in euil, nor that any man should fode and flatter himselfe in his sinnes, so as he should say, I may do sacrifice and then God will be contented. Iob therefore sacrificyzed not to haue it sayde that he maynteyned an euill thing: but he knew that his children did well in giuing such intertaynement one to another, and that it was a commendable thing so to do. Forasmuch as he knew that, he ment not to finde fault with the thing that was good, but sought for the remedie, that if any fault lay hid vnder it, it might please God to amende it: as if he should say, Of good reason ought we to craue pardon at Gods hand, to the end he may supplie our infirmitie. VVe see then after what maner Iob proceedeth here, and also after what maner we must proceede. And furthermore let vs marke, that Iob in comaunding his children to sanctifie themselves, hath shewed the maner of the bringing vp which he gaue them in their childehood, that is to wit, to serue God. If it had bene simply sayd, that Iob had sanctified the Lorde: a man might say, Very well, he was a good man for his owne behalfe, but he had no great regard of his children: he did inough for the discharging of himselfe to Godwarde, but he hath layde the brydle in the necke of the others. But contrarily it is sayde, that he commanded them to sanctifie themselves: which thing it had bene in vayne and vnauayleable for him to do, had they not bene taught long afore how they ought to walke in the feare of God. And although they were as then men-grown, and euery of them had a house of his owne, and kept a table by himself: Yet notwithstanding, Iob ceased not to keepe the continually vnder some awe. Behold here a doctrine very profitable for vs, which is, that parentes must so guyde their children, as God may be honored of them all. And it behoueth vs to marke this doctrine the better, forasmuch as we see it is so ill put in vre. For in these dayes they that haue children, coulde well finde in their harts to haue them taught: but hardly shall ye finde one among a hundred, that is led with a zeale and affection to Godward. How are they led then? Euery man mindeth his owne profite. He may well say, I would fayne haue my sonne taught: but what? that if he be of a good wit, he may come foreward, that he may make himselfe braue, that he may gather goodes, that he may come to credite and honour. Lo here the respects that fathers haue in their desire to haue their childre brought vp. But where is there a man to be founde so well aduised or bent to such simplicitie, as to say, It is ynough for me that my childe serue God, for I am sure that God will blisse him, and make him to prosper, and although he be poore to the worldward, it is ynough for me that God is his father? And God also will render such rewarde vnto the fathers, as they haue deserued. For they imagine that they haue done very much for their children, when they haue aduanced them: and God suffereth their children to put out their eyes, and to be as hangmen to torment them. VVe see it to be so before our eyes: and yet they perceiue not how it is God that chastizeth them, and that iustly. And therefore so much the more behoueth it vs to marke well the doctrine which the holy Ghost sheweth vs here vnder the example of Iob, that is to witte, that fathers and mothers should holde their children in such awe, as they may cause them to serue God. And specially this circumstance is not to be forgotten: namely, that although Iobs children were grown to full yeeres of discretion: yet ne-uerthelesse their father hilde them alwayes as it were vnder awe, warning them to aske forgiuenesse of God when they had offended him, and to purifie themselves. But now adayes as soone as children be ten yeeres old, by and by they thinke themselves men: when notwithstanding it were meete to giue them the rod fiftene yeeres after that they weare the furniture of a man, and seeme to themselves to be marueloufe fellows, for they be no Letter but sillie offskoorings: and as for to suffer any correction or any instruction, it is very straunge with them: yea they would thinke they had great wrong and iniurie offered them. Contrariwise we see what is sayde here. But what? The fathers are worthie to haue their children disobedient and stubborne against them, VVhy so? For meete it is that he which will be honored should be honorable: that is to wit, it is requisite that he should shewe cause why to be honored. How then shall a father purchase himselfe authoritie towards his children, to be obeyed of them and to keepe them in feare? Euen by hauing such a grauitie and stayednesse in himselfe, as his children ought to be ashamed to gaynsay him or to stand against him in any thing. But if the fathers shake off the feare of God: how can it be that their children should obey them, sith that they themselves yeelde not God the honour that belongeth vnto him? Lo here the cause why children shewe themselves so loth to be corrected, and why they cannot be kept in awe: namely for that their fathers are disobedient vnto God. And so it is, that both the fathers and the children are condemned here: the fathers for their negligence in not taking heede to bring vp their children in the feare of God, and the children for not suffering themselves to be gouerned by their fathers. And here they haue a goodly example: for it is spoken of such as may say, My father hath hilde me in awe as long as I was yong, and yet must I still be alwayes vnder the rod? Iobs children might haue sayde so. But we see that although they be come to haue householdes of their owne: yet are they still vnder the gouernance of their father: for in the text it is not sayde that they gaynesayd any thing that he commaunded them, as it is reported of the children of Hely: but rather that they obeyed him to the ende they might be parttakers of the sacrificyzes which he offred for them. This that we heare then, is ynough to condemne al these petie roysters which make such a brauerie, and carie their crest so high. They know not what this awefulnesse in any wise meaneth: they are but offskoorings, and yet neuerthelesse they will beare the countenance of men. But we see here how those that are of age and discretion to guyde a household orderly, be hilde still vnder the gouernment and obedience of their fathers. Furthermore as concerning this worde Sacrifyse, it is ment according to the ordinarie custome of the lawe, whereby, (to the intent a man might be parttaker of the sacrificyzes) it behoued him to be purified, that he might be dewly disposed therevnto. And albeit that Iob was not of the cuntry where the lawe of Moses was written, but rather (by all likelihood) was before Moyse was borne: yet notwithstanding it hath alwayes bene a custome among the faithfull, that when they should sacrificyze vnto God, they had some signe of clenzyng, that is to wit, of purging themselves from the filthinesse wherewith they had bene imbrewed and defiled. And this was not inuented by man: we must not thinke all this to haue bene deuised as a tryffing toy by men: but it was Gods will it should be so. And wherefore? for his meaning was to put men in remembrance, that they are not worthie to approche vnto him. VVhen we come vnto God, it behoueth vs to acknowledge our owne poorenesse, and to be ashamed of it, and to say: How dare I presse before the maiestie of my God? what fauour shall I finde there? Gods will is to haue this knowen in all ages: and now although we haue not the saide Ceremonie of clenzing our selues: yet it beho- ueth vs to haue the meaning of it in vs: that is to wit, that at all times, and as oft as we come vnto God to make our prayers and petitions vnto him, we must acknowledge that we be vnworthie, sauing that we know the meane wherby he receyueh vs, that is to wit, to clenze our selues by beleeuing in our Lord Iesu Christ, knowing that he is the onely washing whereby all our spottes may be made cleane. Will we then be acceptable vnto God? It beho- ueth vs to attayne to it by the meanes of our Lorde Iesus Christ, shrowding vs vnder the grace which he hath pur- chased vs by his death and Pasion, as who is the full per- fection and accomplishment of the things that haue bene giuen forth in old time in figures and shadowes,

1.S.m.2. c. 25.

Therefore let vs cast our selues flat before the face of our good God, with acknowledgment of our offences, be- seeching him to make vs know better what we haue left vndone: and that as long as we liue in this corruptible worlde, we acknowledging our selues to be wrapped in many finnes, may resist the temptations of our flesh, and buckle our selues to battell against all things that may turne vs aside fro the obeying of our God. And although we faile in diuerse sortes, yet neuerthelesse let vs pray that we may walke in such soundnesse afore him, as we may desire nothing but to dedicate our selues wholly vnto him, and that it may please him to accept the seruice that we offer vnto him in the name of our Lord Iesu Christ, not- withstanding that it be vnperfect, vntill such time as his glo- rie shall shyne fully in vs. That it may please him to be- stowe his benefite and grace, not onely vpon vs, but also vpon all people and Nations of the Earth: &c.

The third Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

THIS Sermon is yet still vpon the text of the fifth verse, which is set downe in the last Ser- mon afore, according also as it hath partly bene shewed alreadie.

Exod. 30. c. 18.

Began to tell you yesterday, what is ment by this saying, that Iob sanctifi- ed his childre, or commaunded them that euery of them should sanctifie himself. For vnder the Lawe and be- fore the Lawe, when men offred sac- rifyzes, it behoued the offerers to be clenzed before hand: and that was to do them to wit, how we be not worthy to approch vnto God, by reason of our vncleanness and filthinesse. If we come vnto God such as we be of our selues: we deserue to be shaken of, and to be taken at his hand for stinking carions. Therefore it standeth vs in hand to make our selues cleane. And how may that be done? The men of old time had certayne Ceremo- nies, according as it was needefull that they should haue such healpes before the coming of our Lorde Iesu Christ, by reason of the rawenesse of the time. But now in these dayes we know, how we ought to haue recourse to the preciousse blood of Gods sonne, which was shedde to wash vs withall. Therefore if we meane to be receyued for cleane before God: it behoueth vs to repayre to the blood of our Lord Iesu Christ. And furthermore we must also fighe for our finnes. For by this meanes are we to be clenzed: namely by acknowledging the euill that is in vs, which by and by causeth a sorinesse, and hatred of our selues, for that we haue bene so vnhappy as to dis- please God. And thus we see, why we haue no more the figures that were before the coming of our Lorde Iesu Christ, and yet do keepe still the truth and substance of them. What is to be done then at all times and as oft as we call vpon God? Euery one of vs must haue an eye to his owne poorenesse and vncleannesse, and be displea- sed with himselfe for it, and therewithall also desire our Lorde Iesus Christ to washe vs and make ys cleane with his blood, so that we may appeare as if we were pure and cleane, in the presence of God his father. And this is to be done, not onely one day in a weeke, nor for some cer- tayne time: but continually all our life long: and we must beare in minde how sainct Paule sayeth, that our Lord Iesu Christ was sacrificyzed as the true Easterlambe, to the end that we should still be coparteners of that sacrificyze, specially (as he sayeth) in all purenesse. He sayeth not that Christians ought to sanctifie themselues vnto God once a yeere: but that they ought to continew their holinesse

2. Cor. 7. c. 9.
10. II.

1. Cor. 5. c. 7. 8.

all their lyfe through out. Wherefore? Bycause the sa- crifice which Iesus Christ hath offered, and whereof we be made coparteners, is euerlasting, and the vertue there- of indureth for euer. So then, let vs euery morning and euening apply our indeuour to that which is shewed vs here: that is to wit, to sanctifie our selues, vntill it please God to be so graciouse vnto vs, as to dwell with vs for e- uer. From the time that the lawe was published, God spe- cially comaunded the Iewes, saying: Sanctifie your selues: for to morow (sayeth Moyses) the Lord will shew you his glorie. But God is openly shewed vnto vs in the person of his sonne, yea and that in such wise, as we may behold him as it were face to face, so the Gospel be preached, for there hath God discovered himselfe familiarly vnto vs. There- fore it becommeth vs to haue the sayd affection and zele which I haue spoken of: that is to wit, that we be wholly and fully giuen vnto him, forsaking all filthinesse that may hinder vs from the seruing and honoring of him. But it foloweth, that Iob offred sacrificyzes according to the number of his children. We haue alreadie briefly shewed, that al- though Iob feared least his children had offended God: yet notwithstanding he forbade them not to keepe com- panie stil together, bicause their so doing was a good thing: but sought the remedie of the infirmities whereto men are inclined and subiect. Morcouer it may be demaunded, how it came to passe that Iob durst offer sacrificyze, seing he was not instructed in the lawe, specially for asmuch as it is very likely, that he liued before Moyses was borne. For the Sacrifyzes that me offer vnto God without faith, deserue to be mislyked. How then could Iob offer sacri- fyze, hauing not any assurance of Gods will? We must call againe to minde that which hath bene touched in the Lecture: that is to wit, that it was Gods will to haue al- waies some seede and remnant of people in the world, that should call vpon him with a pure hart, vntill such time as his Church were settled among the Iewes, and his law pu- blished in writing. True it is that by and by after the flood, Noes children were corrupted: I meane those that were descended of his race, who hauing yet the fresh remem- berance of Gods horrible vengeance, ceased not to inuent many superstitions, and to disannull the true seruing of God: yet notwithstanding there were alwayes some fewe remayning, which maynteyned themselues in the sayde purenesse that God commaundeth. And that was to the end that God might continually haue some Church in the world, & some small nūber of people to worship him. And herewithall he would also that the same should turne to the dānation of the vnbeleeuers, & that they should be made the more vnexcusable. VVe know that men labour continually to shrowde theselues vnder the couert of ignorāce: and they beare theselues in hand, that they be cleared before God, when they haue gotten that buckler. But Gods will hath alwayes bene, that there should euer be some final number of people to serue him in al purenesse, & the same haue euermore bene as iudges of all those that are turned aside, and gone astray frō the right way. So hath it also bene concerning Iob. Yea all we know also, that God hath ordeyned Sacrifyzings euen frō the beginning of the world. For had they bene inuented at mans pleasure, they had bene but tryfles and apish toys, which God would haue reiected. And furthermore we know, that the sacrifices of Abel were preferred before the sacrifices of Cain, by reason of faith. But if Abel had deuised the sayd maner of sacrificyng to God, of his own head: he could not haue had any fayth. For the chiefe point is, that God do leade vs and gouerne vs: and faith can neuer be without obediēce: it must needes be answerable to that which God hath ordeyned. So then we see that God is the author of the Sacrifyzes that haue bene euer since the creatiō of the world. And when he cōmaunded men to do sacrificyze vnto him: he did it not without shewing the end & marke whereto the same tended. For had mē offered but the brute beasts without vnderstanding: it had bene of no valew, and it had serued but for a mockerie. But we know that God instructeth those that be his, vnto their saluation. Therefore there is no doubt, but that God in cōmaūding Sacrifyzes, did also shew the true vse of the, and how they might profite men to their saluation. And this was to the end they might know themselues to be vterly vnworthie to come neare him, and that they had deserued death, so as it behoued them to acknowledge themselues wholly blameworthy, and therewithall also vnderstand, that there was yet some meanes whereby to reconcytle themselues vnto him. And so in the first place wee note, that suche as haue vsed sacrificyzes rightely and according to Gods will, haue graunted themselues to haue bene gilty of death, in case as if a man should passe a lawful obligation or bond of some debt. Also this is the cause wherfore Sainct Paule speaking to the Collosians of the Ceremonies of the Lawe, terneth them obligations, bonds, and handwritings which serue to hold men in bondage before God, and to shewe them that they could not shunne the iudgement of endlessse death, were it not for one remedie which God hath giuen of his owne free mercie. And it is a very good and profitable lesson, when men acknowledge and confesse themselues gilty before God, and set before their owne eyes what they haue deserued, so as when a brute beast is slayne, they knowe it is for their sinnes sake. Lo how Gods minde was to allure men to lowlinesse. Here withall it was his will also to nourish them in hope, that although they were wretched, yet notwithstanding there should be one sacrificyze offered, wherby their sinnes should be washed away. Behold how the fathers of old time vsed their Sacrifyzes. And herevpon the Heathen folke haue done the like: but that hath bene without faith, bicause they knew not the God vnto whom they ought to haue done the honour, & on the other side, they knew not what seruice was acceptable to God, and therefore they had no sure ground to stand vpon: to be short, they knew not, neither to what end, nor to what purpose they made sacrificyze. By reason whereof all was done at auenture, (as they say) and so was it but a needelesse labour, specially for asmuch as God hated and abhorred all sacrificyzes that were made without knowledge and fayth. True it is that there was solemnitie ynough in them: but that auayled nothing, for asmuch as it behoueth alwaies to hold the rule which the Apostle giueth vs: namely that the outward sacrificyzes boote not at all, furtherforth than they be grounded vpon obedience vnto God and vnto his word. And true it is that Iob had not the Law written: but it was ynough for him that he had the doctrine that came from God, and which Noe had giuen vnto his children. Those that had persevered in the same, were not taught it by mē: but although they had the doctrine by men, yet notwithstanding they hidde the rule thereof as the rule of God. For it was ynough for the, that God gaue them knowledge of his will, without vsing the meane of Prophets as he did afterwards. VVe see here then that Iobs Sacrifyzes were not made at all aduenture, but vpon an assured and grounded fayth. VVhen it is sayd that Noe after the flud tooke of the cleane beasts to Sacrifyze: therby we see he had instructiō frō heauen, for it lay not in him to discern betweene beast and beast, so as he should say, Among these I see some that be pure & cleane, and the residew be vnclane. Needes must God haue taught him that. Euen so also is it with Iob: who made not sacrificyze, for that he was the only deuifer of it: but he yeelded himself to Gods will, wherby he was guyded and gouerned, & that is the propertie of faith, according as I haue sayd already. And herevpon we haue to consider, first that frō the beginning of the world, God hath in such wise suffered mē to go on in darknesse, that yet notwithstanding he hath left them certaine recordes, whereby they might be cōuicted of their cursednesse: in so much that if there were nothing else but the outward Ceremonies, it were fully ynough to condēne the vnbeleeuers. Furthermore we see also how men be wholly giuen to euill, in so much as they peruert the things that are good and holie, and when God hath declared his will vnto them, they turne it altogether backward and to the flat contrarie. For asmuch then as we see men so fleeting and vnconstant: we may perceyue that we haue neede to pray vnto God to keepe vs in awe, and not to suffer vs to step aside from the purenesse of his seruice, as it will befall vs if he holde vs not backe. And herewithall we be also warned, that the seruing of God in outward shew, and the setting of a fayre face vpon it, is not all that is to be done: but that the chiefeest poynt, is to serue him in deede, by knowing what a one he is, and what his will is, to the ende to hold our selues therevnto. For there hath bene great pompe in the sacrificyces of the Paynims, yea and euen of the that haue serued God aright: and yet notwithstanding the one sort haue bene reiected, and God hath abhorred them, & the other sort haue bene acceptable vnto him. The Heathen mē made their sacrificyzes with great pomp, they had incense and perfumes & such other like things. And the Iewes (specially in the Law,) did asmuch. But how? As for the Paynims which ment to honor God without knowing him, for asmuch as they knew not any whit of God or of his maiesitie: needes must they do sacrificyze vnto the Idols which they had forged and set vp in their own brayne. God the accepteth not any other seruice, than that which is done vnto him by one that knoweth him. Thus much for the first point. And for the secōd, it behoueth that the seruing of God be spirituall. The Pagans haue furnyzed, that God would be appeased if a man offered him an Oxe or a Calfe: but that was a great mockerie: as who would say, that God were transfigured, and that when he is angrie with men, they could appease him by the meane afore sayd. Therefore it behoueth men to set downe this rule first of all, namely that the seruing of God is spirituall: we must mount farre hygher than

Exod. 19. b.
10.

ende

Heb. 11. a. 4.
d. 17.

Gen. 8. d. 20.

Gen. 4. a. 4.
Hebr. 11. a. 4.

Coloß. 2. c. 14

than these visible shapes: for they must leade vs to a heauenly end, and not holde vs downe here in the worlde without lifting vp of our mindes vnto heauen. Yee see then how the faythfull haue alwayes their eye vpon God when they made sacrificyze: and therby were put in minde of their vices and sinnes, to the ende to be displeas'd with themselves for the same. The Paynims knew no whit of this. Now then we perceyue, that we may not rest vpon the outward shewe, when we deale with the seruing of God: but we must come to the well head: that is to wit, we must know which is the God whom we should worship, and we must vnderstand how and in what wise it becommeth vs to preace vnto him, and that the Ceremonies which we vse, do leade vs to this spirituall seruice whereof mention is made here. As for example, in these dayes the Papists haue many Ceremonies like vnto vs: for they can well bow downe their knees when they purpose to pray, and they haue such other things: And yet for all that, we see they know not wherevnto they shape themselves, for asmuch as they go to kneele downe before a puppet of wodde or stone: wherby they shew how they know not what God is: and so it must needes be, that all the religiō which they thinke themselves to haue, is vnclane and vnholie. They haue store of apish toyes: but they turne all vpside downe, bycause they regard not what God hath commaunded, but rather folow their owne inuentions, bearing themselves in hande, that they haue done much, when they haue patched a great sorte of ragges together. But they labour in vayne, for asmuch as they holde not themselves vnder the rule of Gods worde. Behold wherin we differ from them which know not how there is but one God whom we ought to worship, and vnto whom we must come by meanes of our Lord Iesus Christ, and that it behoueth vs to serue him according to his worde. VVhen we know this: we may well say, that the sacrificizes which we offer vnto God are acceptable vnto him, and that he taketh them in good woorth. But we obserue also, that many men abuse euen the sayd maner of worshipping God which is good and holy, in asmuch as they do it after a beastly maner. How is that? True it is that we have not any Idolles in it: true it is that we haue none of all the fine maskingknackes that are in the papacie, wherwith the seruice of God is infected and marred. But yet there are which thinke they haue well quit themselves, when they haue done some Ceremonie, as whē they haue put of their cap, or made curtsie. Beholde how they discharge themselves afore God (for so they beare themselves in hand) and yet in the meane while regard not the lowlinesse that I haue spoken of: namely that when we preace vnto God, it becommeth vs to acknowledge our selves gilty before him by reason of our sinnes: they regard not the meane of seeking fauour in our Lord Iesus Christ: they regard not the yeelding of themselves vnto God in all purenesse, so as they may be holy vnto himward. They passe not a whit for all this geere. They haue good store of outward Ceremonies. Yea verely, but (as I haue sayd) all this is nothing. Nowe then let vs learne to serue God in spirit and truth, and faith wil be a good guide therevnto, when we haue our eyes fastened vpon Gods worde, which will leade vs alwayes to our Lord Iesus Christ, who is the heauenly patterne & the mirrour wherin we must behold the will of God his father, to frame our selves thereafter. Thus much concerning the Sacrificizing whereof mention is made in this place. Nowe when it is sayde that Iob offred Sacrificyzes according to the number of his children: it is to shew that he spared not his substance which God had indewed him withall. If he had bene a poore man, he had bene neuer a whit lessē welcome vnto

Exod. 25. d.

20.

Act. 7. f. 44

Heb. 8. b. 5.

God, though he had brought no sacrificyze at all. But in asmuch as he had the meane and abilitie wherwith to do it: it is sayd that he employed it thereabout. And nowe let vs apply the same to our selues. I haue told you already, that we haue not any more the sacrificizing which was before the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. But when the care concerneth praying vnto God: (which according as the principall seruice which he demaundeth at our hands, is that we should call vpon him, that we should professe him, that our whole welfare should depend vpon him, that we should giue him thanks for his benefites, and that we should inforce our selues to be holy both in body & soule: euen so, (to the end that all the whole may be consecrated to his honour,) we must also serue our neighbours turnes with the things that he hath giuen vs, assuring our selues that our being in this world is to the end that we should be parttakers one with another, in such wise as no man ought to be giuen to himself, but all of vs ought to profite the members wherewith God hath knit and vnited vs together. Seing it is so, let euery man haue an eye to himselfe. True it is that to pray vnto God is a thing common to all men. Neuertheless it behoueth eche one of vs to pricke foreward himself, according to the knowledge which he hath. VVhen a man is better taught than others: it is certayne that he ought to be so much the more earnest and feruent in praying vnto God, and also to haue a greater care of himself. Thus ye see how we ought to consider what our abilitie and measure is. And afterward when it commeth to the offering of our selues vnto God: it behoueth vs to haue an eye to that which he hath indewed vs withall, for according as euery of vs hath receyued, so shall he be the more blame worthy if he glorifie not God. So then, whē foeuer God giueth more abundance of his spirit vnto vs, than to other men: we must looke well to it, that we make our neighbours parttakers with vs: that such as haue wisdom, giue counsell vnto others: and that such as haue abundance, succour such as haue neede of it. Lo here how we ought to frame our selues vnto that which is spoken here of Iob: namely that he offered sacrificizes according to the number of his children. As for the residew, wher as it is sayd that Iob offered sacrificyze for his children: it is to shew vs, that such as haue charge of others, must be watchful, and that when any fault happeneth, they must hold themselves blameworthy before God for the same. And this is well worthie to be marked. For we see how ambition reigneth in the world. If a man haue many children: he is glad that he hath so many reasonable creatures to be vnder him at his commaundement. If he haue wherwith to finde a great household: he liketh well of himself for it. But what? All is but mere Ambition or vaine glorie. For there is no regard had of the charge that is matched with it. True it is that God doeth men great honour, when he giueth those whom he hath created after his owne Image, vnto thē to be their vnderlings. But yet therewithall, this honour carieth a great bond with it: namely that such as haue householdes to gouerne, must alwayes be watchfull. For if an offence be committed against God in any household: he that is the head & maister of the house, must thinke himself blameworthy. He must mourne before God as if himself were the partie that had done the deede: and although he be not consenting vnto it, yet must he thinke thus with himselfe. I haue not discharged my selfe of my duetic, albeit that I watch both night and day. Although I exhort as wel my children as also my men seruants, and my mayde seruants to serue God: yet is it impossible for me to do all that I ought to do. For I see my childrē offend, I see faults in my men seruants, and mayde seruants. Of whom take they

Psal. 50. 6.
14. 15.

they it? Although I take payne to instruct them, yet are there many things to be found faulte with. For I haue not giuen them such example as I ought. Had I walked in the feare of God as becommeth me, they must needs haue folowed my steppes: and so it may be that their stepping aside from the right way, hath bene through my default and offence: and therefore I must shew them such example as I would haue them to folow. If fathers and masters that haue children and seruants vnder their hand, had this regard with them: things would be better ordered than they be. And aboue all others, Princes and Magistrates ought to marke this president, that it behoueth them to be watchfull, and to set good gard vpon such as are committed to their charge: so as if there be any fault, they must thinke themselues to blame for it: and if they espie any disorders or loocenesse, they must assure themselues, that it is bicause they themselues haue not discharged their dutie. Likewise is it with the Ministers of Gods worde. If they perceyue that the Church behaueth not it selfe as it ought to do, so as it haue troubles and contrarities in it, and specially that Gods name be blasphemed: it behoueth them to figh for it, and to beare the burthen of it, assuring themselues that God sheweth vnto them, that they haue not discharged themselues as they should haue done. And here ye see why Sainct Paule sayeth, that he is brought lowe bicause of the faults that were in the Church of Corinth. Behold, it was Gods will (sayeth he) to do me shame there. Had Sainct Paule consented to whoredome, or to robberie, or to wantonnesse, or to other such vices of the Corinthians? No, he had laboured to rebuke them by all meanes possible: can it be sayd that he had shewed them the way of riot? No whit at all. But although he had discharged himself to the vttermost towards men: yet notwithstanding he ceased not to feele still, that God ment as it were to disgrace him in part, so as he was fayne to bewaile the offences and disorders that happened in the Church wherof he had the direction and charge. If Sainct Paule, who had had such a zeale to do his duetie, did neuertheless feele himself blameworthy when there befell any disorder in the Church: I pray you what will become of vs, who are as colde as yce in respect of him? what shall become of them which make no account at all whither God be honored or no: but all is one with them so they may make their owne profite and maynteyne their owne state? Then let vs marke well that which is sayd here: that Iob sacrificyzed according to the number of his childre: and let vs likewise take good aduice to hūble our selues afore God, and not onely to aske him forgiuenesse when the mischief is come to passe, but also to preuent it as much as is possible. And how? That parents hold their children short: that Maisters looke well about them, so as God be serued and honored by them, and their houses well ruled in all purenesse, that they may be as it were litle Churches: Also that such as haue a more honorable charge and authoritie, be so much the more diligēt. As for example, that the Magistrates be circumspect to make lawes conuenient to hold their people in good order, and to cut of all things that are against the seruice and honour of God: and that when they haue done so, they be diligent to see good order kept whē it is once appointed, so as they shut not their eyes to make countenance of not perceyuing the disorder a whit when a fault is committed, but alwayes haue medicines preseruatiue at hande: That the Ministers of Gods worde tarie not till all be marred, and till the Diuill haue gotten his full scope: but that as soone as they perceyue any breach, and that things folow not on in good array, they indeuour to remedie it with all speede possible, to the end that things go not to hauocke as they be cōmonly wont to do. And now it followeth that Iob sayd: It may be that my Children haue sinned: and that they haue blisfed God: for so it is worde for worde. But the word Blisfed is sometimes taken to Curse: as when it is sayde, that Naboth had Blisfed God and the King, that is to say had Curfed them. And we shall see such examples againe hereafter, and then will I declare more at large, after what maner this worde is put in two contrarie significations. But before we come to that, let vs marke how it is reported here in the text, that Iob sayde. It may be that my children haue sinned. Here we see that Iob wayted not that God should sende him some message to threaten him for the sinnes of his childre: but preuented the matter and was carefull of it without any mans warning, saying: It may be that my children haue done amisse. And this is a point which we ought to marke well. For now adayes there are very fewe that can abide to be admonished and to be told of their faults, although their faults be notorious in al respects: yet (if it be possible) they will finde some shift or other to excuse and hide theselues, in so much that if a man will rebuke them that do amisse, he must prepare himself to sustaine mortal warre at their hād, so as he shal be as a deadly foe to them for procuring their welfare. But if mē can not abide to be rebuked when they do amisse: how will they of theselues and of their owne good will, blame themselues as worthie to be reprovued, and say: It is possible that I haue committed such a fault, eyther I or mine? But we see here how Iob thought alwaies in himself, It is possible that my children haue sinned. And so the holy Ghost hath shewed vs what our duetie is: that is to wit, that when we perceiue our selues faultie and worthie to be condemned, euery of vs must pricke and spurre vp himselfe to make his owne accusation of his owne good will. And vpon farre stronger reason, I say that when God is so graciouse vnto vs as to proooke vs, so as we haue others to exhort vs to do our dutie: if we be stubborne against God vpon his sending of such messengers vnto vs, and suffer not our selues to be reprovued by them: it is certaine that we set not our selues against mortall men, but that we bende our selues against the Maiestie of God, who would fayne plucke vs backe to saluation, when he seeth vs readie to throwe our selues headlong into euerlasting destruction. Marke this for a speciall poynt. And by the way we see that Iob tooke not thought onely for himselfe, but also for those that were committed to his charge, according to that which we haue sayd. But now adayes, men do the cleane contrarie. For if a man can excuse himself: by and by he taketh couert as fast he may. Hath a man done this or that? He will streyt make a leazing to discharge himself, that he may not be acknowne of his fault. If he haue eyther children or seruants, he will seeke to discharge himself that way, saying: yea marie, I haue heard that such a thing was done, but it was not long of me. Thus we see how the most parte of men do seeke such startingholes. And it had bene much more for Iobs behoofe to haue layd the burden vpon others. But he knew that of his children did amisse, he himself should yeeld account for it. So then let vs learne, not to soothe our selues in hypocrisie, nor to deuise how to cherish the vices which we ought to redresse as much as in vs lieth. Behold what is shewed vs here. And by the way it may be demaūded, whither Iob ought to haue tormented himself so in vayne, so long as the faultes were vnknewen to him: for it seemeth to be sufficient if a man humble himself afore God as soone as he perceyue that he hath done amisse: but as for to imagine, it may be that I haue done amisse, it may be that I haue committed such a fault: it seemeth that that is more than needeth. First of all let vs beare in minde that which Salomon sayeth in his

Kings. 21. c. 10
d. 13.

2. Cor. 12. g.
20.

20

30

40

50

60

his

Proverb. 28.
6.4.

his xxviij. Chapter. Right happie (sayeth he) is the man that feareth, or which maketh himself to feare, (for so doth the word import,) that is to say, which inureth himself to be afrayd: but he that hardeneth his hart (sayeth he) shall runne headlong into al euill. In saying so. Salomō sheweth vs, that we must walke heedefully, looking still afore vs whether we may haue committed any fault. And this feare is doubled here: to do vs to vnderstand that we must feare, as wel for that which is to come, as for that which is past. Our feare for that which is to come, must be this: namely that we beare in minde how we ought to walke aight in al our wayes, & that we haue the forecast and skill to aske counsell at the Lordes mouth as the Prophet Esay commaundeth vs, and to betake our selues to his holy spirit, to the end that he may giue vs wisdom to keepe our selues from swauing one way or other after what maner so euer it be. Thus ye see how we should feare for the time comming. Our feare for that which is past, ought to be this: that although we know not the faults which we haue comitted, and that there haue escaped many vices ouerthwart our eyes without perceuyng them: yet nevertheless it behoueth vs to bethinke vs thereof, and to mislike of it, and to condemne our selues for the same. And thus we see after what sort it behoueth vs to be afrayd, both for the time past and for the time to come. And this is it that we haue to note vpon the fayde sentēce when Iob sayd: It may be that my children haue sinned: notwithstanding that they ment not so to do. And the care that we ought to haue to prouoke our selues to call vpon God, is that he should pardon our offences, to the end he suffer vs not to step aside any way, but that we may continew in the path which he sheweth vs. In conclusion, when Iob sayeth, It may be that my children haue blissed the Lord: we must marke that the worde blisse is taken to curse, notwithstanding that it signifie to blisse. And that is done to make the matter more odious, to the intent we may know what a fault it is, not to blisse God, that is to say, not to yeeld him the prayse which he hath deserued at our handes. For at such a deede, the heares ought to stand vp vpon our head, and we should shake & quake for feare when mention is made of Cursing God. Ye see now wherfore the word blisse God, hath bene applied to the contrarie vse. And this is it that is ment when in short wordes it is sayd, that Iob feared least his children had not blissed God as became them, or that they had not blissed him at all, which is all one as if they had cursed him. For the principall poynt that we haue to consider, is how we ought to glorifie God in all our life: and hereby we see also to what end we be created, and wherfore we liue. Therefore if we be desirous to haue our life allowable before God, we must alwayes ayme at this marke: namely that he be blissed and glorified by vs, and that we haue such a burning zeale & affection to serue to his glory, as we may assure our selues, that it is an intollerable, yea and euen a most horrible thing in all respects, that his name should be blasphemed and as it were cursed through vs, that is to say, that we should cause his glorie to be as it were defaced, specially sith he hath put his image in vs, to the ende it should shine forth in vs. To the intent therefore that we ouershoote not our selues as many do, who liue not but to blaspheme God, that is to say, to be accused of him, bicause his name is blasphemed by them: let vs beare in minde, that such people are as monsters made against kinde. Neuertheless let vs pray God, to giue vs the grace to know, why he hath set vs in the world: which is to the ende we should magnifie him, wayting for that most happie day wherein he shall gather vs vp wholly to himselfe, when we haue liued in such wise in this world, as we haue not sought to be gouerned otherwise than by him, submitting our selues vnto him in all respects and all caces.

Esai. 30. a. 2.

But let vs cast downe our selues before the face of our good God, with acknowledgment of our sinnes: praying him of his goodnesse to make vs feele better what we haue done, specially in such sort, as we may come to present our selues vnto him, without desire of any thing, saue onely to finde him mercifull for our Lord Iesus Christes sake. And for asmuch as we know we be beset with so great infirmities as we finde in our selues, and that he is the only Phyficion that can heale vs: let vs pray him to purge vs more & more, vntill he haue brought vs to the perfection for the which we long continually. And so let vs all say, Almighty God our heavenly father we acknowledge in our selues, and we confesse as truth is: &c.

The fourth Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

- 6 IT came to passe one day, that the sonnes of God came to appeare before the Lord, and Satan also came amongst them.
7. And the Lord sayd to Satan: whence comest thou? Satan answering, sayd vnto the Lord, from walking about, and from hunting vpon the earth.
8. And the Lord sayd vnto Satan: hast thou taken heede of my seruant Iob, who hath not his match vpon earth, a found and vpriight man, and fearing God and withdrawing himself from euill?

WE haue seene by the premisses, what the life and conuersation of Iob was among men: and now is shewed in what wise God disposed of him, to the ende we might know, that while we liue here belowe, we be not gouerned by fortune, but God hath an eye vpon vs, and full authoritie ouer vs, as good reason is he should haue, seing that we be his creatures. For anon after we shall see, how it pleased God to afflict Iob, wherein the chiefe thing that is principally touched, is that God hath the direction of the worlde, and that there is not any thing done, which is not disposed by him. To expresse this, the Scripture vseth a fashion agreeable to our rudenesse. For we be so weake, as we can neuer comprehend Gods

Maiestie in the full highnesse thereof, nor possibly attayne vnto it. Therefore it behoueth God to come downe to be cōprehēded of vs: that is to wit, that he shew not himself in his glory, which is infinite, but according to the smal capacite that he seeth in vs, wherevnto he applieth himself. To be short, we shal neuer know God as he is, but we shal know him in such measure as it shal please him to manifest himself vnto vs, that is to wit, according to that which he knoweth to be profitable for our saluation. And the manner of speech which we see here when it is sayde that the Angels appeared before God as it were on a solemne high day, is borrowed of the Kings of this world, which keepe their estates and Assyses. Certaine it is (as the Scripture sheweth in many other places) that the Angels are euer more before God, notwithstanding that they execute his

Dan. 7. d. 10.

Psal. 34. b. 8.

Exod. 11. b. 5.

Exod. 11. b. 5.

com-

commaundements, according as it is sayd that they pitche their tents round about vs to gard vs, and that God hath appoynted them to guyde vs, to the ende we should be as Kings. 19. it were vnder their protection. Also it is sayd that they ex-
 e. 35. ecute his wrath and vengeance vpon the wicked. But Psal. 35. a. 6 yet for all this, the Angels being spirites, are not hindered to serue God, and to obey him, nor to execute his iudge-ment here belowe, albeit that they be all the while continually in his presence. And therefore when our Lord Iesus Math. 18. b. Christ sayeth, that the Angels which haue the keeping of 10. little infants, do continually see and behold the face of his father: thereby it is giuen vs to vnderstand, that although the Angels asist vs, and that we feele their vertue in main-tainyng vs: yet notwithstanding they ioy still all the while in the glory of God, and are not separated from him. And therefore wheras it is sayd in this text, that they appeared: it is not ment, that when God sendeth them forth they be separated from his Maiestie and depriued of the heauenly life during the time that they are in their voyage: but for as much as we be rude & grosse, the Scripture ment to like God to earthly Princes, to the end that by a more homely & familiar maner, we might know how the Angels do not any thing of their owne prope mouing, but that it is God which comandeth them, who hath all dominion ouer the,
 and they come to yeelde him account, and nothing is hid fro him, in so much as the Angels haue not any proper or peculiar authoritie in themselves: and that although they Eph. 3. b. 10. be called Powers, Principalities, and Vertewes, it is not for Col. 1. c. 16. that God hath resigned his own office vnto them, it is not for that he hath despoyled himself of his own power, it is not for that he himself abideth ydle in heauen: but it is for that the Angels are instruments of his power, to the end it should be spread out ouer all. VVe see then what we haue to gather of this text: that is to wit, that God worketh in such wise by meane of his Angels in the gouerning of worldly matters, that all of the come to accout afore him, in such sort as nothing can escape him. And furthermore wheras it is sayd, That Satan also came among the Angels: it is not for that he wound himself in thither, as some haue vnderstood it that he crowded himself into the copanie to make himselfe a good page: But contrariwise, the holy Ghost ment to do vs to vnderstand, that not only the Angels of Heauen which obey God willingly, and are wholly inclyned, & giuen that way, do yeelde account vnto him, but also the Diuels of hell which are enemies and rebels to him to the vttermost of their power, which labour to subuert his Maiestie, and practyze to confound all things:
 so as they be forced (spite of their teeth) to be subiect vnto God and to yeeld him account of all their doings, and cannot do any thing without his permission and leaue. 50 Thus ye see in what wise Satan appeared among the Angels. But yet by the way, the maner of theyr dealing is di-uers. For when the Angels guyde vs, and do the thing that God hath commaunded: they haue the nature to apply themselves vnto him, and haue none other inclinatio but Psal. 103. d. 20. to obey him, & he on the other side dwelleth and reigneth in them by his holy spirit. Lo here the cause why we say, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heauen. Bycause we see so much counterfaying and so many horrible rebellions against God here belowe: we desire him to settle his kingdome peasably here as it is aloft, where his Angels be wholly obedient vnto him. But the Diuels obey him as inforced, that is to say, not of their owne good will, but because God compelleth them. They would with all their hart resist his power, and oppresse him if they could: but they be fayne to follow him in all points whether so euer he listeth to leade them. And hereby we see why the Angels are in this place expressly termed the children of God, and the Diuell by his prope title of Aduersarie, for so dothe the worde Satan signifie in Hebrew. True it is that men are very oftentimes called the Children of God, bycause he hath printed his image in them, specially in the faythfull, for asmuch as they be reformed to the likenesse of our Lord Iesus Christ, who Col. 1. b. 15. is the lively image of God his father, and also for that Hebr. 1. a. 3. they haue receyued the spirit of adoption, which is a Rom. 8. c. 15. warrant vnto them that God beareth a fatherly loue to-Gal. 4. a. 6. wards them. Rightly therefore may we be called the children of God. So may also Princes and Magistrates. For they haue the same honorable title, which is giuen vnto them, bycause God hath aduanced them, and set them in that hie estate, to the intent to be knowne in the person of them. VVe see then how the name of Gods Children may well be applyed to men. But the Angels are so called in the Scripture, because they drawe neere vnto God, and are as it were beames of his brightnesse. And therefore in Col. 1. c. 16. asmuch as God calleth them Principalities, Vertues, and 20 Highnesses, it is good reason that we also should acknowledge them to be as it were the sonnes of God, for asmuch as we may not separate the vertue that is in them, from the vertue of God, because they be as streames that gushe out of that fountaine and spring, and we must alwayes repayre thither. Let vs know then that this honour of being taken and reputed for the children of God, belongeth to the Angels, because his glory vttereth and sheweth it self in them. And therefore so much the more are we beholden to the infinite goodnesse of our God, who hath appointed them to be our seruants by meanes of our Lord Iesus Christe. For in asmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ, who is the onely Sonne of God his father, yea euen his naturall sonne, (for the belonging of this honour vnto him is not befallne vnto him through grace, but he is his naturall sonne, and for the same cause, his only sonne also) In asmuch then (I say) as our Lord Iesus Christ hath not bene spared for our redemption & saluation: the Angels also (who are the children of God) are by his meane appointed to serue vs, as the Apostle sheweth in the Epi-Hebr. 1. d. 15. stle to the Hebrewes, and also as it is shewed by Jacobs ladder, where it is sayd that the Angels came downe fro hea-
 Gen. 28. c. 12. uen to the earth: and Iesus Christ affirmeth the same thing Iohn. 1. g. 51. to be accomplished in his kingdome: you shall see the Angels (sayeth he) come downe from heauen vnto men. So then seing we perceyue that God hath ordeyned his Angels to serue for our welfare: so much the more are we bound to his mercie. Moreover he hath done vs so great honour, that his Sonne (to redeeme vs) hath not taken vpon him the nature of the Angels: but (as the Apostle Heb. 1. d. 16. sayeth) hath clothed himself with our nature and our substance. VVhen we see that the Sonne of God is come so neere vnto vs, as to vouchsaue to be parttaker of mans nature, we may perceyue that his so doing is the verie wellspring from whence proceedeth the other grace, that the Angels trauell and watch in our behalf, and also that it is their peculiar charge and vocation to procure our welfare. According herevnto, the holie Ghost shoeth them out from them that be with Satan, and sheweth that they be willingly the seruants of God. In what wise? Euen as his Children. VVhen a chiilde obeyeth his father, he doeth it not against his will: but he doeth it because he is incly-ned therevnto, bycause his owne nature teacheth him so to do, and because he hath a certaine louingnesse which induceth him to discharge himselfe of his duetie: and euen so do the Angels. On the other side, Satan is an aduer-sarie. For albeit that he appeared before God and was fayne to render his account: yet was it not for that he yeilded of his owne accorde, nor for that he was willing

willing to be subiect vnto God: but rather he rowzed himself against him, and was inflamed with so excessive rage, that he would haue overthrowen Gods power if it had bene possible for him. So then he hild still his naturall corruption, that is to wit, of being alwayes anemie: and yet was he constrained to come and do homage to him that hath the fouerayne dominion ouer all creatures. For Satan also is subiect vnto God, and therefore it may not be surmyzed that Satan hath any authoritie, other than is giuen him by God. And good reason it is that all should be subiect to him, sith that all things proceede from him. The Diuels were created by God as well as the Angels, howbeit not such as they now be. VVe must alwayes hold this for a certaintie, that the naughtinesse which is in the Diuels, proceedeth of themselues, and that when they became Apostataze, to separate themselues from the fountayne of rightuoufnesse, they forsooke God, and turned themselues away from him. Lo how they were peruered and became altogether euill. Likewise whereas sinne is in mans nature: it is not of Gods putting in by creation, but by reason that Satā did spread his naughtinesse further a-brode at such time as man was beguyled by his wylinesse, to disappoint the benefit of God. Thus ye see how the Diuels became accursed of themselues, and that their being cruell, full of rebellion, full of lying, and full of wickednesse, came altogether of their turning away from their Creator, as the Scripture teacheth vs. Yet for all that they cease not to be alwayes vnder the hand of God. And therefore what a thing were this, if we had not the knowledge thereof? For when it is sayd, that the Diuell is the Prince of the world: it were ynough to make vs affrayde, were it not that we know there is a brydle aloft, which reyneth him backe, and hindereth him of doying that which he would. For if Satans power were not limited, he would out of hand haue his full swing at vs. VVe knowe he desireth nothing but our destruction, according also as he is our deadly enemie: so that (as it is sayd of him in another place) he goeth about like a roring Lyon, and is alwayes hard at his pray to deuour it. Now then if the Diuels were not subiect to God, but could attempt what they list themselves, and had leaue without limitation, so as God withheld them not backe: alas, full wretched should our state be. For we should be cast vp as a pray without any remedie. And where should our faith be? what certaintie or assurance of defence should we haue: for our enemie is ouermightie. So then, one of the necessariest articles that we haue, is to know that the Diuell is hild short, and that how soeuer he play the mad feende against our saluation, yet can he do nothing, further than is permitted him from aboue. And also the Scripture telleth vs rightly both these things: that is to wit, that Satan is the Prince of the world, that he reigneth in the ayre aboue vs, that we be of no power, that he is able to deuour vs, that we be as subiectes vnto him, and finally that we be his bondslaves by nature fastied in his fetters: and yet notwithstanding, that he is subiect vnto God whether he wil or no. These two points are diuers, but yet haue they no contrarietie: and both of them are right profitable for vs, and bring vs good instruction. For when the Scripture telleth vs that the Diuell hath such a power, and that he reigneth here, that men are as it were vnder his feete, and vnder his tirannie, and that he holdeth them in his bondes: it is to the ende that we should know our owne wretchednesse. For we see what the pryde of men is. They glorifie themselues in such wise as if they would stie vp about the clowdes both in wisdom, and in vertue, & in all things. But when men be so hoyfed aloft, God on the contrarie part auoucheth thé to be the bondslaves of Satan, and hild in bōdage and slauerie vnder him. Go now and challenge great nobilitie. Go your wayes and auance your selues: yet shall the Diuell haue dominion ouer you, how soeuer it be. Lo how God cutteth mens combes, and maketh them ashamed. After he hath so brought them downe, he waketh them vp againe, to the end they should walke in more feare. For if wee thought we had not anemie that would make ware vpon vs, or that were so puissant: we would be slouthfull, and we should liue here as it were in peace. But behold, God telleth vs that Satan is like a roaring Lion which hath his throte euer open to swalow vs vp: and that we haue no weapons to resist him, except he giue vs them: so as our force must come of him: and that is to make vs be-thinke our selues well, and stand vpon our garde, and not to be sleepe, for then the Diuell will straghtwaies take vs vnprouided. Thus then we see why the Scripture sayeth that the Diuell is Prince of the world: namely euen to the intent, first of all to bring vs lowe, and after ward to teache vs feare and warenesse, that we may call vpon God, beseeching him that he will not suffer vs to fall into Satans snares, but that he will strengthen vs as he hath promised to do, so as we may alwayes keepe good watch. Furthermore also on the other side, to the intent that Satans puissance be not ouer terrible vnto vs to make our courage quayle, and to cast vs into despayre: it is sayd vnto vs that he can do nothing without Gods cōmission, that he must be fayne to aske leaue of him, and that when he hath spit out bothe fire & flame, he can do nothing, more than God permitteth him by his good pleasure. True it is that the Diuell will not cease to be furious, and to venture himself vpon the pykes: but what shall that boote him, sith God will neuer suffer him to do otherwise than he shall thinke good, & no more. VVe see then to what purpose it is here declared vnto vs, why the Diuell steppeth in among the children of God. It is not for that he wound himselfe in as though he had bene of the companie and order of the Angels: but it is to shewe vs that he is vnder Gods obey-sarce as well as the Angels, howbeit that it is in a farre other qualitie. For the holy Ghost nameth him aduersarie, whereas the Angels are called the childre of God, to signifie vnto vs that the Angels obey with their good wil, and that they be willing seruants, whereas Satan is inforced, so as there is nothing but necessitie and constraynt in him. But let vs nowe come to that which the Scripture addeth: namely that God demaunded of Satan, from whence he came, and that Satan answered, from going about the Earth, yea euen to hunt. VVhen such reherfals are made, we know alwayes how it is for our infirmitie: for God needed not to enquire what Satan had done in the worlde. But what then? For asmuch as our rudenesse and the small measure of our vnderstanding comprehend not these things: it behoueth vs (as I sayd afore) that there be such a declaration as is agreeable to vs. And herein we see the goodnesse of God: in that he frameth himself vnto vs: and bicause we cannot attayne vnto him, nor mount so high: he humbleth himself to vs, and as it were transformeth himself, to the end that we should know that which is good and conuenient for vs: Seeing that God cōmeth so vnto vs: I pray you, ought not we to be confounded with shame if we be slowe to heare him? And hereby we see what a villanie it is of thé that would bereeue poore idiots of all doctrine. For they say that the holy Scripture is ouerhard for a man to byte vpon. True it is, that in respect that there is nothing else but darknesse in vs, the Scripture will be very hard for vs: but yet therewithall, a man must consider how God hath promised to enlighten the little ones and the lowly. And in deede we see, how he hath proceeded. For to what purpose is it set out vnto vs here so homelily and after the

2.Pet.2. a.4

Iude.1. a.6.

1.Pet.5. c.8.

1.Pet.5. c.8.

Psal 19. c.8.

maner

maner of men: God sheweth vs how his meaning is, not onely to instruct the great Clerkes, and such as are very futtle and well exercysed in schooles: but also to apply himself vnto vs that are of the rudest & vnskillfullest fort, that can be. Seing God proceedeth so on his part: what an vnthankfulnesse is it for men to draw backwarde, and to throwd themselves vnder this shadow & colour of saying that it is impossible for them to vnderstand the meaning of the holy Scripture? For we see how God hath applied himself vnto vs. By the way we haue to gather chiefly, how it is the minde of the holy Ghost, to shewe what Satans office is, what his nature is, and whereabout he busieth and applieth himself altogether: which is (as I haue sayd) to hunt after his pray without ceasing, like a roring lion. And S. Peter vseth the sayd similitude purposely, to waken, vs that we might stand vpon our garde night and day, and call vpon God to defend vs agaynst all the assaults of our enimie, and agaynst all that he can practize agaynst vs. True it is that we see not Satan, ne perceyue not by eye sight what he prepareth and practizeth to our destruction: & therefore haue we so much the more cause to be afrayd of his guyles and policies. Lo here the cause why S. Paule sayeth, that our fighting is not agaynst flesh and bloud. For hereby he meaneth, that if we had to deale with visible enimies, we might well escape their handes by some shift or other, and we might finde the meane to resist them. But behold (sayeth he) they be spirituall guiles that fight agaynst vs, of whom we haue no sight at all, except God giue vs the eyes of fayth to espie how Satan is agaynst vs, specially by the temptations that he triumpheth in our way, whereby he eggeth vs to euill, and laboreth to marre vs. So then, we must fully resolue our selues of this poynt: namely that the Diuelles are alwayes buzie to procure our destruction, that they go about the earth, that they be neuer away from vs, that that they be euer seeking meanes to get into vs, and that as soone as they find neuer so small a breach, they enter into vs to throwe vs into endlesse destruction, and we be surprized before we mistrust that we are assayed, according as euery man knoweth by experience that we perceyue not when the Diuell is neere vs, and yet in the meane while we see our selues wounded to death. VVherfore, when we feele any wicked desire in our selues, so as we be caried, some to one lewde lust, & some to another: we must marke that it is the enimie that worketh so craftily. And thus we find by experience, that the Diuelles are euer practizing agaynst vs: specially agaynst those to whom God hath giuen wisdom and knowledge. For although the Diuell possesse the wicked and reprobates, and worke in them with all effectualnesse, as Sainct Paule speaketh to the Thessalonians: yet perceyue they not that the Diuell is any thing, and they make but a sport of their vices. They be so bewitched in euill, as they feele it not a whit. For they be become blockish as Sainct Paule sayeth in another place. But whē the faythfull finde their mindes attaynted with any euill affection, & that Satan hath preuailed so much as to make entrance into them: they know that Satan hath preuented thē vnwares, & that they perceyued not whē he gaue thē battell or alarme. VVe must not tarrie till we haue such an assault: but we must be afrayd & take heede to that which is sayd. For God sheweth the care which he hath of vs, and how it is not his will we should be taken vnwares for want of knowing our aduersaries, when he sayeth that the Diuelles go about the earth continually hunting after they pray. If a man should teill vs that enimies were at hande, and that there were certayne bandes comming vpon vs, euery of vs would stande vpon his garde, and deuiſe all meanes possible to defend our selues and to withstand them. And why so? Bycause we be fleashly, and haue a care to preferue this transitorie lyfe. But behold, our enimie Satan hath store of wyles and futtleties, more dangerous and mischieuous than all the enimies in the world: his desire is to cast vs all headlong into destruction: we know what strength he is of, as hath bene declared already: it is expressly sayd that he is at hande with vs, and that he besiegeth vs on all sides, and that he hath a thousand wayes to winde aboute vs. VVhen all this is told vs and yet we be neuer the warer, is it not a token of more than beastly blockishnesse, and that we haue no mynde at all of the heauenly life, and that wee conceyue no more than we see, like as the brute beastes do? But when it is tolde vs that Satan ceaseth out to go about the worlde, but continually foloweth the chace, and is neuer idle, wee must profite our selues by that doctrine. And why? Bycause he being the enimie of our welfare, desireth nothing els but to leade vs into the same destruction wherevnto he himselfe is come. As concerning that God sayeth here, Haſt thou not marked my seruant Iob, how he is an ypright and sounde man, which feareth God and withholdeth himselfe from euill? This is to do vs to vnderstand, that God spyteth Satan in those to whom he hath giuen the grace to walke according to his will. And herein we see vpon what condition God hath set vs in this world, namely that we should be here as mirrors of his vertue. For when he giueth vs the grace to gouerne our selues by his holie Spirit, he setteth vs as it were vpon a scaffold, to the end that his gracious goodnesse and mercie shoulde be knowne in vs, and therevpon he himselfe might be glorified agaynst Satan in our persones. And sure the honor is inestimable which God doeth vnto vs, when he choozeth vs, I say when he choozeth vs poore wormes of the earth, to be glorified in vs agaynst Satan, and to make his triumphes by vs. Let vs consider what a thing this is towards men. Alas: And can God drawe any thing out of men, that may serue to his glorie? It is very certaine that he cannot: for there is nothing in them but euill. But what then? After that God hath chozen vs, he sheadeth out his holy spirit vpon vs, and giueth vs of his grace, where through it is his will to be glorified in our persones, and so maketh he his triumphes agaynst his enimies. And hereby we be admonished, not to thinke it a straunge matter, if it please God to exercyse vs with store of incounters and temptations. But rather when wee perceyue that God keepeth vs occupied: the fruite that commeth of our incounters ought to content vs throughly: that is to wit, that God is glorified, and that his power is knowne, in such wise as Satan is confounded in all his assaults. Seing then that the issue of our conflicts is such and so happie: I pray you, ought wee not to beare them patiently? Moreouer, like as God spyteth Satan in the persone of Iob: so also haue we wherewith to spyte all our enimies, when this protection of Gods is well printed in our hartes, so as we know how it is he that dwelleth and reigneth in our hartes by his holy spirit, & that it is he which fenceth vs, and which is a bulwarke and fortress to vs. Marke also what Sainct Paule sayeth in the. viij. to the Romanes. For after he hath shewed that the faythfull are inuincible when the spirit of God beareth them record of their lyfe: he sayeth that although they haue not receyued him fully and perfectly: yet notwithstanding (yea though they had receyued but some one small drop) the same is the seede of lyfe, to assure them that God will accomplish that which he hath begonne. Seing then that the faithfull haue such an assurance, that God hath giuen them of his holie spirit, to shewe vnto them that he will be their father to the ende: therevpon they may lift vp their voyces and mindes, and vaunt themselues against Satan, against death, and against all thinges. And wherfore? Because nothing is able to put them from the sayd loue which God beareth them, and which he hath once shewed to them in our Lord Iesus Christ. Thus we see how we must do, and what we haue to holde vs to, as shal be layd forth more at large hereafter, specially when we come to declare what the mischieues were that Satan wrought against Iob, and how we ought to take them. 10

 But at this present I do but onely touch that which is necessarie for this present purpose. Let vs come to that which is in the text, where mention is made of Iobs vprightnesse. True it is that I haue already declared all that matter, so as it were but superfluous to make a new discourse of the things that haue bene touched heretofore. It shall suffice for vs to make a short rehearsal of them, to the intent to bring that thing to our remembrance which is greatly for our profite to know. Marke then wherfore the holy Ghost hath declared the life of Iob new againe: 20
 It is to the ende it should be as a patterne for vs to shape our selues like vnto it. Is it our desire to frame our liues to Godward, and to his seruice? Then must we first of all haue this sayd soundnesse of hart, that we be not double, and that we serue not God in outward appeerance only, with our feete, handes, and eyes: but that our hart march afore, and that we haue a pure and single meaning to giue our selues ouer vnto God, to be wholly his, and to abhorre all hypocrisie. Behold at what point we must begin, if we meane to haue our life well ruled, and allowed of God. For vprightnesse must in any wise spring of the feare of God: that is to say, we must shewe outwardly what lieth hid within vs: so as if the roote be good, it shall by and by bring forth good fruites, that our workes may beare record how our protestation of seruing God and of assuring our selues of all things at his hand, is not vayne. And this consisteth in two things: namely that we deale with vprightnesse & equitie amog our neighbours: (mark me that for a speciall point) and also that we haue a religiouesnesse in vs to serue God, imputing all vnto him. And this vprightnesse tendeth not to the end that ech one of vs should shrinke aside by himselfe, to seeke his owne profite: but that we should communicate all together, according as God hath bound and knit vs together into one bodie, so as euery man haue a care to serue his neighbors turne, & to mainteyne this brotherly communion and equitie of not doing that to another which we would not haue done to our selues. Thus see we how God proueth what we be: that is to wit, whether we liue vprightly amog men without hurting or hindering of any man, or rather whether we labour to do seruice vnto all men. For the principallpoynnt is, that we referre all vnto God, acknowledging our selues to be wholly his, and that it is reason that our life & our death be offered vnto him in sacrifice: that we worship him, that we do homage vnto him for the things that he hath giuen into our handes, that we confesse how he ought to haue all superioritie ouer vs, that we protest it by our prayers and requestes, and that we shewe how it is he that is our whole refuge, and how it is he to whom we are beholding for all things. Lo here the record which it becoueth vs to yeelde, of the soundnesse that is hidden in our hart, as of a roote that is hidden in the earth. But for asmuch as the case so standeth that we can not walke as it becommeth vs to Gods lyking, except wee vterly withdraw our selues from euill: This also is well attributed vnto Iob, and vnder his persone we are aduertised, that wee shall neuer serue God without great difficulties and many hinderances which the Diuell stir-reth vp: so as if wee will keepe the right way, it behoueth vs to leape ouer the trenches, to steppe ouer the stones, and to marche among thornes. And thus wee see the manifolde incombrances that are cast afore vs, to turne vs aside from walking as God hath appoynted, yea and euen to marre vs altogether. But what for that? Let vs learne to put this lesson in vre, that Iob serued God by withdrawing himselfe from euill. So then, when we see the whole worlde corrupted, so as wee be as it were among briers, and can see nothing but euill examples: let vs resist all such things. For why? If wee be so lazic as to make excuse, that bycause the worlde is wicked and froward, wee may well do as other do: that is ouerfond. For lo, here is Iob set before vs to condemne vs. For if he in those dayes withdrew himselfe from euill: ought not wee to do the like in these dayes too? Specially seeing that God giueth vs warning, that wee cannot liue hoily without great battelles and great hardinesse? And what more? He giueth vs the grace to ouercome all Satans assaultes, in such wise as there is no excuse for vs, if wee do not as Iob hath done. For he liued not in a time when all things were well ordered, or where men were as Angelles: No, no: he liued among idolaters: abundance of wickednesse reigned in his time: and there was as greate store of vice in the world then, as there is at this day. And yet for all that, Iob folowed not the bent of other mens bowes, as the Prouerb sayth: But he retyled into himselfe, being well assured that he ought to serue God. So then, let vs not in these dayes alledge the corruptnesse of our time, in that all is turned topsituerie: But rather let vs consider that God by meane thereof prouoketh vs to be so muche the carefuller to shunne the thing that may infect vs. For in asmuch as wee see how vices are as it were an euill ayre: we must flee from them, in case as if one should tell me that my meate were poysoned, I would haue no minde to meddle with it: or as if a man should tell me there were daunger in a place, I would not come there. And why then are not wee carefull, seeing that God himselfe sheweth vs that all the vices in the worlde are as badde as deadly plagues? And sith that God hath giuen Iob the grace to withhold himselfe so from euill: Let vs not doubt but he will asisist vs at this day with like power. But finally and in conclusion it is sayde, that Satan ment as it were to haue spyted God, saying, That Iob serued him not for naught, for so much as he had blisfed him in such wise euen vnto that day, that he prospered in all his affayres. So then (sayeth Satan) Iob may be an hypocrite for ought that is knowne: but if thou touche him with thine hande, thou shalt see what will come of it. VVee see here how the Diuell laboreth on all sides to ouerwhelme vs, and when he seeth that he getteth nothing by one poynnt, he deuisech and practizeth some other new tricke. For the wyles are infinite whiche he forgeth in his shop: and therefore it behoueth vs the more to stande vpon our garde. It is certayne (as I haue sayde already) that prosperitie corrupteth men more than all the afflictions of the worlde do. For riches are willingly accompanied with pryde, pompe, contempt of God, crueltie, craftinesse, and all other such like things: and they bring with them all delighes and pleasures, in such sorte, as a man becommeth altogether beastly. But Satan came so farre short of winning any thing at Iobs hande by this meanes: that he turned himselfe to the other side, and made sute that he might bee tryed by affliction. And by the way wee must consider, that God knoweth right well what is requisite for the tryall, as well of our fayth as of our obedience, and that he needeth not to be counselled by the Diuell.

Diuell. But this is sayde expreffely vnto vs, to do vs to wit, that if God sende pouertie vpon vs, or afflict vs, he doth it partly to the ende wee should bethinke our felues, and not bee puffed vppe any more for prosperitie than for aduersitie: and partly to teache vs to pray vnto him according to the necessities that oppresse vs. Herewithall wee muste also marke, that the Diuell is alwayes at our elbowe to ouerthrowe vs if he can: so as if wee scape from him on the one side, he stirres vp a newe temptation againe on the other side. To bee shorte, that which is sayde in one woorde in Zacharie, is declared to vs here at large: that is to wit, that Satan is the accuser and the aduersarie of all the children of God, according also as in the Apocalips it is sayde that he is the accuser of our brethren. And it is expresly shewed vnto Zacharie in that vision, that Satan did set himselfe to accuse Iosua the hygh Priest as the head of the Church and as a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christe, whome he came thither to accuse before God. And so, considering that wee haue so strong a partie, and that Satan laboreth by all means possible to throw vs downe, notwithstanding that wee haue bene long tyme fenced by the hande of God: wee perceyue wee haue greete neede, that Iesus Christe should be our aduocate, and that he should maynteyne vs by his power against Satan, that we bee not intrapped by his wyles and policies. Thus we see wherof we be warned in this sentece: to the end we should betake our felues to God, beseeching him to strengthen vs against the réptatiōs of Satan, in such wise as we may neuer be vanquished, for asmuch as the Lord shall stablish vs in the inuincible power of his holy spirite.

Therefore lette vs caste our felues downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes: beseeching him to make vs feele them better, so as wee may bee displeas'd with our felues for them, and mourne before his Maiestie: and that in desiring pardon according to the measure of our offences, wee may request him also, that he will not suffer vs to be turned any more from his obedience, but rather that wee may continue in it to the ende: and that he will so print in our hartes the sayde soundnesse whiche he hath inioyned vs, as wee may not in any respect couet any thing faue onely to yelde to him that which is his dewe, that is to wit, that he may be knowledged to be the author of all goodnesse and welfare, and that wee may do him seruice, liuing in true brotherlynesse with our neighbours, withholding vs from all wrong doing, and doing good to all men, to the ende to withstand all the troubles and temptations of this worlde, vntill wee be come to the kingdome of Heauen. That it may please him to giue this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant soules from the miserable bondage of error and darkenesse, to the right waye of saluation. For the doing whereof, it may please him to rayse vp true and faythfull ministers of his woorde, that seeke not their owne profite and vayneglorie, but only the aduancement of his holy name, and the welfare of his stocke: and cōtrariwysely roote out all sectes, errors, and heresies, which are seedes of trouble and diuision among his people, to the ende we may liue in good brotherly concord all togither: and that it may please him to guyde with his holy spirit, all Kings, Princes, and Magistrates, that haue the rule of the sworde, to the end that their reygning be not by couetousnesse, crueltie, tyrannie, or any other euill and disordered affection, but in all iustice and vprightnesse: and that we also liuing vnder thé, may yelde them their dewe honor and obedience, that by the meane of good peace and quietnesse, we may serue God in all holinesse and honestie: and that it may please him to comfort all afflicted persons, whom he visiteth after diuers maners with crosses and tribulatiōs: all people whom he afflicteth with plague, warre, or famin or other his rodde: and all persones that are smitten with pouertie, imprisonment, sicknesse, banishment or other calamitie of bodie or vexatiō of mind: giuing them all good pacience, till he sende them full discharge of their miseries: and specially that it may please him to haue pitie vpon al his poore faythfull ones, that are disperfed in the Captiuitie of Babylon vnder the tyrannie of Antichrist, chiefly which suffer persecutiō for the witnessings of his truth, strengthening them with true constancie, & comforting them, and not suffering the wicked and rauening woolues to execute their rage against them, but giuing them such a true stedfastnesse as his holy name may be glorified by them both in life and death: and finally that it may please him to strēgthen all Churches that are now adayes in daunger and assaulted for the quarell of his holy name, and ouerthrowe and destroy all the deuyfes, practyces, and attempts of all his aduersaries, to the intent that his glory may shine over all, and the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ be increased & aduanced more and more. Let vs pray him for all the sayd things in such wise as our good Master & Lord Iesus Christ hath taught vs to pray, saying: Our father, &c.

The fifth Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

9. Satan sayd to the Lorde: doth Iob feare the Lord for nothing?
10. Hast not thou bene a bulvvarke to him on al sides? Hast not thou fenced his house and al that he hath? Doest not thou prosper him in all his affayres? Is not his possession far enlarged?
11. But lay thy hand vpon him, and touch that vvhich he hath, and see if he vvil not curse thee to thy face.
12. The Lord sayd vnto Satan: I giue thee pover ouer all that he possesseth: but touche not his person. And Satan vvent out from the presence of the Lord.

Albeit that the Diuell do but his office here, that is to wit, peruert all goodnesse, and falsly accuse Iob as though he were an hypocrite: Yet neuerthelesse, in so doing he discouereth the euill which is in men willingly, and wherevnto wee be inclined by nature. For being wylie and politike as he is, he knoweth full well on which side to assaile vs. Let vs marke then, that here the Diuell bewrayeth a disease wherewith all of vs are atteynted, vntill God haue healed vs of it by his grace: that is to wit, that in time of prosperitie we can blisse God: but if he afflict vs, we change our minde, and thenceforth beginne to grudge against him, forgetting all the prayse which we had giuen him so long as he deale with vs after our desire. And so there be many hypocrytes which cannot be knowne nor discouered vntill God sende them aduersitie. For so long as they be at theyr ease, and in rest: they shew not the rebelliousnesse that is within them, but let it lie hid. Lo here the cause why the Scripture so oftentimes sheweth vs, that God tryeth those that are his, sifting them by afflictions, and casting them as it were gold into a furnace, not onely to purge them, but also to make them knowne: for to those two purposes do afflictions serue: that is to wit, God killeth the vices that are in vs. For when he punisheth vs, then are we tamed, and he commaundeth vs to withdrawe our selues from the worlde, and not to be giuen to our pleasures and fleshly delights. But there is yet a further thing: that is to wit, that like as in a furnace gold is tried to knowe whither it haue any drosse in it: so also God sheweth what we be, by afflicting vs. For men knowe not themselues before they haue bene so proued. Before wee haue passed through the siue, we seeme to our selues to feare God, and that there is nothing to be mistyked in vs: and yet all the while there be many vices in vs, that we know not of. It is God that sheweth them vnto vs, it is he that maketh vs to perceyue them: when he sendeth vs any trouble, or any aduersitie, then finde we what our infirmitie is. Now if God make the afflictions of his faythfull ones to serue them as a mirror wherein to behold themselues: it is much more likely that they will shewe what is in other men, whither they haue fayth and obedientnesse in their hartes or no, and whither they be hypocrites, or whither they serue him in truthe. Here ye see what we haue to marke in this streyne, and experience sheweth vs, that it is so. For we see a greate number, who when God sendeth them all things at their pleasure, do speake as sweete as sugre, as they say: and ye would maruell to heare how that good God shall be prayfed: specially when they finde their dishes full furnished, so as nothing is wanting, ô how well it liketh them to confesse that God is good. But if he beginne to handle them any thing roughly, that things fall not out to their contentation, they take it sore to hart. If God proceede and plucke their fetters from them: then fall they yet to further outrage of murmuring, yea and they belke out blasphemies against him: and albeit that they vtter them not with their mouth, yet is their hart full of poyson within, so as they chafe vpon the bit, and repine at God for handling them otherwise than they like of. Ye see then that in time of prosperitie there are ynow that will blisse God: but that is but hypocrisie, I speake of such only as meene not to do it in deede. For they be the worst which sooth themselues in such wise as they perceyue not their owne vices. Sith the cace standeth so, let vs marke that Satan hath in this point had an eye to the diseases wherwith men are atteynted. And so we see with what an enimie we haue to do: he lieth in wayte for vs & prieth about vs on all sides, to spie where he may haue any entrance to wound vs. Therefore let vs beare well in minde, that when we shall haue prayfed God, and serued him in time of prosperitie: that is not all that we haue to do: but we must put our selues in a readinesse, that when soeuer it shal please God to scourge vs, to exercise vs with manifold miseries and inconueniences, we notwithstanding must bridle our selues, & haue the lowlinesse to submit our selues vnto him, and to receyue all his chastizements patiently & quietly. If we be not come to this trial, that is to say, if we be not paciēt when God scourgeth vs: all the seruice that we do vnto him wil be no great matter. True it is that God will well accept those that be his, euen in the time of their prosperitie: howbeit for asmuch as it behoueth vs to consider why he maketh vs to passe thoroowe the sayde boultell of affliction: therefore must wee the better beare away this lesson here. And furthermore wheras it is sayd here, that men will curse God to his face when they be combered with afflictions: true it is that this commeth not to passe at the first pushe. For as yet a while there will remayne some reuerence of God who is imprinted in vs: so as if we be put to some hard pinche, no doubt but wee will groyne at it and repyne against it secretly: but to open our mouth to blaspheme God, it will as yet go agaynst our nature. But when we haue thus fretted and chafed at it, if the miserie increace still, or continew very long: then doth our impacience kinde as a fyre, and we beginne to flush out that which had erst hene locked vp in our hartes. Thus wee see how at length they that are afflicted do curse God to his face: that is to say, how they ouershoote themselues out of measure, so as they regarde not any more the Maiestie of God to humble themselues vnto it, ne consider that if they are become rebelles against him, they shall not any more attayne to take holde of his iudgement which restreyned them from rushing into such outrage. And therefore good cause haue we to pray vnto God to bridle our tungen as well as our hartes, and not to suffer vs at any time to fall into such excessse as to curse him openly: but rather that the issue of the chastizementes which he sendeth may be so lucky to vs, as they may turne to our profite and welfare, according as his intent is that they should do, when he scourgeth vs. Lo what we haue to gather of this streyne. And by the way let vs marke that although Satan be the father of lying, yet he speaketh truth here, when he sayeth that God had bene as a Bulwarke to Job, and had fenced his house on all sides, and that he had made him to prosper. Beholde how he turneth himselfe into an Angell of light. For asmuch as he was before God, it stooode him in hande to set a fayre color on his matters, for there was no place for him to vse suche trumperie as he vseth towards men to deceyue them. Thus Satan groundeth himselfe vpon true principles: but that was to apply them vnto euill: for his desire was nothing els but to destroy Job. And he sayeth, that God had bene a bulwarke to him. Then let vs vnderstand, that if we will be maynteyned in this worlde, God must needes put to his hand. For what is our life: and to how many necessities is it subiect? Therefore we could not stand one minute of an houre, if we were not preferued by the grace of God. In like wise is it with all things that we possesse: God must be fayne to fence vs. And who I pray you is he that speaketh here? It is euen Satan, whose comming is of purpose to ouerwhelme vs, both in our goods and in our persones, if we be not (as you would say) well walled, so as God serue vs for a bulwarke, according also as we shal see him to be in the processe of the text. For as soone as Satan hath his leaue, we see howe he raketh away all Iobs goods from him, and with what violēce he goes about it. Therefore it was requisite that Job should be fenced all the while aforehand by the grace of God, and that it should serue to rāpyre him round about. And this lesson is greatly for our profite. For hereby we be warned to pray vnto God, that it may please him to defend vs, for asmuch as while wee be in this worlde, wee are as it were in a wilde woode full of robbers. And here we see also why the Scriptures attribute these tittles vnto him: namely that he is our buckler and shielde, our wall and trench, our rampyre and bulwarke, our towre and fortresse. VVherefore dothe the Scripture vse so many woordes to be token that Gods protection is of force? It is to teach vs, that without him we should perishe a hundred thousande times a day, and therefore that he must be faine to watch continually for our safetie. VVe see then (as I haue sayd) how it is requisite that men should acknowledge their life

2. Cor. 1. d.
14.

to be nothing, considering how it is so frayle as nothing can be more, & how it is subiect to an infinite number of deaths, in so much that they be thereby stirred vp to pray God to take them into his tuicion: and when they shall haue liued one day, they must acknowledge that they were maintayned by God, and vnto him must they yeeld the prayse of all. Lo what we haue to marke in this streyne. For if Satan who is the enemie of all truth, do cōfesse how it is God that is mans defence, & is cōpelled to say so, as if he were vpō a racke: seing God hath made vs to taste of his working, and made vs to feele it: what an vnthankfulnesse shal it be if we confesse lesse than Satan hath done, who desireth nothing els but to deface or rather vtterly to abolish Gods gracious goodnesse, by his lying, so as it might not be knowne at all? So then wee see that such as thinke not of this protection of God, are worse than the Diuell, and needes must it be that they are turned into brute beasts, or rather altogether bewitched. Thus much concerning that woord. Consequently it is sayd, That God gaue Satan leaue to do what he listed with all Iobs goodes, condicionally that he touched not his persone. Here at the first blushe a man might maruell, why God did so giue ouer his seruauant Iob to Satans pleasure: is it meete that the Diuell should haue such credite with God, that when he craueth leaue to worke vs mischief, God should graunt it him? It seemeth that God fauoueth him, and that he maketh sport with vs in the meane while as with a tennis ball. But let vs marke, that whē God graūeth Satan this thing, he doth it not to pleasure him, neyther is he moued of any fauour that he beareth towards him: but bicause he hath ordeyned it in his own purpose: he is not moued by Satans sute, nor perswaded by him to suffer Iob to be so punished. He had already so determined in his owne purpose. Before Satan had vttered any worde, or made any such petition, God was minded to punish his seruauant, and he minded it for iust cause, the which he hath disclosed vnto vs: & though the same were to vs vnkowne, yet muste we lay our hand vpon our mouth and say, that God is righteous and vnpartiall in all that he doeth. Thus ye see the first point that we haue to marke: that is to wit, that God here graūted not Satans request as though he had bene moued by his sute: but for as much as he was minded of his owne good will to chastize Iob: therefore he graunted Satan his demaunde: verily euen to spyte Satan, and to haue the greater triumph agaynst him in putting him to confusion. For Satan made full reckening that Iob should haue cursed God to his face, that is to say, that he should haue blasphemed him with open mouth, when he came to be beaten so roughly. And why did Satan so? For he considered what we are of our selues: that is to wit, how we be as fleeting as water, and that all our strength is nothing. But in the meane while he had no vnderstanding of Gods grace, how strong and inuincible the same is in vs. True it is that he feeleth it, and that he hath experience of it spite of his hart: and yet for all that, he knoweth it not a whit. And see how he is deceyued, see wherypon he maketh his reckening: namely that if he can get leaue to tormēt vs, we shal be vanquished out of hande, we shal be swalowed vp of heauinesse by and by, and that we will fal into despayre & blaspheme God. Lo what Satan hopeth, and what he pretendeth to do. Marke it well. But God will resist him, and disappoint him of his hope. For he will send the grace of his holy Ghost before hand, and so shal Satan be confounded when he sees he hath no power to compass the thing that he ment to haue attempted agaynst Gods seruauants, but all goes backward and cleane contrarie to his intent: God therefore knowing what the issue of Iobs afflictions should be had determined in his own purpose to scourge him, and so you may see he did it not at Satans instigation. VVhy then doth the holy Scripture tell vs here, that it was done at Satans request? That is for two causes. First, that when we be beaten with Gods roddes, we might know that Satan procured it, yea euen to cast vs into despayre. And this is it which S. Paule sheweth vs in the text which Eph. 6. b. 12. hath bene alleaged a few dayes ago: namely that we haue battell agaynst spirituall powers, and not agaynst flesh and blood. As often then as any euill befall vs, let vs be sure that Satan hath practized it agaynst vs: to the end we may withstād him by faith: and that we being fenced & armed with the mightie power of God, and knowing that Satan hath so great power ouer vs, may retyre our selues to the refuge of him that is able to strengthen vs. Here ye see wherynto the Scripture had an eye in that cace. And now for the secōd poynt, the Scripture meaneth to shew Gods fatherly loue towards vs, in so much as he supporteth vs as his little babes, and giueth not any such libertie ouer vs, as our enemie would very faine haue, specially that he might take his pleasure in afflicting vs, were it not that he knoweth how the same is for our singular welfare. True it is that we must be fully resoluēd vpon this poynt, namely that though we know not wherefore God punisheth vs, we must alwayes acknowledge the same to be rightfull. But yet therewithall it behoueth vs moreouer to haue this lesson printed in our harts: namely that God loueth vs so tenderly, that he desireth nothing but to bring vs home againe, in so much that he spareth vs, and holdeth vs as it were in his lap, for so we see that the Scripture speaketh. Now then, when we see Satan come to kindle the fire, & that he hath sewed vnto God to haue Iob persecuted: let vs marke how the Scripture sheweth vs, that God hadleth vs not so roughly without cause, and yet that it is not at the sute of our enemie, (for he would desire nothing so much as to keepe vs in rest and at our own ease, if it were expedient for vs:) but bicause it is good for vs to be so exercised by afflictions, yea euen at Satans hand: and well doth God permit him so to do, forasmuch as he knoweth it to be good and profitable for vs. Marke (I say) what we haue to note here. And to proue that it is so, let vs take a cōtrarie example. In the last Chapter of the first booke of Kings, it 1. Kings, the last Chapt. is likewise sayd that God hild an Assyse: and there is such another description as is here, how the Prophet had seene God set in his chayre of estate, and how he demaunded there, VVho is it that shall beguyle me Achab? Satan preuēted not God in that cace, nother came he aforehand to say, If thou wilt giue me leaue to beguyle Achab, I will do whatsoeuer thou wilt haue me to do. But God beginneth, saying: where shall I finde a lying spirit to go and deceyue Achab? for I see he will needes be drowned euen into the bottome of hell. And wherfore is it that God speaketh so? Euen bycause the cace stood vpon executing of iust vengeance vpon an hypocrite, a despyser full of crueltie, and a mortall enemie of all goodnesse. Achab was a man that had peruerted al Gods seruice vtterly, and was wholly defiled with his owne Idolles: and therewithall also is full of sturdinesse and malice agaynst the Prophetes, and would giue no eare to any admonition. VVhen he was thus hardened in his sinnes, in such sort as a man could gayne nothing by seeking to bring him into the right way: after that God had assayed all wayes, & saw he was a man forlorne: then he hild his assyses, and demaunded who was he that would deceyue Achab: for it was Gods will to execute the office of a iudge. VVe see then, that when God meaneth to punish wicked folke, and to execute his wrath vpon the according to their deserts: he tarieth not till he be moued to it by Satan, but preuēteth him. In this present text when question is had of punishing Job, that is to say, that God dealeth roughly with one of his owne children, needes must the same come to passe by the pursute of the enimie. Lo here the diuersitie which sheweth vs the reason why Satans request is graunted him in this text. So then let vs marke well, that the Scripture meaneth by all meanes to teache vs to glorifie God continually, that we knowing his goodnesse towardes vs, might take occasion to magnifie him, and therewithall that we should vnderstande how his vengeance is iust agaynst all wicked persons, and that if he punishe them, he doeth but his office, to the ende he may bee feared, reuerenced, and honored of all the world, and thus ye see what we haue to beare in minde. But by the way a man may thinke it straunge how God is serued so by Satan. But I haue told alreadie, that we shall by and by wanze away like water, if wee bee not fully perswaded of this poynt, that the Diuelles are in such wyie vnder Gods guydance, as they can do nothing without his leaue. Yet is there a further matter, that is to wit, that the Diuelles are as it were Gods hangmen to execute his iudgements and the punishments which he will haue done vpon the wicked. Also they are as his roddes whereby he chastizeth his children. To bee short, it behoueth the Diuell to be the instrument of Gods wrath, and to execute his will: not that he doeth it of his owne voluntarie good will as I haue sayd, but because God hath the soueraine dominion ouer all his creatures, so as they must needes yeelde vnto him, and turne themselues whether soeuer he thinketh good. But here is one great diuersitie which we must marke. For when God hath giuen Satan leaue to punish Job, he sayeth to him: Behold, thou mayst worke thy spite vpon all his substance, but touche not his persone. And againe, after he hath destroyed all his goodes, he sayeth: thou mayst touch his persone, but thou shalt not come neere his soule. Herein againe we see how God referueth alwayes the soule of Job, so as Satan can no more but torment him in goods, and in his mortall life, and in his honor: for he had not the power to enter into his soule to seduce him, and to make him to burst out into impaciencie. This will be the better vnderstood by a contrarie similitude. When God giueth Satan commission to execute his wrath vpon the vnbeleeuers, he not onely permitteth him to punish them in their goods, and with sicknesse and diseases, or in some other maner: but also he goeth further, which is, that he giueth him power to leade them into error, and to deceyue them as we haue alreadie alleaged in the example of Achab. Behold how God sayeth, VVho shall beguyle me Achab? And Satan sayd, I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of al his Prophets. VVe see there a farre larger commission than this is here. For the matter is not only that Achab should be beguiled by some outward meanes. But we see that the Prophets must beguile him vnder the shadow of truth. And that is it that S. Paule meaneth by saying, that when men haue no minde to obey God and his truth, nor wil to frame themselues therunto: and aboue al when God hath bene so gracious as to manifest himselfe vnto them, and to shew them the way of saluation: if they be so vnhappy to reiect so great grace of God and to refuse it: then behold, God sendeth them false prophets & deceyuers, who not only shall peruert all good doctrine, but also shal be beleued: for he will giue them speedinesse in error. It behoueth vs to wey wel this saying, according also as it importeth much. For what is met by this speedefulnesse of error? It is when God withdraweth his brightnesse from vs, wherby our wittes are dazeled and we become so dull, that we discern no more than brute beasts: but although the pit lye wide open before vs, yet we stumble into it without seing of it a whit. And why so? Bicause there is no more aduisednesse or wisdome in vs, for asmuch as God hath giuen Satan power to mocke vs and beguyle vs, yea and euen to blinde vs and bewitch vs in such wise, as we wote not which way to turne vs, that we tumble not into some new snare or other. Behold (I say) how God worketh toward the vnbeleeuers and reprobates: namely that he giueth Satan speedinesse of error, to intrap them, and they shall neuer perceyue it. But he dealeth not so towards such as are his, when he afflicteth them. For although Satan assault them: yet notwithstanding they be alwayes preserued, & haue wherewith to beate back his temptations. For God hath armed thé with his owne power, so as Satan can do no more than he hath leaue to do: and God putteth a barre in his way, in such fort as he is hild short in euery mischiefe that he steppeth forth vnto, and can do nothing further than Gods good pleasure licceth him. Thus ye see what we haue to mark. And herewithall we haue to obserue further, that Gods iudgements are of such a fort, as he executeth them both vpon good and bad. True it is that if we will folow our owne opinion: we might wonder how it should come to passe, that God giueth such autoritie and preeminence vnto Satan, as to be able to leade vs amisse. This wil be a very straunge thing to our owne imagination. But what then? Seing that the Scripture telleth vs so, it behoueth vs to humble our selues, and to wayte till the day come that we may better conceyue Gods secretes which are incōprehensible to vs at this day, & therefore we must learne to magnifie them, and to honour Gods iudgements, hauing them in reuerence and admiratiō, vntill they may be better knowne vnto vs. For we haue too small a capacite to know them throughly as now. Therefore we must walke in humilitie, cōtenting our selues to know but in part, vntill full knowledge be disclosed vnto vs at the latter day. But how soeuer the case stand, we must not be ignorā in that which the Scripture sheweth vs: that is to wit, that God serueth his own turne by Satan, in such wise as Satā is alwayes readie to seduce men when they haue deserued it: and specially when they refuse to obey the truth, then must they needes be caried away vnto lyes. As concerning the faythfull God doth now & then leaue them also vnto Satan, so as they be seduced by him, like as Job was not exempted from that inconuenience in the end. And also we see what is sayd of Dauid in the holy stories. For wherof came it that he numbered the people? The text reporteth how it was the Diuell that stirred vp all the mischief, when Dauid numbered so the people of God. Dauid thé being one of Gods children, was notwithstanding sometimes deliuered into the power of Satan, to be beguyled by him. Now when we see this, we haue good cause to pray vnto God, and to come shrowd our selues vnder the shadow of his winges, and there to hyde vs. For if such things befell vnto Dauid, what shall become of vs? Herewithall let vs also marke, that whē God giueth Satan such sway ouer the faithfull: it is not for a little whyle. And here ye may see why it is sayd, that Satans dominion is ouer the vnbeleeuers and vpon all the stubborneharted. It is not without cause that Sainct Paule maketh this distinction. He worketh euen now (sayeth he) in all the vnbeleeuers. Thus placeth he the reigne of Satan, in them that are separated from GOD and cut off from his Church. And wherfore? For there we see he is in his owne boundes. But when he hath power to wound the children of God, our Lorde permitteth that to humble them: to the ende that when they be so grievously tormented, and yet doo all the whyle resist the assaults that are made vpon them, they shoulde vnderstande that that that commeth not of themselves, but that they be vphild otherwise, that is to wit, by the grace of God, and by the power of his holy spirit. So then, when God giueth Satan leaue to tempt faithful ones: ordinarily it is to make them to be serued therewith as with a medicine. And herein we see Gods maruelous goodnesse, how he turneth the euill into good. For what can Satan bring but ranke poyson and venim? Yea we know he hath nothing with him but death: for he is called the Prince thereof.

2. Theß. 2. c.
10.

1. Chron. 21.
4. 1.

Eph. 2. 4. 3.

Heb. 2. 14. So then, whatsoeuer Satan can bring, it tendeth altogether to mens destruction, and to the drowning of them in endlesse damnation. And yet notwithstanding, God findeth the meane that the euill which is in Satan, is turned to our welfare. And here we see how Sainct Paule was physiked, as he himself confesseth, after he had spoken of the hygh reuelacions that had bene giuen vnto him. God (sayeth he) hath prouided that I should not exalt my selfe to much. Lo here a good prouision and very profitable for Sainct Paule. For we know that pryde is readie to throwe vs headlong into the bottomlesse pit, and that there is nothing that prouoketh Gods displeasure more: for needs must he alway shewe himselfe an enemy to the prowde, and to such as presume vpon their owne strength in what wyse so euer it be. And Sainct Paule was in the same daunger, if God had not remedied it. In what sort did he it? It was (sayeth Paule) by sending me the messenger of Satan to buffet me. See how Satan worketh in sainct Paule, yea euen by Gods permission. And what was the issue of it? Out of doubt Satan ment to haue ouerwhelmed Paule, and his intent was to haue driuen him into wickednesse, to the end he should haue giuen ouer the seruice of God, and by little and little withdrawne himself from Christianitie, by reason of the wearisome troubles and miseries which he endured without ceasing. Lo here what Satan intended. But what for that? God purposed another ende: namely to brydle his seruant, that he should not forget himselfe, and so exalt himselfe to much. And for this cause was he buffeted. For he vseth the sayde similitude of buffeting for the nonce: as who would say, God vsed him not as a man of armes that fighteth in the felde, to giue him a glorious victorie: but buffeted him like a boy to his shame and reproch. Thus the holy Apostle whom God had endewed with so excellent giftes of the holy Ghost, was so farre made an vnderling to Satan, that Satan spitted in his face and wrought him many other villanies. VVe see then how God turneth the euill into good, when he maketh all Satans stinges to serue vs as medicines, wherby he purgeth vs of the vyces that lye hid in vs. And therefore we haue cause to prayse God in all respects, yea euen though that at the first sight his iudgements be ouer boystous to our imagination, and that we be not able to cōceyue them by our fleshly vnderstanding. VVhen we haue well considered all, we shall euermore haue wherefore to magnifie God. Thus much as touching this streyne, wherein it is sayd that God gaue Satan leaue to punish Iob, howbeit so as he forwarned him that he should not touche his persone. In effect, we haue to marke, that when God giueth Satan libertie to assaile vs in such sorte as he maketh many sore assaultes vpon vs: Yet neuertheless he goeth all by measure, as one that knoweth what we be able to beare, and what is expedient for vs. Finally it is sayd, That Satan went out from the presence of the Lord. Not that Satan did what he list as if God sawe him not any more: but to signifie vnto vs what the furie of Satan is, and what is his accustomed maner of dealing: that is to wit, that he did the worst he could, without regarding that he is subiect to God, and that he vsed his owne rebelliousnesse, in making hauock of Iobs goodes: howbeit that there is yet one thing more ment by that saying: that is to wit, that Satan did in effectually deede shewe the leaue that he had gotten. For I haue tolde you already, that this streyt determination of God, which was vnknowne to men, is now declared to vs here. For whereas the Scripture telleth vs the things which are apparant vnto vs, as how Iob was by and by spoyled of all his goodes, how his children were slayne, and how he himselfe was sore plagued in his owne persone: these things were commonly knowen to all men. But all men knewe not that which was rehearsed afore: that is to wit, that God hilde his assyses, and that all was disposed by his ordinance, and nothing happened without his prouidence. They that haue the eyes of faith to comprehend this, haue the vnderstanding of it. The residue, perceyue but onely the things that were done outwardly. And here we see wherefore it is sayd, that Satan went out from the presence of the Lord. For the holy Scripture putteth a difference betweene the outward things that are done, and the purpose of God which is not knowne but to the faythfull, which list vp themselves about their owne reason and about all their naturall wittes. For we shall neuer attayne to the knowledge of Gods Maiestie, except we be caried vp about all our owne abilitie. And now the Scripture returneth to the storie, when it sayeth that Satan is departed from the presence of the Lord: that is to say, it was visibly perceyued and after an apparant maner how he punished Iob. Thus we see what is ment thereby. The residue is alwayes to expresse the nature of Satan: which is, that he with an inordinate rage casteth out fyre and flame as though he would make a cleane dispatch of all together: and to be short, how it is his office to tempt men, as it appeareth in the place where Iesus Christ was tempted, where it is sayd, Behold, he that tempteth. This terme and title of Tempter is attributed peculiarly vnto Satan. And why so? To the ende we should know, that he seeketh nothing but to destroy all, and to put mankind to confusion. Thus we see that all his diligence, all his going about and all his trotting vp and downe, is to leade vs with him to destruction: and for that purpose desireth he to be exempted from obedience vnto God, that he might turne all vpside downe. Seing we know this, wee ought to be so much the more prouoked to pray vnto God, to take vs into his hande and tuition. For when he receyueth vs, we be in safetie from all the troubles that Satan can practize agaynst vs. But if God once withdrawe himselfe from vs, or do but onely slacke his hande a little, by and by we shall be overcome by Satan. VVe see then how we be taught, on the one side to humble our selues, and to walke in feare and warinesse, and on the other side to call vpon God, assuring our selues that as long as we be succoured by him, wee shall want nothing: yea, and that although wee be fayne to fight against great distresses: yet we shal be sure of the victorie, which he hath promised to all those that are his.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our God, praying him to make vs perceyue the euilles that are in vs, and that vpon the knowing of them, euery one of vs may feele himself full of infirmitie, yea euen of the outrageous vices, for the which wee well deserue to be thrust out of his presence. And herewithall let vs pray, him to strengthen vs in such wyse by his holy spirit, as we may blisse him continually both in prosperitie and aduersitie: & that we may not desire any other thing than to please him in all points, and to yeelde our selues wholly vnto him: And that although we haue to do with an enemy that is ouerstrong and ouer boystous, whom we be not able to resist and to beate backe his blowes: yet notwithstanding, through the mayntenance and power of our good God, we may continew in his obeyfance vnto the end: that is to say, euē vntill he haue gathered vs home to himself, to make vs parttakers of that most happie triumph, which he hath prepared for vs in his heauenly glorie. Thus he will graunt this benefite and grace, not only vnto vs, but also, &c.

The sixth Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

13. One day as his Sonnes and Daughters were eating and drinking of wine in their elder brothers house,
14. A messenger came vnto Iob and sayd: The Oxen were laboring, and the Shee asses were feeding by,
15. And behold the Sabzans brake in vpon them and tooke them, and haue slayne thy seruants with the edge of the sworde, And I am escaped alone to bring thee woord of it.
16. And as he was yet speaking, Behold there was another which sayd, The fyre of God is fallen from Heauen, and hath burned vp thy Sheepe and thy seruants, And I only am escaped to bring thee woord of it.
17. And as he was yet speaking, behold another which sayd, The Chaldees haue made three bandes and brake in vpon thy Camels, and haue taken them away, and haue also smitten thy seruants with the edge of the svvord, And I only am escaped to come and tell thee.
18. As he vvas speaking, behold another, saying: Thy Sonnes and thy Daughters vvere eating and drinking of vvine in their elder brothers house,
19. Behold an hideous vvinde from the vvildernesse rufshed against the house, and crushed the foure Corners of it together, and it is fallen vpon the yong folke, and they be dead, And I am escaped alone to tell thee of it.

Psal. 34. b. 8.

It is sayd that Gods Angels incamp themselves round about the faithfull: and this present storie sheweth vs, how greatly it is for our behoofe to be so garded and fenced round about. For we see what the rage of Sathan is against all those that feare God. If we consider well what the state of our life is: we shall finde our selues subiect to a hundred thousand kinds of death, and that we cannot treade one step, but we shall be wounded and we haue skill enough to say, that man is nothing, considering the frayltie that is in him. But in the meane while we consider not sufficiently what the malice of Sathan is, who vnderpryeth vs, and practizeth all that he can against vs, to cast vs into despayre. And therefore our Lord is here minded to aduertise vs, what neede we haue to be garded by his Angels, which fight against all the assaults that Sathan intendeth against vs. For like as Sathan is an aduerfarie against vs: so doth God appoint his Angels to maintaine vs, and will haue them to be the workers of our welfare. Nowe, that we may the better vnderstand that which I haue touched: let vs first marke that Iob is punished here in sundrie sorts, that is to wit, in al his goods and in his children. Sathan was helde short so as he could not attempt any thing against his person, but onely against his goods. This sheweth full well, that God had giuen the vp into his hands, and afterward Iobs children also, which were as deare to him as his owne life. And there is yet one other poynt: which is, that Iob forewent not his goods and his children all after one maner: but the Diuell had a policie to sende him diuers temptations. For he stirred him vp enemies on the one side, and he himselfe serued to send downe lightning from the heauen, and tempests from the ayre on the other side. Lo how this seruant of God is tormented in diuers sorts. And it might augment his griefe and trouble him yet more, to thinke thus with himselfe. How now? Not onely men are contrary to me, but also God himselfe fighteth against mee. Behold here the craftynesse of Satan. True it is that this will seeme straunge to vs at the first push: and here we may see what hath moued some men to be of opinion, that God hath set vs downe here a certaine portraiture of pacience, and not a plaine storie or deede done. But suche men vnderstand not how God dealeth with his seruantes according to the measure of fayth which he hath distributed vnto them. How is that? VVe are not tempted all alike: for God hath not made vs all so strong as were requisite. There are some weakelings, and God supporteth them. And if he chastize them, it is to humble them, to the end they should take heede to themselves, and call vpo God more earnestly. There are other some farre more strong and stoute: and wherefore are they so? Bycause God hath powred out his spirit vpon them in much greater abundance. For (as I haue earst sayd) accordingly as God dealeth vnto vs of the strength that is in himself: so doth he exercise vs, & he will haue our fayth tried, which thing we are sure is not against our profit, howbeit that he onely know wherefore he doth it. He is not bound to vs to giue vs one droppe of strength, he may leaue vs in our owne weakenesse, to cause vs to be oppressed and vtterly destroyed euery minute of an howre. For in our selues we haue no meane to resist, sauing so farre forth as God strengtheneth vs by his grace. Yet notwithstanding (as I haue sayd) that is not all after one fashion. For the one sorte abyde weake still, and the other sorte haue a farre greater strength. And here we see wherefore the holie men that haue bene indewed with excellent graces, haue also bene much more tormented in their life. VVhich of vs hath bene so roughly dealt with as Abraham, or hath had so miserable a life as neuer to be in rest? For we see that God commaunded him to forsake his natie countrie: and when he had done so, he taried lingring in the middes of his journey, vntill his father was deceased by the way. In the ende he went into the countrie, and yet he wist not which way he should take nor whither he should go. For God vouchsafed not to tell him which was the Countrie that he called him vnto, but hild him as a foule vpon the water. VVhen he was come thither: some troubled him, other some spyed him, and he had nothing but vnquietnesse. VVithin a while, when the men had wrought him as muche spyte as they coule: famine persecuted him, so as he was fayne to get him away, and his wife was taken from him. Afterward when he returned: he was new to begin agayne, and he was fayne to go to another place to seeke pasture. And yet for all this, God sayd to him, Take no thought, I will giue thee this lande, and thou shalt be lorde and maister of it. Yea, but he sawe nothing. Of all this whyle he had not a place to settle in, and yet notwithstanding God promyseth to make him heire of the whole worlde. Afterwarde, whyle it was lykely that he should haue had issue, he had none, and yet was that the thing that should haue ben his comfort. He is olde and drouping, and yet God sayeth vnto him, Thou canst haue no welfare except thou haue issue. And howe coule that bee? for he is alreadie so aged as he could not wel tarrie for it. God hath giuen him Iſaell. But he must be banished and cut off from that house. After in the ende when he had Isaac according to the promise: God plucked that sonne of his from him, and sayd to him, Go kill him. This is yet more than we haue hearde of Iob: for if a father heare that his children be slayne with lightning, or else that some bodie hath murdered them: surely it muste needes be a great griefe to him, and hard to beare. But to goe kill his childe with his owne hande, that is a thing too extreme for him to do: But Abraham must come in place againe heere. Afterwarde when God had giuen him his sonne againe, as though he had ben raised vp fro death: he shewed him what maner of promise it was that he had made vnto him. Hitherto (sayth God) I haue borne thee in hande, that thou shouldest inherite this lande. But so faire off art thou from enjoying it thy self, or from taking possession of it during thy lyte: that thine offspring must be driuen from hence, and dwell in a strange land vnder exceeding cruel tyrannie, by the space of foure hundred yeares. VVe see how God exercised his seruauant Abraham after a strange fashion vnaccustomed among men. And wherefore? for he had also strengthened him by his holie spirite, and therefore he gaue him greate and verie rough assaults. See then howe God woorketh in those that are the excellenter sorte, to the ende they shoulde bee as mirrors and examples vnto vs to follow. And in good sooth a man shall neuer make such workmanship in a litle shop as in a greate one, where he may haue stuffe and store of workmen, so as all things are well furnished and in good order. For if he haue but a small shop, he shall not bee able to doo any great peece of worke. Euen so dothe God. VVe see then howe it was conuenient that Iob shoulde be set foorth vnto vs as a patterne, and that God shoulde plague him to the vttermoſt, to the intent that when wee compare our selues with him, every one of vs may be ashamed, seing we be not able to suffer any affliction, be it neuer so light or meane: for we be so tender as it is pitie to see it. If God send vs any aduersitie, wee neuer consider wherein he spareth vs: but our mynde is vpon our present griefe, and wee will not be comforted by takyng holde of Gods goodnesse, in that hee holdeth vs vp. As howe? If a man be sicke, he taketh suche an inwarde conceyte of his disease, that hee thinketh vpon none other thing, neither considereth he the matter thus: God hath giuen me here many meanes to ease mee withall, I am succoured in my distresse, men haue a care of me, I am serued and tended (as one man hath his wyfe, another his children, and another his seruantes too tend him) and therefore I see that God doth not punish me out of measure: I say he hath remedies in a redinesse for him: either he hath of his owne store, or else he shall be releued by some other. VVe neuer thinke vpon any of these things: but the griefe doth possess vs in such sort, as we be still chawing on the bitte too torment and rack our selues, yea & euen to be angrie with God. And this is as villanous an vnthankfulnesse as the other is: for when any inconuenience troubleth vs, wee must euer thinke with our selues: Alas, if my good God pitie me not, what shall become of mee? I should not only endure this griefe, but also farre greater, which I haue deserued, and God will fynde meanes inowe to punish me more: for it is sayd that he hath his rods layd vp in his coffers, and that when it pleaseth hym to bring them forth against vs, we must be fayne to feele other maner of stripes at his hande than wee haue doone yet. If wee mynd such things, it is certain that in the middest of the greatest miseries and troubles that we can haue in this worlde, wee shall bee comforted, and feele some assuagement of oure greifs. But we do nothing at all in that behalf, in so much that this lesson is written in vaine. So then, let vs beare in mynde, that in the person of Iob, it is Gods wil to giue vs a looking glasse, wherein to behold, that if we be scourged we must not take our aduersities so sore to hart, nor be so nice, as to saye, I can haue no worse than this. Let vs take good heed that we prouoke not Gods wrath in that wise, as many vnaduised persons do. But let vs bethink our selues thus: Surely my aduersitie is not ouer burdenson, and that it is bicause I am too tender. But what should be done with me, if my God did not reache out his hand vnto me? then out of question I should not haue this trouble alone. For he hath store of other farre greater and far more excessiue. God knoweth what measure to keepe in punishing me, so as if it please him, he can cast mee into so bottomlesse depthes, as I shall be caryed euen into hell. Therefore it becommeth me now to haue an eye to his goodnesse: and to thanke him that he hath pitied mee, and spared mee. And for the profe hereof, beholde here Iob, who was a man as I am, and seemed to be thoroughly fensed to the vttermoſt: and yet I see howe God hath afflicted him here, not onely in one kynde, but after diuers fashions. So then, when I weighe my selfe in the balance with him, it is good reason that I should be pacient, that I shuld humble my selfe vnder the myghtie hande of God, and that I shoulde applie my selfe too his good will, desiring him to gouerne mee, and to dispose of mee as of his creature that is in his hande. If we deale thus: we shal perceiue that God is euer present to succour suche as trust in him, and rest themselues vpon him. For albeit that wee see a wonderful strength in Iob: yet verily he was a fraile man as we be. And for profe hereof, how could he haue bene so strengthened, if God had not lent him his hand? And is the strength that God vttered in Iob, abated at this daye? Hath God altered eyther his purpose or his nature? No: Then when we see that God hath strengthened Iob: we come to the promises that belong not to any one man alone, but to all men. Lo how God sheweth, that if we bee dismayde at the feeblenesse of our owne fleshe, he hath wherewith to remedie it, if wee flee too him for refuge: & that if we be beaten down, he hath wherewith to strengthen vs, yea though we were otherwise altogether forsaken. Seing then that God offereth vs remedie in suche wise, whereby to relieue all our feeblenesse: lette vs not dout, but that as he hath vphild his seruant Iob, so wil he worke in vs also at this daye. For his meaning is nothyng else than to scale vp his promises which are common to all men, and to giue vs assurance and experience of them in the person of one man, to the ende we should not doubt but he will be as good as his woord. Therefore let vs not alledge this excuse: Lo I am a man. For why? VWas not Iob a man? was not Abraham a man? was not David so to? And wherof came it that they resisted temptations? O, yes. But they were ayded. And is not God at this day

men

Rom. 4. 11. 13.

Gen. 12. 10. 11
in other Chapters:
folowin. 3.

10

20

30

40

50

the same he was then? is he chaunged since that tyme? Is it his minde to ayde but a three or foure? VVhen he sayd, I will be your fortresse and bulwarke, and I will stick to you in all your needes, ment he it but to Iob, to Abraham, and to Dauid? ment he it not to his whole Church? So then, vnlesse we will charge God with vntruth, we must boldly conclude, that like as he asisted Iob, so will he also asist vs. But what? when we be destitute of the grace of Gods holy spirit: that proceedeth of our owne naughtinesse, bycause we regard not the good turne that he is redy to do vs when he giueth vs his promises, And that although he preuent vs, seeking nothing but to viter his power in mainteining vs: yet notwithstanding, we shut the gate against him. And so we well perceyue to what intent this story is written vs, that is to wit (as I haue sayd already) that we might knowe how God afflicteth those that are his: and therewithall vnderstand, that he forgetteth not to succoure them at their neede, and that according to the greatnesse of their necessitie, the remedie is alwayes redy in due season. Furthermore we haue here a godly recorde, that afflictions are not alwayes signes that God hateth vs. If we haue not this beleefe, it is impossible that we should be pacient in aduersitie. For it is not for naught that Saint Paule saith, we ought to haue comfort through pacience. If a mā comfort not himselfe in God, though he shewe neuer so great and inuincible courage, yet is not the same to be called pacience. For he is not pacient as he ought to be. It is but the pacience of a lumbard as we say in the prouerbe: that is to say, it is pacience perforce and against our will, as a mule chawing vpon hys bit. True it is that suche as are of that sorte, would fayne make themselves constant, they would in no wise bowe, and they say, see the wicked fortune, but what though, we must for all that be constant. Here ye see what the pacience of the vnbeleeuers is. Although they be renewed in the world for couragious and stout fellows: yet cease they not to lifte vp themselves against God, and to find faulte with him: and to be short, euery of them wyl needes cleare himselfe. I know not (say they) why this is happened to me, but if it be for that fortune is againste me, or for that God is idle and hath no mind of things, or rather else for that mans state is such. And so in the meane while, suche manner of men cease not to haue their hearts full of venim. But God will haue vs pacient after another manner, that is to wit, hee will haue vs ready too endure all thinges, assuryng oure selues that good and euill proccede from the hande of hym. Hee will haue vs to abyde his chastizement, desyring nothing but to be gouerned by him, and renouncing all oure owne affections. And though he it seeme troublesome to vs, hee will haue vs fyghte agaynst oure owne wycked lustes, and too resyst them in suche wyse, as hee alone maye continue our maister: for it is not possible that we shoulde haue that pacientnesse so franke and free in vs, if we take not occasion to comfort oure selues in God. And howe will that bee? It behoueth vs too bee well assured, that when God scourgeth vs, hee purposeth not oure destruction, but rather procureth oure welfare. For as for hym that imagineth and deemerh God too bee bente agaynst hym: hee can not but fall intoo some greefe and anguise of mynde, yea and euen intoo some frenzie to play the sauage beast, and to lift vp him selfe against God. Can we loue God when wee persuade our selues that hee seeketh nothing but to vndoo vs, and to destroy vs? So then, it is verie necessarie for vs to bee fully resolued, that when God punisheth vs, it is not a token that he hateth vs, nor that he holdeth vs for his enemies: but rather that he by that meane procureth our sal-uation. And here we see how that (as Saint Paule sayth) our victorie consisteth in taking hold of this loue of God in Iesus Christ, so as we be throughly persuaded, that God hath adopted vs to bee his children: for if we haue that principle, wee shall not be dismayde with any affliction. VVhy so? for sith that God loueth vs, wee shall neuer bee confounded: and so little shall our afflictions hinder oure welfare, that they shal turne to our furtherance, and God will woorke in suche wise, that our saluation shall be aduanced by the meanes thereof. So then, seeing that Iob who was beloued of God, and was one of the excellentest men that euer were in the worlde, hath bene so greuously afflicted: Let vs assure our selues, that if God do nowe and then suffer vs to abyde ouer harde and painfull aduersities, yet ceaffeth hee not to keepe vs still vnder his protection, and to loue vs, and of very loue to prouide for vs the thinges that are good and profitable. But wee muste come to that whiche is set downe here, that is to wit, that God punished Iob, not only in his goodes, but also in his children. This is to be marked wel. For sometimes he that sheweth himselfe stout in some one kinde of temptation, will by and by be quayled in some other. As for example: There may be some man which in suche wyse despizeth the goodes of this worlde, that if he haue bene verie riche, and afterward be sore impouerished: ye shall not see him shrinke, but continue still in good quiet, and he will say: well, I haue ben riche, but it was Gods wil to chastize me: I am bereft of all my goodes and substance, God be praised for it. A man woulde thinke that this man is so constant, as it should seeme he hath no feeling of his aduersitie. Behold the great vertue of him. Yea, but if he be assayed on the other side, so as there happeneth some new temptation to him: ye shall see him so encombred, as he hath no meanes to comforte hym selfe. Then is it not ynough for vs to bee pacient against some one kynde of aduersitie, but wee must withstand all troubles.

And here we see also why our Lorde exerciseth vs in diuers maners: which is a thing to be marked aduisedly. For after that God hath sent vs some aduersitie, and we suppose oure selues to be escaped from it: we thinke it straunge to see an other mischiefe come backe againe in the necke of it. This I say is verie harde to oure imagination. But God hath good reason to quicken vs vp so by diuers temptations, too the ende oure pacientnesse maye shewe it selfe as I haue sayd heretofore. Now if a mannes goodes bee deare to him: much more precious muste his children needes be. And here we see also why it was oure Lordes will, that this should be the last tydings, as though Iob had ben sette here vpon the racke. VVhen a man is layde vpon the racke, his tormentes are continually increased more & more, vntil they be come to the vttermost, that they can no more. Sathan vsed the lyke policie with Iob. For when hee caued woorde to be brought him: Beholde, thyne Oxen and thy Shee Asses are taken awaye by the Sabeans, and Robbers are come, and haue slayne thy seruants: then was it as if he had firste put the carder too him. VVell, here we see the man layde vpon the racke. VVhen one came and tolde him: Beholde, fire is false downe from heauen, and hath consumed thy cattel: it was as if a man shuld haue hanged a great weight at his feete, too encrease his paine, and to put him to the more greefe. But see the extremite that came in the ende, when one brought him word of the death of his children. Then let vs learne that when wee haue scaped some one aduersitie, which we thought to be ouer heauie and ouerhard to suffer: God is able to send vs an other, that shall farre exceede all that wente afore. And why is that? For Sathan preaceth vpon vs on the one syde, and God giueth

ueth him leaue ſo to doo, to the end aforeſayd: which is, that we ſhould paſſe through ſuch triall, to the intent that God might be glorified in vs, and that we might haue ſo much the greater cauſe to yeeld him thanks: when he ſhal haue deliuered vs from the aſſaultes of ſuche an enimie, and ſo mightie as Satan is. Sometimes alſo he doth it for our hardneſſe ſake. VVhen he ſeeth that we be dull vpon the ſpurre, and that we be ouerflowe and reſtie: he muſte needes prick vs ſo muche the more roughly: according as we commonly ſay, A rough horſe muſt haue a rough ryder. And ſo haue we nothing here in the example of Iob, but to marke that which I haue touched already. But here is alſo that whiche I haue ſpoken of afore, namely that Iobs temptations were diuers in an other reſpect. For the robbers had caried away his goodes and cattell, lightning from heauen had burnt vp a greate parte of them, and a greate tempeſt of wynde had ouerthrowen the houſe where his children were, and they were ſlayne vnder it. Although his enemies had come and carried away his cattel, and that in the end they had broken into his houſe, & vpon his children: all this had not ben ſo hard and ſtrange a matter as when it is ſaid, that the lightning fell from heauen, & that a mightie boyſtous wind had killed his childre. For in that caſe Iob was prouoked to ſay, what a thing is this? Men are agaynſt me, and God hath made himſelfe mine enimie. For from whence commeth this lightning of the ayre? From whence come theſe hideous wyndes. It is ſayd that the windes are Gods meſſengers to execute his commaundements as though they were Heraulds. It is ſayd, that the fire of heauen is as it were a ſigne of his preſence. Iob therefore myght haue concluded thus: I ſee how God warreth againſt me on the one ſyde, and men on the other, and there is neither heauen nor earth with me, but all is agaynſt mee. Alas, whither may I goe? Herevpon hee myght haue ben altogether plunged in diſpaire. VVe ſee then, that when the temptations are ſo diuers, we be much more troubled. And experience alſo ſheweth it, ſo as eue-ry man may feele it in himſelfe. For if we bee tormented but after one ſorte, yea though the ſame be euen to the vttermoſte, yet doo wee ſtill conceyue ſome hope. But when one man perfecuteth vs on the one ſyde, and an other ryſeth vp againſt vs on an other ſyde, and the nūber of our enemies encreaſeth, ſo as we be layd at on all ſides, & it ſemeth that god is againſt vs too, then can we no longer hold out, and wee quite quayle (as they ſay) like poore ſoules that be paſt all hope. Nowe when we ſee that this befall vnto Iob: let vs mark it well that we may take profit by it: aſſuyng oure ſelues that God will alſo throughly trye oure faith and conſtancie by diuers temptations. VVhen men trouble vs or doo vs any harme: it ſeemeth to vs that God dothe vs wrong, if he auenge vs not incontinently, ſo as we would haue euen heauen to bend it ſelfe agaynſt our enemies to reuenge the iniurie that they haue done vs: and we conſider not a whit how it is God that tryeth vs in that wyſe, and that he knoweth what is profitable and expedient for vs better than we our ſelues.

By the way, a man myghte demaunde heere, howe it happened that fire came downe from heauen too burne vp Iobs cattell. For the diuell hath not the lightning and tempeſts in his power: we graunt him no ſuche ſou- raine, as to haue dominion in the ayre to rayſe whirlewyndes and tempeſts at his pleaſure. The anſwere herevnto is eaſie: howbeit that this matter ſhall be handled more fully in the next ſermon. Neuerthelater, let vs mark, that although the wyndes be Gods heraulds to execute his will, and that the lightning haue lyke nature: yet the diuell woorketh by them, when God vſeth his ſeruiſe, as hath ben declared heretofore. Then let vs think it not ſtrange, that God

ſhoulde giue the diuell ſuch a libertie, as to be able to rayſe vp lyghtenyngs, whirlewyndes, and tempeſtes. For he is not able to doo it as often and as muche as he himſelfe liſteth: but God ſerueth his owne turne by hym, as it pleaſeth himſelfe. Thus yee ſee the queſtion aſſoyled, ſo as yee neede not to maruell that the diuell hath rayſed vp ſuche a tempeſte and rage of foule weather, as to beate downe a houſe, or that hee hath ſtirred vp the lightning of heauen, that is too wit, ſo farre foorth as God permitted him, ſpecially ſeeing God directed him to exerciſe the fayth and pacience of his ſeruaunt. And heere-withall on the other ſyde wee haue alſo to marke, that Iobs pacience was ſo muche the more vertuous and commendable, in that hee fell from ſuche heyghte, and in that hee ſeemed to bee ſo well fenced: and yet notwithstanding ceaſſed not to bliſſe God euen when hee was vtterly forlorne. This (I ſaye) is woorthie of ſingular commendation: for wee knowe that ſuche as are in proſperitie forgette them ſelues. I ſaye, not onely that the worldlyngs and ſuche as thynke not at all vpon God, but alſo that the faythfull whiche haue walked in the feare of God all theyr lyfe long, yea and euen they that keepe ſtill in the ſame mynde, are ouerſeene when they haue all thynges at will, ſo as they forgette themſelus, and knowe not themſelues any more. Lette vs marke what happened to Ezechias. Although he were wholly giuen to ſerue God and too doo his owne duetie: yet notwithstanding, when hee ſawe hymſelfe aduanced aboue ordinarie, hee ſente no more for the Prophete Eſaye, nor medled any more wyth ſeeking counſell at Gods hand, but did all thinges after his owne fanſie, and magnified himſelfe ſo muche, that he prouoked Gods diſpleaſure in the turning of a hande for ſhewing his riches vayngloriouſly, in ſo muche that the hande of God was fayne to fall verrye roughlye vpon hym, bycauſe of his follye and ouerweening, wherewith hee was carryed away. And this is it that Dauid meeneth when hee ſayeth, I ſayde in my abundaunce or proſperitie, I ſhall neuer be remoued. Dauid knewe well how he had ben aduanced by God, and hee neuer darkened his grace: but rather his mynde was, that it myghte bee had in remembraunce too the worldes ende, that God had drawne hym vp from the dung of the cattell, and ſettled him in the ſtate of the kingdome. Hee magnified thus, his will was, that thys ſhuld be spokē of after his death, he vaunted not himſelfe of his nobilitie, he chalenged nothing to himſelfe. And yet for all that, when God had ſtabliſhed him in his kingdome, ſo as he ſawe himſelfe in reſt: he began to aduance himſelfe, and ſayd he had brought all thinges to ſuch a point, as hee ſhoulde neuer bee more remoued. But Dauid ſheweth what we bee when wee be at our eaſe, namely, that wee be ſotted in the ſayd follie, as it ſeemeth vnto vs that God wil neuer change our eſtate when we be in our pleaſures and iolities. Lo what we haue to marke here: namely that ther was a wonderful ſtrēgth of mynd in Iob, conſidering how he reſiſted the ſaid temptation ſo ſodein and ſo great, and not only one temptatiō, but as many as came vpon him altogether at one blow, and yet we ſee how he outſtoode them. A little afore, he had ben in ſuch proſperitie, as it myghte ſeeme that all men had fauoured hym: there was not that man that dydde not magnifye him. Too be ſhorter, Satan him ſelfe ſayeth, it ſhoulde ſeeme that God hilde hym in his lappe. Hee is in thy hande (ſayeth Satan) and thou preferueſt hym in ſuch wiſe, as it ſhuld ſeeme thou makeſt a cockney of him. Herewithall we ſee how he is handled in the turning of a hande, which thing might haue ben a very hard matter for him. So much the more then are wee warned not to ceaſe to looke

2. Kings. 20
c. 13.

2. Chron. 32.
g. 31.

Eſa. 39. b. 2.

Psal. 30. b. 7.

Psal. 38. g. 71

Psalm. 104.
4. 4.

looke well to our felues when God sendeth vs any prosperitie. For it is certain that if Iob had not oftentimes ben waked by this trumpet, to saye, who am I, what is my estate? he had bene vtterly confounded, as soone as God had afflicted him. VVherfore let vs take heed to walk in feare and trembling, chiefly when wee see that God sendeth vs any worldly prosperie. For then is the tyme that the diuell watcheth narrowliest to surprize vs, and to cast some temptation before vs that wee neuer thought of.

Thus ye see what wee haue to marke vpon this sentence, where it is sayd, that at the time when Iob was so well settled, that he seemed he had so many bulwarks, as no euill could touche him: then in one moment both lyghtening from heauen, and a whirlewynd of the aire, and his enemies striped him out of all that he had, so as he was brought to vtter extremitie, sauing his person whiche God had reserved still to more greuous temptations. But for the residue, let vs returne to the sentence, whiche I haue touched already: that is to wit, that we know what the rage of Satan is agaynst the faythfull. VVe haue seene heretofore how God holdeth him shorte, saying, Thou shalt not touche the person of Iob, and herewithall wee see with what furiousnesse hee hath proceeded. Let vs now consider the meanes which he hath to tormente vs. For looke how many infirmities we haue, looke how manie kyndes of aduersities there are in the world, looke how many ouerthwart things ther be agaynst vs: so many are the sharp dardes that Satan hath euer in a readinesse agaynst vs, and so many woundes and deadly stripes is he able to giue vs, if God prouide not otherwyse for it. Seing that the diuell hath continually suche weapons, and that we on our side are altogether naked. I pray you what shoulde become of vs if god did not remedie it? So muche the more therefore haue we cause to render thanks to our god, seing we perceyue that Sathan can doo no more than hee giueth him leaue to doo. And therewithall we haue neede also to call vpon God continually, and to say, Alas Lord, if we be not vnder thy protection, what shall become of vs? VVe be sure that thou chastizest vs for a time: but therewithal thou shewest vs thy fatherly goodnesse, in that thou sufferest vs not to be vtterly rooted out, cōsidering the outragiousnesse of the enimie with whom we haue to doo. For shuldest thou giue him the brydle agaynst vs, we must needes be deuoured sodaynly, euen as one poore fillie sheepe among an hundred thousand woolues. VVe see then how we ought to keepe good warde and watch, and to stande vpon our garde, to praye vnto God that he suffer vs not to be left vp for a praie vnto Satan. For if Satan durst be so hardie as to offer battell to the Sauior of the world, according as we see how our Lord Iesus Christ was assailed: wee may be sure he will bee moie hardie to runne vpon vs. And therefore let vs take the armour that God hath giuen vs to resist him withall, which is his worde, wherunto Saint Paule sendeth vs, when he meaneth to arme vs thoroughly agaynst all the temptations of the worlde and the diuell. Then let vs receiue that which God giueth vs, that wee be not negligent to helpe our felues with the meanes which he putteth into our hands, but that we may succour our felues at our neede. Thus we see what wee haue in summe to remember concerning this lesson, if wee will take profit by that which is shewed vs here in the example of Iob, waiting til the residue be set out more at large.

But let vs fal downe before the face of our God, with acknowledgement of our offences, praying him to make vs vnderstand the better, yea euē in such wise, as when he afflicteth vs, we may assure oure felues it is for our sinnes and offences, and therewithall knowe that it is his will too mortifie vs to the world ward, and to drawe vs continually to himself, by making vs too passe through afflictions, which must be so much the more sweet and amiable vnto vs, whē we see how they tēd to our welfare. And furthermore that he wil giue vs the grace to be so mortified, as we may desire nothing but to be subiecte in suche wise to his obeysaunce, as wee may neuer swaue from it, but perseuer in it more and more, euē vntil he haue drawn vs into eternall reste. That it maye please him to giue this grace not onely vnto vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The seuenth Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

- 20 Then Iob rose vp, and rent his clothes, and shore his head, and cast himselfe to the grounde, and vvorslupped, 21 And sayde, Naked I came out of my mothers vvombe, and naked I shall returne again: the Lord hath giuen, and the Lord hath taken avvay: Blissed be the name of the Lord.
 22 In all this Iob sinned not, ne charged God vvith any vnreasonablenesse.

We can well saye that Pacience is a great vertue, as it is in deed: and yet there be very fewe that know what this worde Pacience meaneth: whereby a man may iudge, that we be not very hasty to be pacient, and to haue the vertue that we esteeme so much. But God perceiuing suche carelesnesse in men, myndeth to set before our eyes the thing that is so needfull for vs: for if we be not pacient, our faith must needes vanishe away: for she is not able to maynteyne hir self without it. And forasmuche as it is so, Gods will is, that in the middes of the miseries of this world, we should always haue a quiet hearte, and bee so well assured of his goodnesse, as the same may make vs merie and contented, and we may boast our felues agaynst Satan and all oure enemies. And howe were that possible, if wee looked no higher than the worlde, ne considered not that although our estate bee miserable in the opinion of the fleshe: yet ought wee too be contented with it, seing that our God loueth vs?

And this present text is as excellent as any in all the hollie Scripture to shewe vs what this worde Pacience importeth. And it behoueth vs to be taughte it, if wee will haue God too acknowledge vs for paciente in oure afflictions. VVe commonly saye, a man is pacient, although he haue no point of true pacience in him. For whosoeuer suffreth aduersitie, him doo men call pacient. But by the way let vs holde this for a rule, that to be pacient, it behoueth vs to moderate our sorow. If there be any aduersitie it must be assuaged by considering that God ceaseth not to procure our welfare continually, and that we ought to bee subiect vnto him, and that it is good reason he should gouerne vs according to his good pleasure. Lo here wherin pacience sheweth it selfe. But there is nothing better nor more behouefull, than to looke vpon the glasse that is sette before vs here. VVe haue seene that Iob myghte haue ben ouerwhelmed with the report of so many euill tydings. But is sayd, that he rose vp and rent his clothes, and

and polled his heade, and caste himselfe vpon the ground to humble himselfe afore God. Here we see, first of all that such as are pacient, are sure of some grief, so as they feele great sorrowe and anguish of hart: for were we as a block of wood, or as a stone, it were no vertue at all in vs. Is that man worthy to be prayfed, which hath no feeling at al of his aduersitie? VVe see sometimes a poore madman laugh and scorne the whole world, yea euen when he is at deathes dore: but that is bycause he hath no feeling of his miserie. This therefore deserueth not to be taken and esteemed for a vertue, for it is rather a blockishnesse. The brute beasts haue somtime no feeling, yet are they not pacient for all that. So then let vs marke, that this word Pacient, or Pacientnesse betokeneth not that me should become blockish, so as they should haue no heauinesse at al, nor be combered with any griefe when they feele aduersities: but the vertue is when they can moderate themselues, and hold suche a measure, as they cease not to glorifie God in the middest of all their miseries: nor be so ouercombred and swallowed vp with sorrowe and anguish, as to quaille altogether: but fight against their owne passions, vntill they maye be able to frame themselues to the good will of God, and to conclude as Iob doth here, and finally to say, that he is righteous in all respects. And now let vs see what we haue to marke here, where it is saide, that Iob rent his garmente, and shore his head: for such fashions were custumable in the East countries, according as we knowe that ther were no ceremonies in those countries, than are in these cold countries where we dwell. For when there happened any thing that mighte moue men to great trouble: they rent their garmente in token of sorrowe. Marke this for a speciall poynte. And likewise in that countrie where men were wont to weare long heads: they polled themselues when they mourned, like as on the contrary parte, where men vse to poll their heades, they let their heare growe when they make any sorrowe. Therefore Iobs rending of his garmente, and his polling of his heade, are tokens of the heauinesse that he conceiued here. For it is certaine that he did it not vpon any hypocrisie, as oftentimes they that meane to counterfeit, do disguise themselues, to the ende that men should thinke them to be in great heauinesse, when they cease not to laugh in their harts. Iob vsed no such hypocrisie. Let vs assure our selues then, that when he tare his garment and shore his head, he was full of extreme anguish and sorrowe: and that when he cast himselfe to the grounde, the same was another like recorde thereof. But it seemeth that Iob gaue bridle to his heauinesse, which were a fault to be condemned. For we know that men are wont to be but to excessiue and inordinate in their passions. For although they restraine and repress themselves as much as they can: yet cease they not to passe measure: and there is nothing more hard, than to moderate a mans selfe in suche wise, as we may keepe rule and compasse: we see that men cannot make mery, excepte they be ouer mery. Sorrowe and heauinesse is a passion yet farre more headdie, carying men away with farre greater force than gladnesse doth. And therefore we haue cause to stand vpon our guard, as oftentimes and as long as God shall send vs any aduersitie. For it is the thing wherein we are wont to overshoot our selues most. And here it is saide, that Iob rent his garmente. It seemeth he ment to picke himselfe forward to be more sorrowfull than he was: for the man that beholdeth himselfe so defaced, is astonished at himselfe. And afterwad whē he came to his heare: a man mighte saye he had as it were foughte helpes to sharpen and increace his griefe, and that it was as much as to strike the spurres into his owne sides. And this (as I haue saide) may seeme woorthy to be condemned. But first we must vnderstand, that the scripture purpofeth here to expresse, that the sorrowe of this holy man was so great and so vehement, as he was not able to stay himselfe from vsing the ordinary fashions, yea euen to the tearing of his garmente, to shew that he felt such anguish as had wounded him euen to the bottome of his hart. This is it that the scripture ment to expresse. But by the way, although men ought to stand vpon their guard that they be not swallowed vp of sorrowe when they be afflicted: yet notwithstanding, when God sendeth vs aduersitie, it is meete that we should thinke vpon it. For the common fashion of putting away all griefe is starke naught: and yet for all that we see howe men haue falne into it: insomuch that when they haue ment to haue patience, they haue quenched the consideration of their misshaps, thrust them far off, and chased them quite away: & to be short, haue labored to be so brutish, as they might not know nor discerne any thing at all. But cleane contrariwise, when God scourgeth vs, it is not to giue vs blowes on the head with a beetle, to the ende we should be astonished and cast in a swoond: but his mind is to induce vs to thinke vpon our miseries, as how? For besides that we ought to call our sinnes to remembrance and to craue pardon for them, and to be so much the warer afterward to walke as it becommeth vs: we are instructed also what our life is, to the end we should not haue an ouerliking of it, nor be puffed vp with vanitie or presumption as we be: but rather acknowledge the bond which we stand bound in to our God for vsing vs so gently as to cary vs as it were in his lappe: and finally, that forasmuch as we see he hath a care of our life, we should looke a great way afore vs, that is to say, keepe on our way still to the euerlasting kingdom wher as is our true ioy and rest. VVe see then that God ceaseth not to be mercifull vnto vs when he sendeth any affliction vnto vs. For he doth it to the end that by trying what is in vs, we also might knowe what our state is. Moreouer it is good and profitable, that the faithfull, when God afflicteth them, should enforce themselves to thinke, who am I? what am I? and wherefore am I thus afflicted? May it is meete for the to thinke vpon all these things. For we see how Iob could rend his garmente and sheare his head without offending of God. Not that he intended thereby to cast himselfe into ouergreate heauinesse: but all his doings tended to humilitie, like as also the same was a signe of repentance among the men of old time. For if God sent any plague or warre among them: they clothed themselves with sackcloth, and cast dust vpon their heads. Why did they so? It was not to feede the euill sorrowe, whereof saint Paule speaketh and saith that it is after the manner of the world (for we must eschue that fault) but for another sorrowe whiche he affirmeth to be godly: which is, when men acknowledging themselves to be wretched sinners, do come before their iudge and there condemne themselves, and shewe that they be worthy to be cofounded. For he that clotheth himselfe with sackcloth, and casteth dust vpon his head, witnesseth that he hath not any thing wherof to glory, but that he must hold his mouth shut, so that (in case as if he were already buried) he is faine to say, I am not worthy to go vpon the earth, but it is meete that the earth should be vpon me, and that God should cast me so lowe, as I might be trampled vpon, with mens feete. Thus we see how Iob behaued himselfe. VVhen he sawe how God called him to lowlinesse, he was contented to frame himselfe to his good will, and for the same cause rent his clothes and shore his head. Hereby we perceiue (as I haue touched already) that patience is not without griefe, and therefore that it behoueth

it behoueth Gods children too be sad, and to feele their owne sorowes: and yet for all that not ceasse to haue the vertue of patientnesse, when they resist their owne passions in such wise as they conceiue no hartburning against God, nor passe measure in sorowynge, nor kicke against the spurre, but rather giue glorie vntoo God, as it followeth immediately in the texte, That when Iob did cast himself vnto the earth, he did it to worship God. For true it is, that the woorde whiche is sette heere, signifyeth Too encline or loow downe amannes selfe. But the meanyng of it is, that hee humbled himselfe before God too doo him reuerence. We see many castethemselues too the grounde, who for all that ceasse not too rage, in suche wyse, as if it were possible, they woulde mounte above the cloudes to giue battell vntoo God. And we see some also caryed away with rage, bycause they can not ruff agaynst God as they would do. But contrary wyse Iob did cast himself to the earth, of purpose to worship God, hauing a speciall eye vnto him to humble himselfe before his high Maiestie. For when wee seele Gods hande, it is to the intent wee shoulde doo him more reuerence than wee haue doone afore. Surely if God handle vs gently, it ought to moue vs to come too him, according as he allureth vs by his dooing. Wherefore vseth hee that greate goodnesse but of purpose to drawe vs vntoo him? But forasmuche as we be so loth to come to him: he is fayne to summon vs, and to shew what authoritie he hath ouer vs: lyke as when a prince seeth his subiect slow to doo his dutie, hee sendeth his officer to him too summon him. So also God perceyving that we passe not of comming vnto him, or rather that wee come not too him with so willing and earnest affection as were requisite: provoketh vs and summoneth vs. Iob therefore knowing what is the ende and true vse of afflictions, did caste him selfe to the ground, of purpose to do reuerence vnto God, and to say: Lord, it is true that I haue serued and honored thee heretofore, and of all the tyme that I haue flourished and ben in my chiefest triumph, I haue had a pleasure to doo thee seruice. But what for that? I haue not knowne my self ynough, and nowe I see what my frayltie is, and howe that all of vs are wretched creatures. And therefore my Lord, I come now to do mine homage new agein to thee, seing it pleaseth thee to afflict me in this world. My Lord, I willingly yeeld my selfe vnto thee, and I desire nothing but to put my selfe as a subiect into thy hand, howsoever the world go. Thus much concerning this saying, that Iob did cast himselfe to the ground, of purpose to worship God.

And nowe lette vs come to that whiche is sayde, that is to wit, howe Iob acknowledged what men are, Naked I came out of my moothers wombe, and naked (sayth he) I shal retorne again. VVheras he nameth his mothers wombe, he meaneth another thing: that is to wit, the womb of the earth, who is the mother of all things. Or else as a man pinched at the hearte, hee vttereth not his wordes too the full, but as it were cutteth them halfe off, according as wee see that suche as are in extremitie of sorowe, expresse not their wordes too the full. Neuerthelesse, this protestation is cleere inoughe: that is to wit, that Iob ment to saye thus: Verie well, then must I bee fayne too retourne intoo the earthe, euen in the same plyghte that I came oute of my moothers wombe.

True it is that a man maye take this saying two wayes: Fyrste as a generall sentence: Beholde howe menne come naked intoo the worlde: and when they passe out of it they come too the same poyntagayn: they broughte not their ryches, nor their honoure, nor their pompe, nor their pleasures with them, and they must be fain to go away into rotnenneffe, and the earth must receiue them. But the other exposition is more agreable: namely, that Iob applyed the sayde sentence to his owne person, as if he shoulde say: I came naked oute of my mothers wombe, and it hath bene Gods pleasure to enriche me for a tyme, so as I haue had great heards of cattell, a great houholde, and a goodly sorte of children, and too bee shorte, I was gloriously decked with the benefites and blessings whiche God had bestowed vpon me. But now it is his wyll that I shall go hence starke naked: It is he that hath enriched mee with all these things, and nowe he taketh them away agayne, too the intente I shoulde retorne into my first state, and dispose my selfe to creepe soorthwith into my graue. And this sentence is well worthy too bee marked. For Iob coulde not make a better prooffe of his pacience, than in determining too bee starke naked, sith it was Gods good pleasure that he shoulde bee so. True it is that men haue sayre excuses, as that they can not force nature, but that (spite of their teethe) they muste be fayne to retorne naked too their graues. And euen the Paynims haue sayde, that there is not any thing but deathe, whiche sheweth howe small a thing man is. VVhy so? For wee haue a gulse of couetousnesse in vs, so as wee coulde finde in our heartes to swallowe vp the whole earth. If a man haue plentie of ryches, of Vyneyardes, of Meddowes and possessions: that suffyzeth him not, God muste bee fayne too create newe wordes for vs, if he mynde to satisfie vs. And yet wee once dead, we must haue no more ground than our owne lengthe, wherein to rotte and consume away too nothing. So then, death sheweth what we bee, and what is our nature: and yet neuerthelesse yee shall see many striue agaynst that necessitie. They make them gorgeous Tombes, and they will haue triumphant funerals. It should secme that suche men coulde finde in their hearts too rest God: but they can not attayne to their purpose. And tuely suche is the generall state of man. But as for vs, it becommeth vs too suffer patiently the losse of our goodes and riches, whensoever wee bee berefte of them: I say, it becommeth vs to suffer God too strippe vs out of all, euen to our bare and naked skinne, and to prepare our selues to retorne to our graue in the same state. Beholde (I saye) wherein wee may proue our selues too bee patient. And this is it that Iob ment in this sentence. Also as ofte and as long as wee wante the goodes of this worlde, or indure hunger and colde, or bee nipped with any aduersitie, and haue no reliefe: let vs bethinke vs of our birthe, and let vs consider our selues, bothe what wee bee, and whence wee come. For men abuse the fatherly care that God hath of them in prouiding them the things which they haue neede of. True it is, that we ought to haue this lesson wel imprinted in our heart: namely, that God will not haue vs too wante any thing, nor hath put vs in this worlde without mynding to nourishe vs there. But yet muste wee alwayes acknowledge that the same commeth from elsewhere than [from our selues] and that we may not think wee haue the things in our owne right, which wee holde of the free goodnesse of our God. If a man should finde mee of his owne free coste, and say vnto mee, come dayly too mee, thou shalt haue thus muche wyne, and thus much bread, and I will intertayne thee, howbeit that I will not binde my selfe to thee, but giue thee it freely: If I would herevpon holde plea agaynst him, too binde him at whose hande I ought to begge euery day, and at whose hande I receiue all my substance: or if I make a rente of that whiche he giueth mee of hys free lyberalitie, shoulde it not bee a very heynous vnthankefulnesse?

I should

I shoulde deserue to be spitted in the face . And therefore muche more are wee bounde to receyue Gods benefites with all modestie, assuring our selues that he oweth vs not any thing, and that in as much as we be poore, it becometh vs to repaire vnto him too begge at his endlesse liberalitie euery day. So then, when soeuer wee be driuen to any necessitie, lette vs haue recourse backe (as I haue sayde) and examine, from whence came I? Euen out of my mothers wombe, starke naked, and a poore and wretched creature: I was not able to helpe my selfe, nor too ridde mee of the pouertie wherein I was, so as I must needs haue perished altogether, if I had not ben succoured by others: so it pleased God too foster me, and to intertaine mee euen too this houre, and too giue mee of his gracious benefites without number. And therefore if it please him now to scourge me, it is good reason I shuld beare all patiently, seying it commeth from his hande.

Thus yee see what wee haue too marke vpon that whiche Iob sheweth vs in saying, Naked I came out of my mothers wombe, and naked I shall retorne agayne, too my graue. Finally when God giueth goodes intoo our handes, wee imagine that wee shall possesse them some long tyme, and that the ownership of them shall contynue with vs, and that wee shall bee so accompanied with our riches, as they shall goe with vs too oure graue, and that they shall neuer departe from vs. But lette vs not make suche accompte of them: for that were but too deceyue oure selues. But contrarywyse, lette vs assure our selues, that if it bee Gods good pleasure to take away the goodes that hee hath lent vs, whether it be to night or too morowe, wee muste bee readie to forgoe them, and that hee doeth vs no wrong to bereue vs in one minute of an houre, of all that wee coulede get during our whole lyfe. As concerning the residue, Iob leadeth vs yet further, in saying, that God had giuen, and God had taken away, and that the name of the Lord was blisfed therefore. VVhen hee sayeth, that God had giuen, hee sheweth howe it is good reason, that God shoulde haue the disposing of the thinges that hee hath put into oure handes, seing they bee his. For when God sendeth vs riches, he releaseth not his owne right, that he shoulde no more haue the foueraintie which he ought to haue as the maker of the world. For this word Maker importeth that he hath made all thinges in suche sorte, as it is meete that al power and fouerain dominion shuld remain vnto himselfe. And albeit that me possesse their portion of it, according to the portion of goods which he hath giuen them in this world, yet is it meete that he shuld still continue lord and maister. Iob therefore knowing this, submitted himselfe wholly too Gods good will. And it is the thing that al of vs confesse to be most rightful: notwithstanding that in the meane whyle there is not any man that is willyng to frame himselfe thereafter. And for prooffe hereof, if God giue vs leaue to ioy a two or three dayes in any benefite of his: wee thinke he doeth vs great wrong if hee take it from vs agayne, and wee grudge againste him for so dooing. And what meaneth this? It is the same vnthankfulnesse that I spake of euen nowe: namely that when God hath once shewed himselfe liberall too vs of his owne free goodnesse: wee are of opinion that hee ought neuer too sayle vs whatsoeuer wee doo. Lo here a sentence common inough in talke, howbeit so yll practised, as a man may well see that it is vnderstood but of a verie few. So much the more behoueth it vs to consider what is meante by this saying, The Lord hath giuen, and the Lord hath taken away: that wee may knowe what maner of authoritie the Lord hath, to giue vs the enjoying of his benefites, and also to take them away from vs euery minute of an houre at his pleasure. And here we see why Saint Paule exhorteth vs that forasmuch as the shape of this world passeth away, and all the things therein do glide and vanishe away: we should possesse as if we possessed not, that is to saye, we shoulde not haue our minds tied to them, as it is said in another place, that we must not settie our selues vpon the vncertentie of riches, but when God shall haue bereft vs of all that he gaue vs, we must be alwayes redy to say with Iob: very well, thou O Lorde haste vsed thine owne righte, thou hast giuen and thou hast taken away at thy pleasure. Thus yee see what is the effecte of this streine: namely, that as often and whensoeuer wee thinke vpon the goodes of this world, we must alwayes beare in mind, that we hold them all of God. And vpon what condition? Not in feesimple, so as he should pretend no more title to them, nor be master of them any more: but vpon condition that if it please him to put them into our handes, he maye also plucke them from vs when hee thinks good. Let vs vnderstand then, that we be so muche the more bound to him, whē he causeth vs to enioy some benefite of his for a day or a moneth, or for some space of time, and that we must not thinke it straunge if he bereue vs of them after ward, but haue recourse to the said knowledge whiche I haue spoken of, namely that God doth euermore hold such a superioritie ouer vs, as he maye dispose of hys owne as hee listeth hymselfe. If it bee lawfull for mortall menne to dispose of their goodes as they liste them selues: ought wee not to graunt it muche more to the lyuing God? Seeing then that God oughte to haue thys mastership, not only ouer the thinges that wee possesse, but also ouer our owne persons and ouer our children: let vs humble our selues afore him, to submit oure selues wholly to his holy will without gainesaying. Yea but for all that, there are very fewe that yeelde so muche honoure vnto God. True it is that all men will easily say how it is God that hath giuen them all that they possesse: but what for that? They chalenge all to them selues and vaunt them selues as it were in spire of him. And what is that? I praye you is it any better than flat mockerie? Yea verely it is too grosse an hypocrisie when after wee haue protested to hold al thinges of God, yet notwithstanding we meane nothing lesse, than that he shoulde haue the disposition of them, or that he should chaunge anye thing, but we would haue him let vs alone and fet vs at free libertie, as if we were separated from him and exempted from his iurisdiction. This is as muche as if a manne should say, O I am well contented to acknowledge suche a one for my prince: I will do mine homage and allegiance vnto him: howbeit so as he enter not into my house, so as he come not to demaunde anye thing at my hande, so as hee trouble me not. The worlde coulede not beare with such a vilanie: and yet neuertheless we see how men dallye with God. And what is it that we meane by thys confession, that wee holde all of hym, and in the meane while will not abide that he shoulde touche anye thing? VVe see then howe the worlde dothe openly play mock-holyday with God: and yet that it becommeth vs alwayes to followe that which is shewed vs here: that is to wit, that forasmuche as God hath giuen vs that which we possesse, he may call it backe agayne and withdrawe it from vs whē he will. But yet that which is added by and by after (namely that the name of God should be blisfed) importeth more. For herein Iob submitteth him selfe in suche wise vnto God, that he confesseth him to be good and iust, notwithstanding that he be scourged so roughly at his hand. I haue said that this importeth more: by cause that euery man may graunt all power and foueraintie vnto god, and he maye say, well, seing he hath giuen, he maye also take.

But

But in the meane whyle he will not acknowledge that god dealeth iustly and by good reason: for ther are many, who when they be scourged, doo blame God of crueltie, or of ouergreat roughnesse, so as they cannot referue vnto him this right of his to withdrawe that thing which he hath given them, nor consider (as I haue sayd afore,) that they possesse their goodes with condition, that they may be stripped out of them to day, or to morow. There are very fewe that haue this consideration with them, to rest quietly vpon it, and to confesse that there is nothing better than to submit all things to Gods maiestie, and to acknowledge that if he should let vs folow our own sway, there were no way with vs but confusion: and that if hee gouerne vs according to his will, all will be to our profite and welfare. Lo wherynto it behoueth vs to come. And al so we see there is very muche imported in this sentence when it is sayde, Blissed be the name of the Lorde. For wee must not only picke out the wordes: but also consider of what mynd they procede, and that they be spoken truly and vnfaynedly. For how is it possible that wee shoulde blisse the name of God, if wee do not first acknowledge him to be righteous? But he that grudgeth against God as though he were cruell and vnkynd: cursseth God: because that as much as in him lyeth, he listeth himselfe vp against him. He that acknowledgeth not God to bee his father, and himselfe to be Gods child, ne yeeldeth record of his goodnesse, blisseth not God. And why so? for they that taste not of the mercie and grace that God sheweth to men when he afflicteth them: must nedes grynd their teeth at him, and cast vp and vomit out some poyson agaynst him. Therefore to Blisse the Lordes name, importeth as much, as to persuade ourselues that he is iust and rightfull of his own nature: and not only that, but also that he is good and merciful. Lo here howe we may blisse Gods name after the example of Iob: that is, by acknowledging his Iustice and vprightnesse, and moreouer also his grace & fatherly goodnesse towardes vs. And here we see also why the text addeth for a cōclusion, That in all these things Iob sinned not, nor charged God with any vnreasonableness. VVord for woorde it is thus: Iob did not lay afore God or put vpon God any vnreasonable thing: and it is a maner of speaking well woorthie to be marked. VVhereof cometh it that men martir themselues in suche wyse when God sendeth things cleane contrarie to their desyre: but for that they know not that God doth all by reason, and that he hath iust cause to do so? for had we it wel printed in our hartes, that all things which God dothe are grounded vpon good reason: it is certain that we woulde be ashamed to encounter him as wee do: considering (I saye) how we knowe that he hath iust occasion to dispose of all things in such wise as we see. Nowe then, it is purposely sayd, that Iob imputed not any vnreasonable dealing vnto God: that is to say, that he imagined not God to doo any thing that was not iust and vpright. Marke this for a speciall poynt. But it behoueth vs to marke, that in these words (vnto God) there is verie muche implied: for we consider not how horrible a matter it is to talke of Gods woorkes after suche sorte as wee doo. If God sende vs not what so euer wee wythe, wee fall too reasonyng wyth hym, and wee holde plea with hym. Not that wee wyll seeme too doo so: but the deede it selfe sheweth that it is so neuerthelesse. VVe haue an eye to euerye blowe, saying: Howe commes thys too passe? But of what mynde is thys spoken? Euen of a venemous hearte, As if a man shoulde saye, Thys matter shoulde haue gone otherwyse, I see no reason why it shoulde bee thus: and so in the meane whyle, God is condemned among vs.

Behold how me rufh without their bounds: And what do they in it? It is all-one as if they should accuse God to be either a tyrante, or a brainlesse person that seeketh nothing but to bring all to confusion. Lo what horrible blasphemie there followeth euery blast of mens mouthes, and yet there be very fewe that consider it. But yet it is so great a matter: as it hath pleased the holy Gost to teach vs, that if we mind to giue glory vnto God, and to blesse his name as becommeth vs, we must be fully perswaded, that God doeth not any thing without reason. So then let vs not charge him, nother with crueltie nor with ignorance, as though he did things of spite or at randon: but let vs acknowledge that in al points and in all respects he procedeth with wonderfull iustice, exceeding great goodnesse, and infinite wisdom, so as there is nothing but vprightnesse and equitie in all his doings. And true it is that here remaynerh one point more to debate: that is to witte, how Iob acknowledged G O D to be the taker away of the things that he was spoiled of by the theeues, whiche seemeth a very strange thing vnto vs. But forasmuch as this time will not serue to declare it now: we will referue it till to morrow. It shall suffice to shewe you, that if we be afflicted, we must not thinke it happeneth withoute reason, but rather that God hath iust cause to do it. And therefore when we be troubled and greued, we must haue recourse vnto him, and pray him to graunt vs the grace, to know that nothing befalleth vs in this world, but by hys ordinance: yea and to be assured, that he disposeth things in such wise, as all turne continually to our welfare. And when we haue this manner of knowledge, it will make vs to beare patiently the afflictions that he sendeth vpon vs. Also it will serue to humble vs before him, and that when he hath made vs to tast of his fatherly goodnesse, we shall desire nothing but to glorifie him by all meanes, as well in aduersitie as prosperitie.

Now let vs fal downe before the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him so to bridle vs, as we maye not ouershoote our selues in our vaine imaginations, but rather that we knowing how all our benefit and welfare lieth in him, may come to him to seeke it, resting our selues wholly vpon his mercie: That when he hath once made vs to tast of it, we may be so fully perswaded of his loue which he beareth vs, that although he cause vs to walke in many troubles and aduersities in this world, yet we may neuer cease to cleaue fast to him continually, nor to walke in feare and obedience vnto him, vntil he haue rid vs out of this mortall body, and out of this imprisonment and bondage of sinne wherein we be, to gather vs vp into his heauenly glory, where we shall haue no let, but that we maye reioyce in our God as partakers of his glory and of all his goodes. That he will graūt this grace not only to vs but also, &c.

The eight Sermon, which is the first vpon the second Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth the end of the former Chapter, The Lord hath giuen and the Lord hath taken away. &c. and also that which followeth in the second Chapter.

IT befell on a daye, that the children of God presented themselues before the Lorde, among vvhome came Satan also to present himselfe to the Lord.

2 And

- 2 And the Lorde sayde too Satan, from whence comest thou? Satan aunswered the Lorde and sayd, from going about and from walking vpon the earth.
- 3 And the Lorde sayde too Satan, haste thou taken heed of my seruant Iob, vwho hath not his match vpon earth, a sound and vpright man, fearing God and vvithdrawing himself from euill, and vvhiche keepeth still his soundnesse? Hast not thou soughte mee to the ende I should haue destroyed him vvithout cause?
- 4 And Satan answered the Lord, A man wil giue skin for skin, & al that he hath, to saue his lyfe.
- 5 But novve lay thy haude vpon him, and punishe him in his fleshe, and thou shalt see it he vvill not curse thee to thy face.
- 6 And the Lorde sayde too Satan: Beholde, he is in thy hande: But spare his soule.

Have declared heretofore howe the Diuell being Gods mortall enimie as he is in deede, is fayne for all that, to yeelde obedience to his maker, to whom he is subiecte, not that he doeth it willingly, but by force.

Infomuche that although the diuell be so sore enraged as he is, to anoy and destroy the whole worlde: yet notwithstanding whatsoeuer he attempteth, or whatsoeuer he can deuise and practise, hee is able too bring nothing to passe, without the will of God. And like as Satan is hilde in awe, so also are the wicked men of the worlde. True it is that they passe their boundes as farre as they can, and they beare themselues in hande, that they can withstand God, and there wanteth no good will in them to doo it. But yet in the meane whyle God accomplisheth his owne will by them, so that they be as tooles wherewith he worketh and serueth his owne purpose. And this poynte is verie well vttered too vs in the confession that Iob maketh, when hee sayeth that God, (who had giuen him the goodes that he possessed, had also taken them away from him. For it is certaine that Satan was the doer of all, both in raising the horrible tempest, and in spoyling Iob of his substance, and in killing of his children. VVherefore is it then that hee impureth these things vnto God? Specially seeing wee haue seene hee heretofore, that theeues and robbers spoyled him of his goodes, is it meete that God should be vttered as the author of such theeuing and robbrie? It should seme that we ment to wrap him in the sinnes of men: for we cannot excuse them that came to inuade the goods and cattel of Iob. VVe see here the theeues whom we may condemne: and yet notwithstanding Iob sayeth not, It is Satan that hath so wholly spoyled mee, or they bee the theeues that haue robbed me: but he sayth it is God that hath done it. Doth Iob blaspheme God in saying so? No. For god alloweth his saying as we haue seene already, that he charged not god with any vnreasonable dealing: He hath confessed that God is righteous and full of equitie, and hath glorified him as meete was: and yet neuerthelesse he sayth flatly here, howe God was the doer of the things which the theeues did, and that the diuell was a doer of them too.

Nowe then wee see here, how God is euermore soueraine in degree in guiding and disposing the things that are here belowe, to leade them to suche ende as he thinketh good. And heere is no matter for vs to iudge of after our owne vnderstanding as some ouerweening persons doo, who will needes bee wise in making God and all his whole worde subiect to their owne fansie. These are beasts, yea and as beetleheaded beasts as any can be. They haue neither knowledge nor wit: & yet to purchase them selues estimation, they saye, they see no reason why God should be the doer of all things: for then should he be the author of sin. Do they not then cotrol the holie ghost for speaking so? for we must needes yeelde to that. And when a man hath debated the matter throughly to and fro, hee must needes come to the sayde conclusion, namely that we comprehend not the greatnesse and heyght of Gods dooings, further than it pleaseth him to giue vs some tast of them, at least wyse according to our capacite: which it ouersmall. None knoweth Gods workes but himselfe alone: they are a bottomlesse depe (as the scripture sayth) and we haue no means to attain to them, infomuch that all they which wil search them shal be confounded, except they goe too it with all reuerence and lowlynesse. Therefore it belongeth onely vnto God to giue vs knowledge what, howe, and wherfore he doth: and therewithal it behoueth vs to content our selues with that which the scripture telleth vs. And although it seeme straunge vnto vs, and we bee not able to comprehend it by oure capacite and reason: yet must we confesse that God is ryghtuous. And forasmuch as we attaine it not: let vs tary the coming of the latter day, at which tyme we shall know no more by parcelmeale, nor as it were in dimnesse (as sainct Paule sayth) but wee shal then behold the things face to face whyche are shewed vs nowe as it were in a glasse.

1. Cor. 13. c. 9.
d. 12.

Thus then wee see an excellent Texte too shewe vs howe God guydeth and gouerneth the whole worlde by his Providence. But wee haue further too note, too what purpose the Holye Ghoste telleth vs, that GOD doeth all, and that nothing can come too passe withoute his consent. It is to the ende that wee myghte despyse Satan and all wicked men, when wee see them practise and inuente neuer so manye thinges: bycause wee are sure they are not able to bryng their enterpryses about. See then howe God meaneth to assure vs of his protection, and to shew vs how Satan is so farre off from beeyng mayster of hymselfe too accomplishe the thyng that he woulde: that he is fayne to serue Gods tourne. Seing that the case standeth so, let vs apply the holie scripture to suche vse as this: namely that although we bee hemmed in with enemies rounde about, and be here as a sheepe in a wolues throate: yet notwithstanding we must not cease to trust in God, and to warrant our selues, that as long as we be vnder the shadow of his wings, we shall be sure of our saluation. How so? Bycause hee hath soueraine dominion ouer all creatures, in such sort as he holdeth euen Satan himselfe and all wicked persons of the world in awe, & leade them to such issue as he thinketh good. Lo wherupon we ought to stay, that we may call vpon God quietly, and when wee haue called vpon him, assure our selues that he will guyde vs. And heere-withall it behoueth vs to beare in mind, that which I haue touched, that is to wit, that we become no iudgers of god, for that were ouergreat presumption. VVerit not too diuelish a pride if men should not acknowledge God to be righteous, except they could perceiue him to be so: but would haue God to humble and abase himselfe so much as to say: wel, I see I must be accomptable to you? As for those that aduance themselues into such pride, are they not al wel worthie to be quite ouerwhelmed by God? Yes

C.

certesse

certesse are they. Also wee see here why Salomon sayth, that they whiche are ouerinquisitiue in searching Gods maiesie too farre, and more than is requisite for them, shall be ouerwhelmed in their owne pride, so as they shal be confounded. Then there remayneth nothing for vs, but to haue the sayde sobrietie of praying vnto God too teach vs so much as is for our benefite and behoofe, and to receiue whatsoeuer he saith for good and rightfull, with out pleading to the contrarie. Thus ye see how we ought to proceede. But many men thinke themselves to haue 10 gained much when they haue found some trifling cauillation, to vpholde that God dothe not all the things that are doone by Satan and by wicked men. It is commonly alledged for answer, that when wicked folke doe any euill, God woorketh not that: but only suffereth it, and simply giueth them leaue. But seeing hee hath authoritie and power to let them: is not his suffering or permission all one as if he did it himself? Therefore that is but a verie sonde excuse, and God hath no neede of our leasings to mayntayne his truth and ryghtuoufnesse withall. 20 VVe must not fynde suche startingholes to stop wicked folkes mouthes withall, which would speake blasphemie against Gods holinesse: but it is inough to haue that whiche the holie scripture telleth vs. For that God not only permitteth and giueth leaue, but also executeth his will, both by the diuell and by wicked persons, it appeereth by this, that the Scripture sayth not, Lord thou haste permitted, but Lord thou haste doone: Like as where Dauid confesseth his sinnes and offences when God had punished him grieuouly: he sayth, Lord, of whome shall I com- 30 playne? for I see it is thy hand: and although that Dauid was persecuted by wicked men: yet he called it the hand of God. Behold howe the Lorde himself speaketh. VVill we bee wiser than he? Shall wee make him beleue that he hath neede of our gay coloures, to warrant him that no man may offer him reproch? For see how he speaketh of his owne woorkes. VVhen he minded to punish Dauid for rauishing Bethsabee, he sayd vnto him, thou hast doone this thing priuily, but I will make the Sunne too beare witnesse of it. Howe was that? VVhat was it that 40 God would doo vnto Dauid? It was that Absolom shuld rauishe his fathers wyues, and defile them in the presence of all the people, in the syght of the Sunne.

Ye see here an incest, whiche is horrible and agaynst nature, and yet neuertheless God sayth flatly, I will do it, for those bee his woordes. VVee see then howe it is not a single leaue or permission: but that God himselfe woorketh in suche wyse, as the wicked must needes be the instrumentes of his will, as wee haue sayd. And I pray you, as touching the office of a iudge, is it no more but too giue the hangman leaue to doo what hee list? VVhen a iudge muste sit vpon an offender, and giue sentence according as lawe and conscience will beare: will hee say to the hangman, I giue thee leaue, goe doe what thou wilt with this man? No, but contrarywyse he pronounceth the sentence, and afterwarde according too the same, putteth the offender intoo the Hangmannes handes too doo execution vpon hym. Beholde, God is the so- 50 ueraine Iudge of the worlde: and doo not wee dishonor him, in saying that he doeth but giue Satan leaue to doo what he listeth? is not this as much as too mocke Gods iustice and to peruert all order? Yes out of dout is it.

So then, let vs marke, that when the wicked run ryot, and seke nothing else but to put all to confusion: God is neuertheless aboute them, guyding and gouernyng things after suche a sorte, as nothyng commeth too passe without hys Prouidence, nor otherwyse than hee hath disposed it.

And heere wee see, why it is expressely, that God wa- geth them whiche are caryed away by their owne ambi- tion or couetousnesse, to make warres, and too cause all the troubles of the worlde, and that as hee entertayneth them in his seruice. For he termeth them his seruantes. My seruauant Nabuchodonozor (sayeth he.) And what 1ere. 25. b. 9 maner a one was Nabuchodonozor? Firste and formost hee was an idolater, and secondly a wicked caytife, that desyred nothing but to sheade mannes bloud, and too turmoyle the whole worlde, as muche as in him laye. There was neyther equitie nor vprightnesse in hym: and yet notwithstanding God auoucheth him to bee his ser- uauant. And in what wyse? He muste not onely permitte him or giue him leaue: for it were a beastlynesse to talke so, and if Asses coulde speake, they would behaue them- selues more reasonably than those that pretend them- selues too be wyse after that sorte. Now then wee see how God executeth his commaundementes and ordinaunces so: Yea, but heere withall lette vs beare in mynde, that 20 the euyl can not by anye meanes bee fathered vpon hym. Satan muste beare the blame styll for his owne naughtynesse, and men are reprobued and condemned by their owne conscience whiche shall bee their iudge and GOD shall bee glorified in all that hee doeth. And howe is that? VVee knowe that all things oughte too bee esteemed according to the intente and ende that men ayme at.

Lette vs nowe consider after what sorte God guydeth and gouerneth the things that are doone here beneath. It is true (as wee haue seene alreadye) that Satans de- 35 fyre is nothyng else but too destroye and bryng all thynges too ruine: But God on the other syde inten- deth a cleane contrarye ende. For all his woorkes are called iudgementes: and in so saying, the holie Scrip- ture by that one woorde alone, meaneth too take a- waye all the lewde imaginations that myghte come in our myndes, so as this is as a mark too iustifye all the woorkes of God, that is too wit, that they bee iudgemets and ryghtfulnesse. And for proof hereof, God punisheth 40 such as haue offended. And who is he that is able too pleade against him that he doeth not well? moreouer his meening is too inure his saythfull ones too pacience, too mortifie their fleshy affections, and to teache them low- linessse. VVhat say wee too these things? can we con- demne them? It is verye certein that we cannot. Take mee euen the wickeddest me that lyue, and demaund of them whither it belawfull for God to chastyze mennes sinnes and transgressiōs, or whither it belong vnto him to hum- ble those that are his, to exercyse the obedientnesse of their sayth, and to tame them, to the end they may lerne to renounce the world. And they shalbee sayne to glori- fy God spyte of their teethe. Seing then that God leue- 55 leth at that mark: it foloweth that all his woorkes are iust and ryghtfull, notwithstanding that men do cauill against them. True it is that the wicked cease not to grunte and bark against God though they cannot byte him: but yet muste it needes come to passe (as Dauid sayeth in the one and fiftith Psalme) that is too wit, that God shalbee iu- 60 stified [or founde ryghtuouse] in iudging. It is not with- out cause that Dauid speaketh so. For hee knewe, how there is so ouergreat boldnesse and naughtynesse in men, that they desyre nothing more than to lift vp themselues against God, and to cast forth woordes at all aduen- ture. Dauid therefore perceuyng such malapertnesse and frowardnesse in the world, sayeth: Verye well, true it is that the creatures passe their bounds so far and with such excessse, that God must needes bee blasphemed and put too reproche, and his creatures become as his iudges.

But

Psal. 59. 10.

2. Sam. 12. 12

Psal. 51. 6.

But yet for all that, he shalbe founde cleere. VVhen men haue grudged their fill against him: in the end and at the knitting vp, his rightuoufnesse will appeare spight of their teeth. Then let vs not maruel though there be murmuring against the doctrine: for it must needes be so, and the holy Ghost hath prophesied so beforehand, as we see: but let vs walke on in singleness of mynde, and hold our selues with that which God declareth to vs concerning himselfe. Thus we see how we ought to practise the sayd lesson. And therewithall let vs holde fast the comfort that is giuen vs here, and lette vs fence oure selues with it: that is to wit: that Satan and all the wicked folke in the worlde may lift vp themselues against vs: but yet for all that, they must passe vnder the hand of God, and execute his will. And that shall be perforce, spyte of their teethe: but yet it shall be so, bicause God hath soueraine preeminence ouer all the world, and as well the diuell as the wicked sorte are subiect to him, and can do nothing without his consent. And here we see, why it is said againe, that Satan appeared among the children of God before hym. For (as I haue declared heeretofore) Satan mente not to disguyze himselfe thorough hypocrisie, that hee myghte intermeddle himselfe among the angels. But hee is fayne too appeere before God, to yelde an accompt of his doings. Not that the thing is doone in some place certayne: but the Scripture speaketh so, too applye it selfe to oure rudenesse, bycause wee conceyue not howe all thyngs are presente afore God, and that he is of suche a power and preeminence, as nothing is hidde from him. VVhen this is vttered vnto vs, wee must acknowledge that the Scripture applyeth it selfe to oure reason, and that it teacheth vs by such meane as is most conuenient for vs, and mozte agreeable to our vnderstanding. God therefore is lykened here to a Prince that holdeth his Assises or Court, wherunto all men muste come before him, and there bee iudged. And thus yee see why it is sayd, that vpon a certayne day the diuell made his apparance with the angels.

Let vs mark then, that like as God sendeth his angels to guyde vs, and to be ministers of our welfare, so that they be as it were his handes, and the instruments of his power to maynteyn vs: so also on the contrarie part, he sendeth the diuell to vexe and torment vs. And he knoweth to what end he dothe it. True it is that at the first we may well bee astonished, when we see not the cause why God doth this or that. But wherby shall our sayth be approued and tryed, if it be not by glorifying God, and that where as we be at our wits end, yet neuerthelesse we cōclude, that al that euer procedeth from God, is ryghtful and iust, and that there is nothing but stedfastnesse in all his wayes? If we be not thus mynded, how shall our sayth be allowed?

And surely this presente storie is a goodly instruction for vs in that behalfe. For vnlesse wee consider wherefore God intended to persecute his seruant Iob: it will seeme to vs, that we haue good cause to complayn of him. How so? If God punish the wicked folke, it is well done, yea and in so doing we can not gaynesay him. But if a man walke in vprightnesse and simplicitie, why dothe God deliuer him intoo Satans hande? If a man saye, O he dothe but permitte or suffer hym onely: If Satan were so at hys owne libertie (consideryng howe outrageous hee is) and that wee also were leste vp too the praye, shoulde wee not of necessitie bee ouerwhelmed at the first pushe? But contrary wyse, wee see howe it is Gods purpose to haue the pacience of his seruant made knowne by it. And although hee haue other reasons whiche are hidde from vs for a tyme, yea euen all our lyfe long: yet muste wee holde oure selues short, and confesse, that all that he doth is good, yea though wee perceyue not too what end hee doeth it. So then, albeit that wee see not neyther the dyuels about vs, nor yet the Angels: yet muste we assure our selues, that God sendeth both the one and the other: verily to maynteyne vs on the one syde, and too trouble vs on the other. And so it standeth vs alwayes on hande to knowe, that God hath iuste cause to chaftize vs, and that if hee ouerwhelme vs a hundred tymes a day, wee be well woorthie of it: and yet that as I haue sayd already, God hath not alwayes a respecte vnto that, when he afflicteth vs: but that nowe and then it is his will that Satan should torment vs so, to the intente that wee myght obayne victorie agaynst him, and that our victorie shoulde bee so muche the more honourable, as his assaying of vs hath ben the more honourable, as his assaying of vs hath ben more terrible. Also his meaning is too exercise vs by practise, to the intente wee may stande in awe, and not take occasion to aduaunce our selues, nor to ouersleepe oure selues in vayne selftrust and presumption, as we haue ben wonte to do. God then wakeneth vs in such wise, as we perceiue, that if we were not vphild by him, it woulde bee to our sorow, specially if wee were not relieved: in so muche that it woulde bee our chauce too fall and to stumble downe at euery blowe: and therefore that it is requisite that God shoulde put his hand vnder vs, or else oure salles woulde bee deadly. Therefore it is Gods will that wee should feele it. But aboute all, wee must vnderstande, that the Angels haue a speciall care of vs to guide vs, accordyng as God hath appointed them to be ministers of oure welfare, and committed vs to their keeping.

And hereby wee see why they bee called powers and principalities. In the meane whyle the diuels ceasse not to turmoyle and destroye all thinges as neere as they can: which thing happeneth not without Gods will, howbeit that it be doone to the ende that we shoulde be wakened by them, and invred with temptation and tryall, and to the ende wee may haue so muche the greater and excellenter victorie when wee haue fought valiantly: and finally, to the ende that Satan may gayne nothing at oure hande, for so muche as wee bee guarded with strengthe from aboue to withstande all his temptations. Lo what we haue briefly to beare in mynd concerning this sentence. But forasmuch as this hath ben expounded already heretofore, I wil not stand vpon it, but briefly put you in remembrance of that which hath ben touched. God demaundeth of Satan from whence he came, and Satan telleth him he hath royled ouer the whole world, and hath made his vagaries and outleapes rounde about it. And as touchyng Iob, he asketh him, Haste thou not taken heed of my seruant Iob? Herein the scripture yet agayne applyeth it selfe to our rawnesse: for God hath no neede too aske Satan. All things (as I haue sayde) are presente with him: howbeit forasmuch as wee vnderstande not that: it is for oure behoofe to haue some suche maner of speeches as wee are better acquaynted with, and that God shoulde not shewe himselfe suche a one as hee is in his owne infinite Being: (for then should wee be swallowed vp) but such as we may cōceiue him, and such as we may beare. And heerein wee see his greate goodnesse towardes vs, in that whereas we be not able to come vp vnto him, he commeth downe vnto vs here, to the ende wee might knowe him, at leaste wyse so farre forth as is for oure profyt. For yf wee should presume to enter intoo his greate Maiestie, wee shoulde bee ouerwhelmed. If wee bee not able too looke vpon the Sunne, but our eyes shall be dazed: I praye you howe shall we beholde the glorye of GOD in full perfectenesse? It is impossible for vs too doo it, tyll wee bee made newe againe.

1. Iob. 3. 4. 2. gaine: according as Sainct Iohn sayeth that wee shall see him as he is, when we be become lyke vnto him. In the meane while, lette vs be contented to be his children, and too haue the grace of his adoption sealed in oure heartes by the holie Ghoste: and consequently lette vs knowe him in the image wherein he sheweth himselfe vnto vs. And thus muche as concerning that which hath ben touched, namely that (as Sainct Peter sayeth) Satan ceaseth

1. Pet. 5. 1. 8. not too goe aboute lyke a roring Lyon whiche seeketh continually for a newe praie. Seeing it is so, lette vs keepe good watche, and stande vpon oure garde: For after Sainct Peter hath threatened vs in that wyse: he addeth, VWithstande you stedfastly through faith.

Heereby he sheweth vs, that wee must not be afrayde although Satan haue suche a power, and that he be called the prince of the worlde: I saye wee neede not be afrayd that he should ouerwhelme vs, so long as we be armed with faith. For we shall haue strengthe inough, and we shall be sure of the victorie, if we rest vpon God, and leane vnto the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christe, whereof mention is made in the tenth chapter of Iohn. The father (sayth he) whiche hath put you into my hande, is stronger than all. Feare ye not that Satan shall ouercome his maker. For God hath put vs into the handes of oure Lord Iesus Christ, to the intent that he shuld be the good and faythfull keeper both of our soules and of our bodies. Therefore let vs rest our selues vpon him: but yet let vs not cease to be still ware and carefull. Suche as are negligent shall fynde them selues ouertaken at euery blow. For as for the surenesse whiche we haue in God, it maketh vs not dull, nor to forget our owne daungers, wherein wee be: but only vpholdeth vs that wee quayle not in fyghting. But as for them that are drouzie and flatter theselues: they despise Gods ayd and relief. Our Lord sayth, I wil hold you vp, be not afrayd: for although Satan giue charge vpon you with thundering assaults, and that it seemeth too you that all shall goe too wrecke: yet shal ye be safe vnder me, and vnder my hande. But when he sayth so, his meaning is not that men shoulde presume vpon themselves and go no further: but contrarywyse he sayth, Come too mee, retire your selues vnder my protection, that I maye bee your fortresse against them that deuise mischief towards you. And sith we fynd our selues assayled of so many enemies: it behoueth vs so much the more to knowe what great neede we haue of Gods helpe, and that when we be vnder his protection, we are sure, that neyther Satan nor all the wicked menne in the worlde, can bring that thing aboute whiche they haue enterprised against vs. Let vs marke then how the diuel is painted out liuely vnto vs, and that when the holie ghost sayeth, that he ceaseth not to keepe his courtes and circuits about the earth, it standeth vs on hand to keepe always sure watch, and to be euermore awake of purpose to pray vnto God, and to haue our recourse vnto him, and also to arme our selues more and more with faith, that we may enter into the field of battell to fyght couragiously, vntill such time as God graunt vs to enioye the victorie that he hath promised vs. And where as it is sayd here of Iob, that God questioned with Satan about him specially: it is a token (as I haue declared already) that euen in those dayes he had very fewe fellows that serued God purely. And here we see why it is precisely sayde, that he withdrew himselfe from euill. For all was full of corruption, and it was nothing else but an ouerflowing of iniquitie. If there had ben good store of righteous menne in the world, and that Iob had had manie like himselfe, that had giuen themselves to serue God as he did: God had not spoken of that one man alone: but heere it is sayde ex-pressely of Iob, He hath not bis matche or bis lyke.

By this then wee bee warned, not to marre our selues when we be among wicked persons: and that though we see the whole worlde set vpon mischief, and turned vpside downe, we must not take example thereat, to suffer oure selues to be caried away, but keepe vs still in righte obedience vnder the guidance of God, beseeching him to strengthen vs with his holie spirit, that our heeles be not tripped vp by the stumbling blocks which we see, and which the diuell casteth afore vs to thrust vs out of our waye. Seing then that Iob liued after that sort in all soundnesse, notwithstanding that al the corruptions of the world werife at that time (for all was corrupted:) Let vs mark, that although things be neuer so farre out of order, wee must not giue our selues libertie to doo euill: but wee muste haue an eye vnto God, and be throughly fetled in him, and walke as it were in his presence. For we see what recorde was giuen to the holie fathers that liued rightuouly: that is to wit, that they regarded not what men did, to saye, I shall haue leaue to doo as muche as they, I wil be no better than my neybour: but they coulde saye: Behold, God seeth vs howe wee walke in this worlde, and therefore we must behaue our selues as if we were before him, and we must haue our eyes fastned and settled vpon him. I haue tolde you heretofore what the qualities and tytes importe whiche God giueth here vnto Iob: namely, that fyrst he had the sayde substantialnesse or soundnesse of heart, for that is the true foundation wherevpon we must grounde our selues. Admit wee haue all the vertues of the worlde, so as wee be praysed and honoured of all men, and that we seeme to be very angels: yet shal our whole life be but dung and stark filthinesse before God, vnlesse the sayd fountaine of the heart be pure and cleane: for according therevnto shall our workes be esteemed. Therefore let euery man enter into himself, and searche his owne conscience: for we be wel liked of men, and all men may be well contented with vs, yea and they may clappe theyr handes at vs: and yet wee shall be neuertheless cursed afore God, if there be any hypocrisie in our hearts: or if we be not purged cleane from all dissimulation, so as there maye be no doublenesse in vs, nor twoo heartes at once, as the Scripture sayeth in another place. Now when we be so mynded to serue God: our lyfe also will be answerable therunto, and we shall walke as it becommeth vs. VVee see diuers that woulde fayne bee taken for the ryghtuouest folke in the worlde. But what? their verie lyfe sheweth the contrarie: They are menne of so good behaioure, as it is a woonder to see them: yea with full mouth. But with full eyes, with full eares, full fecte, and full handes, they bee fullye diuels incarnate, and deadlie plagues too infecte the whole worlde. So then, let vs marke well, that the saide soundnesse must bee matched with honesty and vpright dealing, so as wee maye bee conuersante among menne, without anoying any man: indeuoring too helpe oure neybour, and shewing the freendlinesse which God commaundeth vs. Here we see wherein we shewe our soundnesse: and this is the true touchestone wherby God pro-ueth vs. Like as gold is tried either by the touchestone, or in the furnace: euen so oure soundhartednesse sheweth it self by oure honest and vpright dealing, when we lyue among men without anoying them, and without desyre to drawe other mennes goodes vnto vs, being voyde of crueltie, voyde of pride, and voyde of vaynegloriousnesse: And, contrarywyse beeyng courteouse too helpe euery man, pitifull to succoure suche as are in necessitie, and diligente too imploye our selues according too the abilitie that God giueth vs. And like as it behoueth vs to walke

to walke vprightly and faythfully with oure neyghbours : so behoueth it vs also to feare God. For it were no reason that men should haue their right and dutie, and that God in the meane whyle shuld go without his. For it is he that we must begin at, according as he is highest in degree. So then wee must in suche wise applie our selues to the seruing of our neyghbours, as in the meane tyme God be not forgotten.

And this is a thing well worth the marking. For sometymes shall wee see an outward countenance of vertue in men, so as a man would saye, they be Perie angels, and no man can fynde faulte with them : But what for that? They regard not God, but rather despize him. Therefore it is not without cause that God purposing here to commend his seruant Iob, matcheth these two things together, namely that he had liued vprightly among men, and also that he had the sayd deuoutnesse, that is to wit, a true mynde to worship the liuyng God. And yet for all this, he dwelled here in the worlde among many corruptions. Now if we consider the soundnesse wherein he liued : wee be ouerlazier but if we resist all the euils wherewith wee be enuironed. It is sayd, that Iob withdrew himselfe from euill : and therefore lette vs not thinke too serue God without trouble, for we shall be prouoked to doo euill on all sydes. How then shall wee walke as it becommeth vs. It behoueth vs indeuer to withdraw oure selues from euill, yea euen from the euill that is within vs. If the euill were but neere vnto vs, yet woulde it stand vs on hand to bee heedfull in withdrawing our selues : for if we smell any stinche, incontinently we turne away our face. And I pray you when Satan seketh to poyson vs, and all is full of infection, haue we not good cause to withdraw oure selues. But (as I sayd) the euil is within vs, it is as a burning ouen : and looke how many wicked lustes there bee to carye vs away : so many aduersaries are there too the wil of God. All the whole nature of man (saith Sainct Paule) is nothing else but enmitie agaynst God. Therefore it behoueth vs to be the more carefull to put this doctrine here in vre, that is to wit, of withdrawing our selues from euill. And howe shall wee withdraw our selues? Firste of all let vs take heed of our selues, and of our wicked affections, whiche serue to turne vs asyde from God. Then afterward lette vs beware of leude persons, who are as it were fyrebrandes to set the mischief more on fyre : and these are mortall plagues. Nowe then, when wee see so muche iniquitie, so much loosenesse, and so muche outrage in the worlde, that vices haue their full scope : what is to bee done? Let vs withdraw our selues, and lette vs shunne occasion, according also as Sainct Paule alledgeth the same recorde, saying : VWithdrawe youre selues, and flee farre from Babylon, you that carrie the Lordes vessels. Hereby Paule meaneth, that after we be once baptized in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christe, it behoueth vs to be holie both in bodie and mynde, and to bee given wholly vnto God, and dedicated to his seruice : whiche thing can not bee doone, but by withdrawyng our selues from the defylementes that may corrupt vs. So then lette vs eschue occasions of euill. And when wee see the worlde so ouerflowed with all vice, let vs aduisedly withdraw our selues, and fasten our eyes vpon God, who maketh vs holie. And now our Lorde addeth a tytle whiche hee vsed not afore : that Iob kept still his soundnesse.

Heerein our Lorde commendeth his constancie, whiche was not apparant vntill suche tyme as hee had bene wounded to the quicke. Iob had heretofore ben a man that feared God, he had ben sounde, he had had the sayd substantialnesse that I spake of, and he had had the foresayde honest and vpright dealing in his conuersation with his neyghbours. Truly it was very muche for him too haue so many goodly vertues : but yet it was not knowne that he had such constancie in him, as to holde out in his soundnesse. But nowe is Iob bereft of all his goods, and he hath loste his children : and yet for all that he blisseth the name of God, acknowledging that he ought to liue vnder condition that if God giue him goodes too vse, and afterward take them from him again, he ought to prepare himselfe to nakednesse and miserie, and not kicke against him that hath all power and authoritie.

Lo here the inuincible constancie that was knowne to bee in Iob, whiche heeretofore had had no suche tryall. And hereby we see, that it is necessarie for vs to be afflicted, and that although we fynd it harde and paynfull at the firste sighte, yet is it behouefull for vs. And why so? For wee thinke not vpon Gods helpe, as becommeth vs, vntill wee haue trauailed thorough many daungers, and that it hath ben our chaunce to get the vpper hande ouer all temptations. So then, lette vs marke well, that lyke as God hath told vs, that Iob kept stil his soundnesse, notwithstanding that he had ben sore persecuted : so also must we passe by the same gate : that is to wit, wee must be in continuall readynesse to serue God, and too giue our selues wholly vnto him, notwithstanding that wee bee tryed in diuers sortes. And wherefore? Euen too holde still oure soundnesse. VVe see then howe it is needefull that euery one of vs should be so exercised, to the ende that on the one syde wee may knowe what nede we haue of Gods help : and that on the other syde our faith may bee the better tryed, and the power of the holighoste shewe and vtter it selfe the better in vs, by getting the vpper hande in the temptations and battels, that are put vnto vs by Satan. God then graunt vs to bee armed aforehande with the sayd heauenly vertue [of constancie] to withstande all incounters vntill we haue the full victorie, when wee shall be gathered into the euerlasting rest of the heauenly kingdome.

But let vs cast our selues downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, beseeching him to make vs feele them better, to the intent that in crauing pardon at his hande, wee may be rightly forie and displeas'd with oure selues for them, and that therewithall we may be so forestrengthened by him, and by his holie spirite, as the diuell may not be able to get in any thing at our handes, but that wee may get victorie against him, against the whole worlde, and against all oure fleshly affections. And so let vs all saye, Almightye God and our heauenly Father. &c.

The ninth Sermon, which is the second vpon the seconde Chapter.

- 7 Satan vvent out from the presence of the Lord, and smote Iob vwith an euill sore from the sole of his foote to the crowne of his head.
- 8 Then tooke he a potsherd to scrape himselfe, and he sate him downe in the duste.
- 9 And his vvife said vnto him, dost thou yett hold still thy singlennesse? Blisse God and die.
- 10 He answered hir, Thou speakest like a foolish vvomā. VVe haue receiued good of the Lord, and shall vve not receyue euil? In all this Iob sinned not vwith his lippes.

We haue to marke heere, that when God hath withdrawn his hande from vs, wee muste prepare oure selues too suffer muche greater miseries than wee haue escaped. For wee see after what maner God proceedeth, when he afflicteth his seruantes. If they bee but Nouices, so as they bee not acquainted with the suffering of aduersitie, he spareth them, lyke as wee woulde not lay so greate a burden vpon a little childe, as vpon a man. God then hath a regarde of our ablenesse too beare, and according as wee bee practized with the induring of troubles, so sendeth he them too vs smaller or greater. But when wee bee once as it were inured with them, then maye he the better lay full lode vpon vs: for he hath also giuen vs wherewith too beare it oute. And wee see howe he speaketh too Peter, saying that at suche tyme as he was yong, he was leste at his owne ease and rest: but when thou arte olde (saythe he) another shall

Iohn. 21. e. 18.

20 30 40
 50
 60
 When the robbers had made cleane riddaunce of all his great cattell, the lightning came from heauen too consume the rest: His children dyed, as if the hande of God had bene their enimie, and by and by after he was plagued in his owne person. Heere was inoughe too haue ouerwhelmed Iob, notwithstanding that he had a wonderfull stoutnesse in him. But it was Gods will too worke after suche a maner in him, too the intente that every one of vs when wee bee afflicted, shoulde consider that God ceaseth not too bee oure father still. For he neuer forsooke his seruant Iob, althoughe he were come to suche extremities. And when wee suffer but the one halfe, yea or the tenth parte of that whiche he endured: shall wee bee excused if wee murmure? Nay rather, haue wee not cause too thanke God for regarding of oure infirmitie, when he punisheth vs but according too that whiche he seeth vs able too endure? And what letteth that wee shoulde not bee afflicted as muche as Iob? Is it for that God hath not so muche authoritie ouer vs? or is it for that Satan is become more gentle nowe a dayes? VVee bee sure that the rage of oure mortall enimie Satan is the selfe same it was, and that he is of the same mynde still that he was then, and that he keepeth still his accustomed nature, that is too witte, too bee as a Lyon roaring with open mouthe too swallowe vs vp. If God giue him the brydle, wee bee sure wee shall endure as muche or more than Iob. But our afflictions are meane and sweete, if a man compare them with the afflictions that are spoken of heere. Therefore let vs conclude, that God sheweth him selfe curteous and very pityfull towards vs, seeing wee bee chastized so gently at his hande, and that he keepeth such a measure as wee bee not racked too the vttermost, nor he vsfeth so greate and excessiue rigour as wee see heere in the person of Iob. Furthermore it is heere shewed vs, howe men oughte too renounce them selues, that they may giue them selues wholly ouer vnto God. But as long as a man standeth in his owne conceyte (yea euen though he bee well accustomed too serue God,) it can not bee but hee shall rather goe backwarde than forwarde. For prooffe whereof, he that standeth in his owne conceyte, delighteth also in his owne pleasures, and in his owne ease, and he desireth to haue all his owne commodities, and al that his lust leadeth him to. But god meaneth to hadle vs cleane cōtrariwise: How is that? Is it for that God delighteth to trouble vs? No: but bicause it is behoofefull for vs to be so tamed and brought lowe that wee may shewe the subiection which wee oughte too yelde vnto God. If God should frame himselfe too

10 20 30 40
 50 60
 70
 80
 90 100
 110
 120
 130
 140
 150
 160
 170
 180
 190
 200
 210
 220
 230
 240
 250
 260
 270
 280
 290
 300
 310
 320
 330
 340
 350
 360
 370
 380
 390
 400
 410
 420
 430
 440
 450
 460
 470
 480
 490
 500
 510
 520
 530
 540
 550
 560
 570
 580
 590
 600
 610
 620
 630
 640
 650
 660 670
 680
 690
 700
 710
 720
 730
 740
 750
 760
 770
 780
 790
 800
 810
 820
 830
 840
 850
 860
 870
 880
 890
 900
 910
 920
 930
 940
 950
 960
 970
 980
 990
 1000

our

our will in the things that he fendeth vpon vs: a man coulde not well discern what it were too bee obedient. But when he handleth vs cleane cōtrarie to our appetite, and that wee be so subiect vnto him as we holde all our affections vnder his brydle, to the ende to frame our selues to his lure and to yeelde him the honor of gouerning vs, yea euen after his owne good will as he listeth to dispose of vs: therein we shewe that we are obedient to him.

Thus we see what is declared to vs in this text. And we see howe Job is fayne to fighte againste all his owne affections, to bereeue himselfe of them, and to hold himselfe as a prysoner: for otherwise he should leape out of his boundes, he should lift vp himselfe agaynst God, or at leastwyse he should fall into such anger, as he should do nothing but storme within himselfe so that God should haue nother credite nor superioritie in him. Then let vs take example at Job, to resist all our affections and to bring them vnderfoote, if we intende to serue God. For it is impossible that he should haue the full vse of vs till we be come to that poynt: that is to wit, till we renounce our selues, and that wee set not so much store by our lyfe, but we can better finde in our hartes to yeelde our selues subiect to him whose we are, and to whom it becommeth vs to dedicate our lyfe, than to be so giuen to our owne commoditie and ease. True it is that wee may well desire God to asist vs and to sende vs what so euer is meete for vs. But yet therewithall wee must holde vs at this stay: namely that he may do what he knoweth to be good: and that though it be agaynst our appetyte, yet he will graunt vs grace to frame our selues vnto him, and to folowe him throughout whither soeuer he call vs. And that is the thing which wee haue to practyze all the time of our lyfe. VVhen a trade, occupation or handicraft is hard, we must haue the more time to learne it, and it hath the more cunning belonging to it. This lesson here is hard for vs to learne, yea and ouerhard (say I) for vs to put in vre. True it is that we can well ynough confesse, how it is good reason that God should be chiefe Mayster and reygne ouer vs, and that wee should not striue agaynst him: but when it commeth to the deede doing, there be very fewe that demeane themselves thereafter. Therefore let vs all the time of our lyfe learne to remember the sayd lesson and to inyre our selues to it, vntill wee haue profited in it as we haue neede to do. But for as-muche as it shall be handeled more at large heereafter: now I will no more but glaunce at the things as I passe by them.

Let vs come to that which is added in the text: that is to wit, that Jobs wife commeth to him to prouoke him to despayre. How now? (sayeth she) Continueth thou yet still in thy singleness? Blisse God and dye. The Diuell findeth meanes ynow to incounter vs, without hauing any bellowes to quicken vp the fyre. For we know there is so great sturdinesse in our nature, as it is pitie to see it. In steade of quiet submitting of our selues vnto God and vnto his holie spirit and will as we ought to do, we conceyue wandering imaginations, and there is not any of vs all, which hath not as it were a whole storehouse full of such dotages in his brayne, where through he is as it were made drunken, according as we knowe that all the lustes of our fleshe are enemies agaynst God. So then, there is none of vs which ouershooteth not himselfe, though we haue no intycers to prouoke vs agaynst God, or to drawe vs vnto despayre. To be short, though Satan take no instruments without vs to deceyue vs withall: he shall finde ynow within our owne persones. Our enemies are already within vs. For (as I haue sayd) all our wauering fancies, are vtter enemies to God: and all our affections are armed agaynst him, to make vs striue agaynst hys punishments when he fendeth them vnto vs. Therefore it was a dubble warre vnto Job, when besides the possibilitie of being tempted in himselfe, his owne wife prouoked him to despaire: for that was the full measure of all miserie. But God permitteth it to happen to his faithfull ones, and that in especiallye when hee purposeth to trye them to the quicke. And this lighted not vpon Job alone. But we see it most of all in Dauid: yea and wee see it also in our Lorde Iesus Christe. Beholde here two mirroures wherein God ment to represente the said kinde of temptation vnto vs. For one of the greuouslest cōplaints that Dauid maketh, is that hee was mocked, for putting hys trust in God, in somuche as he became a laughingstocke to euerye man, and men bleared out their tungs at hym saying: O see la, he bare himselfe in hand that he sate in Gods lappe: he called him his protector, his buckler, and his fortresse: hee bragged of his calling vpon him, and of his resorting to him for refuge: and to be short, it seemed that God should neuer haue forsaken him: and nowe a man may see howe he hath esteemed him. All the myseries that Dauid endured, were not so hard to digest, ne wounded him so deadly, as these reproches that men offered him. And verely Satan seeth how he holdeth vs as it were by the throte, when hee hathe once wonne thys poynte at oure handes. For hee standeth not skanning whether hee maye picke vs and wounde vs in the arme, or in the legge: but hee commeth righte to the hearte, and too the throate of vs when hee hathe once doone so muche, that wicked folke fell a mockyng of vs, as though we hadde trusted to God in vayne, and were disappoynted of the hope that wee wayted for at his hande. VVee see then that our faith goeth too vtter wrecke, if wee giue place too any suche temptation. And looke what befell vnto Dauid, the same was accomplished in our Lord Iesus Christ. Therefore it behoueth vs who are his members, to be fashioned like vnto hym, and that the same likenesse be fulfilled in our persons, and that wee put our selues in a readinesse to resist when we indure aduersities and when wicked persones come to sting vs by scoffing at our fayth, of purpose to cast vs into such despayre, as our hartes might misgiue vs that God is agaynst vs, and that wee be cut shorte of the trust that wee reposed in him, when wee finde not the succoure that wee looked for at hys hande. Lette vs arme our selues agaynst the suche temptation, that wee quayle not vnder it. True it is (as I haue erst sayd) that it is a right harde temptation to ouercome: but wee see what is written here of Job. Is not he that vphild him, strong ynough to helpe vs also, that we may not quaille? Neuerthelesse we haue here an example, how that after Satan hath tormented vs and that wee haue bene visited bothe in bodie and goods and in all things els: to knit vp the matter withall, wee must bee fayne to be mocked, and to haue our fayth assaulted. And this cannot bee done, but the name of God must bee blasphemed: and therefore wee must needes be grieved and sorie at the hart, when that happeneth. For when the vnfaythfull skorne vs as reiected of God, they blame him of vntruth as though he had beguyled vs, and therefore it muste needes grieue vs and torment vs. But how soeuer the world go, let vs not faynt for all that: but let vs call to remembrance what hath hapned vnto Job and vnto Dauid, and what Iesus Christ hath shewed vs, to the end we may not thinke it straunge if we be fashioned like vnto his image. For here we see vpon what cōdicio God hath grefed vs into the body of his sonne, so as he is the generall patrone of all the faythfull, as Saincte Paule declareth in the viij. to the Romaines.

But let vs now consider what is imported in the said tēp-tation, whiche Iobs wyfe bringeth, saying: Dost thou yet bold stil thy singlenesse? As if she had said, what gainest thou by seruing God? For thine intent in seruing him, hath ben to be supported by him, that he should haue liked well of thee, and that he should haue shewed by his dooings that he is thy father: and thou seeest howe hee is an enimie too thee, and persecuteth thee. So then thy soundnesse boote-teth thee nothing at all. Lo heere what hir conclusion is:
As concerning that which foloweth, namely Blisse God and dye: it is expounded in diuers maners. For wee haue seene how this word Blisse, is somtimes taken to Curse. And that custome, (that is to saye, that maner of speaking) serueth to teache vs to detest blasphemie againste God, as a thing that ought not to be named. Then are we done to vnder-stand that to grudge agaynst God, or to spite him, or to cast foorth any wordes that may found to his dishonour, is so detestable a thing, as wee must euen shudder and quake at it: according as wee see that when Sainct Paule speaketh against whordome and other villainous loofenesse, and against gluttonie and robbrie: let them not (sayth he) be once named among you. And therefore some expounde this sentence thus: Blisse the Lorde, that is to say, prouoke God to anger, and then thou dyest for it: reuenge thy selfe on him once ere thou dye: for thou seeest well inough that he hath deceiued thee.

And it is not to be doubted but this woman here was an instrument of Satan, and therefore it is not to be maruelled though she be as a Sheediuell, or as a feend of hell, to sette
Iob in suche a rage, as he should lift vp himselfe againste God, and fall too rushing againste his maiestie. But if the matter be throughly considered, the naturall meaning of it is this rather: Blisse God and die: that is to say, wel mayst thou persist to blisse God as much as thou wilt: but when thou hast all doone, thou shalt gayne nothing by it, it is but lost labour: thou must be fayn to die, do what thou canst:
it is fully determined that it shall be so: for thou seeest that God hath not heard thy prayers, whether thou glorifye him or not: it is all one: none of this shall come at Heauen: therefore thou haste spunne a fayre threde in humbling thy selfe afore God: nay, sith thou must dye lyke a poore forlorne caytife, looke not that God should be appeased towards thee, nor that his wrathe should be assuaged, thou must needs passe through it. True it is that the sense commes continually all to one poynt: and therefore it behoueth me not to stande greatly vpon the wordes.
For the principal point is to haue such doctrine, as the ho-lie Ghost giueth vs. For the firste poynte, and without any difficultie, (as the wordes themselves conteyne) it is certaine that the marke wherat Iobs wyfe shotte, was too drue him to despayre, to the ende he should haue fretted and chafed against God, and haue losse his whole vnder-standing, and in stede of blissing of God as he had earst done, haue prouoked him to wrath, and finally haue flin-ged himselfe ouer all the fieldes lyke a wood beaft.

And here we haue to consider throughly, what is sayde of Iob: for it is a common instruction for all the faithfull.
Therefore let vs beare it well awaye, and applie it to oure our owne vse. True it is that this saying heere, came oute of a womans mouthe: But howe many are there too bee founde, that will say the lyke at this daye? It is the ordinarie custome of the world. For wee serue not God (now adayes) but by indenture as they say. Yea and men themselves are not ashamed to confesse their owne vnbeleefe by their prouerbes. They saye a man should not truste so much to the boughes, as to lette goe his holde of the bodie of the tree, which is as much to say as they must not trust altogether vnto God. VVherunto tend these things, but to shewe that we yeeld no honor vnto God? But we conceiue them accordingly as the things themselves import. If God ddo vs good, peradventure it may so be that we will shew how we be beholden to him. But if hee handle vs amisse, incontinently it is at our tounge end to say:

To what purpose doo we ouerlabour our selues? Also let vs marke well, that if Iob were tempted and prouoked by his owne wyfe: Satan shall haue store of vndermyners in these dayes to leade vs into lyke temptation, if we be not armed and fenced to resist it. Thus we see then what wee haue to do. Besides this, if it happen that the wicked come not to pricke vs forward after that maner: yet it may bee that euen they which haue profited most in Gods schole, may conceiue such imaginations of themselves. VVe see how euen Dauid confesseth of himself, that he had stode as it were vpon yce, and thought he should haue slyded when he entred into that discourse with himself, and saw how the wicked fort were oftentimes too well intreated, so as they glutted themselves with the pleasures of thys worlde, and pyned not awaye as the good men doo: and that on the contrarie part, the poore faithfull ones drinke heere of the water of sorow, so as God ceaseth not too punish them. VVherfore he protesteth, that in the ende he came to say, And what? Then, that I haue indeuored to haue cleane and pure handes, is it any better than losse tyme? is it not an vnprofitable labor? Dauid confesseth that he was encombred with such a temptation: not that he was overthrowne in it, but for that it came before him and he resisted it stedfastly. So then lette vs marke, that when the diuell bringeth such matches to set vs the more on fyre agaynst God in our afflictions: we must not giue eare to him, least he entrap vs: and therefore that we must bethinke vs of this lesſon a long tyme aforehande, which serueth to giue vs victorie agaynst suche encounters.
And here we see wherfore it is sayd in Esay, Say ye, there is a rewarde for the ryghtuous. That is to saye, conclude you so with your selues. VVhen you see al things so confounded, as it maye seeme that all order is turned vpside down, and that God fauoreth the wicked, and hateth the godly, or rather that Fortune beareth al the sway, & that God is a sleepe in heauen, and gouerneth no more the things here beneath: yet must you alwayes assure your selues of this, that the rightuous shall reape the fruite of their labours. So then it is true that there can not bee a worſe temptation, than to thinke that we lose our labour in seruing God, and in praying his name, and in holding our selues vnder him. And therefore it behoueth vs to bee fully perswaded, that God wil in no wise disappoint those that honour and serue him. If wee haue not this opinion: it is impossible that euer we shuld haue the least desire that can be in the worlde, to giue our selues vntoo God. If wee imagin that God turneth his backe vpon vs, that he makes a sport to see vs turmoyle so here below that he shutteth his eyes, and that it is but lost tyme too walke in all carefulnesse: who is hee that can bende himselfe to doo well? Now then, forasmuche as it behoueth those that serue God and come neereſt vnto him, to bee fully resolued, that he rewardeth those that feare him: we see that the woorst and deadliest temptation that Satan can trumpe in our way, is when he beares vs in hand, that wee doo but lose tyme, when wee praye vntoo God, and make oure recourse vnto him. And so muche the more muste wee bee watchfull agaynst suche temptations, as we perceiue them to be so wicked and dangerous. Herewithall let vs beare in mynde, that it behoueth vs to be redy fenced agaynst the greateſt freendes that wee haue.

The

The case is so here, as I may yeeld nother to my wife, nor to my neighbore simply, no nor euen to him whome I trust best. For our linking one with another must be such as we alwayes haue regard of God, and that the bond of our concord and frédship proceede from him. Also let vs remember, that if a man haue a diuell in his house to disquiet him, or if he haue two or three: so much the more neede hath he to stande vpon his gard: and it maye in no wise serue to excuse them for setting themselves in a chafe against God. For it declareth vnto vs that we must garde 10 our selues on al sides. And why so: for Satan our mortall enimie is ouerwily, he spieth on what side he may best enter, and if there be any feeble place, there will he make a breach. And the easiest entrance that he hath into vs, is by the loue that the husbände beareth to the wife, and a singular freende vnto him that he trusteth. Satan sees well ynough that we giue way to such manner of persons, and therefore he laboreth the more earnestly to serue his own turne by them against vs. Yet must not this diminishe the fréndships that are good and godly: but the husband must 20 pray God, that he suffer not his wife to be as a firebronde of hell, to kindle the fire of impacione, or of distrust in him, to prouoke him to blasphemie. Also it behoueth the wife to pray God, that hir husband may guide hir as is cōueniente, and be alwayes able to instruste hir aright as hir head and superioure. And moreouer when God hath giuen vs freends and acquaintance, we must pray hym that they may serue all to his honoure, so as eche of vs maye further other in the way of saluation, and not entice one another vnto wickednessē. Thus we see what we haue to 30 do in the firste pointe: and consequently, let vs aduise oure selues well, that euery one of them, both wiues and husbands, freends and kinnsfolke, may helpe vs to serue God, and that we our selues may ayme alwayes at that marke: specially when we see that God dwelleth in them, and that he vseth them as his own hands to guide vs withall. But if a freend, or a kinsmā, or a wife go about to driue vs to despaire: then out of all peradventure we must renounce them all, for God must be preferred, and our fréndship must begin at him, and leuell at him, as at their true mark. 40 And this is it that we haue to marke in this streine according also as Iob sheweth vs by his owne example, saying: Thou hast spoken like a foolish woman: verely we haue receyued good at the hand of the Lord, and shal we not also receyue euill? VVhen as Iob answereth, that his wife hath spoken foolishly: thereby we be admonished, that we ought to reprocue suche blasphemies sharply, for asmuche as they bee spewed out by Satan. For if we see a sword drawn against vs, or a foynē cast at vs to wound vs vnto deathe: what would we do in that behalfe? would we suffer our selues 50 to be slayne without making countenance of any thing? No: but we would take heede to shift off the blewē or to ward it, if we set any store by our life. Euen so when Iob saw himselfe so persecuted of his owne wife, and that she wēt about not to worke him some harme in his body only, but to sende him to the deepe pit of hell: he resisted hir stoutly. VVe see then with what corage we ought to proceede in suche cases, and howe it is no dalying with Satan seing we finde him so furious an enimie, nor no going to the matter as though we went to some light skirmish that 60 were easy to ouercome. And furthermore, Iob had also an eye to that which hath bene recited heretofore. For (as I haue said) if a man vpbraid vs, that it is but a vaine thing to trust in God: true it is that the same doing troubleth vs, and is ynough to quenche our faith: and therewithall God is accused of mildealing and of mocking his seruants, and specially of vniustice: all that is proper to him is plucked from him, and he shal be no longer God, except he discerne good from euill, to aduance those that serue him in fowndnesse, so as he may be iudge of the world, and ready to heare them that resort to him for succor. If God be bereft of such vertues: we see most certainly, that both his glory, and his Godhed, and his being, are quite abolished. So then Iob could not beare with such blasphemies, according also as it is said in the Psalme, that the zeale of Gods house ought to bite our harts and to consume vs, and that the reproch which men offer vnto him, ought to rebound vpon vs, so as it behoueth vs to be grieved whē we see the honoure of God impeached. Then if we be his children, it becommeth vs to set our selues against it. And thus we see what we haue to note when Iob rebuked his wife so stoutly (as to say) Thou hast spoken like a foole. And herewithall let vs beare in mind, that this answer here ought to be made against all like temptations, from what partie soeuer they come, or from whence soeuer they be sent at vs. But aboue all, when we be troubled with the lewd imaginations of our owne flesh, it behoueth vs to followe the example of Iob, and to learne of him howe to deale with our owne griefes: and whereas we haue bene accustomed to be angrie with them that sting vs or do vs any wrong: euery one of vs must begin to storme against himselfe: so as we may bethinke our selues thus: I haue such a vice: I am angry with mine enimies if anye one of them haue practised euil against me, and I can haue no patience, but am caried away with a desire of vengēce to requite like for like: and yet when I haue well iustified my selfe, I finde not a worse enimie to my welfare, than my selfe: that is to say, this yngracious nature, and the wicked affections that I conceiue within me are as many enimies to hinder my welfare. And therefore it becommeth me to be angrie at my selfe, by cause it is from thence that my greatest enimies come. VVherefore when such temptations come vpon vs, as we see it happened here to Iob: let vs learne to withstand them stoutly, without soothing of our selues, to the end we may ouercome them. And when we see our selues trained by any lewde fancies to striue against God (as our nature is full of rebelliousnesse, and of striuing against him) we must not flatter our selues to say as some do, that it is but our nature, and that we be not able to amend it: but let vs assure our selues that such excuses shall stande vs in no steade: for it behoueth vs to fight stoutly and to resist them, and it is not for vs to saye flatly, O, we must saue our selues, or I wote not what: no no: But we must enter into the combate, yea and into a liuely combate, where we must employ all our witte, and all our endeuoure, or else we shall neuer come to an end of it. Lo whereof we be aduised in this streine. And whē Iob addeth, Seeing we haue receiued good of the Lorde, why should we not also receiue euill? he setteth downe a naturall argument to induce vs to beare patiently the euill and aduersties that God sendeth vs. For if we be so muche bounde to a man, that when we haue receiued a good turne at his hand, we will haue such consideration of him as to saye, he is a man that hath done me greate good: if here vpon we indure not any thing at the hands of them to whome we be so muche beholden, will not men saye that there is to vilanouse an vnthankfulnesse in vs? According then as we be bound to mortall men, so also will we be patient when we shal be faine to suffer any inconuenience for them. If a childe be willing to beare with his father, forasmuche as hee knowes that his father begate him, and nourished him, and kepeth him still in his house: if the childe (notwithstanding that his father be rough towards him) be bound neuerthelessē to acknowlege that it is good reason he should abide him: If (I say) we graunt so much vnto creatures: what must we graunt to the Creator: VVe tor? We see that God dothe vs many good turnes, and shall wee endure no euill at his hand when it pleaseth him? Ought not he too haue superioritie ouer vs, and too punish the vs when he thinketh it good? This consideration ought to make vs bowe downe our neckes, and to holde vs in quiet: and that is the argument that Iob maketh heere. He had sayde heeretofore, The Lorde hath giuen, the Lorde hath taken away, and that is another reason. For thereby he ment, that when God giueth vs goods, it is not to appropriate them vnto vs (as they say:) but too 10 let vs haue the vse of them for a time, so as wee shoulde be ready at all houres to sende him home agayne that which he hath lent vs. Lo thus wee see how Iob alleageth a naturall reason: and now he bringeth another seconde reason. And what is that? We receiue good at the Lords hande, and why then receiue we not euill also? For sithe we bee so greatly bounde vnto God, it is too vile an vnthankfulnesse, if we can not finde in our hearts to suffer any thing for his sake. And furthermore, if we will marke this reason well: wee must first compare God with his 20 creatures: and then secondly wee must compare the benefites that God giueth vs, with the benefites that we can receiue of men. When God commeth in the ranke, I pray you what is all the honor, and all the authoritie that can be giuen to creatures? is it any more than a droppe in respect of that which is due vnto God, and which he hath deserued? So then let vs marke well, that if we were a hundred thousande times more pacient too suffer afflictions than we bee: if the aduersitie came vnto vs on the behalfe of men too whome we are bounde, yet were our 30 doing too no purpose. Why so? bicause the Maiesie of God surmounteth all creatures in suche wise, as wee can not discharge our selues towards him, as becommeth vs: and that although we do our duetie towards men: it is impossible too accomlishe that whiche wee owe vnto God. But aboute all, we must marke the gracious giftes that he dealth to vs continually with his owne hand. Let vs count well, for we are sure, that when we haue counted [to the vntermost] we must confesse with David, that 40 there is nother number nor measure of them. And wherefore? For Gods goodnesse is a botomelesse pit, in so much as wee must needes be rauished as ofte and as long tyme as wee muse vpon them. And for prooffe thereof, if a man consider howe God hath shewed him selfe a father too him, euen from his birthe, yea and before his birthe: I pray you muste we not bee confounded before we can reach to the hundredth parte of them? Seeing then that the case so standeth, that Gods graces are innumerable, and can by no meanes be comprehended: why receiue we not the aduersities that he sendeth vs? For although we were afflicted muche more than we be: yet shoulde Gods benefites farre surmount all the afflictions that we can suffer at his hande. So then let vs marke well the sayde reason of Iobs, to the ende that when soeuer God shall afflict vs, we may beare al things paciently, assuring our selues that it is good reason we should receiue aduersitie at his hande, sith we haue receiued so many of his benefites. But the rest of this sentence shall be referued till to morrowe, bicause it can not as now be set out at length.

Psal. 40. b. 6

And let vs pray to this good God, that it may please him to haue alwayes regard of our infirmities when soeuer he shall afflict vs: and that forasmuche as it is good reason that we should be inured vnto pacience so long as we be in this worlde: although wee bee forced to passe through many thornes and diuers hartgreefes and vexations of minde: yet neuertheless our good God wyll so arme vs with his strength, as wee may not quayle. And that forasmuche as our life is a corruptible and ruinous caban: he will holde vs vp in our feeblenesse, euen vnto the ende, and vntill suche time as he haue ridde vs quite and cleane of the infirmities of our flesh: and that therewithall wee also hauing our recourse vnto the fatherly goodnesse which he vseth towards vs, may be succoured by him in all our necessities, not doubting at all but he will bring vs to the saluation which he hath promised vs, assuring our selues, that if we persist in his obeyfance, we shall neuer be disappointed, and that if we sticke vnto his promises, he will neuer fayle to haue his hande stretched out ouer vs to succour vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to all people and nations of the worlde, &c.

The tenth Sermon, which is the third vpon the second Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth the rest of the exposition of the tenth verse afore, and afterwarde the verses following.

- 11 AND three of Iobs friends hauing heard of all the aduersities that had happened vnto him, that is to vvit, Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad the Suhite, and Zophar the Maamathite, came from the place vvhare they dvvelte: for they agreed to come to haue compafsion of him, and to comfort him.
12. And vvhens they list vp their eyes a farre off, they knevv him not, and then they listd vp their voyce and vvept, and rent their clothes, and cast dust vpon their heads to vvarde heauen,
13. And fate dovvne by him vpon the grounde by the space of seuen dayes and seuen nightes, in suche vvise as none of them spake one vvorde, for they sayve that his greefe vvas greatly increased.

Yesterday I declared in effect what Iob ment by this sentence, We haue 60 receiued good at the Lordes hande, and why receiue we not euill also? It serueth to shew how men are tooo vnthankfull, if they acknowledge not them selues so greatly bounde vnto God, for the number of benefites whiche they haue receiued at his hande, as they ought not to refuse any maner of afflictions when he listeth to exercise them therewith. But there are that vnderstande it otherwise, as though that by these words, We receiue good at the Lordes hande, Iob hoped, that yet in time to come, God would be the same towards him agayne, that he had felt him to be heretofore. And so it seemeth to them, that Iob ment to comfort his wife and him selfe by saying, This miserie shall not continue for euer: although God punish vs, he meaneth not to continue it to the vntermost: for in the end he will haue pitie vpon those that are so distressed. But the naturall meaning is that which I haue set downe already:

already: that is to wit, that Iob calling to remembrance the good that he had receyued at Gods hande, helde him selfe so beholden vnto him, as he thought him selfe bounde to abide all aduersities patiently. And heerevpon we may gather a good and profitable doctrine: that is to wit, that as ofte and as long as aduersities oppresse vs, we must acknowledge, that God hath shewed him selfe so good a father too vs in so many sortes, as it becommeth vs not to thinke it straunge if he chastize vs at tymes, nor bee prouoked and moued to grudge agaynst him for the same. And heerewithall it is certayne that Iob coule not haue bene comforted, except he had applyed Gods former benefites too the tyme too come. For if wee consider but onely howe God hath bene good too vs in tyme past, and that wee shall haue no more: too what purpose were that? for wee coule not bee pacient, as hath bene sayde already. VVe must bee well assured of the goodnesse and loue of God, and we muste truste continually too his grace, not doubting at all but that he will proceede too loue vs still, notwithstanding that he deale roughly with vs. Iob then calleth to minde the benefites that he had receyued heeretofore at Gods hande, in suche wise as he maketh this conclusion: namely that God had not changed nother his purpose nor his nature, nor ceassed too continue good and righteous, notwithstanding that he had afflicted him. VVhen we haue this consideration with vs, we see wherewith to assuage our sorowes. True it is that the aduersities that go agaynst our nature, are very sharpe and harde for vs to beare: like as medicines are bitter and troublesome, and therefore must be somewhat sweetned, that they may be the easyer receiued. God also giueth vs wherewith to season our sorowes, to the intent wee should not bee ouer sorrowfull. Heere we see a principall poynt: namely that although God seeme to bee bent agaynst vs: yet considering how wee haue founde him so good, and that he hath made vs too feele his loue after so many sortes: wee shoulde not doubt but he will continue the same euen to the ende. For this cause it is sayde, that in all these things Iob offended not with his lippes. And we must not vnderstande heere, that Iob was an hypocrite, to glorifie God with his mouth, and yet had a minde or heart too the contrarie. VVherefore then is it sayde that he sinned not with his lippes? It is to shewe that he had a wonderfull stay of him selfe. True it is, that sometimes although wee conceyue euill imaginations: yet wee holde them in, so as no euill wordes escape vs. As howe? A man is tempted too bee offended with God, and many imaginations runne in his head, in so muche that he would fayne list vp him selfe willingly agaynst God, yea and euen conceyueth blasphemies. But heerevpon he bridleth and rebuketh him selfe thus: wretched creature, what meanest thou? VVe see then, that in the midst of our temptations, God giueth vs the grace to resist them, so as wee come not to the extremitie to blaspheme him openly. Not that wee bee not blame worthy in the meane while for conceyuing suche thoughtes, or that wee ought not too condemne our selues for so doing before God: but it appeareth well, that the holy ghost hath wrought in vs, when wee haue not consented to suche temptations nor had any liking of them. And a man may well take this sentence in this sense: namely that Iob offended not with his lippes, that is to say, that he came not too extremitie: but that although he were sore prouoked too euill, yet he resisted, so as the euill ouercame him not, but he maynteyned his battell stedfastly. Norwithstanding, when wee haue considered all thinges throughly, there is no doubt but that Iob is set heere before vs as a man rightly perfecte in pacience. And for the better comprehending heereof, let vs marke howe S. James sayth, that he which hath not sinned with his tongue is perfect aboute all men. And why so? VVe see that forasmuche as men bee ouerswifte to speake, inso muche that nowe and then a thing is spoken before we can conceyue it: he that is able to holde him selfe in, so as no worde slipeth from him but with good aduise ment and well set: sheweth him selfe too bee indued with a singular grace. Thus wee see what wee haue too note heere concerning Iob: namely howe he is so farre off from shewing any sturdinesse agaynst God, that euen all his wordes are so well ordered, that whereas other men are light of speeche, and vnable to rule their tongues: Iob humbleth him selfe before God. And heereby wee bee taughte too call vpon God, too graunt vs the grace, that wee may neuer caste foorth any wordes that may tende too the dishonoure of his holy name. For wee knowe that the tongue ought too bee dedicated chiefly to the honour of God. True it is, that wee ought too apply all our members therevnto: for like as he hath created all, so is it good reason that all shoulde bee imployed to his glory. But he will haue our tongues too founde in suche wyse in our mouthes, as they may bee instrumentes too glorifie him: so as if wee apply them to the contrarie, it is as muche as to peruerthe the order of nature. And forasmuche as wee bee giuen too that vice (as I haue sayde) and there is nothing more difficulte than too withhold our selues from it: Therefore wee haue so muche the more neede too call vpon God, that he may gouerne vs in suche sorte, as wee maye not vtter one worde that shall not bee to his honour. Furthermore, if wee nowe and then conceyue some euill imaginations (as it is not possible but we muste haue many wicked thoughtes, considering our great frayltie, and howe Satan eggeth vs too this or that: ) let vs assure our selues that wee are already faultie before God, and that wee muste aske him forgiuenesse of it, and yet therewithall fighte valiantly still, and thrust those thinges vnder foote, and doo according too that which was sayde yesterday. For Iob not onely rebuked his wife: but also discovered hir folly. Therefore it becommeth vs to take good heede, that wee enter not into disputation and pleading agaynst God, but rather that wee learne too bridle, yea and too rebuke our selues lustily. Thus wee see wee muste bee sharpe to condemne suche vice as is in vs. And heerein wee see the beastlynesse that hath reigned and reigneth, yet still at this day among the Papistes. For they say in their synagoges, that if a man fall in doubt whether there be a God or no, or whether God be righteous or no, or if he conceyue horrible and outragious blasphemies in his head, it is no sinne at all, so he consente not too it vtterly. If a man bee tempted too strip his neighbour oute of his clothes, or to murder him, or to blaspheme, or too giue him selfe to whore hunting, so as he feele that his affections within him doo carrie him away: they say that all this is no sinne. Muste not suche folke needes bee worse than brute beastes? But I see one resolution whiche is common ouer all among the Papistes (and well worthy are they of suche resolutions, forasmuche as there is nothing but hypocrisie in the, by meanes wherof they make so light of sinne, as if it were nothing at all, making it to be but a veniall sinne, when a man hath offended God deadly: ) which is, that if a man haue committed the horriblest sinne in the world, he needeth but one sprinkling with holywater, and by and by he is discharged towards God. But for our parte (as I haue sayde before) let vs thinke that if we be prouoked by any wicked doubtingnesse, we be condemned alreadie before God. Then let vs preuent his iudgement, and be our owne iudges, and yeelde our selues guiltie: and yet in the meane whyle let vs not doubt, but God hath mercie on vs, and will hold vs vp in our infirmities: conditionally that by the grace of his holy spirit we shake of al such things, and agree not to put the wicked imaginations in practize, which we shal haue conceyued in our mindes. Thus you see how wee ought to deale in this behalfe. It is consequently sayde. That three of Iobs freendes hauing heard of all the miseries that were happened vnto him, tooke a ioyce to visit him. And to what ende? Too haue compassion of him, and to comfort him. It is a good likelyhood at the first blush that God meant to releue his seruant Iob, when he sent men vnto him that pretended to haue pitie vpon his miseries, and were skilfull and wise to comfort him, as we well shal see by their discourfes anon after, how they were exquisite persones. And so a man might suppose, that God would héceforth stretch out his hand vnto Iob, to deliuer him from the miseries that he had sent him. But we see, that this visitation of his freendes, was to increace his miserie, and to plunge him euen into the bottome of endlesse waues. VVhereby we be admonished, that if at any time we be in hope to be drawn out of our afflictions: we must not thinke it straunge though the matter fall not out as we haue conceyued. For we see how Iob was disappointed of his hope which he had when he sawe his freendes, and how they became as Diuelles to torment him more than he had bene tormented afore. Yet notwithstanding, their minde was not to do so, neyther came they to mocke Iob: they brought no malicious purpose nor wicked intent with them: but they had a right and hartie good will and loue towards him. For it is sayd that their meaning was to haue compassion on him, that is to say, to take to themselves some part of his miserie, so far as was possible for them to beare such a griefe, as if they had bene ioyned & knit together in this persone. Lo to what ende they came, and yet notwithstanding, we see how Iob had his afflictio more grieuouly increaced by it. Then let vs take warning by such example, that although we be well minded towards our neighbors, and be desirous to comfort them in their miseries: yet God must guyde vs, or els our sayd good intent will nothing auayle vs. Therefore when wee see our neighbors in any daunger or necessitie: truly we ought to beseech God to giue vs the grace to haue compassion of them and to succour them: but yet that is not all. And wherefore? Bicause wee haue not the spirite of wisdome: in so much that we go cleane awke, and yet we beare our selues in hand, that we do the best in the world, when it shall be but to dryue a poore man to despayre, which felt so muche of his miserie before. VVe see how there be many zelous persons, which are very earnest and desirous to shewe themselves charitable towards those whome they are able to helpe: but what for that? there is no handsonnesse nor good fashio[n] [in their dealing.] VVhen they come to a poore creature that is alreadie afflicted, they bring him a new torment. And wherof cometh that? Euen of the want of discretion and skill. Therefore God must be fayne to worke in this cace: and (as I haue sayd) if we will succour one another in our necessities: when God shall haue giuen vs this affection, then let vs pray him to giue vs also the meane and right vse of it out of hand, that we may giue that which is good and profitable, and that we may haue skill to handle folke according as shall be conuenient and agreeable to their nature: so as if the persone be plunged in excessse of anguish, the comfort that we bring him may be so well applied to his vse, as he may feele some reliefe by it. VVe must pray God to giue vs this vertue: (for it is not to be founde in vs.) And afterwarde if God haue giuen vs wisdome, he must also put a louing kindnesse in vs, that wee be not to rigorous towards those of whose well doing we may haue cause to bee past hope, but rather be inclined to a pitifull affection, that is to say, be mildly minded to hope well of their well doing, according as it is sayd that charitie hopeth all things. And thus ye see what we haue to mark. Furthermore when we cõpare these men with our selues: we finde for a certaintie, that God had neede to gouerne vs in that cace. VVhy so? For these are none of the common and ordinarie sorte of men (as I haue declared alreadie) they be no dullardes: but they be greate personages, and well aduysed in all poynts, accordingly as they shewe themselves to be. And yet neuertheless we see how they proceede in such wise, as there is no let in them, but that Iob might haue bene dinged downe vnto hell. And what is the cause of it? God ment to shew vs how there is nother wisdome nor discretion in the minde of man, nor any rule or measure in him, except that he himself giue it. Let vs be sure then, that vnlesse we haue that, we shal not be able to comfort suche as are so afflicted. For if Iobs freendes which were so excellent men, did so ouerhoote themselves: it is a much more likelyhood that wee shall misse, if God supply not our want and giue wherewith to behaue our selues as is meete for vs. Thus we see what we haue to remember. Moreouer, whereas it is sayd that they tooke counsell to haue compassion of him and to comfort him: in these two woordes it is shewed vs, what is the dutie of such as see their freends and neighbours indure aduersitie. Then are there two things requisite in comforting and also in succoring. For we may imploy our selues to the vttermost to succour such as haue neede of our help, and yet it shall be no great matter if we haue not the hart to be as they bee, and to ioyne our selues with them, as though we felt their griefes in our owne persones. VVe may giue all our goodes to the poore, and yet if we haue no loue, it is nothing. Sainct Paule by speaking so, sheweth that wee may well doo many fayre thinges, whiche notwithstanding shall be but leafings and vanitie, except we haue louingnesse to guyde them all. And we shall see some that will aduenture themselves valiantly if a man stand in neede of their helpe: but yet haue they not any feeling or compassion [of his griefe.] Lo why it is sayde that Iobs freendes are come to comfort him, and as it were to drawe him out of his miserie, and to haue compassion on him. And in deede, there is not that man of vs, which first and formeft desireth not this comfort: that is, that men should haue compassion on him. As for example: if a man indure aduersitie, and it happeneth that others come to serue him or to do what they can for him: if he be of opinion that they whiche do him good haue no care of him, nor be touched with compassion of his miserie: it will be but as a dubling of his griefe. True it is that he shal receyue the good that is done vnto him, but he regardeth it not in comparison of their compassion: in so much that whereas other men succour him nor at all, nor giue him any ayde, yet if he perceiue in himself that those poore folk haue a feeling of his miserie as if they were his own members, he will make more account of that, than of all the succour that a man can giue him [without it.] So then, when we minde to discharge our selues of our dutie towards those that are in aduersitie: let vs beginne at this poynt: that is to wit, to pitie their miseries, and to feele some part of them as neere as we can. For this is the true tryall of loue. And herewithall it is true that wee must also shewe this compassion of ours by our doings. There are that will be sorie ynough when they see their neighbours

1. Cor. 13. 4. 7.

1. Cor. 13. 4. 7.

bours in aduersitie : but yet therewithall they fare as blockes, so as a man can get no succour of them, they be so dismayed. But we must follow the fashion that is set downe here : namely to be pitifull and tender harted after such a sort when we see any man indure aduersitie, as we alwayes haue our handes at libertie to succour him after the abilitie that God hath giuen vs. Then muste wee not haue our mindes so ouerset with sorowe, as our hartes should be dismayed, and our wittes vtterly amazed : but rather this pitifulnesse of ours must extend yet further, 10 and quicken vs vp to seeke how we may salue the fores that we see in our neighbours. And this is it that is meant here by the secōd place, where it is sayd that Iobs freendes beyng come to mourne with him, purposed to haue comforted him with all speede, so as their comming was not onely to weepe and to say, we feele some part of thy miserie, but also to comfort him if it had bene possible. Thus then we see of what mind they came. But what for that? They sayled in the middes of their iourney. VVhen they went first in hand with their errand, they were in a good 20 minde. But they hilde not the meane that was requisite and needefull, which is, that when they were once come, they should haue had the same compasfion towards Iob still, and they should haue sought such meanes to comfort him, as had bene most agreeable to him, and they should haue shot alwayes at that marke. But they did not so: yea contrariwise they became as men amazed. And howe is that? doubtlesse they found not any thing to be offended at in the persone of Iob : howbeit for asmuch as they sawe suche extremenesse of affliction, it seemed to them that 30 God would not haue handled him so sharply, except he had bene a castaway. And so they tooke such a conceyte by reason of the excessiue miseries that they sawe in Iob : as they lost their courage to comfort him. And here wee see why it is sayd in the Psalme, Happie is the man that hath consideration of them that are in trouble. Dauid had passed that way as well as Iob. For he had indured great aduersities, in suche sorte as he was like as if he had bene forsaken of God, according as I haue sayde heretofore. And a man might say, But beholde, is it not to be seene 40 that it was but a fondnesse for him to glorie of his trusting in God, and to warrant himselfe that he would succour him? for we see the playne contrarie. For asmuch therefore as Dauid was condemned by men vnder the colour that God persecuted him, and exercised his patience in sundrie wise : he sayeth, Right happie is the man that hath consideration of the afflicted. Hereby he meaneth, that if we see any man in anguish for his hard aduersities : God requyreth aboue all things, that we should not at the first dashe take such conceyte as to say, O he is damned, 50 God sheweth full well that he purpoueth to cut him of, there is no more hope of him, behold he is past recouerie. VVe must not be so rigorous, but wee must haue the wit to say, very well, let vs wayt what God will do : aduersities are comon as well to good men as too bad, and when they light vpon good men, they are not without a cause. VVhen God scourgeth them, although we perceyue not the cause wherfore he doth it, yet it becōmeth vs to consider that God is righteous. VVe see then that afflictions are common, both to Gods chozen people and such as he holdeth for his children : and also to the castawayes and those that go into damnation. But forasmuch as it is not for vs to iudge of it, except God haue shewed vs what end the afflictions shall come vnto : it becommeth vs to holde our verdit in suspence, as if a man should say, Is this man afflicted? very well, let vs acknowledge the hand of God, and begin to say, Alas I haue well deserued as much or more wretched creature, looke it thou haue not offended thy God so many wayes, as he may punish thee an hundred thousand fold more than him whom thou seeest to indure so much. Let vs then aduise our selues to conclude thus, Very well, I see this poore man is handled very roughly : true it is that he lead a naughtie life, and that he suffereth rightfully : but yet we know not what God will do with him. Lo here the wisdom that Dauid exhorteth vs vnto : namely that wee shoulde wayte to see whither God will deliuer those whome he persecuteth with his owne hand, albeit that it be rightfully done. Also let vs learne to be fenced against al stumbling blockes that may come in our way, that wee bee not troubled when things exceede our imaginacion, and that we be not letted by them to do our duetie continually, and that our hate sayle vs not in the middes of our iourney. Truly this lesson is harde to put in vre : but so muche the more payne ought we to put our selues vnto, and God will giue vs the grace to bring it about. This is the thing that I spake of at the beginning : namely, that if we haue a desire and zeale to comfort our neighbours, wee muste desire of God to furnish vs with the meanes to do it, to the intent that whē it cometh to be put in vre, we become not vnprofitable like blockes of woode : yet notwithstanding, it must not be thought ouer straunge, that Iobs freendes were so astonied, considering the plight wherein they found him : for he was vtterly disfigured, so as they could not know him at the first sight, as the text sayeth. Vndoubtedly they had such an affection rooted in their hart, that when they saw him so miserable, yet they could not cease to shewe that they loued him still, howbeit that when they knew him, they were vtterly astonished. It is consequently sayd, That they lifted vp their voyce and fell a weeping. These teares here came not of counterfetnesse, it was a good affection that they had. Howbeit for asmuch as they were abashed by reason of the great miseries that Iob indured : we see they be so troubled and dashed out of countenance, as they be not able to do their duetie as they meant to doo. Then to haue some loue & to vtter the signes of it, is not all that is requyred : but this loue must be well ruled, to the end we may well serue one anothers turne, as God commaundeth. As touching that it is sayd, that they rent their clothes, and cast dust vpon their beades, that they cast themselves vpon the ground, and were seuen dayes and seuen nights without speaking any woorde : therein we see the sayd compasfion wherof we haue spoken afore : and besides that, we see how their meaning was to humble theselues with Iob, as it were to make intercession to Godward to haue pitie vpon him. For when the men of old time did cast dust vpon their heads, it was in token of humilitie and acknowledgment of their sinnes. And first they knew that their state was to say, doth God punish vs? then let vs be thinke vs of that whiche wee haue forgotten : that is to wit, that we be but rottennesse and a thing of nothing. For when men are in prosperitie, they make themselves drunken, they flaunt it, they sore in the ayre, and they be not touched with any care. But assoone as God smyteth them, then they storne, and they consider nother whence they are come, nor whither they must retume. Also the men of old time, to the end to bring all this to remembrance, vsed the sayd Ceremonie : thereby yeelding themselves faultie before God, as though they had bene wretched offenders. And the thing that is requyred at offenders handes, is that they should acknowledge their faults, craue pardon, yeelde themselves gilty before God, and retume vnto him with true repentance. Iob had good occasion so to do: and his freendes also could not shew forth their freendship, if they had not done the like. For we be bound to take vpon vs the persone of our neighbours, to 60 aske aske God forgiveness in their behalfe. The greatest reliefe that we can giue to such as are in distresse, is to pray God that he will not shake them off altogether. But wee cannot by our prayers succour those that are in aduersitie, without hauing that which I haue recited: that is to wit, without keeping of them companie, to humble our selues afore God, and without coming to them to mourne with them. Psal. 35. b. 13. 14. Dauid protesteth that he did it euen for his enimies, and that when he saw them running into destruction, he was sorie for them in his hart, and shed bitter teares and sighes for them. If Dauid haue done thus for his enimies that persecuted him: why should not we doo it for them whom we know to be the children of God? Certainly we ought to folowe Dauid, in praying for our enimies. For without we do so, Christ will not auow vs to be his Disciples. But it is an ouergreat leudnesse if we haue not such pitie vpon those in whom we perceiue some signe of godlinesse and religion, and which are instructed in al one doctrine with vs. Therefore when they come to sue for pardon at Gods hand: it becometh vs to ioyne with them in that case. Behold (I say) what ye haue to marke when it is sayd, that Iobs friendes rent their garments, cast theselues agaynst the ground, and sprinkled dust vpon their heads. Herewithall we note, that although such Ceremonies be signes of repentance: yet we muste not thinke that men shal be discharged for clothing themselues in sackloth, for much weeping, and for vsing such maner of fashions as may make them seeme to haue nothing but lowlinesse and aduersitie in them: but rather we must bethinke our selues of this sentence of Iob, Ioel. 2. c. 13. Rende your harts and not your garmentes: whereby Ioell meeneth, that it is to no purpose for men to haue great store of Ceremonies, or to martyr themselues much in outward sight of the worlde, except their hartes be broken before. And what maner of Rending or breaking is it that God requireth in our harts? It is that wee should be cast downe and humbled before him: that when we perceyue any signes of his wrath, (specially when we feele the blowes of his hand already,) we should be paciēt: assuring our selues that all comes for our sinnes: and that wee do not as many do, who when they be beaten with Gods roddes, chawe their brydles like mules, and conceyue I wote not what a fiercenesse and bitternesse, which serue to set them in a rage against God, notwithstanding that they make countenance as though they were well tamed. But contrarywise (as I haue sayd) it behoueth our harts to be rent, (according to the exhortacion that is made vnto vs in the Psalme) by laying our hart open before God, to the ende he should know al that is within it. Then let vs folow the sayd saying of the Prophet Ioell, that we should not rend our garments, but our hartes rather: for therein will the true repentance shewe it selfe. But it is impossible that our hartes should be rightly rent, without shewing of the foresayde lowlinesse by experience, in confessing our sinnes, to the intent to giue glory vnto God. And herein a man may see what a mockerie is in those that thinke themselues to haue done very much, when they haue graunted that they haue done amisse, that they haue committed a great offence against God, and that they haue caste a stumblingblocke into the Church: and yet peradventure if a man grate vpon them but a little further, and woulde make them to vnderstand their faults: it would make them to say, O, that were toto much: and it woulde seeme vnto them that God were ouersharpe and rigorous against them. But in any wise we must not thinke that God receyue vs as repentant persons, except we bring him the sacrifice that is spokē of in the one and fiftith Psalme. And what maner a Sacrifice is that? That wee haue our hartes and mindes so distressed as we can no more: and that we be so ashamed of the comitting of the sinnes whereof our conscience hath remorde & accuseth vs, as wee know not where to become, vntil we haue found fauour in our God. Thus much then as concerning this poynt, that repentance consisteth not in ceremonies, but hath hir seate in the hart of man, howbeit that if she must shew hir self by signes, and that if we haue a minde well disposed, she muste so appeere before men, as we may not onely haue this woorde in our mouth, to say, we haue offended: but also our harte must speake it before our rung. But when as it is sayd that Iobs friendes fate by him seuen dayes and seuen nights: it is not ment that they departe not out of that place of all that while: but that they abode with him by the space of seuen dayes, lamenting there with him, and casting themselues vpon the earth: and specially that they yeelded a good record of their loue towards him, in abandoning all their own pleasures and commodities, to be there in sorowing with him whom they meant to comfort. Lo what the summe is. And therewithall it is sayd, that they spake not one worde: wherein wee see that whiche I haue touched heretofore: namely that they were very fore troubled, when they saw Gods hande so rigorous vpon Iob. For they came of set purpose to comfort Iob: and now they are dumb. What is the cause of it? Is it for that they haue forgotten all the reasons that might serue to comfort him withall? No, they had a wellsettled remembrance, as we shall see hereafter. Wherefore is it then, that they hild their peace? Bycause they were preuented by this imaginacion. How now? wee tooke this man to haue bene the seruant of God, and peradventure if God had punished him, wee would haue thought yet that there had bene some order to comfort him. But we see that God hath forsaken him, and that he hath set markes vpon him to shew that he is a reprobate persone, and that there is no more hope in him, and therefore we see no meane to comfort him. Thus wee see the cause of their astonishment. But they ought to haue had an eye to Gods promyses, whereby he witnesseth vnto vs, that when it seemeth vnto vs that all is loste and past hope of recouerie for vs: he is able to sende remedie still. Howbeit they did not so. Hereby then we are admonished, (as I touched afore) to pray vnto God, to hold vs in, that we be not moued with such compasiō in the aduersities eyther of our selues, or of our neighbors, as to conclude that we must be past al hope of recouerie. For the Diuell desires nothing more than to cause vs to make such a conclusion, and to put into our heades that God hath cast vs off. Supposest thou (wil he saye) that God will euer receiue thee to mercie seing thou hast offended him so many wayes? If we giue place to such temptatiōs: behold how wee be bereft of Gods grace and of all his promises. And therefore let vs so much the more earnestly pray God to strengthen vs in such wise, as we may beate backe such assaults of Satan, that when soeuer wee be afflicted in our owne persones, or happen to see our neighbors suffer aduersitie, wee may not be vtterly dismayed, but rather take courage to make this cōclusion: very well, it is true that these afflictions are great: but yet must wee stil trust in God, and hope that he wil turne this aduersitie of ours to our wel'are, according as he maketh all things that he doth in this worlde, to serue to the welfare of the faythfull. If we haue this consideration with vs, wee shall neuer be destitute of cōfort in our troubles, nor neuer be barred from Gods help, so we flee vnto him for succour. But let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgment of our sinnes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may alwaies be readie to indure the chastizementes that he shall send vs, and abide them without without being ouertroubled in minde, & therewithal that we may neuer be ashamed to condene our finnes and iniquities, & to craue pardon for the: & specially that in yeelding our selues guiltie before him as wee be in deede, wee may not cease to cal vpō him, & to assure our selues that his mercie shall neuer be denied vs, when we come with true repentance, desiring nothing but to be furnished with his good will, and to walke in his feare and obedience all the time of our life. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also to all, &c.

Esai. 40. g.
27. c. 41. b.
8. d. 14.

The eleuenth Sermon, which is the first vpon the third Chapter.

After this, Iob opened his mouth, and cursed his day.

2. SO Iob answered, and sayd :
3. Let the day perish vwherein I vvas borne, and the night vwherein vvoord vvas brought that a man childe vvas conceived.
4. Let that day be ouercast vwith darkenesse, and let not God requyre it from aboue, and let it haue no brightnesse to giue it light.
5. Let darknesse and thicke shadow v ouerwhelme it, let it bee ouercouered vwith clowdes, and let the heate of the day burne it vp.
6. Possessed bee that night vwith darkenesse, let it not bee reckened among the dayes of the yeere, nor come in the number of the monethes.
7. Desolate bee that night, and let it haue no gladnesse in it .
8. Let them that are vront to curse dayes, curse that, and they also that fall a mourning.
9. Let the starres bee darkened in it, and let it haue no hope of light, nother let the eyeliddes of the morning tvvylight see it :
10. Bycause it did not shet the doores of the vvombe that bare mee, to hyde these troubles from mine eyes.

WE must here consider the intent of the holy Ghost, to the ende we may applie this whole doctrine to our owne vse. Hitherto wee haue seene Iobs patience, and howe he submitted himselfe wholly vnto God, yea and that he hath not ceased to blisse him, notwithstanding that he were deemed miserable among mé. But now it seemeth that he turneth all topsiteruie, and that he is angrie with God. But if wee marke all things well and throughly: here is a combat, wherein we see, that on the one side mans infirmitie sheweth it selfe: and on the other side he hath yet still some strength to resist his temptations. Iob then is here as it were in a mamering: [by meanes wherof,] whereas heretofore there was nothing but constancie and stoutnesse in him: nowe there is a mixture, so as the frayltie of his flesh maketh him to be so farre ouerseene, as he murmureth agaynst God, howbeit that his intent is not to fall out with God. Neuerthelesse, woordes scape him which are euill, and proceede from a faultie minde, and can not bee iustified. Thus yee see the first poynt that wee haue to consider: that is to wit, what the state of Iob is: namely that he sheweth not himselfe so stedfaste as he did afore, but is encountered with suche a battell, as doth well shewe him to bee a frayle man, and not able to beare out his temptations as he fayne would, nor to submit himself vnto God with so peaceable a minde as were requisite, and as he had bene wont to do. And here we haue a very profitable warning. For first we see, that men are able to do no more than is giuen them from aboue. Therefore let vs learne, not to brag of our owne strength, as we see the more part of men abuse themselues, by bearing theselues in hand that through their owne free will they bee able to moue mountaynes and to woorke wonders. Howbeit we must not be deceyued with such imaginacions: but must assure our selues, that as long as God vpholdeth vs, wee may well stande: but if he loozen his hand from vs, wee shall by and by be cast downe. Then is there not any thing whereof men can boast, but they muste altogether depend from aboue, and resort alwayes thither when they will bee well strengthened. Herewithall wee see the so-dayne change that happened to Iob. For it seemeth not that he hath any newe occasion to be so out of patience as to curse the day of his byrth: considering howe he dothe it seuen dayes after he had shewed himselfe so patient. He seemeth to bee become quyte another man than he was afore. But all our strength vanisheth away in the turning of a hande, if God continew not in ayding of vs. And here wee see wherefore a man is likened to a shadowe. It is not onely bycause our lyfe is so frayle and slightfull: but also bycause wee are vnconstant, so as there is no holde of vs, but wee bee fickleminded, looking sometimes so stately as it should seeme wee had the courage of a Lyon, and by and by becoming as fayntharted as a woman, so as there is nother reason nor stomacke in vs: and so farre of are we from hauing the valiantnesse to incounter agaynst temptations, that we cannot abyde so muche as to heare that any man shoulde rebuke vs. Then lette vs marke well the suddenesse of the change that befallerth vnto menne, that wee may looke the better aboute vs: and when we haue called vpon God in the morning, lette vs doo the like all day long: and to bee shorte, let vs thinke vpon God continually without turning our selues aside after any maner wyse. Thus wee see howe wee muste alwayes bee carefull: thus wee see howe wee muste alwayes continew in prayer and supplication. And nowe let vs come to that whiche is sette downe in the text, Howe Iob cursed the day of his birth. Some there haue bene, that would excuse Iob altogether, as though he had bene caried away in his aduersitie, howbeit without blaspheming of God. Other some imagine that he hath forgotten the patientnesse whiche he had had heretofore, and that he is altogether iraged, so as he hath no more minde to glorifie GOD, but is caried away by his owne passions, and speaketh as a man out of his wittes. Heretofore he blamed his wyfe of folly: and now he sheweth himselfe a double foole in cursing the day wherein he was borne. But it is certayne that Iob is not come too suche extremitie: for it is alwayes his purpose too obey God, as wee shall see. Neuerthelesse, there is a mixture in him:

that is to wit, in his fighting he sayleth not to be wounded, he ceaseth not to receyue blowes, he staggereth, he steppeth awrie. So then, let vs marke this mixture: that is to wit, that Iob hath not so founde a perfection as he had afore: and yet notwithstanding, that although his aduersitie pinched him, so as it was likely that he should haue saynted in the middes of his way: he hilde on his course still with full purpose to obey God, howbeit that in the meane while (as sayeth S. Paule) he accomplished not the good that he desired. Paule in that place treateth of himself, and confesseth that although his whole desire was to giue himself vnto God: yet notwithstanding it came not so to passe, but he was hindered by his own nature, which was ouerweake. If S. Paule acknowledged so much of himselfe: let vs not thinke it straunge that the like should happen to Iob, so as he should be desirous to frame himselfe to the good will of God, and yet his affection should not be so perfect in all points, but that he must be faine to haite and to stoope. And herein we see that which happened to our father Iacob, at suche time as God meant to cause vs to vnderstand, that when soeuer the faithfull incounter against temptations, it shall not be without carying away of some curste blowes that shall leaue their markes behinde them. VVe see how Iacob wrestled with the Angell of God: and wherefore? not for that he was Gods enimie: but bycause the Lorde which trieth those that are his, mindeth also to prooue his owne children, as we haue seene in the first Chapter. Therefore it is sayd that the Patriarke Iacob stroue and wrestled with the Angell. VVhereby it appeareth that God ment to exercyse him, and also that Iacob disposed himselfe to beare out the brutes that he should be put vnto, in somuch that God inhonored him by giuing him the name of Israell, which is as much to say, as mightie towards God. But in the meane whyle, went he away with the victorie without touch of brest? No, but he had his thygh crused in such fort, as he halted and was lame of it all his lyfe after: The vpper hand was his, but yet was he fayne to be humbled. Behold how the faithfull withstand temptations: namely that in some poynt they may chaunce to stoope, yea euen in such wyse as God shall humble them all the dayes of their lyfe, that they may haue occasion to know their own infirmities till they grone againe: but yet for all that, they get the vpper hand in incountering, and God suffer them not to be vtterly oppressed. Then muste Gods children comfort themselves in this, that when God sendeth them any afflictions, they may well feele some such inward heauinesse of minde as they shall not knowe whiche way to turne them, yea and so farre ouerhoote themselves as to vse wordes that are not to be excused: but yet for all this infirmitie, the strength of God shall not cease to dwell still in them and to hold them vp in such fort, as they shall feele themselves to haue alwayes some good affection: and that although their legges fayle them, yet their harte shall holde his owne still as the Prouerbe sayeth. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this sentence. But that we may the better vnderstand wherein Iob ouershot himself, and how farre: let vs consider in what maner it is lawfull for men to be wery of their lyfe. There haue bene many Heathen men, which knowing the miseries of this earthly lyfe, haue sayd that the day of birth ought not to be a time of mirth and ioy but rather of sorowe, for so much as when man commeth to it, he beginneth with weeping. Beholde a creature that is full of all vncleannesse, and as vyle and miserable as is possible to be imagined. And moreouer if wee marke things well, it is a bottomlesse gulfe of all miseries whereto wee bee subiect. So then, if wee haue an eye to the present state and condition of this lyfe: wee shall haue cause to say, that wee ought to lament when children are borne, and that wee ought rather to reioyce when men dye, for asmuche as they bee deliuered from many euilles. The Heathen men spake after that maner: Howbeit their vnderstanding was not able to reache so farre as God leadeth vs by his worde. For they sought no further in this present lyfe, but too continew in it: howbeit, not altogether to eate and drinke, but also to bee in honor, to purchace themselves estimation, and to finish euery man his own course. Herewithall we haue the holy Scripture, which telleth vs that God who hath put vs here bylowe, hath printed his owne image in vs, and therefore that wee ought to consider the noblenesse and woorthinesse which he hath giuen vs aboue all Creatures. If there were no more but this, that God hath fashioned vs after his owne image and likeness, wherby he meaneth to haue his glorie shine in vs: I pray you, had wee not whereof to reioyce in our selues, and wherefore to magnifie him? Furthermore, besides our eating and drinking in this worlde, wee haue also recorde that God is our Father. For to what purpose is it that the earth bringeth foorth hir foyzon? euen too norishe vs withall. It happeneth not by fortune, but it is God that hath so ordeyned it. And wherefore? because he would shewe himselfe a father towards vs. VVe see then that the helps which are to mayntayne vs heere bylowe, are all of them auouchmentes and proufes of the fatherly loue of our God. Ought not wee to make account of such a benefite, yea, or can wee make so great account of it as it deserueth? But it is yet more, that God will exercyse vs heere bylowe in the hope of the heavenly lyfe, that he giueth vs some taste of it, that he calleth vs, and that he will bee serued, and honored of vs, to the ende we shoulde knowe that wee are his, and that he hath intertayned vs to bee of his household and familie. Then if all thinges be well considered, haue we not good cause to magnifie the grace that he bestoweth vpon vs, when he sendeth vs into the worlde to inioye here this present lyfe? Yet neuertheless it is true also, that we haue cause to sigh and sob, for asmuch as we be in a bottomlesse pit of all miseries, so long as we be here. But what for that? wee must marke from whence the same proceedeth. The Paynims knew no further, than that the state of menne is miserable: but wee must consider wherefore God hath made vs subiect to so many inconueniences: namely bycause of Sinne. For wee muste haue recourse to the firste creation of man, and consider that God was no niggard of his goodes, but hath poured them out bountifully, as he that is the fountayne of all liberalitie. Then hath he shewed himselfe more than liberall towards mankinde in the persone of Adam. But wee were bereft of those blisinges, and it was requisite that God should cut of his benefites which he had giuen vs, for somuch as our father Adam through his owne vnthankfulnesse was turned away vnto wickednesse. So then, sith wee say that all the miseries of this present lyfe are the frutes of our sinnes wee haue occasion to sigh: not for that wee be so miserable, or for that our state is so harde and troublesome: but for that we be giuen to so much naughtinesse, and to so great rebelliousnesse agaynst God, that whereas his image ought to shyne foorth in vs, it seemeth that wee haue conspired to doo him spyte. And this is the cause why Sainct Paule lamenteth, and we see here the true sorowe which Christians ought to make: not for their hauing of cold and heate, not for their induring of diseases and other calamities: but for that they see themselves as it were in the pryson and bondage of sinne. VVretch that I am,

sayeth

saythe Saincte Paule. And saythe hee so bicause hee is impacient, or for that hee lysteth vp him selfe agaynst God? No: but for that he is the instrument of the holy ghost, and sheweth vs, that in this present lyfe wee haue cause too sigh and grone without ceasing. And why so? for wee bee shutte vp in a deadly prison, and are subiecte too so many wicked lustes, as wee can not by any meanes attayne to dedicate our selues vnto God, by reason of the great number of our corruptions, which cease not too prouoke vs vnto euill. Thus wee see howe 10 wee maye lament our case after the example of Saynct Paule, who giueth vs a rule thereof. But heere wee see howe Iob curseth the day of his birthe, wherein hee is not too bee excused, nother can it bee sayde that hee ouershorre not him selfe. And why so? For it behoueth vs too ioyne them bothe together: that is too witte, that when God created vs, he also printed his owne image in vs, and dyd vs the honour too bee the excellentest of all his creatures: In whiche respecte wee haue cause too blesse his name continually: And 20 although this lyfe bee so full of miseries, as nothing can bee more: yet the case standeth so, as wee can not sufficiently value the inestimable benefite that GOD hath bestowed vpon vs, in giuing vs thys present lyfe, bicause that by maynteyning vs therein, hee maketh vs too feeble by experience, that hee hathe a care of vs, and will not by any meanes forsake vs, howsoeuer the world go. Seeing wee haue this, haue wee not whereof too reioyce euen in the midst of all oure aduersities? So then, the saythfull man whiche speaketh with good aduifement, will neuer curse the day of his birthe, what 30 miserie soeuer he endure. Iob therefore behaueth him selfe vnthankfully too Godwarde, in cursing so the day of his birthe: and it can not bee sayde that hee deserued not blame for passing his boundes. Furthermore let vs marke, that the children of God maye also blesse their birtheday. I meene in not considering their wants, too bewaile themselues with Sainct Paule: but simply in hauing an eye too the benefite whiche God gaue them when he sent them into the worlde. True it is that 40 the Heathen men abused it: for when they solemnized their birthday, they dyd it too exceede in many follies and superfluous pompes. But the very originall and wellspring of the solemnizing of birthdayes, was, for that the holy fathers knewe it was good reason, too yeelde God thanks, and therefore they hilde that day as a solemne feast, to the ende to prouoke them selues to prayse God. Yea verily: for when wee haue passed some yeres of our lyfe, although wee ought too call Gods benefites too remembraunce incessantly: yet is it requisite that 50 at the day of our entraunce into the worlde, there should bee kepte an euerlasting memoriall of them, so as wee might say, I see well that this yeere is past: God hathe brought me hitherto: I haue offended him many wayes, and therefore it is meete that I shoulde nowe aske hym forgiueneffe. But aboue all thinges he hathe shewed me great fauour, he hathe maynteyned me alwayes in hope of the saluation that he hath giuen me, and he hath deliuered me from many daungers: and therefore it becommeth me too call the same too remembraunce. And now that I am too enter into another yeere, it is good that I 60 prepare my selfe too the seruing of God. For the euil aduentures that I haue passed, shewe me howe great neede I haue of his succour, and that without him I shall be vndoone a hundred thousande times. Thus wee see howe the holy fathers were woont too solemnize their birthdayes, and howe it is a good and profitable exercise. The Heathen men (I say) haue abused it, and wee see at this day howe they that call theselues Christians do play flat mockhollyday with God when they solenize their birthdayes. For they make no reckening of prayers, nor of thanksgiuing, nor of the acknowledging of their finnes, nor of Gods benefites: but of pampering them selues after a beastly maner. But (as I haue sayde) it behoueth vs alwayes too blesse God vpon oure birthedays. And why? forasmuche as God hathe set vs heere in thys worlde too bee his children: hee hathe not put vs fourth as Oxen and dogges, but as reasonable creatures, that beare his image. And further, forasmuche as wee be baptized in the name of oure Lorde Iesus Christ, and that besides oure creation, God hathe also moreouer prynced his marke vpon vs for an aduantage, too the intent wee shoulde bee as his deere frendes, and bee receyued into his Church: therein wee haue cause too blesse God double. And so they that curse the day of their birthe, by chafing at the miseries and afflictions that they endure, shewe well that they bee vnthankfully; and that their owne affections doo too muche ouermaster them. Euen so stode the case with Iob. And therefore wee haue the more cause too pray vnto God without ceasing, that hee will vouchesafe too holde vs backe: and that if nowe and then hee suffer vs too let slippe some wicked words, and that wee bee not so steadfast as were requisite: yet notwithstanding that thought wee bee shaken, wee may not fall, but recouer our selues agayne, and learne too gather our wittes better about vs, too brydle our selues: and that when wee see there hathe beene any frayltie in vs, wee maye condemne the faulte, too the intent too returne by and by agayne into the righte waye. Thus yee see what wee haue too marke heer. But when it is sayde, Cursed bee the night wherein word was brought, bebolde a manchilde is conceyued: it shoulde seeme that Iob mente too spite God in so dooing. For thoughte wee haue cause (as I haue earst sayde) too blesse God for creating vs after his owne image and likeneffe: yet is our case suche, as the men are preferred before the women in mankinde, we know that God hathe ordeyned man as the head, and giuen him the dignitie and preheminance ouer the woman. And heere wee see also why Sainct Paule saythe, that 1.Cor.ii.b.7. the man muste go with his head bare, bicause he is the glory of God: and the woman the glory of the man. True it is that the image of GOD is printed alyke in them bothe: but yet is the woman inferiour too the man, and wee must go by those degrees whiche God hathe set in the order of nature. So then, it is reason that God shoulde bee glorified bothe in males and females: howbeit that hee must chiefly bee glorified at the birthe of a manchilde: and yet cleane contrariwise Iob saythe: Cursed bee the night wherein it was reported that a manchilde was borne. And why dyd hee so? For had it not become him too haue thoughte well of all these thinges, according as God had disposed the dayes? Yes: but Iob turneth all too the contrarie. And heere wee see that whiche I haue touched: namely that hee so wanzeth awaye in his owne passions, as hee forgetteth Gods graciousnesse, whereof he had spoken afore. For he had sayde: very well, seeing we haue receiued benefite at Gods hande, why shoulde wee not also receyue euill? for wee bee bounde too bee subiect vnto him. Iob shoulde haue borne these thinges well in minde. Howbeit forasmuche as it is an excellent matter too haue a manchilde borne, than too haue a womanchilde: hee sayth: cursed be the night wherein he was conceyued. But (as I haue sayde afore) all this is too teache vs too pray God too arme vs, and too giue vs strength and power too withstande temptations, considering that he which is a patterne of pacience, was so carried away. And therefore if at any time wee bee incombred with any excessse, so as oure fleshe prouoketh vs in suche wise as wee haue not so quiet a minde too obey God as were too bee desired: let not that cause vs too bee out of heart, siche wee see that the same thing hath befallen vnto Iob. Then behoueth it vs to humble our selues, acknowledging our owne frayltie, and in the meane while too bee of good courage, vntill God haue giuen vs the full victorie. Furthermore wee haue too marke also, that siche as haue children, oughte so too reioyce of the hauing of menchildren, as they reiect not their daughters, as wee see some vayneglorious fooles doo, who thinke that God dothe them great wrong, if hee sende them not menchildren. And for what purpose? Too the ende too continue their houses, too purchase estimation, and too come in credite. Lo after what maner men woulde as it were prolong their owne lyfe for euer. And yet in the meane while, if God giue them daughters, it is for their profite and they knowe it not: and therefore they woulde haue God too consent too their foolishhe fancies. Also God dothe oftentimes punish the presumptuousnesse. For he giueth menchildren too those that are too desirous of them, and they scratche out their eyes in the end, and are as seagulfes too swallowe vp their substaunce. The fathers are of opinion, that their children shall increase their house, when they haue malechildren. And yet most commonly it is an occasion too bring a house too confusion, so as it shall bee poynted at wyth the finger. And what is the cause thereof? It is for that men apply not themselues too God and too his will. VVhen men desire too haue children, that desire is good, so it bee well ruled. But it must come too this poynt, Lorde, if thou giue mee issue, let it bee too the ende that thy name may bee honored when I am gone. And if thou doo mee the worship too bee a father: let mee so bring vp the children that thou shalt giue mee, as they may bee rightly thine, so as they may learne too serue thee, and thou guyde them according too thy good will. Beholde (I say) howe fathers and mothers must content themselues. VVhen God sendeth them but one childe, whereas they woulde haue three or foure: and when God sendeth them a daughter, whereas they woulde haue a sonne: let them saye, Euen so Lord, thou knowest what is meete for vs, and wee must frame our selues thereafter. Beholde (I say) wherein the blessing of God sheweth it selfe. But forasmuche as men are inordinate in their desires, it is meete that God should scorne them and their follies. By the way wee bee taughte also too despise one another. For whereas God hath honored men in giuing them the dignitie of being the head of mankinde, and appoynted the women too be inferiour in degree: men must not be proude of it. And truly wee heare howe Sainct Paule sayth, that mankinde is come of the man, that is too wit, of Adam. But howe dothe he continue, but by meanes of women? If men coulde separate themselues from women, and maynteyne a little worlde by themselues alone: they should haue good cause too make their boast. But now if a man consider him selfe, he can no sooner say, my father, but he must by and by say also, my mother. So then, seeing that mankinde is continued by meanes of the woman: it becommeth vs too thinke that wee bee bounde one of vs to another. Furthermore, too what purpose is it, that the woman was created? Verily that she should bee a helpe to man: and it behoueth hir also

2.Pet.2.a.4
Iude.a.6.

1. Cor. 11. b. 11.

too bee subiect too him. But yet for all that, she is mans companion, as the scripture termeth hir. For it is sayde, that among al the things that God created, there was not any helper that coulde bee meete for Adam. And why so? bicause he was not of nature like vnto beastes, but was of a more excellent creation. Nowe if women bee mens companions, there is no cause of disdayne, that men shoulde trample them vnder their feete, or shake them off, or holde scorne of them: but they must bee knitte together with the sayde mutuall bonde, saying: Very well, God created vs and fashioned vs: and he maynteyneth vs by men and women: and that is doone to the ende wee should liue together in one common accorde, knowing that there is a bonde of copartnerhippe whiche God hath consecrated as inuiolable betwixte vs. Thus we see what wee haue to remember, that wee may behaue our selues vprightly. And nowe let vs come too that whiche is rehearsed heere. It is sayde, that Iob wished that the day of his birth were ouerwhelmed with darkenesse, that it were burnt vp with the beate of the day, and with stormes and tempestes, that it were striken out of the course of the yeere, that it might haue no starres, and that it might not come into the Kalender, too bee vnder the gouernment of the Moone. It seemeth heere, that he would peruert the whole order of nature. But heereby wee see how our passions boyle within vs. True it is, that if men could mourne without excessse in their afflictions, it were not to be condemned. VVhy so? For our Lorde Iesus Chriſt was not affectionlesse: yea, wee see that when he endured any greefe, he felte it, he sighed at it, and he was sad for it: and yet for all that, he was the vnspotted Lambe of God, inso muche that there was nothing in him that could be blamed. How is it then that he had heauinesse in him? saue onely that (as I haue sayde already) his sorrowing was moderated as was conuenient, and was not wicked nor sinfull of it selfe. But all our passions are wicked, bicause they bee wrapped in some sturdinesse agaynst God, or in some distrust, or in some other outrage of the flesh. If god send vs any good, it is not euill done of vs to be glad of it: and specially we can not yeeld him thanks, but we must haue our hartes at libertie, to feele the good lucke that he hath sente vs. But what? Men are alwayes so full of vanitie, as they can neuer make themselues merry without offending of God. As for example, if God sende them riches, there goeth I wote not what a vayneglorie, medled with them I can not tell howe. Or at leastwise they call not vpon God with suche feruentnesse as they were wont to doo, but become very lazie, and giue themselues ouer too that which they haue in hande. To be shorte, as faste as men purpose too make themselues merrie or to bee sad, there will euermore bee some excessse: and hardly can they hold themselues from offending God, bicause they haue not suche stay of themselues as were requisite, but let themselues runne at randon. And specially, if the aduersitie bee great, men shall very hardly scape too forgette themselues, and too be carried away according as it befaller heere vnto Iob, when he sayth hee woulde fayne, that his birth day were quite wiped oute of the yeere. But dydde hee hym selfe dispose the dayes of the yeere, that hee shoulde desire too change Gods ordinaunce? when our Lorde sheweth vs the modestie which we ought to keepe in making of othes, he saith: ye are not able to make one of the heares of your head whyte when it is blacke, or blacke when it is whyte: and howe sweare you then by your head? But heere Iob passeth somewhat further. For he woulde plucke the starres out of the skie, he would set the whole worlde

Gen. 2. d. 25

Mat. 26. d.
37.
Lu. 19. f. 41.
Iohn. 11. d. 33
35. c. 38.

worlde on fire to burne vp the earth, and he would haue the cloudes, and the windes, and all things els too ming-gle themfelues together at this desire. Hereby wee see, that when men are muche pinched with aduerfitie, they ouerhoote themfelues in fuche wife, as there remaineth
 no more modestie, nor any thing els in them but outrage.
 Sith we see this in Iob: it behoueth vs to stance the more vpon our garde, and to be well aduised, that our sorow-ing in our afflictions be after such a sort, as in the meane while God be bliffed in all that he doth, that wee prouoke him not to displeasure, no not euen by vnaduised-nesse, for it is certaine that Iob meant not to displease
 God willingly, neyther was it his intent so do agaynst Gods minde: but this befell him through vnaduised-nesse. For our pafsions are blinde, wee haue no wit to difcerne, wee wander without keeping eyther way or path. In so much then as wee know our affections to be fo outrageous, wee haue fo much the more neede to pray God to rule them for vs. But by the way, if wee compare Iob with those that blaspheme God with open mouth, I pray you, howe woorthie are such men to bee condemned? For Iob hauing serued God all the time of his lyfe, is neuerthelesse set here as it were vpon a scaffold by the spirite of God, to the ende men might by him perceyue their owne wretchednesse and humble thefelues, & vnderstand that when the grace of God fayleth them, they are in a forwardnesse to cast themfelues into hell, if they bee not hilde backe. Seing that Gods will was to exercyse Iob in such sorte, as to set him out for a gazing stocke and to make him serue for an example and learning vnto others: what shall become of those that blaspheme God, yea euen without cause? for there are some that if any harte grieffe happen too them, fo as they be troubled, or if a man doo but stirre their choler: yee shall see them teare Gods name a peeces, and they thinke that it ought to serue them for excuse if they can say, why then did he chafe mee? If a man happen too doo them a little displeasure, or if a flie chaunce too crosse before their eyes: Iesus Christe, and his death, and his bloud, and his fleshe, and all that euer he hath, shall bee torne all to peeces. As who would say, that our Lord Iesus Christe had taken mans fleshe vpon him, to bee made a Rayling stocke, at those monstres handes whiche are not woorthie too liue vpon the earth. And yet notwithstanding, they will take it for their excuse too say, fuche a man did anger mee. Thou supposest that thou bendest thy selfe agaynst man, and yet notwithstanding when thou bendest thee agaynst him that hath grieued thee, the case is so that God is offended by it? But when they come too aduance themfelues in that wise agaynst God: seeme they not Monsters contrarie too nature? Therefore lette vs take heede that we fo brydle our affections, as Gods name bee not blasphe-med by vs, whereas it ought to bee prayfed and bliffed.
 Marke this for one speciall poynt. Furthermore, wee see that in blaspheming of God, men haue a certayne naturall Rhetorike, and are fo cunning in the art, as there is no lacke in them. God hath giuen vs speech, to the intent wee shoulde confesse him too bee good, righteous and full of equitie in all respectes and cases, and to the ende that in all our talke, our indeuer shoulde bee too speake of him with all reuerence. But when it commeth to the poynt that God should bee honored aboute all things, wee speake fo faintly of him, that scarcely can a man wring a little woorde out of vs that shall bee well set. But if menne will go too blaspheming: then yee shall see them as eloquent as may bee deuysed, and there is not the man that may not seeme to haue bene

at schoole to learne fine Rhetorike. Euen so is it here.
 Iob did it not of set purpose (as I haue sayd afore) for he withilde himselfe as muche as he was able, and he fought agaynst the temptation. And yet notwithstanding wee see howe his owne nature caried him away in fuche wise, as he could not holde himselfe from this kinde of Rhetorike which is tooo flowing. For where-to els serueth his setting downe of fo many fashions of speache, whiche he heapeth vp as it were into a little pyle? For so much then as wee see such a vice rooted in menne, what haue wee to doo? wee muste pray God to open our mouth, and to giue vs the grace that all our woordes may tende to his honor. And moreover that he will restrayne vs after fuche a sorte, as wee may take good heede that wee speake nor vntowardly and at auenture, when occasion is giuen to talke of his iudge-ments, and of the good that he hath done vs, and of the corrections that he hath sente vs, and of fuche other like thinges: and that wee may beare fuche reue-rence to his Maiestie, as our woordes may bee well framed, that there may not be any reproche, and much lesse any outrage, as wee see is happened here vnto Iob. Yea and wee muste be the more provoked therevnto by this that he sayeth, Let them that are wont to curse dayes, curse the day of my birth: and let them that rayse vp weeping and lamentation, ban the night wherein I was conceyued. Seing that Iob speaketh fo, wee see yet better, that men haue neyther measure nor stay of themfelues when their affections beginne to boyle vp. For like as in a pot, when the first seething is ouerpast and it hath cast his first skum, other wallops come after, so as a man cannot stop them:
 euen so fare our affections, which are fo outrageous as a man cannot weeld them at the first brunt. But contrariwise we see what is taught vs in the holie Scripture:
 namely that when Dauid ment to prayse God as became him, he was not contented to applie all his wites and all his indeuer too the doing of it: nor to call men to beare him companie: but he sayeth also, Yee Heauens, thou Earth, yee Trees, ye Hills, thou Hayle, thou Snow, thou Rayne, and all yee senselesse creatures prayse yee the Lorde. VVee see what zeloufenesse there ought to bee in vs when wee minde to serue God in good earnest:
 that is to witte, wee muste desire, not onely that menne and women, but also that the senselesse creatures should with one common consent applie themfelues to prayse
 God with vs, so as there may be nothing in this worlde neither aboute nor beneath, whiche shall not bende in selfe wholly to glorifie God. And herewithall also let vs pray God to giue vs the grace too bee able too employe our felues thereaboutes, and to strengthen vs agaynst all temptations that may chaunce: not onely agaynst the assaultes that shall bee made vpon vs by our enimies from without, but also agaynst the affections that are within vs.

Nowe lette vs fall downe before the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our offences, beseeching him too make vs vnderstande them better, and too open our eyes, that when wee beholde the miseries wherewith wee are like too bee drowned and vtterly fordone, wee may learne to haue recouffe too his souerayne goodnesse, so as he may continew the thing that he shall haue begonne in vs, by making vs too taste of his loue: And that if he sende vs any afflictions, eyther by reason of our sinnes, or for the tryall of our patience, wee may not bee fo vngracious as to grudge against him, but rather blisse him, assuring our felues that he hath iuste cause to chastyze vs: and yet neuerthelesse beseeching him too gouerne vs in fuche wyse by his holy spirit, as wee may desire nothing but to frame our selues to his good will, to the ende he may cause the precious blood of his sonne (which was shed for our redemption) to bee auaylable in vs, and that wee may be settled therein more and more vntill he haue gathered vs vp to him into his immortall glorie wherevnto he calleth vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely vnto vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, bringing all poore ignorant soules to the knowledge, &c.

The twelfth Sermon, which is the second vpon the third Chapter.

This Sermon containeth yet still the exposition of the tenth verse, and of the verses following.

11. VVherefore died I not in my mothers vvombe? vvhetherfore did I not yeelde vp the Ghost as soone as I vvas come out of hir vvombe?
12. VVherefore did the knees receyue mee? vvhetherfore haue I sucked the teates?
13. For novv should I haue lyen still and taken my rest: I should be in quiet, and there vvcre rest for mee,
14. VVith the Kinges and Counsellors of the earth, vvhich builde the desert places,
15. VVith the Princes that haue gold, and vvhich hoorde vp Siluer in their house.
16. Or I should be but as an vntimely birth that is hidden, or as an infant that hath not scene the light.
17. Therethe vvicked rest from their trouble, there they that haue traueled do lie at rest.
18. Therethe prisoners rest together, and no man heareth the voyce of the extortioner.
19. There the great and the smal are equall, and the seruant is free from his maister.

Haue declared heretofore, that when we be heauy and sorowfull, the onely remembrance of Gods benefytes muste cheere vs, or at leastwyse asswage our miseries and griefes: so as if any aduersitie pinch me, and I bethinke me of the great number of benefites that God hath done for mee, the same must asswage my sorow. And sith the cace standeth so, no afflictions ought to make vs forget the knowledge which we haue of Gods benefites and graces: and yet notwithstanding it cometh so to passe. VVhereof we see example in Iob, who is the true mirrour of pacience. For what soeuer miseries he indured: yet ought he to haue acknowledged it for a great good fortune, that he was sent as a reasonable creature into the world, that he had borne the image of God, and that he had bene cherished and mainteyned vnto mans age, to the intent he might know God to bee his Father. Behold here such benefites as are inestimable: and yet is Iob so farre of from comending them, that he wissheth he had neuer tasted them. VVee see then howe fore temptations trouble vs, and that in steede of taking some comfort and asswagement of our sorowes by Gods benefites, wee turne the same into a corzie, in somuch as we could finde in our harts that God had neuer done vs any good, nor that wee had neuer knowne him. Not that Iob was vtterly of this minde: but bicause woordes escaped his mouth without aduifement, by force of the miserie that he indured. This then is no incouragement for vs to consent vnto wicked intentes: but wee must brydle our selues in such wyse, that if such fancies come in our head, wee may driue them a great way of from vs. And certaine it is, that here is great and sinfull infirmitie woorthie to be condemned. For we see the example that is shewed vs in the two and twentieth Psalme in the persone of Dauid, and specially in the persone of our Lord Iesus Christe. Dauid is there as a man destitute of helpe, to whom God sheweth himselfe to bee contrarie, in so much that he seemeth to bee vtterly shak-
 40
 50 60
 70
 80
 90 100
 110
 120
 130
 140
 150
 160
 170
 180
 190
 200
 210
 220
 230
 240
 250
 260
 270
 280
 290
 300
 310
 320
 330
 340
 350
 360
 370
 380
 390
 400
 410
 420
 430
 440
 450
 460
 470
 480
 490
 500
 510
 520
 530
 540
 550
 560
 570
 580
 590
 600
 610
 620
 630
 640
 650
 660 670
 680
 690
 700
 710
 720
 730
 740
 750
 760
 770
 780
 790
 800
 810
 820
 830
 840
 850
 860
 870
 880
 890
 900
 910
 920
 930
 940
 950
 960
 970
 980
 990
 1000

Psal. 22. a. 1.

Math. 27. e. 46.

But yet neuerthelesse, after he hath thus made his mone, he addeth: Lord thou diddest drawe mee out of my mothers wombe, thou diddest gather mee vp from the matrice, thou haste shewed thy selfe to bee my God before I could knowe thee or call vpon thee. Dauid did set this geere before him, of purpose too render thanks vnto God, and too sing vnto his name in the middes of his sorowes: and afterwarde he stablisheth himselfe in good hope for the time to come, not doubting but God regarded him still with compafsion, considering that he had shewed himselfe so gracious and pitifull towards him alreadie. Here wee see a lesson comon to all men: which is, that when we bee distressed with aduersitie too the vttermoste, euen that it seemeth a vayne thing and but lost labour to call vnto God: yet it beho-10 20 30 40
 50 60
 70
 80
 90 100
 110
 120
 130
 140
 150
 160
 170
 180
 190
 200
 210
 220
 230
 240
 250
 260
 270
 280
 290
 300
 310
 320
 330
 340
 350
 360
 370
 380
 390
 400
 410
 420
 430
 440
 450
 460
 470
 480
 490
 500
 510
 520
 530
 540
 550
 560
 570
 580
 590
 600
 610
 620
 630
 640
 650
 660 670
 680
 690
 700
 710
 720
 730
 740
 750
 760
 770
 780
 790
 800
 810
 820
 830
 840
 850
 860
 870
 880
 890
 900
 910
 920
 930
 940
 950
 960
 970
 980
 990
 1000

Psal. 22. b. 10

Math. 18. a. 7. & 26. b. 24.

aduersities:

aduersities: yet notwithstanding there will be some frailenesse mingled with it, in so much that our grieffe shall carrie vs away as it were some hideous tempest in vs, so as wee shall not bee able to rule our selues in all poynts as it were requisite. And hereby wee be warned to walke in feare, and to stande continually vpon our garde, beseeching God to succour and releue such weakenesse as he knoweth to bee in vs. Furthermore, if at any time wee bee so assaulted too passe our boundes and to make suche complayntes: Lette vs praye God too arme vs, 10 that wee may well atchieue suche a combate. And how fouer the worlde go, lette vs practyze the lesson that I haue spoken of: whiche is to set before our eyes the benefites of God whiche wee haue receyued in tymes passe, too the intent they may so comforte vs, as our sorowe doo not ouermate vs too oppresse vs altogether, but that wee may keepe still some taste of Gods goodnesse, too the ende wee may hope still for mercye at his hande, notwithstanding that wee haue no likely-hood at all of it, and that it seemeth wee bee vterly 20 shutte out from him. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke in this streyne. And herewithall wee see, that when menne are once falne vnto wickednesse, there is no ho with them. It was already too muche to haue sayde, why was not the doore of my mothers wombe shet
vp? why was I borne into this worlde? But he addeth further, why did the knees receyne mee? why did I sucke
the teate? Herein wee see that Iob considereth not Gods benefytes to his owne profite, albeit that he haue felt them in greate number, but rather reiecteth them al- 30 together: and this it is to make an ill beginning. Therefore wee muste take good heede too our selues: and so soone as our Lord maketh vs to knowe any good that wee haue receyued at his hande, it muste so touche vs too the quicke, that wee may not bee so churlish and frowarde as too turne good into euill. For if wee once beginne too forget Gods giftes, or too turne them contrarie too that wee ought: it is certayne that the same inconuenience and vyce will folowe vs too the vttermost, as wee see here by the example of Iob. VVhen 40 God openeth our mothers wombe to let vs out into the worlde, he giueth vs certayne women too take vs vp, according as wee see it is very needefull, considering that the poore humane creature commeth forth in as greate necessitie as any thing can bee. This done, he prepareth nourishment whereby wee be strengthened, and he turneth the womans bloud into milke, that wee might sucke sustenance out of it. God then doth so prouyde for vs, euen at the tyme that wee haue neyther witte nor reason, and are in daunger of death, not 50 able too helpe our selues, no nor too aske helpe at other folkes handes. God preuenteth and ouergoeth vs.
 VVee see here benefites of diuers kyndes. But wee see that Iob did put them all in a bundle, and was angrye with them all. Therefore lette vs hereby take warning, too bee moued to consider Gods fatherly goodnesse and too thanke him for the same, so often as he setteth foorth any of the benefites that wee haue receuyed of him. And when wee haue so begonne, lette vs go through with it. For as it is sayde in the French 60 Prouerb, Loaues are made horned by setting of them a-misse into the Ouen, and when men haue once ouer shot themselves, they wote not howe too keepe measure any more. Nowe if it happened so vnto Iob, who was indewed with so singular constancie: what shall become of vs that are but as leaues, so as there needeth but a little blaste of winde too shake vs downe? Then lette vs vnderstand the neede that wee haue to flee vnto God, that he may reache vs his mightie hande. But after that Iob hath sayde so, he addeth yet worser: which is, that if he were dead, he shoulde haue rest. The reason (sayeth he) is that death endeth all thinges, so as there is no more eyther ricke or poore, there is no more any Seruaunt or Mayster: Those that haue troubled the worlde bolde themselves in quiet: and they that haue bene troubled are also at rest with them. I shoulde lye still and sleep, I shoulde no more haue any care or feeling of miserie.

 It seemeth at the firste blushe, that Iob speaketh here
 lyke a Heathen man that hath no hope of the lyfe too come nor of the resurrection, howbeit that the same were neuer cleane wyped out of his harte. But sometymes there are so greate and so headdie pafsions in vs, that the seede of God is as it were choked, and all the light of reigioufn:se whiche wee ought to haue, is dimmed, and all the conceytes thereof are cast vnder foote, so as they can beare no sway.

This is well woorth the noting: but it had neede too bee declared more at length, for too be well vnderstood.
 VVee see howe the present afflictions blinde vs. If it be sommer and that wee bee ouerwhote (for wee muste take these familiar examples) it seemeth one of the paynfullest troubles that a man can indure: specially if a man bee so ouerloden that he saynt, and bee not able to holde out any further, he woulde haue a frotte that shoulde clyue the stones, and he thinks he shoulde bee well refreshed, and that he shoulde bee the more at his ease. And if it bee winter, wee will thinke that no heate can bee to greate for vs. Lo howe the present pafsions carie vs away, and this befalleth too all men:
 Yet notwithstanding some are muche more tender and nyce too suffer aduersitie, than other some bee. Therefore according as eche mannes nature and complexion is, thereafter doth he torment himselfe with the aduersitie that he indureth, and thereafter dooth he martyr himselfe too the vttermoste. For asmuche as wee see suche experiences, wee knowe that menne are caried awaye by their affections, in suche wyse as they thinke vpo nothing but the thing that griueth and tormenteth them. And the same thing is too bee seene here in Iob.
 For he is so ouerpressed with his miserie: that he looketh moste too that whiche shoulde befall him after his death, and thinketh nothing at all of the seconde lyfe.
 I say he thought nothing at all of it when he spake after that sorte at aduenture. True it is that he had the knowledge and beliefe of it printed in his harte: but it laye as a couered fyre, which is as it were choked with ashes.
 And lette vs not thinke it straunge, that our euill and sinfull affections, shoulde cause vs so to forgette the thinges that wee knewe and were sure of afore. For wee see howe good zeale hath had the same propertie bothe in Moyles, and in Sainct Paule. VVhen Moyles Exod. 32. 5.
 desired God too bee striken out of the Booke of lyfe, 32.
 to the ende that the people might bee saued: wee see there a good and holie minde, euen suche a one as God allowed of: and yet was there somewhat to be gaine-sayde in it. Dothe Moyles thinke that God can roote out his owne chozen? Is God changeable in his purpose? Moyles knewe well that God had chozen him and adopted him to bee one of his children. How doth he then desire to bee wyped out of the booke of lyfe?
 It was as much to saye, as if he had neuer bene recke-ned in the number of them that muste obtayne cuerlasting lyfe. Doth he demaunde it of God in waye of Hypocrisie? No: there is nothing that carieth him away but his owne zealousnesse, which is so feruent in him, as he passeth for nothing but the welfare of the people

people that was committed vnto him . For what a matter was it when he hearde the sentence of condemnation , that God woulde destroy all the children of Abraham ? If this offspring that God hath chozen to himselfe bee so rooted out, the couenant of God muste also needes bee abolished : Lorde, then rather lette mee be razed out of thy booke, than too say that all this people here shall perishe . Moyses then was seized with so greate an anguiste, that he forgat himselfe : he had no more regarde of himselfe : neither considered he that those whom God hath chozen muste of necessitie bee preferred euen to the ende . This was gone from him for a little whyle : and thus wee see why he desired to be wyped out of the booke of lyfe . As much is to be sayd of Sainct Paule . I woulde wishe (sayeth he) to be cursed for my brethrens sake . How so ? Sainct Paule knew himselfe too bee a member of our Lorde Iesus Chiiste, and was sure that he was an instrument purposely chozen too glorifie him : and woulde he nowe repeale the sayde grace ? woulde he breake off the course of Gods determination when as he knewe well that it is vncchangeable ? No, as he himselfe declareth anon after . Then was there some contrarietie in him . Yea, but no inconuenience came of that . For as I sayde , his zeale whiche is good and holy , draue him and inflamed him in suche sorte , as he had no respect of his owne welfare for the present time, but was desirous that GOD shoulde fulfill his promisse in the offspring of Abraham, to the intent that his name might not bee blasphemed . Nowe wee see by example , that good affections doo sometimes as it were steppe asyde out of the waye in Gods children, and make them too forgette that which is knowne and certayne vnto them . And sith the case standeth so, wee muste not thinke it straunge though Iob were so hardly distressed that he was forcced to speake lyke a harebrayne, so as he maketh all menne alike and equall when they bee dead : and it shoulde seeme by his saying that menne perishe, and that there is none other lyfe after this . His dealing thus, is not for that he had not wel conceyued another opinion in his minde and ingraued it in his harte : but he speaketh as a man that raueeth in a traunce . For his grieffe had so blinded him, that he was not his owne man but was become lyke the boiling sea, wherein the waues iustle one agaynst another . Then see wee a fayre lookinglasse, whereby wee may perceyue that our affections are blinde, bicause they followe not reason, too knowe the things that wee ought to bee moste certayne and fully resolued of in all the worlde . For what shall become of vs, if wee knowe not that wee are created to a better lyfe ? It were better for vs that wee were Asses and Oxen . For the brute beastes inioy the present lyfe : they feede, they take their rest, and they trauell without any greate feeling of it . But men eate not one morfell of bread without care : in the middes of their pleasures, they haue a number of hartbytinges of their owne (besides that they wante not annoyances at other mens hands) for euery man for himselfe becommeth his owne hangman . Therefore if wee haue no hope of the second lyfe, what shall become of vs ? And truly our Lordes will is, that the same shoulde abyde printed in the hartes of all menne, according as wee see that although the Heathen men were become brutishe, yet notwithstanding they retayned still some knowledge of the seconde lyfe, and of the immortallitie of the soule . And as for those that knewe it not, God hath lefte some marke or other, whereby too make them vnexcusable, yea and it were but euen the toombes that they haue made to burie deadfolkes in.

Rom. 9. 3.

Euen that is a recorde of the resurrection . But here wee see that Iob wist nothing of all this . What shall wee say then, but as wee haue sayde alreadie : that is to witte, that when wee giue head too our affections, they put out our eyes, or els feele them vp so close, as wee can see neuer awhit, but speake off and on, without any aduysed vnderstanding or staye of our talke ? Beholde wherevpon wee ought too muze . But on the other side lette vs marke the grace that was giuen to Iob, in that he did not vtterly consente too this so raunging talke, ( for that had bene a blaspheming of God ) but onely did lette slippe such woordes at random . If a man had asked him by and by, what sayest thou ? is there no difference betweene good menne and bad ? dooth death make a finall ende of all thinges ? thou speakest here like an infidell that neuer knewe of God nor of Gods religion . For God teacheth vs, that after death there is a better lyfe than this, and an euerlasting heritage, which he hath prepared for those that are his, and for those whome he hath chozen : and as for the reprobates, seeing that they haue despyzed him during their lyfe, they shall knowe him to bee their iudge . If Iob had bene posed thus, he would haue confessed suche things, yea euen vnfaynedly : and yet for all that, he ceaseth not too ouershoote himselfe in the same thinges . Also wee see that all the matter consisteth not in knowing : but wee muste perseuer in the same knowledge, to withstande temptations with it when they assayle vs . For if wee haue reade the holie Scripture, if wee haue haunted sermons, if wee haue bene taught that which is requisite for a mans saluation : and yet for all that, be negligent, and bende not our minde to bethinke vs of the things that wee haue herd afore : it is all one as if a man being well furnished with Corselet, Murryon, swoorde, and Target, should hang them all vp vpon a spirget, and suffer his armour too rust, and his swoorde to sticke faste to the scabberd, when he should come to haue neede of them . He may well say, I haue armour and weapon readie : but what shall it boote him to looke vpon them ? yee see his furniture is vnprofitable, bycause he hath suffered it to rust : and moreouer he shall not knowe how to handle eyther swoorde or target at his neede . Euen so standeth the case with vs . VVee may well haue knowne the thing that is good and conuenient for our saluation, and yet for all that, when as wee thinke our selues too be handsome and well appoynted men, wee shall not haue the skill howe to applie all things to our behoofe : but this knowledge of ours shall bee as it were rustie, so as it shall not come to our remembrance when wee haue neede of it, and when it might stande vs in best steade . Then see we here a good lesson for vs : which is, that it is not ynough for vs to haue knowen the thing that God sheweth vs for our profit : but wee must also exercise it without ceasing, and our remembrance must be refreshed, to the intent we may knowe which is the true vse of the holie Scripture . For if that which is spoken of here befell vnto Iob, who notwithstanding had earnestly minded the woorde of God (I meene not the woorde written, but the woorde that God had giuen him by inspiration:) if he (I say) missed not to bee besotted at his most neede : what shall become of vs that are muche weaker than he was ? And therefore lette vs beseeche this good God, that if at any time (for to make vs humble,) he suffer our owne infirmitie too ouerrule vs, so as wee haue no such power too warde Satans blowes as were requisite : yet notwithstanding the same may bee crossed out of his reckening booke, and not bee called too account . Thus wee see what wee haue to do . But will wee bee affoyled at Gods hande? Then must wee first condemne the faultes that wee perceyue in our selues. Furthermore as touching the state of the seconde life: the Scripture sheweth vs as muche as is expedient to be knowen in this behalfe: which is, that it is true, that whē men are come too the ende of their race, God draweth them backe from hence beneath. For this life is likened too a course or a race. Therefore wee haue made an ende of our race or iourney at death. But yet for all that wee cease not, either too bee in payne: or else too bee in blessed ioy after that oure soules are parted from oure bodies. Lo what wee haue too beare in mynde. As touching the paynes of this present lyfe, as the care of eating and drinking, of maynteyning oure selues in apparell, and of keeping oure selues from harme taking, as well by meanes of men, as by meanes of beastes: all this shall vtterly cease: and yet in the meane whyle it is sayde, that the children of God are gathered vp into ioy. True it is, that as yet wee haue not the crowne that is promised vs, and whiche is prepared for vs. For the whole body of Iesus Christ must bee made full and perfect together. And heere wee see why it is sayde that oure life lieth hidde in Christ vntill the time of his coming. But yet the faythfull resting in Abrahams bosome are already so farre forth partakers of the sayde ioy, as they knowe that God is their father, and that the trust whiche they haue had in him is not in vayne. And specially wee muste marke howe Sainct Paule saythe, that as long as wee bee shutte vp within this mortall body, wee walke in hope, without any beholding or sight of the things that are promised vs, for all those things are hid from vs: but when wee bee parted out of the worlde, we see the thing that wee hoped for, and the thing that was earst hid from vs is then shewed openly vnto vs. VVe see then how the faythfull that are departed out of this world, are in ioy with God, and do knowe, that forasmuch as they be Christes members, they can not perishe: yea and that they knowe it much better, and with a greater power, than they had done during this present life. And as for the reprobates, they are as condemned caytifs, that wayte but for the houre of execution and torment. For they bee sure already of condemnation.

2. Pet. 2. 1. 4 And heere wee see why it is sayde that the diuels are locked vp in darke prisons, and bounde as it were in chaynes, vntill they come too the sayde finall confusion, whiche is prepared for them agaynst the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christe. Thus wee see what the Scripture dothe breefly shewe vs concerning the state of the seconde lyfe, in wayting for the last day. But it is spoken soberly vnto vs, bicause wee bee too muche giuen too fonde and curious questions. And wee see that men loue better too bee inquisitiue what is done in Paradise, than too knowe whiche is the way too come thither. Beholde, God him selfe telleth vs, saying: Come too mee. He sheweth vs howe we may come thither: and wee passe not for it. You would maruell too see howe colde wee be when it standeth vpon the poynt of going vnto him by the meanes that he hath giuen vs: and yet in the meane whyle wee bee buzied in demanding what is doone heere? and what is doone there? what is this? and what is that? wee bee desirous too knowe that whiche God hath hidden from vs: for he will not haue vs too knowe ought as now, but onely in parte.

1. Cor. 13. 6. 9 And heere wee see why the holye Scripture vseth suche a sobernesse. It is bicause wee shoulde not couet too bee ouersuttle in these fonde questions, but bee contented to knowe that whiche is for oure profite. Yet ne-

uerthelesse it standeth vs in hande too bee well resolued in the sayde article: that is too wit, that in death there is not reste for all men. True it is that all men, yea euen the wicked also (as I haue sayde) shall bee discharged of the necessities of this present life. But in the meane season they fayle not too bee tormented, feeling God too bee their iudge, at whose hande they can looke for no mercy, for they knowe that this confusion is throughly ready for them, and that they shall bee plunged downe into hell. Seeing (I say) that they are cast and reprimed too that day: they feele an vnquietnesse whiche passeth al the paynes and torments of this world. It behooueth vs too knowe this, too the intent that whyle we liue heere belowe, wee may pray God too guide vs with his holy spirite, that wee may not couet any vnlawefull thing: wayting continually till he accomplishe his promise, in gathering vs all together into his heauenly kingdome. Lo what wee haue too beare in minde. And as touching the rest, although Iobs talke was out of square, (as I haue sayde already) yet notwithstanding wee may gather some good and profitable lesson of it. Howe so? VVhen he sayth that Kinges and Princes doo buylde vp desert places: he sheweth the foolishhe vayngloriousnesse that is in worldelings, and in suche as would make them selues renowned heere. VVhen men deuys, praetize, and consulte of buylding houses and palaces: wee knowe that commonly there is excesse. VVhen they proceede according too the order of nature, and iay, very well, it is Gods will that wee should lodge heere belowe, and therevpon doo buylde them selues houses too dwell in according too their articles: it is a very good lyne that they drawe by. But they that meane too magnifie themselues in the worlde, content not themselues with that, but will printe an euerlastingnesse of their names in their palaces and castles, and they will haue them too bee seene a farre off. VVho buylded suche a place? it was yonder Prince. Thus yee see the vayngloriousnesse that passeth beyonde the order of nature. And that was it that Iob mente too giue inking of. As if he had sayde, men that liue vpon earth are pricked with muche care, in suche wyse as they take muche payne, and fayle not too heaue out one another. For they bee so pricked with their owne lustes, that they wage battell agaynst nature. For what meeneth thys their buylding in desertes? It is to make buyldinges that are as it were incredible, that when a man commeth too the place, he maye take vp hys hande, and blesse him, saying: Howe is it possible too haue builded in this place? For if a situation be conuenient and easie to builde vpon, and a man see some fayre building vpon it: very well, it shal be thought no strange matter, and it wil be mockt at by some manner of quippe. But if a man see a place that is as it were vnapprochable, and some other take vpon him to say, I will make it a place of estimation: then beholde, the desert is buylded vp. Beholde it is made as a new worlde. Suche manner of men meene, as it were too stomacke agaynst God. For they purpose to reforme the worlde and the order that God hath set in it, they will haue it seene that nothing shall let them [of their purpose.] And whereas God hath set barres before them to say, you must go no further: they leape quite ouer them. Lo what vayngloriousnesse is in many men: and this is the thing that Iob ment too betoken heere. Also (as I sayde) his wordes are farre out of square: but howe soeuer the case it standeth, a man maye yet gather some good lesson of them. Moreouer when hee addeth, That the seruant is set free from his master, and that the poore and the riche are all one: it is to shewe vs, that men muste not glorie in their present greatnesse, according as saint Paule speaketh of principalities, wherein he speaketh as Dauid dothe. For thus he sayth in the Psalme: I haue sayde, ye are Gods. VVhich is as muche to say, that Princes, and suche as are in authoritie, are Gods lieutenants, and haue preheminance aboue the rest of the worlde, as though God had priuiledged them. But what for that? yet are ye mortall men, and shall dye as men, and so assure your selues. Thus wee see that they which are aduanced to highe estate, ought not too dazle mens eyes, but rather acknowledge their owne frayle state, and that forasmuche as the worlde and the shape thereof passeth away: their riches, their credite, and their honor shall come to nought. Therefore let them not besot them selues. But let them continually thinke vpon death, and let those that haue seruantes and subiectes vnder them, thinke thus with them selues: we must come to account, we haue one in heauen who is master of vs all, as saint Paule sayth: there will bee no accepting of persons, there shall bee no more bondage or mastershippe for men too alleage before God. True it is that the earthly policie, and also the state of Magistrates is ordeyned of God. But all this concerneth the worlde and worldly things, which shall take an ende. And therefore must these things bee transitorie also. Then let vs all take heede that wee holde our selues in lowlynesse and modestie, and that wee attempt not any thing which God hath not giuen vs libertie too do. But nowe let vs returne to the matter that we beganne withall: that is too wit, that Iobs talke ceased not too bee outrageous and excessiue, and without any measure: and that if he hadde consented vnto it, it had bene horrible blasphemie. But the case so standeth, that forasmuche as he had not suche a strength in him selfe as too bee able too master him selfe: he was attaynted with many euill faultes, as men must needes feele in the encountering, that they haue alwayes infirmitie in their fleshe. And furthermore we see heere howe Iob speaketh of little babes. For where as he sayth: As an vntimely birthe: it is as muche as if he ment too tell vs, that when God putteth an humayne creature into the mothers wombe, it hath no soule. But contrarily wee knowe that when the creature is conceyued in the mothers wombe, God breatheth a soule into it, and it is certayne that it hath in it the feede of lyfe. And so Iob sheweth him selfe not too bee well inough settled in his wittes, too consider of Gods workes, and too iudge rightly of them, too discern betweene blacke and white, but is altogether straight. And whereof commeth that? Euen of the hardinesse of his passions, as I haue sayde. VVe see heere as it were a tempest or storme that maketh Iob bothe deafe and blinde. Sometimes when it thundreth, and the ayre is so fore troubled that a man can not heare any thing, all oure wittes bee as it were vterly amazed, and therewithall we be stricken in feare: and when we see the flashes of lightning, and heare the thundercrackes, and the ratling of some fore and vehement hayle: wee imagine that wee should bee fordoone, and wee shrinke our selues inward in suche wyse, as wee dare not once put out our heads. Euen so stood the case with Iob. VVherfore let vs consider these things, and therewithall let vs also beare in minde the doctrine that I haue touched already. True it is, that heere wee must marke two things: for wee haue two extremities, whereof it behoueth vs to take heede. The one sorte thinke it is no pacience, if a man bee not altogether peaceable. The other sorte are of opinion, that although a man chafe agaynst God, and resist him: yet he ceaseth not to be pacient, conditionally that at the end he mislike of his fault and repent it. These men giue them selues the bridle, and take leaue to commit many finnes, yea and they suppose them selues too bee pacient when they haue so stomaked agaynst God by that meane, wherethrough they bereeue them selues of Gods grace. Therefore wee must take heede of these two extremities. And let vs marke, that our pacientnesse in submitting our selues too Gods goodd wyll, is not too bee without any greefe at all, or not too stomacke the matter at some times, or not too feele the waues that come rushing agaynst vs, so as wee shoulde be as senselesse persons in that behalfe: But rather, when wee be in suche battels, let vs not discourage our selues for the matter: but let vs call vpon God, and therewithall feeling continually howe greatly wee bee gilty before him, let vs pray him too strengthen vs by the power of his holy spirite, that wee may bee able to withstande suche assaults, whereby wee mighte bee oppressed at the first biowe, if he susteyned vs not. Beholde (I say) howe it behoueth vs to deale, to the ende that when God shall haue giuen vs any power and strength too withstande temptations, he may encrease the same in vs, vntill we be come to the ende of all our battels.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our goodd God, with acknowledgement of our faults, beseeching him to make vs feele better what we haue not done, that we may be fory for them, and craue pardon of him, and walke in suche aduisednesse, that beeing shrouded vnder the shadowe of his wings, we may be fenced with a goodd and inuincible defence agaynst our aduerfarie, and all that euer he can practize agaynst vs. And forasmuch as we bee inuironed with so many wants while we be in this world, let vs pray also too bee strengthened with power from aboue, that wee may not faynt in the midst of our iourney, but holde out our race, hauing alwayes our eye vpon the glory that is promised vs in heauen, and purchased for vs by the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ, not doubting but that we shall fully and perfectly enioy it, when we shall haue earst taken possession of it heere beneath by hope and pacience. That it may please him too graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also too all people and nations of the worlde, &c.

The thirtenth Sermon, which is the third vpon the third Chapter.

20. VVhy giueth he light to them that are in miserie, and lyfe vnto them that haue sorrowfull hearts,
21. VVhiche vwayte for death, and it commeth not to them: [and] vvhiche seeke for it more bulily than for treasures?
22. They vvould reioyce and bee merie, they vvoulde bee very glad if they mighte finde the graue
23. [VVhy giueth he light] to the man vvhose vway is hidden, and vvhich God hath shet vp?
24. My sighing commeth before I take my repaste, and my roaring is lyke the ouerflowing of of waters.

25. I haue met vvith the thing that I stode in feare of, and the thing that I mistrusted is falne vpon mee.
26. I haue not beene in prosperitie, I haue not beene in quiet, I am not in rest, and yet notwithstanding this trouble is come vpon mee.

Ob complaineth heere, as though God did men wrong too put them into the worlde, and too exercise them with store of miseries. And so he maketh his reckening, that if God will haue vs to liue, he should maynteyne vs at our ease, and not incomber vs with many troubles. Thus wee see breefly what is conteyned heere. Verily Iobs intent was not too pleade agaynst God, as if he would go to lawe with him: but yet in the meane whyle, the greefe that he susteyned carried him so farfoorth, that these complaintes passed out of his mouth. Howe nowe? VVherefore hath God set vs in this world? Is it not to the ende that wee should knowe him too bee our father, and that wee should blisse him, bicause wee bee sure that he hath a care of vs? But contrariwise it is too bee seene, that many men are afflicted and tormented with many miseries. Too what purpose doth God holde them at that poynt? It seemeth that he would haue his name too bee blasphemed. VVhat can they doo whome he handleth so rigorously? when they see death before their eyes, or rather haue it betweene their teeth, they can not but fret and chafe at it. Thus wee see an occasion of murmuring agaynst God, and it seemeth that he him selfe is the cause of it. Heere wee haue a very good and profitable lesson: which is that wee shoulde assure our selues, that when God scourgeth vs, yet he ceaseth not too giue vs some taste of his goodness, in suche wise as euen in the midst of our afflictions wee may still prayse him, and reioyce in him. Yet notwithstanding it is true that he restrayneth our ioyes, and turneth them into bitternesse. But there is a meane betwixte blessing of Gods name, and blaspheming of it: which meane is too call vpon him when wee bee oppressed with aduersitie, and too resorte vnto him, desiring him too receyue vs vnto mercy. But men can neuer keepe this meane, except God haue an eye too it of him selfe when he scourgeth vs. Therefore let vs marke first, that whensoever God sendeth vs any troubles and sorowes, he ceaseth not too make vs taste of his goodness therewithall, too assuage the anguish that mighte holde our hartes in distresse. Howe is that? VVe haue shewed heeretofore, that if men had an eye too Gods former benefites towards them (yea though it were but in that he had brought the out of their mothers wombe, and giuen them life: ) it were inough to comfort them, euen when they bee ouerloden with dispayre, and too make them thinke: May not God punishe vs iustly? for wee bee bound too beare patiently the aduersitie that he sendeth, and nature teacheth vs so to doo, forsomuche as he bestoweth so many benefites vpon vs, according as Iob hath shewed heeretofore. VVe see then howe this one-ly one consideration oughte too assuage our sorowes, according as it is too bee seene, that if men put suger or honey into a medicine that is ouer bitter, it will alay it in suche sorte, as the patient may the better take it, wheras otherwise it would go neere to choke him. But there is yet a further matter in this: namely, that God sheweth vs the vse of his chastizemets which he sendeth vs: which is not that he meeneth too destroy vs so ofte as he scourgeth vs: but that it is for our profite and welfare: and he promiseth vs, that if wee bee faythfull, he will not suffer vs too bee racked out of measure, but will supporte vs. So then, if wee bee afflicted, there is no reason why wee should take pritch agaynst God, as though wee founde nothing but rigour at his hande. For wee bee so comforted in our afflictions, as if our vnthankfulnesse letted vs not, wee might reioyce and say, blessed bee the name of God, although he sende vs not all our owne desires. Thus muche for the first poynt. And nowe heerewithall wee must marke also the seconde article, which I haue touched a ready: which is, that although wee haue nothing but distresse, although wee bee helde as it were vpon the racke, and that wee haue nothing at all too comforte vs: yet must wee not bee hasty too take pritch agaynst God, but wee muste rather call vpon him, according as it is sayde: let him that is sorrowfull pray. Sainct Iames sheweth vs the meane which wee ought too holde. If wee bee merie (sayth he) let vs sing: not after the maner of the worlde (whiche rustleth it, and royetteth it, without acknowledging that his goodes come of God) but in rendring prayse too God for our gladnesse. And if wee be in sorowe and heauinesse, Ie. vs pray vnto God, beseeching him to pitie vs, and to abate his rigour. Thus wee see, that when the faythfull are at their wittes ende, so as they can no further go, yet must they not rushe agaynst God, and finde faulte with him: neither must they outrage, as those do which are full of pride and rebelliousnesse: but rather let vs thinke thus: Lorde, I see my selfe too bee a wretched creature. I knowe not where too become, I wote not what too doo, except thou receyue me to mercy, and shewe thy selfe so pityfull towards me, as to releue me of my miserie, which I can no longer beare: Thus wee see that the children of God must beare their aduersities patiently, although God chastize them roughly for a tyme. And it is too bee seene, that although Iob had continually minded the same lesson: yet was he not sufficiently armed too withstande temptations: for he sayth heere, VVhy dothe God giue light too suche as are of troubled minde? He remembered not that God had iust cause too keepe men in the middes of many miseries, and that although their state be wretched here below, yet is God righteous still: and that albeit he punishe vs, and keepe vs occupied many wayes, yet it becommeth not vs to holde plea with him, vnder colour that he holdeth vs heere agaynst our will, and that wee bee shutte vp in prison while wee bee in this life: neither must wee conceyue any displeasure for all that. Iob did not sufficiently consider this. Now If suche a person as Iob was, happened too ouer-shoote him selfe, and too kicke agaynst God, for want of hauing the sayde regarde that I haue spoken of: muche more must wee set our mindes vpon the sayd two poynts: that is to wit, that we beare in remembrance, that God neuer forsaketh vs, and therefore that we may not bee ouer sorrowful when God sendeth vs any aduersities, bicause wee bee sure that his chastizing of vs is after suche a sorte, as therewithall he releueth our greefe, at leastwise if it bee not long of oure selues, and of oure owne vnthankfulnesse: And secondly, that when wee bee distressed that wee can no more: God calleth and allureth vs friendly vnto him, yea I say, he prouoketh vs tooreforte vnto prayer as often as wee bee as it were vtterly stripped out of all that wee haue. Lo heere the true remedie : which is too call vpon our good God too haue pitie vpon vs, and not too suffer vs too bee so dismayde as too say, I wote not what to doo, and it is too no purpose too go vnto God. Let vs keepe our selues from suche incombraunce, and persuaue our selues that wee shall alwayes be sure too fare well, if wee call vpon God, who will bee alwayes mercifull too vs, euen in the middelt of our afflictions. VVhen wee haue these two poyntes well settled in our remembraunce, wee shall no more say : VVherefore is it that God holdeth those here whiche are in sorrowe of minde? For wee see wherefore he dothe it. There is great reason why God should chastize men. For howe great are our sinnes? the number of them is infinite. Agayne, if wee looke vpon our lustes, there is also a very bottomlesse gulfe, which hath neede too bee mended. God therefore must mortifie vs. Furthermore, if wee consider howe muche wee bee giuen too the worlde : wee shall finde that our affections had neede too bee plucked from it by Gods chastizementes. Moreover howe great is our pride and presumptuousnesse? And therefore must God needes humble vs. Besides all this, howe colde are wee too craue his helpe? and therefore he must bee fayne too inforce vs too it. Finally ought not our sayth to be tryed and made knowne? Then see wee not reasons inowe why God holdeth vs heere, and will haue vs to be miserable, so as there is nothing but payne, trouble, torment, and anguish in all our whole life? Is there not sufficient reason why God should doo this? Marke heere a speciall poynt. And sith that he continually calleth vs vnto him, and maketh vs free passage vnto him, and that wee haue suche a remedie in our miseries : may we not holde our selues well appayed? VVe see howe we ought too bee armed and fenced agaynst the sayde temptations, whiche reyned ouermuche in Iob, howebeit that he was not vtterly ouercome of it. For when Iob speaketh heere of suche as desire the graue, and whiche willingly dig for it as for some bidden treasure, longing to dye and can not: he putteth him selfe in the same ranke, as we shall see by the sequelle : wherin he confirmeth his owne infirmitie and vice. For it is not lawfull for the saythfull to mislike their owne lyfe, and too wishe so for death. True it is that wee may wish for death in one respect : which is, in consideration that we be hilde heere in suche bondage of sinne, as wee can not serue God so freely as were too bee wished, bicause we are ouerfraught with vices. In respect hereof it is certayne that we may sigh, and desire God to take vs quickly out of the worlde. But (as is sayde afore) it may not bee for that we hate our life, or for that wee bee weery too be hilde heere bicause wee be handled ouer rigorously : but wee must beare our lot patiently, in wayting Gods leysure too deliuer vs. And wee see that Paule holdeth the selfe same measure when he sayth too the Romanes, Alas, who shall deliuer me from this mortall body? For I am vnhappy. But yet therewithall he sayth, Thankes bee too God through our Lorde Iesus Christe. Lo heere howe sainct Paule on the one side calleth himselfe vnhappy, and desireth too bee taken out of the world : and on the other side is contented and at rest, bicause God preserveth him, and he knoweth that God will neuer forsake him, howbeit that he bee subiecte too many miseries. VVe see heere his contentation. And that wee may the better vnderstande the whole : let vs marke howe Iob hath done amisse in two poynts. That is too witte, in not hauing the regarde that he ought too haue had in desiring death : and also in not keeping measure.

Heere wee see two faults that are very grosse. VVhen I say that Iob had not his eyes fastned vpon the marke that he oughte : I meane that hys wishing for death, was not bicause he sawe himselfe to bee a miserable sinner, and coulde not attayne too the perfection which all of vs ought too labour for : but bicause he was weery of the nipping greefes, as well which he presently indured in his person, as whiche he had susteyned before in his goodes. And so he desired death, bicause it seemed to him that God pressed him ouerfore. Thus wee see the first faulte that I spake of. But if wee apply the same too oure owne vse, it will bee yet better vnderstoode and apparaunte. If a man searche and trye him selfe throughly, and thinke thus with him selfe : I am giuen to suche a vice, and I fight agaynst it, but I can not come to my purpose : and the matter is not for one vice alone, but I haue two or three that torment me. Surely yet I will not giue my selfe the brydle, neither will I wounde my selfe, I feare the vengeance of God, and will holde my selfe in suche sorte as I bee not vtterly vanquished : I see I must bee muche more earnest in seruing God, and in fighting agaynst the world and mine owne flesh, as it is verye requisite I shoulde bee, for I am hilde backe and hindered by mine owne lustes. I saye, if a man acknowledge him selfe suche a one : after he hath well examined his lyfe, he sayth therevpon : yea my God, I see my selfe in miserable plight, and when shall I bee deliuered out of it? For needes must I beare sinne in me, and although it reigne not in me, yet doth it dwell in mee. And what else is sinne, but the diuels scepter, whereby he reigneth ouer vs? Then am I the bondslaue of Satan and of death. O my God, muste I tarrie euermore in this weerysome plight? A Christian man may well haue suche sighes, and beseeche God too set him free from suche a bondage wherein he seeth him selfe too bee. But if the matter concerne aduersitie : wee must regarde nother colde nor heate, nor pouertie, nor sicknesse : but we must haue our eye only on our sinnes. And specially when God punisheth vs, in what wise so euer it bee, wee must mount vp higher, without any resting vpon the bodily aduersitie, and think thus with our selues : beholde the fruites of our sinnes : forasmuch as we haue done agaynst Gods will, it is good reason that he should shewe him selfe a iudge towards vs. VVhen we haue thus acknowledged our sinnes, the same worketh a remorse in vs, and prouoketh vs to conceiue the sorrowe wherof S. Paule speaketh. And thus much as concerning the first poynt. But it is not inough to thinke as afore is sayd : that is to wit, to wish death in such wise as I haue carst shewed : but it behoueth also too keepe measure. I say, we must not onely wish it vpon good cause, but we must also bridle our desire, so as it bee ruled by the good pleasure of God. And this will bring too passe, that the outrage which is shewed heere in Iob, shal be restrayned as with a bridle. I haue already touched this poynt in the text which I alleaged out of S. Paule. For after he had made his moane, and wished to be deliuered out of this prison of death : he addeth, I thanke my God : and he ceaseth not to be quiet, euen in the midst of those complainys and longings. And why so? for he seeth it is good reason that God should be the master, and gouerne vs at his pleasure : and that we should patiently wayte for such ende as he listeth to giue vs. S. Paule perceiuing this, concludeth immediatly, that although he be a wretched sinner : yet notwithstanding he is sure that God will guide him in such wise, as it is saluatiō can not miscarie. S. Paule then had an eye to those two things. And therefore he sayth that he yeldeth God thanks, notwithstanding that he bee in miserie. Euen so muste wee doo. And in so dooing, wee shall not onely bee the readier too indure all the myseries of this worlde for the honour of God, that hee maye be glorified both in our persons, and in oure humilitie: but also wee shall bee willyng too suffer for our neighbours, as Sainct Paule also sheweth vs by his owne example. He sayeth too the Philippians that as for himselfe, it shoulde bee farre better for hym to bee taken out of the worlde: but for youre sakes (sayeth he) it is requisite that I live, bicause I know that you haue as yet neede of my labour, and that God employeth mee about the edifying of your fayth, and vnto him do I submit my selfe. And afterwarde he sayeth: Although it were for my behoofe to goe hence out of hand, yet am I willing to abyde here still. Lo how saine Paule exhorteth all men to submitte themselues in such wyse vntoo Gods pleasure, as whyle they liue in thys worlde, they may not onely beare their afflictions patiently, but also bee readie to suffer for their neighbours, so as their labour may be profitable to the comon weale, and they themselues do seruice to the church of God. Thus we see what wee haue to marke. But what? This lesson is not yet vnderstode, forasmuch as there are verie few that put it in vre: for if God leaue vs in rest, ye shall see vs so blinded with wayne and sonde ioye, and wee be so ouersotted, as wee knowe neyther death, nor our owne fraytie any more, neyther haue wee any discretion at all. And if God visite vs with any afflictions: it needes not to be asked whether we blaspheme or no, or whether any othes passe out of our mouth or no: there will be store of mysliking, of murmuring, and of impacience, which shall be full of sturdinesse. And when the winde is in that doore with vs, howe many be there that thinke vpon their sinnes, and that grone vnder suche a burden, and therewithall looke vntoo the ayde that God giueth them, howe he suffereth them not to be vterly ouercome by Satan, and therevpon doo quiet themselues and take comfort in that he preferueth them? The number of them is verie small: and yet is not this written in wayne. But in generall wee haue now to consider, that the faythfull may well sigh and grone all their lyfe long, till God haue taken them out of the worlde, alwayes wishing for their ende, that is to saye, for death: and yet notwithstanding they must restrayne themselues in such wyse, as they maye wholly submitte themselues to Gods good pleasure, knowing that they are not made for themselues. Fyrste I saye, that the faythfull may well sighe as folke that are wearie of their long pinning in thys prison of their fleshe: namely for the cause that I haue touched, whiche is, bicause they serue not God in such freedom as were requisite, but drawe their lynnes amisse, so as they woorke awrye, and oftentimes swarue asyde. And (whiche more is) wee muste syghe but so farrefoorth as is lawfull for vs: whyche is too bee doone so often as wee enter intoo the consyderation of oure owne ouerwearynesse when the matter standeth vppon the seruyng of GOD. For, that muste spurre vs to desyre God too take vs oute of this worlde, and make vs haue an eye to the lyfe that is prepared for vs in heauen, whyche shall bee fully shewed vpon vs at the coming of our Lorde Iesus Chryst.

And heereby wee see howe it is not onely graunted to Gods children to wishe for deathe, but also that they ought to wish for it. For they shew not a good prooffe of their faith, except they seeke to go out of this worlde, according as in deed all things hast and labour toward their marke. But our mark is aloft, and therefore must we neuer leaue running till wee come to oure wayes ende whiche

GOD hath sette vs: and wee muste desyre that that may be quickly. Neuerthelesse lette vs alwayes beare in mynde the cause that I haue spoken: namely that wee must not bee prouoked to wish for death, bicause we be subiect some to sicknesse, some to pouertie, some to one thing, and some to an other: but bycause we be not fully reformed to the image of God, and bicause we haue manie imperfections in vs. Marke well (I say the cause that muste spurre and prouoke vs too desyre death: namely, too the ende that being ridde of this mortall bodie (whiche is lyke a cabane full of all sinche and noysomnesse) wee maye bee fully reformed too the image of God, so as hee maye reigne in vs, and all the corruption of our nature be vterly done away.

And furthermore, lette vs keepe vs within the compasse of desyring too lyue and dye at Gods pleasure, so as wee maye not bee giuen too oure owne will, but soo as wee maye make as a sacrificy of it in that behalfe, that our liuing maye not bee too curselues but to God, so as wee may say, Lorde, I know myne owne fraytie. Neuerthelesse it is thy will to holde me in thys world, and here I am, and good reason it is that I shoulde tarye here: But whosoever it shal please thee to cal me hence, I make no great account of my lyfe, it is alwayes at thy comaundement, to dispose of it at thine owne pleasure.

Bholde (I saye) howe we ought too deale in this case. And herewithall, lette vs haue oure affections euermore quieted, yea euen in such sorte, as wee may continually prayse Gods name, assuring our selues, that both in life and death, he will alwayes shewe himselfe a Father and Sauior towards vs. But after that Iob hath spoken so, he addeth: That sube as are so distressed in their hearts, would bee full gladd and fayne, if they myght fynde theyr graue. VVherein he bewrayeth himselfe to speake thorough a brutishe and vnaduised affection, and that hee keepeth neyther measure nor modestie. For hee confesseth that wee come to nought there. So then wee see howe he is faine, howebeit not with a deadly fall, but with a halfe fall, and God rayseth him vp agayne afterwarde as wee shall see. Yet neuerthelesse the case standeth so, as wee must verily condemne this infirmitie heere in Iob: that is too saye, he was so dismayde with heauinesse, as hee could no more taste of Gods goodnesse, therby to gather neuer so little comforte too sustaine himselfe by.

But forasmuche as wee see that this besell vnto him: so muche the more muste wee bee earnest in praying vntoo God, that sorowe maye not ouermate vs so, as wee shoulde bee vterly ouerwhelmed by it. Therefore let vs alwayes be so vnderdropped and stayed vp, as wee maye syghte agaynst sorowfulnessse, and feele that it is good for vs to liue heere according to Gods will, and that although we haue greate gries and troubles heere, yet must wee stande fully resolued vpon this point, that it is good for vs to continue here still in this world. And wherefore? To the ende that God may be glorified in vs, to the ende that our fayth may be tryed, to the end we should call vpon him, and professe him to be alwayes our father, notwithstanding that he scourge vs, and to the ende that by meanes thereof we may be prepared too the heauenly lyfe. This taste of the said fatherly goodnesse, must alwayes make vs desyrous to go vnto God, & not suffer vs too giue bridle to anye one outrageous and beastly affection, as wee see that Iob hath doone heere. And by the waye hee sheweth, whence this heauinesse came vpon him, that had so wholly swallowed him vp, and from whence also it proceedeth in those that are so dismayde as they can not admit any comforte to assuage their miseries. He sayth, To the man whose waye is bidden,

and

and which God hath shut in, as if he had made hedges round about it, that no man should enter into it.

This is well woorthie to bee noted. For Iob sheweth wherein he sayled: namely in not yielding himself inough to Gods prouidence. Yet notwithstanding, heerewithall hee discouereth a disease wherunto all of vs are subiect. That isto wit, that we be desirous to know all that must befall vs, and what our state shal be: and al this we would haue declared to vs: in so muche that when wee are in perplexitie, so as wee knowe not what shall become of vs, and that the inconuenience pyncheth vs, and we see no ende of it: then are we at the poynt of vtter despair.

Lo here a mischief that is ouer common and ordinarie. And wee must marke it well, to the ende wee maye seeke the remedie on the contrarie parte. VVhat then is the inclination of men? It is, that they could well fynd in their heartes too leape vp to the cloudes, to knowe what shall bee the course of their whole lyfe. And we see how they determine with themselves, I will do this and that.

Prou. 16. a. 1. Salomon mocking at the ouerweening that is in men, sayeth that they determine vpon their whole lyfe: and whereas they can not moue the tip of their toung without God doe guyde it: yet determine they vpon this and that. And what a mockerie is it? They are not able too moue the tippe of their toung, and yet they presume too

Lam. 4. d. 13. also as Sainct Iames agreeth with Salomon, in scorning of the sayd presumptuousnesse whiche is in men. For so long as God letteth vs alone at our ease, euery man beleueth what he listeth himself, and we take our selues too be petigoddes. But assone as God turneth his hand, and beateh vs with his rods: ye shall see vs so amazed, as we wote not where to become: we think it not possible for vs euer to scape out of our miseries, we looke on the one syde and on the other, and we see no end at al of them: we be as it were so shet vp in them, that we cannot take hold of the goodnesse and myghtie power of God to succour vs. And this is the verye affection that Iob sheweth vs here, which is an ouercómon disease as we fynd well ynough by experience. For there is not anye thing that troubleth and tormenteth vs so much, as when wee see our selues shut vp, and know not what wil be the end of our miseries, nor what shall become of vs, in so much as being assayled on all sydes, we conclude with our selues, that we can neuer get away without vtter oppresion and ouerthrow. Haue we this sayd disease? Then let vs resort to the remedie. For if the disease be not cured, we must nedes fall into the sayd excessiue passion, whereof mention is made heere: namely that wee shal wishe for death as men in despaire, and shall haue no assuagement of our miseries, but only to desire God to ouerwhelme vs out of hande. But the conueniente remedie of this disease is, to referre our selues to Gods prouidence, that he may see brightly for vs, and that sith wee bee blynde, and in darkenesse, our God maye guyde vs as he knoweth is good for vs, and leade vs foorth in all our enterprises. Beholde also wherunto the holic scripture bringeth vs backe. Ieremie sayeth, O Lord, I know that the waye of man is not in his owne power, neyther is it in man to walke and direct his owne steps. This is as much

Lev. 10. d. 23. to saye, as a man taketh too muche vpon him, when hee purposeth to dispose of his owne lyfe. Let vs vnderstand then, that it is Gods will to humble vs, in as much as he shutteth our eyes, so as we see not what must become of vs, and wee know not to daye what wee haue to doo to morowe. but God intertayneth vs by the day lyke iourneymen (as men terme them) after the maner of a hyreling, who being waged for a daye, woteth not who shall set him a worke the next morowe. Beholde howe God will haue vs to liue, to the ende wee should learne to depend wholly vpon hym, saying: True it is Lord, that my lyfe is frayle, but yet thou knowest what shal betyde me, thou hast forseene it Lorde, and therefore I put my selfe into thyne hande. I haue many cares too tormente and trouble me, but I discharge mee of them into thy lappe: forasmuch as I am sure too be safe vnder thy protection and custodie, I holde my selfe contented.

Thus we see how it behoueth vs to deale: And when we haue this sayd Prouidence of God thoroughly imprinted in our harts, so as we can depend wholly vpon it: although wee be turmoyled with manie troubles in thys worlde, yet we see a good foundation that will make vs to stand steadie and constant in our calling, to serue God according to his will all the dayes of our lyfe. Then let vs learne to settle our selues vpon the sayde prouidence of God: and when we see things so shuffled together in the worlde, as wee knowe not on which syde to turne vs, we may not therfore cease to be apeaceable and quiet, assuring our selues that God ordereth and guydeth all things in luche wise, as there is nothing that can hinder the welfare of the faithfull, seing that he hath once taken them into his protection.

Thus we see what wee haue to marke in this strayne: Now in the ende Iob addeth, that he hath no rest, and that he is in beauiuse before he take his repast: and yet notwithstanding (sayeth he) I haue not behaued my self heretofore as moste men doo: I haue not settled my self in my prosperitie, but I haue continually feared the miserie that is come vpon mee. Let vs mark then this complaynt of Iobs.

For on the one side it sheweth, that his miserie was extreme: and therewithall (sayeth hee) what is the cause why GOD handleth mee so? For when God threateneth menne, he sayeth: Forasmuche as thou hast made thy selfe drunken in thyne own pleasures: forasmuch as thou hast ben as it were blynded by them: forasmuch as thou wast so altered when I didde thee good, that thou hast not knowne me: thou maist see wherfore I intend to punish thee. And God sheweth precisely that he cannot away with this fleshly selfeloue which is in me. For whē they wene that they shall alwayes haue ease at will, and when they shal say peace, and al is safe: behold a sodain storme shal ouerthrow them, which they for saw not afore had. VVc see then how god punisheth this presumption and rashnesse that is in men, who whyle they bee in prosperitie, beleue they shall dwell in it for euer, and in the meane season consider not, that they are in the hand of God, nor think vpon their owne fraytie. But God cannot abyde that, for when we be at our ease, we must referre all vnto God, and therewithall prepare ourselues to be afflicted when it shall please him, and in such maner as he knoweth to be expedient. So then, for asmuche as God threateneth those that are blynded after that maner in their pleasures: Iob beholding himself so sore tormented and afflicted, was amazed at it, because he had not at any tyme sotted himself in his abundance, but had alwayes fore mistrusted the mischief that was now lyghted vpon him, and had not borne himself in hand that he should from thensforth continue in the ease and prosperitie that God had set him in, like them that think no more of their mortall lyfe, when God hathe once aduanced them aboue others. He sayeth he had continually thought afore hand on the miseries that might happen vnto him. How then hapned it that he was so ouertaken? Although this thing cannot now be discourfed at length: yet may we gather therby in one word, that in asmuch as Iob (who had alwayes put himself in a redinesse to indure the aduersitie that God should send vnto him) was ouertaken with such anguish and so greate: it standeth vs on hand to looke to haue much woofse, according to our deserts. And if God spare vs and hold vs vp for a tyme, let vs not therevpon conceyue any vayne and fond imaginacion, to think that no aduersitie can touche vs. For if we think so, God must wake vs vp in good earnest, and shew what power and authoritie he hath ouer vs. VVhat must we then do? we must be vigilant to keepe good watch, and specially whē 10 God handleth vs gently, so as we susteyne no aduersitie: yet notwithstanding we must haue an eye to that which may betyde vs, after the example of Iob. For if the miserie that he misdoubted, lighted vpon him, we may be sure we are not sharper sighted than hee was, to foresee a farre off the incōueniences that may hit vpon vs. Also when we be false into them, let vs not therefore cease to resort to our God. For we see how God hath ayded his seruant in the ende? And although he seemed to be plunged into the gulfe of hell: yet notwithstanding God reached him his hande, and therefore let vs also hope for the like towards our selues.

himself

Now lette vs pray this good God, that it may please him to open our eyes, that wee maye the better knowe what is needefull for vs, and that when wee see too howe many wantes and myseries wee bee subiecte in this worlde, we may learne to sigh and grone: and specially that forasmuch as we be hild here in the bondage of sinne, so as we can not serue our God in full libertie, we may long for the kingdome of heauen, where wee shall haue full perfection and enioyement of the graces, wherof we haue but a tast in this world: and also where wee shall be ioyned to our heade Iesus Christ, to reygne with him in euerlasting glorie. That it maye please him to graunt this grace not only too vs, but also too all people and nations of the world, bringing backe. &c.

The fourteenth Sermon, which is the first vpon the fourth Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth still the Exposition of the two last verses of the thirde Chapter, and then the fourth chapter as followeth.

1. Eliphaz the Themanite answered and sayd.
2. If a man assay to talke, shall it grieue thee? And vvho can holde himself from speaking?
3. Behold, thou hast taught many, and thou hast strengthened the vvearie handes.
4. By thy wordes thou haste stayed them vp that vvere falling, thou hast strengthened the weake and trembling knees.
5. But novve that the euil is come vpon thee, thou art out of quiet: and novve that it hath touched thee, thou art astonyed.
6. Is not this thy feare, thy trust, thy hope, and the vprightnesse of thy vvayes?

VPon Iobs talke which we treated of yesterday, ther remaineth to vnderstand, that whē we be in prosperitie we cannot hope that God wil continue it for the tyme to come, nor let vs be in rest still. For Iob semeth 40 to meene, that the faithful must alwayes stand in dout, and that they must thinke that the thing which they hold with the one hand, shal be forthwith taken away in the other. Herevpon wee note, that we must not imagine more than God promiseth vs. For it is a vayne and fonde presumption, when men behight them selues that thing which God leaueth them in dout of. And therefore God punisheth such maner of ouerweening, when we imagin what wee liste, and write vpon it that it shal be so. God will not haue vs to haue any other leaning stock than his woord, which is the assured truthe that can not ly. Therefore whensoever men presume vpon themselves, there is nothing but vanitie and leasing, and it is no wonder though they be disapoynted of their purpose. For our Lord hath good reason to mocke them, when they passe mesure after that fashiō. And so must we hold this for a generall rule, that our trust must be settled wholly vpon Gods promises. And now lette vs consider what God promiseth. He sayeth that if he haue thought vpon vs to day, he wil not forget vs any more to morow 50 but we shal be helped by his hand all the tyme of our life. Behold what his promise is. Then may we wel assure our selues, that God will always kepe vs, and that by meanes thereof we shal not be in daunger of falling into decaye. But yet herewithal we must make our account to be subiect to manie inconueniences. For our Lord sayeth not that he will keepe vs shut vp in a mew, so as wee shall see no aduersitie, nor be acquainted with any trouble, but be in continuall ioy and felicitie: hee promiseth vs no such matter: but only that hee will ayde and succour vs in all our necessities. VVherfore it behoueth vs to vnderstand, that God will exercise vs in manie aduersities, and that we be subiect to the common afflictions of this presente lyfe: and that in the meane season it oughte to suffice vs that we shall be ayded by him, and that we shal not be vtterly forsaken. Seing the case standeth so, wee perceyue verie well, that we must not sleepe when we be in prosperitie, as though this state of ours were euerlasting, so as nothing coulde change it. And therefore in presuming so farre, we step beyond our boundes: and why so? For God telleth vs that wee may peradventure suffer manie aduersities: but he will helpe vs continually. Nowe then, in the meane whyle we shall fight, yea and be assayed on all sides. And therefore those that passe their boundes in suche wise, shall be punished for their ouerhardinesse, as I haue sayd alreadie. At a woorde, the faythfull may euer be in doubt, and yet neuer cease to be in quiet. How so? For when we consider the chaunges and turnoylings of this worlde: wee must needes be afrayde and careful, and euery of vs must prepare himself to receiue blowes, when it shall please God to smyte him. But yet heerewithal wee knowe, that in oure falling we can not lyghte otherwyse than vpon our feete, bicause we be hilde vp by the hande of God: nor bee vtterly oppressed, bycause hee releueth vs. VVee see then how we can not bee vexed with ouergreat vnquietnesse, and yet wee may bee sore greued in our heauinesse, not to withdrawe oure selues from God, and to make no accompt of calling vpon him, but to haue our recourse vnto him. To be short, there is great diuersitie betweene the carelesnesse wherunto we be inclined by nature, according to the disposition of our fleshe, and the assurednesse that we haue by resting oure selues selues vpon Gods promises. For when we haue the sayd fleshly presumptuousnesse, it is like a certaine drunkennesse, which maketh vs blockishe, so as we haue no re-garde of God nor of his helpe, making oure reckening that all shall go well with vs though he nother looke to vs, nor thinke vpon vs. But if we rest vpon Gods worde:

 we will call vpon him, and we will looke about vs on all sides, and consider that oure life is a thing of nothing, that our state is wretched, that death manaceth vs on all sides, and that we be hemmed in with infinite miseries. 10
 Heere vpon wee pray vnto God, and make our moane vnto him: and yet neuerthelesse, if it please him too punishe vs, wee are readie to receyue his strypes with all meekenesse: Loe howe wee ought to deale. But there is yet more: which is, that the faythfull man must enter intoo himselfe, acknowledge his sinnes, and consider that he giueth continually newe occasion why God shoulde iustly punishe him. So then, although wee bee promised that God will mainteyne vs in this worlde, as though wee were brooded vnder his wings, so as we shal 20 bee there in peace and without any disquiemesse: yet doo our sinnes cause him to chastize vs, and to shewe some roughnesse towards vs. God can not abyde too suffer vs to runne so into decay: and if he shoulde leaue vs after that sort at randon without anie chastizement, it woulde bee oure vtter vndoing. If earthly fathers marre their children when they cocker them too much:
 it is certaine that we shoulde bee much more marred, if God shoulde not chastize vs and shewe some signe of roughnesse towards vs. For as experience sheweth, 30 we abuse his goodnesse in all respectes. The faythfull therefore, acknowledging themselues to offende God without ceasing, must also beare in minde, that hee hath rodde in a readinesse too beate them for their sinnes, and that eyther too day or to morrow hee can chaunge
 the prosperitie which they presently enioy, and there-vpon deale rigorously with them. So then let vs marke, that we must not sleepe after such a sort, but that when God mainteyneth vs heere in quietnesse, wee must also 40
 haue an eye to that which may betide vs, and be alwayes readie to receyue the afflictions that hee shall sende vs.
 Nowe let vs come to that which is reported heere: that is to wit, that Eliphaz the Themanite one of Iobs friendes that came to cōfort him, is entred into talke agaynst him.
 For he telleth him in effect, how he seeth to wel, that the feare of God & the purenesse which he seemed to haue in outward appearance, was but hypocrisie bicause he delt so farre out of square, & could not patiently receyue the correction that God sent him. But anon after he entreth yet further: that is to wit, that of force it must needs 50 be that Iob is a reprobate, considering that God handleth him so roughly. And why so? for the good men are neuer smitten with such extremitie. Lo heere the first ground that this Eliphaz taketh to reason vpon agaynst Iob.
 But we must bethinke vs of that which I haue declared heeretofore: which is, that Iob hath a good case, but hee handleth it verie yll: and that his countercompanions haue an yll case, and handle it verie well: according as some tymes a man may set a fayre colour vpon an euill matter, and so doo they. It standeth vs 60 in hande to marke this: for otherwise all the talke that is rehearsed too vs here, will bee confused. Iob (as I haue sayde) hath a good case. For hee acknowledgeth that it is God whiche scourgeth him: and although he account hymselfe woorthie of such corrections in as much as hee is a sinner, yet notwithstanding he is fullie perswaded that God looketh not at that,
 and that his sending of so great aduersities vnto him,

is not in respecte of his sinnes, but for some other secrete cause whereof he is not priuie. In the meane while he shutteth his mouth, and sayth that hee can win nothing by pleading agaynst God. Yet ceaseth he not to vse much wandring talke: And that is the cause why I sayde that he handled a good case amisse. But they that visite him doo take an vntue principle: which is, that God doth alwayes deale with men in this earthly life, according to their desertes. This saying is vtterly false: for we see the plaine contrarie, and the scripture sheweth it vs, and experience serueth vs for another proufe of it. But yet the case so standeth, as in the meane season they that say so, ceasse not to alleage good & holy reasons, whereoutof wee also may gather good and profitable doctrine. Howbeit for the better vnderstanding of the whole, let vs call to remembrance howe it is sayde in the Psalme. Blessed is the man that consid-reth aright of him that is smitten: that is to say which 10 iudgeth discretely of him that is afflicted. And what manner of wisdom is that? It is too thinke that God will deliuer him in the time of aduersitie. Thus we see what the holy ghost requireth of vs, if we will not bee rashe iudges, and turne all Gods woorkes vpside downe.
 VVhen wee see poore men beaten that they can beare
 no more: wee must vnderstande that God is so merci-full, as he will succour them: and that it is not to be sayd, that he meeneth to destroy them vtterly. To bee short, if we will bee discrete iudgers of the chastizements and corrections that God sendeth vpon men: wee must wayte for the ende of them: and we must not bee ouerhasty to giue sentence at the first dash: but we must stay our selues, and marke what it pleaseth God to do. And according as he sayeth that his displeasure is short, and 20 that his mercie lasteth vnto life: wee must encline our selues to wayte on the hitherside, that is to wit, to hope well, and to wayte for a good and happie issue. Thus we see what we haue to marke. But Iobs friendes remembered not that, and that was the cause why they ouershot themselues. They see Iob smitten with extremitie, and thereupon conclude, that God ment to shewe in him an example of a reprobate person, and that those thinges had not happened vnto him, if he had not beene a wicked and vngracious person. And why so? for they conceuyed not that which the scripture sheweth vs: namely how it is the propertie of God to succour those that are his, when they be in distresse. And the scripture telleth vs, not onely that God aydeth the afflicted, but also 30 that he draweth those out of their graues, which seeme to bee alreadie deade. Although then that our afflictions bee great and excessiue, yet muste wee still hope for Gods helpe, which doubtlesse will bee beyonde all the opinion of man, and beyonde all the meanes that we can conceyue. And it is not in this Text onely that the Scripture speaketh so: but it is a doctrine verie ryfe through out. It is sayde that the righteous man 40 not onely shall bee shaken, but also that hee shall fall seuentymes a day. Then may wee fall many tymes:
 but yet shall Gods hande bee readie to holde vs vp, so as our fallings shall not bee deadly, at leastwyse not too broose vs so sore, but that God shall deliuer vs. Be-holde howe the Scripture speaketh. True it is that there bee diuerse promyses wherby it seemeth that God maketh a difference of his owne children from the reprobates and dispysers of hys woorde: as when hee sayeth, that the hardhearted man shall bee ta- 50 med by force of strypes lyke a Mule or a restye horse, and that GOD will not ceasse too beate vpon them with great strokes, whiche are so rebellious

Psal. 41. 4. 6.

Psal. 30. 4. 6.

Eze. 37. d. 12

Pro. 24. l. 16

Psal. 32. c. 9.

lious and sturdie agaynst him : and contrariwise that such as trust in him shall be hedged in with mercy, that is too say, that God wil on al sides blesse them and make them too prosper. VVee see heere a princely promise, whiche seemeth to exempt Gods children from all aduerfities.

Pfal. 30. a. 4 But yet it behoueth vs so to expound these sayd promises, as we haue an eye to that which is sayde, howe God will be knowen to bee the preseruer of his seruauents, by drawing them from their graue. So then, if God hedge vs in with his mercy, it is not to make vs cockneys, so as no aduerfity should touche vs, so as we should not be needy, so as we should feele no scarfitie, or so as we should neuer haue any greefe : God mindeth not to vse suche manner of dealing : for it is not conuenient for vs. But he will haue vs too passe through fire and water (that is too say, through all kinde of miseries) and too bee so distressed, as wee wote not where too become. And heere-vpon he will remedie our necessities, to the ende we may knowe howe it is he too whom wee bee beholding for our welfare. Thus wee see after what maner our Lorde worketh. Also let vs note, that too iudge wel, it behoueth too beare this poynt alwayes in minde : that is too wit, not onely that God punisheth such as are the worst fort, but also that he exerciseth the pacience of his saythfull ones, scourging them and handling them farre more roughly than he dothe the wicked. To bee shorte, let vs alwayes haue an eye too the issue, as I haue sayde, and let vs not maruell though we see not Gods helpe at the first day. Lo heere the principle which wee muist lay before vs, that we may knowe howe to make our owne profite by that whiche is recited to vs heere. As touching the words that Eliphaz vseth, they bee these : If a man attempt talke, or If a man rayse talke : for as well the one as the other may be spoken, bicause the Hebrue word hath a double signification. And forasmuche as the Hebrue worde which is put heere for talke or speeche, is sometimes taken also for a thing : Some vnderstande it thus : If God tempt thee, is it meete that thou shouldest bee so farre out of pacience ? Is it meete that thou shouldest be so fore moued ? For wee knowe that the Scripture termeth it a temptaçon, when wee bee troubled, and when God trieth vs after what maner so euer it bee. So then, the meening shoulde bee suche as this : is it meete that thou shouldest repine agaynst God, when thou seeest that he trieth and tempteth thee ? that is to say, when thou seeest that he mindeth too proue what is in thee ? But if al things bee thoroughly considered : the naturall meening is, If a man assay or attempt too speake. And why so ? For Eliphaz addeth immediatly, And who is he that can withhold him selfe from speaking? As if he should say, thou art so farre out of square agaynst all reason, that men muist needs finde faulte with thee, and there is not the myldest man in the worlde, but he should bee constrained to rebuke thee, if he sawe thy outragiousnesse and thy behauing of thy selfe heere like a sauage beaft. Therefore thou muist bee restrayned, for thou wouldest inforce the meekest man aliue too speake. Lo heere the playne meening. But in effect Eliphazs minde is, too shewe that Iob hathe not walked aright, nor with a cleere conscience before God. Lo heere the first poynt. Afterwarde he entreth into this general argument which I haue touched : that is to wit, that the righteous are neuer oppressed in that wise with affliction : but that it is alwayes a token of Gods vengeance. And therefore when he perceyued that Iob was tormented in this wise, he deemed him too bee a reprobate person. Thus yee see the two poyntes. And nowe let vs come vnto the first of them. He sayth vnto him, Thou becretofore haste taughte the whole worlde, thou haste strengthened the quivering knees. Thou haste refreshed the weery bandes, thou haste amended suche as dyd amyffe, thou haste comforted suche as were tormented : and nowe when the miserie is come vpon thy selfe, I see thou arte out of quiet : and therefore I conclude, that the feare of God whiche thou haste had, was no more but the very same hope whiche thou pretendest : namely, that God shoulde alwayes haue bene fauorable vnto thee. Too bee shorte, thou haste serued God vpon vsurie. It was not for that thou diddest giue ouer thy selfe vnto him in good earnest, but in respect that thou diddest hope he woulde alwayes haue bene mercifull vnto thee, and so long thou couldest well finde in thine heart too scrue him, but nowe that thou feelest him somewhat rough, thou renoucest his seruice. VVhereby it is to bee perceyued, that there was nothing else but hypocrisie in thee. Thus wee see in effecte, the whole groud of the discourse that Eliphaz maketh here. But true it is, that wee marke not what is in our selues, when wee eyther counsell other men, or comfort them, or rebuke them. Euery man can doo that : yea euen the moste idiots. For (as it is sayde in a common prouerbe) it is easie for them that are in health, too comfort suche as are diseased. But if wee can shewe by oure owne dooings, that the thing whiche wee speake vnto others is in our selues, and that wee speake it from the heart : that is a true prooffe that wee deale not deceitfully. VVee shall see diuers that are as eloquent, and more eloquent than needeth, and whiche can babble so well too the purpose as yee woulde wonder, and they neuer want tongue, if it bee but too prattie. But if it happen that God doo but fillip them with his fingers ende, they wote not what comforte or any thing else meeneth. VVhat is too bee done then ? VVhen wee speake too our neighbours, let vs shewe vnto them, that the thing whiche wee speake vnto them with our mouth, is thoroughly grounded in our harts. Thus we see how we ought to procede. Yet is it not met hereby, that we should cease to comfort and incorage our neighbors, and to reproue one another. For they that passe not to chastize such as do amisse, and to cofort such as are in heauinesse, and to reforme such as go astray : shew theselues to haue no care, neither of God, nor of his seruice. For if we loue God with a right affection : it is certayne that (as muche as in vs lieth) we will seeke that all men may do the like. A true Christian will not content him selfe too walke aright : but he wil [doo his best] too drawe the whole worlde to the same accorde. And therefore it behoueth vs to put that thing in vre, which S. Paule also sheweth vs, 1. Tbes. 5. b. 11. of teaching and reforming one another : but (as I sayd) we muist do it frõ our hart. And how is that ? Verily that whẽ it shal come to the trial, we may shew in very deede that we haue not spoken frõ the teeth outwarde, but that the word whiche issued out of our mouthe, is thoroughly rooted in our hart. But here we see what the vse of Gods word is : namely not only to teach and too shew what is good : but also to correct such as haue done amisse, to rebuke such as deale disorderly, and to strẽgthen the weak, the feeble, and those that are of small corage. And therefore the prophet Esay auoucheth, that it belongeth too the charge of all Prophetes, all teachers of the Church, and all such as haue charge to beare abrode the worde of God : not onely to vtter that which is commanded them to speake, (wee may see heere what God will haue declared vnto vs) but also too haue the cheerefulness too spurre and pricke forwarde them that are lazie, too giue corage too the weake, too lifte vp them that are false, and too bring backe them that stray, into the right way.

Thus

2.Tim.3.d.16.

Psal.19.c.11.

Heb.12.d.10.
Esa.35.a.3.

Thus ye see what is the true vse of Gods worde: namely that it is the way, as well too instruct men aright, as also too shewe the effectualnesse of the Gospell, according also as when S. Paule telleth vs howe wee must apply the holy scripture too our instruction, he sayth, that it serueth not onely to knowe what is good, and too discerne betweene good and euill: but also too exhorte, too reprove, and too conuince vs. And heereby wee must bee the more prouoked too receyue Gods worde desirously, and with a cheerefull and louing affection, forso-
 10 muche as wee see howe all that belongeth too our welfare is comprehended therein. God then not onely bringeth vs that whiche is for our behoofe too knowe: but also forasmuche as he seeth our frayltie, he intendeth to remedie it, and will haue his word to serue to strengthen vs: and forasmuch as he seeth we be brittle and in daunger too fall, he setteth vs vp agayne anone after: and forasmuche as he seeth vs inclined too hypocrisie, and too soothe our selues in our owne vices: he spurreth vs, too the ende wee may perceyue our owne euils, and not
 20 delight in them. Seeing then that wee perceyue howe God hath so well provided for all things which he knoweth too bee behoofesfull, as he will haue his worde too serue vs throughly in that behalfe: ought not wee to be the more inflamed to receyue the same worde? Seeing wee perceyue it too bee suche a treasure, ought wee not (I say) too receyue it with a cheerefull minde? considering howe it is sweeter than hony, as it is sayde in the nyneteenth Psalme. Also when wee heare the worde of God: it standeth vs in hande too knowe wherefore.
 30 There are that would haue a man too doo nothing else but say, Beholde what wee haue too marke vpon this text: and that man should make colde expositions, and that there shoulde bee no exhortations, no rebuking of vices, nor liuelynesse. Yea, but that were as muche as to deface the doctrine of God, as if a man should cut a sunder the sinewes of a body, that it might haue no more strength in it. VVhat is too bee done then? VVhen wee come too a sermon, or when any man readeth alone by him selfe, wee must vnderstande, that it is Gods intent, 40 not onely too shewe vs what is good, as if he should say, go on that way: but also too rebuke our sinnes in vs, that it may bee as a messenger too picke vs forward too learne too humble our selues before him. Is it euen so? Then let vs marke also howe sluggish wee bee, and that wee hye vs not vnto him with suche zeale as were requisite, insomuche that he is fayne too giue vs some strokes of the spurre too quicken vs vp, and all his exhortations serue too humble vs, and too make vs too submit our selues frankly to his will. Thus we see howe we ought to 50 deale to make the worde of God to serue to our vse, and in what wise we ought too put it in vre. Aboue all, they that are cheefe in this charge must marke well, that they bee not quite discharged when they haue saythfully informed the people what is good: but also that they must haue the foresayde liuelynesse of encoraging them, too the intent that suche as are dul, may be somewhat quickned: and of comforting suche as are in distresse, too the intent they may finde reliefe in God: and of rebuking suche as delight in their owne vices, too spurre them in 60 suche wise as they may be abashed and ashamed in them selues. And like as the ministers and teachers must apply these things to all men openly: so must euery one of vs apply it to himselfe, following that whiche the Apostle sayth in the Epistle to the Hebrues: for in alleaging the saying of the prophet Esay, he sayth wee must not tarry till others speake to vs, but euery one of vs must bee a scholemaster to him selfe. As if he should say, Beholde

how that vnto al such as are appoynted to carry abroade Gods worde in his name, the Prophet Esay giueth commandement to comfort the trembling knees, to stay vp the handes of suche as faynt, to relecue suche as are oppressed, and too pull them backe into the righte pathe, which are gone astray. But yet neuerthelesse my freends (sayth he) marke howe euery one of you also is bounde to succour him that is weake and feeble, to cherishe him that is weery and out of heart, to comforte them that are oppressed with sorrowe, and (to be short) to imploy him selfe in that which he knoweth to bee meete and expedient for the welfare of his neighbours: and finally, that euery one of vs must do the duetie of a preacher towards him selfe. Lo what we haue to marke in this text. And whereas recorde is giuen vnto Job, that he had instructed many. Heere is shewed vs, first the excellent vertue that was in him. And wee must also take instruction by it to doo the like: that is to wit, to drawe all men with vs (as 10 muche as in vs lyeth) to serue God with one common consent. True it is, that all men are not indewed with so great giftes: but yet must euery man consider his owne measure, and imploy him selfe according as God hath giuen him abilitie towards his neighbours. Therefore wee must vnderstande, that whatsoeuer God hath imprinted in eche of vs for the common buylding vp of his Church, wee must discharge our selues of it, and according to the giftes that euery of vs hath receyued, so must he profite others, and all of vs must communicate together, that wee may go to God with one accorde, and euery man shewe openly that he hath a desire to serue
 20 his neighbours turne. But nowe let vs come to the conclusion that Eliphaz maketh. Forasmuche (sayth he) as thou art out of pacience when the aduersitie is come vpon thee: it must needes be sayde, that thou hast bene but an hypocrite, and that the feare which thou hast had, was but a hope and a looking that God should alwayes fauour thee. Verily had Job bene suche a one as Eliphaz surmizeth him to bee, his saying had bene true. For (as I haue touched afore) the marke too knowe hypocrites 30 by, is when they can babble to teache others, and shewe not in dede that their doctrine serueth their owne turne: and when they haue a fayre vtterance, but keepe nothing within to serue their owne turne at their neede. Then let vs learne to bee euery man his owne scholemaster and teacher: And if we minde to profite our neighbours by this doctrine: let euery one of vs beginne with it at him selfe. And whereas Eliphaz dothe Job wrong, in saying that he founde him astonished, as though there had bene nother wit nor reason in him: wee perceyue thereby, that to humble vs therewith, God may well suffer vs to be so delte withall: but yet wee muste also 40 presuppose, that whatsoeuer temptations happen too Gods children, they shall neuer vtterly decay, but God will succour them in suche wise, as they shall haue wherewith too stablishe and strengthen themselues, notwithstanding that of nature they bee so feeble and weake, as euen to stumble without ablenesse to rise agayne, were it not that God reached out his hande vnto them. Then let vs vnderstande, that when wee haue taughte other
 50 men, and wrought wonders, in reprobuing the sturdie and wilfull sorte, in reforming those that went astray, and in strengthening suche as are fayntharted: wee shall bee so muche the more blameable and worthy too bee condemned, if wee shewe not by our owne doings, that wee spake it from our harte and earnestly. The greater then shall the damnation of those bee, who hauing medled with teaching of others, doo themselues take no profite at all by the doctrine. And this ought well too make vs
 60 too

to walke in feare and humblenesse. Therefore when it commeth to the cace of instructing, let vs thinke thus: True it is that God will haue me serue my neighbours turnes. But so it is that I must be mine owne iudge: I carie abrode his woorde, and therefore I must teache mine owne selfe. Otherwise, if I frame not my life according to that which I speake and vtter with my mouth, it will be to my great and horrible confusion. About all men, the ministers of the Gospell must well consider this. Here we see also why Sainct Paule sayeth, that he blamed and condemned himselfe, to the ende he might be the first in the ranke, when the condemning of others shal come in question. To be brief, we that haue the charge to beare about the woorde of God, shall be so muche the more blame worthy, though wee haue faithfully taught that which God himself hath shed out vpon vs by the gift of his holy spirit, if we haue not begonne to shew the same at our owne persons. And so, must we amend others: Let vs first amende our selues. Muste wee exhort others? Lette vs first exhort our selues, and lette vs alwayes bee the first in leading of the daunce. Specially when we rebuke such as haue done amisse, let vs praetyze that which Sainct Paule sayeth, that is to wit: let vs vse all softnesse in reproving them that haue done amisse. And that it is so, looke vpon thy selfe (sayeth he:) and if thou finde thy self frayle, then must thou beare with thy neighbours, and yet in the meane while the same must not hinder the liuely admonishments which God inioyneth vs. Thus wee see what we haue to gather, that we may profit our selues by this text: [that is to wit,] that as oft as it shall please God to correct vs, (after what maner so euer it be) wee muste shewe, that when we be desirous to comfort other men that are in liketroubles, we haue bene good and faithfull teachers towards our selues. As concerning the sentence where it is sayd, Vvas not thy feare then a counterfetnesse? were not thy hope and the simplicitie of thy wayes [to likewise]: Here Eliphaz meeneth to shewe Iob, that he had bene an hypocrite, and had not serued God but for desire to seeme and to be seene. And certaine it is, that if we serue not God, (yea though we feare that we shall haue him against vs:) it is but a slauishe maner of seruice. For God will not haue vs to be as hyrelings in seruing him: but he will haue vs to go to it with a free courage, and to be so wholly giuen vnto him, as we may say, Lord, we be thine, and reason it is that euery one of vs shoulde dedicate himselfe vnto thee, and labour to glorifie thy name. VVe see then how we ought to haue a free harte in ser-

uing of God, and not be led to it by slauishe constraint. True it is that in some other textes it is rightly sayde, that we may well serue God, considering that we shall not be disappointed of our labour, according as it is sayd in the ninetenth Psalm, and in other like places. But all this doth easly agree together, that is to wit, that in seruing of God we muste be led with a free minded affection: and yet neuerthelesse must assure our selues, that God wil not suffer our labour to be vnprofitable, according also as Sainct Paule speaketh. God (sayeth he) is righteous, who promisseth that your traueling shall not be in vayne, so as it should bee losse labour when you bee so persecuted. The holy Scripture is full of this doctrine, and specially it is sayd in effect, that suche as truste in God shall not loze their rewarde. Then as touching the first poynt wee may well haue an eye too the promisses that God hath made vs, namely that wee shall not loze our labour in seruing him, nor be disappointed of our longing, but that our rewarde is greate in heauen: and yet notwithstanding that in the meane time the seruice that wee do vnto God, muste bee free harted: that is to wit, that when soeuer it pleaseth him to plague vs, wee muste not therefore cease to continue our obedience towards him, and to walke in his feare, as well as when he dealt gently with vs, and mainteyned vs in good plight. And in doing hereof yee see how wee must not looke too haue a hyrelings rewarde, to say, O I will serue God condicionally that he deale with me after mine owne desire. If wee come too this point, it is no seruing of God after the maner of children: but after the maner of those that bee hyred for wages by the day. VVhat is to bee done then? we must haue a freeharted affection too dedicate our selues wholly vnto God and to giue our selues wholly to the seruing of him, yea euen as well in wo as in weale: being well assured that our labour shall not be disappointed, when wee shall haue proceeded in such simplicitie. But for asmuch as this matter can not bee layde forth at length as now: wee will keepe the rest till to morrow.

Now let vs humble our selues in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him too make vs vnderstande them better, that wee may dislyke them, and seeke the remedies which he offereth vs, to the ende they may bee corrected, and therewithall guyde vs in suche wise in this worlde, as we may desire nothing but too please him in all points and all respects, and to follow his holy commaundements. And so let vs all say, Almighty God our heauenly father, &c.

The fifteenth Sermon, which is the second vpon the fourth Chapter.

This Sermon contayneth yet still the exposition of the sixth verse, and then afterward as foloweth.

7. Consider I pray thee, vvhoe euer perished being an innocent? or vvhoe haue the vpright bene destroyed?
8. As I haue seene, they that plough vnrighteousnesse, and sowe in comberance, gather the same.
9. They perished vwith the blast of God, and vvere consumed vwith the breath of his mouth.
10. The roring of the Lyon, the noyze of the Libarde, and the teeth of the Lyons vvhelpe are dispatched.
11. The Lyon perisheth for vvant of pray, and the Lyonesses vvhelpe are chased avway.

First and formost wee haue to beare in minde what was declared yesterday: whiche is, that to serue God aright, wee muste bee ledde by a freeharted affectiō, to giue our selues vnto him without hauing any respect of being well intreated at his hande afterward, or that he will sende vs our owne hartes desire. For as for those that will so indent with God to receyue at Gods hande what soeuer they themselves desire: firste they shewe themselves too be ouer-fleshy, and to muche giuen to their lustes: and secondly they woulde binde God after a very straunge fashion, and behaue not themselves as children towards their father.

E.

father. For they bee driuen by a slauishe respect, they bee hyrelinges, and wagismen. VVhat muste wee doo then? Referring our selues to Gods good pleasure, wee muste haue suche a constancie in vs, as too honour him bothe in woo and weale, and too desire too bee his, and too continue in the obeying of him, what soeuer hee doo too vs, or how soeuer he dispose of vs. If wee bee not of this minde, all the seruice we can doo him shall like him neuer a whit, notwithstanding that it bee neuer so well liked and esteemed of the worlde. And therefore lette vs not referre our fearing and reuerencing of God, too the ende that wee would haue him doo what wee liste. But although he be rough and sharpe towards vs, so as it may sometimes seeme that he would thunder vpon vs: yet neuerthelesse lette vs abyde still in awe, and say: Lorde it is reason that thou shouldest raigne ouer thy creatures. Also it is not for the childe to commaunde his father, nor too binde him too the stake, but too say: Here I am Sir, gouerne you mee according too your good pleasure, for I protest I desire nothing but too bee subiect vnto you. Behold what wee haue to doo. But surely wee knowe well inough, that (as the Scripture sheweth vs) it is not losse labour to serue God, for he hath promised vs a plentifull rewarde, and wee shall not bee disappoynted of our expectation. But yet muste the sayde freeharted affection go before it, that we make not any bargayning with God too say he is bound to vs according too our appetites, and that he muste of necessitie graunt vs what soeuer wee haue imagined in our owne brayne. Lo howe Gods seruaunts knowing that their seruice is acceptable, and that it shall not bee vnprofitable, doo notwithstanding not reeste themselues vpon the rewarde that is promised them: much lesse then muste they intend too bring God too the bente of their bowe, or too taske him of necessitie too doo this or that: but muste with all lowlinesse referre themselues wholly in all things too his pleasure. And whereas I speake here of rewarde: I debate not whither rewarde bee dewe vnto vs or no, for as nowe wee stande not vpon that matter. VVhen wee haue done all that is possible too be done, God shall be neuer a whit in our debte. But when he promiseth vs rewarde: I vnderstande it too bee of freegift, and that it is not for that wee haue deserued it, or for that wee bee woorthie of it: but bycause that as he hath receyued vs into his fauour, so will he also allowe of our woorkes, yea, whiche he himselfe dothe by his holye spirite. For as touching goodnesse there is none in vs, and yet looke what God hath giuen vs, he accepteth it as if we brought it to him of our owne. And when he receyueth our woorkes so of his owne mere goodnesse, it is too giue vs the better courage too serue him by hauing an eye too his promises, wherein he protesteth vnto vs, that our rewarde is greate in heauen, yea and that he will blisse vs in this worlde also, so as wee shall not want any thing at all. Then may wee cast our eyes herevpon, and comfort our selues: but herewithall (as I haue sayde) wee muste not reckon that God shoulde deale with vs after our owne deuyce: but rather determine with our selues too referre the matter wholly vnto him, and too submitte our selues wholly too his good wil. Thus wee see the doctrine that wee haue too gather of this texte, whiche is very profitable for vs. For it is a marke whereby too discernne Hypocrytes from Gods children. An Hipocryte may well magnifie God with full mouthe in time of prosperitie. But if the worlde go against his desire, a man shall see that all is chaunged with him. And what is the cause of it? It is for that suche maner of menne beare no reue-rence too Godwarde, further foorth than he applieth himselfe vnto them. And what kinde of reuerence is that? If I bee minded too serue mine owne turne by one: very well, bycause I can drawe profite out of him, I will make good countenance too him: but if he perceyue it, he will shake me off like a villaine, and he serues mee but well. Nowe if mortall menne can not beare suche carlishnesse: what shall become of vs when wee come vnto God? shall wee loue him, or shall wee honour him, but onely so farre foorth as may bee for our owne profite? what a mockerie is that? See wee not how the order of nature is peruerted? But if there bee true friendship betweene vs and any manne: wee will honor him for his vertues whiche wee knowe to bee in him, and too the ende wee may liue together in one common accorde too serue God. I say that when God giueth vs suche markes, wee may well serue and honour a man. So then, wee may well haue this regarde too creatures whiche are nothing. But as touching God, he muste bee honored for his owne sake, bicause he deserueth it: and wee muste bee so rauished to the honoring of him, as wee may not thinke of our selues, sauing as in second place and in inferiour degree. VVee may see then how the hypocrites bewray themselues by repnyng against God in the time of aduersitie, and when he handleth them not after their owne fansie.

And for asmuch as moste men are giuen to this vice: wee see there is cause, why wee ought to marke this lesson the better. And nowe Eliphaz addeth: Consider if euer any rightuous man haue perished, Marke if the right dealing men haue bene rooted out. Eliphaz (as I haue sayd alreadie) taketh here a good sentence, so as the reasons whiche he bringeth here against Iob are good and holie, not withstanding that the case bee euill. And surely the principles that are sette downe here, are drawne out of Gods pure truthe. By reason whereof it is as much as if the holie Ghost had pronounced this saying. That neuer any rightuous man had yet perished, and that neuer any rightdealing man had bene destroyed. Neyther coulde any suche thing happen. VVhy so? For God hath promised too haue a care of the rightuous, as it is sayde, The eyes of the Lorde are vpon the rightuous, and his eares are open too their prayers, too heare them and too succour them at their neede. The Scripture is full of this matter: that is too witte, that Gods hande is stretched out too preferue the rightuous, whiche call vpon him and put their truste in him. For needes must the Diuell haue bene stronger than God, if the rightuous might haue perished: and therefore lette vs alwayes haue recourse too this sentence of Iesus Christe. The father who hath put you into my handes is stronger than all. His meaning is, that our welfare shall neuer bee in hazarde, for so much as God taketh vs into his keeping. VVherefore? for he will spred out his power ouer vs too maynteyne vs.

Therefore let vs conclude, that our welfare is in good suretie, when God hath once taken charge of it. And so it is a sure doctrine, that the rightuous cannot perishe, nor the rightdealing menne bee rooted out. But there is greate difference betweene perishing and afflicting: for punishmentes and afflictions serue not alwayes too destroy menne, as I haue declared partly alreadie. Yet may the affliction bee so grieuous sometimes, as it will seeme that they bee deadly. VVhat is too bee done then? wee muste conclude according as I haue shewed here before, that for so muche as God chalendgeth it too bee his office to pull menne out of their graues, wee neede not doubt but that wee shall bee

Heb. 11. 6. 6.

Luke. 17. c.
10.

Matth. 5. b.
12. c. 6. d. 33
1. Tim. 4. c. 8
Psa. 34. d. 11.

Psal. 34. c. 16

Iobn. 20. f.
29.

su-

succored by him, when wee haue indured for a tyme. VVee see then that Eliphaz misapplieth his matter, as though Iob were perished already, and that God had forsaken him utterly without any remedie. But it is not so. True it is that he was a poore man altogether disfigured, irksome to beholde, and a spectacle that might shewe the wrath of God: but yet did not God cease too loue him, as wee may see, and as experience sheweth at the ende. Eliphaz therefore is preuented with a dread, whiche maketh him too misdeeme, in so muche that he leaueh no more roome for Gods mercie and meere goodnesse. Lo wherein he ouershot himselfe. Also when wee see a man in suche miserable plight, that he seemeth too bee utterly fordone, and that there is no more hope of his recouerie: lette vs learne, let vs learne (I say) too magnifie Gods goodnesse, and too hope that he can yet still remedie the mischieses that seeme incurable. True it is that too mans expectation, all may bee fordone: but God hath meanes (whiche are incomprehensible too vs) whereby to succour his seruants, when he listeth too shewe himselfe pitifull towards them. Let vs sturie his leysure till he shewe vs the ende: and in the meane while let vs suspende our iudgements, least wee be iudged to be ouerhastie and rashe. Thus we see what wee haue too marke: namely that wee muste acknowledge the power of God to be so greate, as he is able too succour those that are as it were ouerthrowen, and that he is able too quicken them againe although they were already dead. But we must not apply this doctrine onely to our neighbours: wee must also practize it eche one of vs in himselfe. And wherefore? For when God sendeth vs any great troubles: by and by wee conceyue that which is spoken here of Iob: wee neede no Eliphaz too vexee vs and too beare vs in hande that wee bee paste recouerie. There is none of vs all, that hath not the seede of hartburning in himselfe, too trouble and too martyr himselfe in his afflictions, yea euen too driue vs into despayre. Our owne nature affoordeth vs that. So then, when God scourgeth vs, wee bee troubled with suche an imaginacion as this: Howe nowe? God hath promised too succour suche as are his: and thou pynest away here, yea euen with extremitie. Thou callest vpon God, and he answereth thee not. VVhere are his promises? Thou seeest well ynough he hath shaken thee off: and therefore there is no cause why thou shouldest any more thinke, that he accounteth thee for any of his. For if thou were, it is hyge time for him too looke vpon thee and to pitie thee nowe, or neuer. But he shetteth his eyes, and makes as though he sawe thee not: and therefore thou seeest he hath utterly forsaken thee. Beholde the temptations wherevnto wee bee subiect, and which steppe before vs too driue vs utterly into despayre. So muche the more then haue wee neede to bee fensed against suche a conflict. And after what maner? It is (as I haue sayde) that when any mans minde casteth suche temptations before him, he muste answer and say: It is true that neuer righteous man yet perished: it is true that the right dealing men cannot bee rooted out: but what is this perishing? it is more than too bee onely afflicted. And wherefore? For the holy Scripture telleth vs that God rayzeth vp the dead, that he giueth courage too suche as are utterly dismayed, and that he recouereth suche as are wounded to death. VVhen the Scripture sayeth so: is it not to shewe that God vttereth his woorking towards all that are afflicted? Yes: for when it is sayde, you that are dead, you that are already rotten, lifte vp your selues, receyue yee full liuelynesse, and flourishee yee as fresh herbes: Too whome is it that Esay speaketh? It is too the faythfull. The faythfull then muste sometimes become like rotten carkeses, that God may giue them liuelynesse agayne. For as wee see the herbes too become greene in the springtime, which were as good as dead in the winter: euen so muste God worke in vs. There bee many other sentences, whiche tende vnto the selfe same ende. So then, wee perceyue that God preferueth not his seruants as one that meeneth to make them Cokneyes: but as he that mindeth too take them out of their graues, and to maynteyne them after a wonderfull fashion, too the intent they may knowe howe it is he too whome it belongeth too haue dominion ouer death, and to giue life. And therefore wee haue a warrant, that the issues of death are in Gods hande. Beholde here a notable promise. VVhen Dauid intendeth too shewe vs howe it is God that guydeth vs: he sayeth that the issues or outgoings of death belong vnto him. And why is that? He meeneth that wee bee as it were thrown headlong into death at euery blowe, and that wee cannot setforth one steppe, but it shall seeme that wee are utterly vndone. But God hath the issues of death in his hande sayeth he. So then lette vs marke well these sentences, that wee may bee thoroughly fenced when the Diuell shall come too blowe in our eare, And who art thou? Seest thou not howe thou haste no succour from aboue? the righteous perishe not. Too barre Satan of his purpose, lette vs haue these answeres readie: It is true that the righteous perishe not, nother am I perished. But thou arte as good as a dead man: [saythe the Diuell] and my God [let vs say] is he that hath the issues of death in his hande. And that is it which Dauid meeneth in another texte, saying: Though I were in the shadowe of death, thy sheepehooke o Lorde shall guyde mee, bicause I alwayes put my truste in thee: yf thou bee my protector, I shall bee exempted from all euill.

Thus ye see how wee ought too practize this lesson. And here it ensleweth, That suche as sowe extortion, or labour extortion, and such as sowe incomberance, shall gather the same. VVhiche thing is confirmed by a similitude. For Eliphaz sayeth that the roring of the Lyons is stinted, that their teeth are broken, and that theyr whelpes are destitute of pray. VVhereby he meeneth, that suche as haue bene full of crueltie and extorcion, shall bee daunted by the hande of God. But somewhat afore, he had sayde, That the wicked had perished at the blaste of God, and by the breath of his mouthe. As touching the former sentence where he sayde, that suche as labour for iniquitie and sowe trouble or incomberance &c. I say it is a similitude taken of the tillers of the earth: And the sayde twoo woordes Iniquitie and Trouble, or (whiche is all one) vnrightuousnesse and incomberance, are ioyned together in the Scripture, too signifie the extorcions and outrages whiche the wicked commit, too vexee and disquiet their neighbours: and also the woorde Incomberance or trouble, is spoken of suche as doo nothing but tosse and turnioyie other menne. And firste it is sayde, that they Plough, bycause that they whiche are so desirous too anoy their neyghbours, and too do them some harme, doo make preparatiues, lyke as when the labourer intendeth too sowe his grounde, he muste firste plowe it, and the earth muste firste bee tilled. Euen so the wicked consulte aforehande vpon their vngraciousnesse, trecheries, and vnlawfull dooings, deuyfing guiles and deceytes: and afterwarde when they haue layde the whole platforme, they seeke all meanes possible to put their lewde enterpryses in execution: and that is the verie laboting [or tillage] that Eliphaz speaketh of here.

For he sayeth, that herevpon they sowe incombrance: that is to say, when they haue made their preparations, they runne vpon poore men too fleece them and to eate them vp. But these menne (sayeth he) doo reape that which they haue sowed: that is to say, God maketh all the mischief which they haue conceyued and inuented agaynst others, to light vpon their owne heades. VVee see here a sentence that is true and wee must take it as spoken by the holy Ghoste, euen to gather a generall lesson thereof. And to put it to the true vse, wee must pray God to graunt vs the spirit of wisdome in that behalfe, that wee may not wrest the Scripture this way or that way to drawe it to a contrarie sense, as wee see that Eliphaz hath done. But whereas the holy Scripture sayeth, that suche as plowe iniquitie and sowe incombrance shall reape the same: it is a threatening whiche God vttereth agaynst the wicked, who thinke to aduance themselues highly when they play the rauenous beastes, fleecing one man and eating vp another: specially when they deuour all, seeming to themselues to be iolly conquerours, and standing in their owne conceytes for doing so. But our Lorde telleth them, that they beguyle themselues very muche: for he maketh all their enterprizes too turne too their owne confusion. VVherefore ye see a threatening, whereby God purposeth to repress the ouerboldnesse and malicioufnesse of men, minding too holde them shoite, too the intent they may liue together in all good loue and vprightdealing, so as no man may labour to hinder his neighbour: like as on the contrarie side, we heare also the promise which is giuen vs in these wordes: he that soweth blifednesse shall reape the same. Sainct Paule speaketh this of Almesdeedes. He sayeth that if wee sowe vpon our neighbours, that which God giueth vnto vs, wee shall gather it agayne: in so much that wee shall haue abundance of his gracious giftes and blifings, and God shall shead out his riches vpon vs, and shewe himselfe gracious and liberall towards vs when we bee in necessitie. This promise then serueth to giue the faithfull a good minde to deale frankly with their neighbours and to succour them. Now see we the true vse of this Lesson: which is, that we must keepe our selues well from practyizing any annoyance or deceyte. And why so? So little shall wee be able to auance our selues by these wicked practizes or other vnlawfull meanes: that God shall put vs to confusion in the ende. VVee see then how wee ought to repress all our wicked lustes, that wee may deale vprightly and reasonably with our neighbours. On the otherside, for as much as all noyfonnesse and extortion displeaseth God, let vs be well ware to behaue our selues vprightly: that is to say, let vs labour to do well, so as euery one of vs may not onely absteyne from all misdealing, but also consider that if God haue giuen vs any abilitie, we must profit one another, and comunicate mutually al together. And herevnto lette vs also gather together the sentences of holy Scripture which tende to the same ende. Cursed be thou that robbest, for thou shalt bee robbed when thy turne comes about. And afterwarde, Looke what measure men make, the same shall bee giuen them agayne. VVhen we heare all these sayings, let vs vnderstand that God doth euermore turne all the mischief that wicked men had deuised, vpon themselues. The Scripture speaking of the wicked persone, sayeth: he shall fall into the pit that he hath digged. And afterwarde, iudgement without mercie shall be haue which is mercilesse and vnpitefull. VVhen wee heare suche sentences, lette vs tremble and bee circumspect to walke so iustly and vprightly with our neighbours, as men may knowe that wee bee continually restrayned by the feare of God. Thus wee see what we haue to marke in effect in this sentence. But by the way, if a man be vexed after he haue done good, or if he be persecuted when he seeketh to liue in peace and concord with his neighbours: we must not conclude that he is of the companie of those which gather trouble and incombrance bicause they had sowed it. And why so? For we heare howe the holy Scripture sayeth the contrarie: namely that God doth sometimes suffer such things, too trie the pacientnesse of such as are his. VVee see the examples that are reported to vs in the holy Scripture. Dauid protesteth that he sought nothing but concord, and yet notwithstanding, that he was troubled, not the lesse, but the more. Had he prouoked his enimies? had he giuen them cause to doo him displeasure? No: but he sayeth he was hated without cause: and herein he shewed himselfe a true member of Iesus Christe. Therefore wee must come backe to that which Sainct Peter sayeth, yea euen alledging the Psalme. VVho so (sayeth he) is desirous to prosper, and to be blifed of God, and to leade a quiet life: let him seeke peace, and giue himselfe to well-doing. Lo what God promiseth vs: that is to wit, an ordinarie blifing, which is, that when we be giuen to well doing, he will guyde vs, and not suffer vs to bee racked out of measure. But what? Neuertheless if yee suffer for welldoing, thanke God, sayeth he. And whereas he sayeth, If yee seeke to be at peace with euery man, yee shall finde it: immediatly he addeth, that there shall alwaies bee so much vnthankfulnesse in the world, as the wicked shall deale lewdly with those that haue sought nothing but their welfare. Then if wee see any man afflicted: wee muste not by and by conclude, that he is so dealt with for sowing of iniquitie, or for sowing of trouble and incombrance: for wee knowe not what the cause is that God visiteth them in such wise. True it is, that if wee shall haue knowen one too haue bene a wicked persone, then is Gods iudgement visibill and notorious vpon him. If a man haue bene a despyzer of God, or such a one as hath ledde a lawlesse lyfe too the offence of others: wee cannot but iudge as the Scripture telleth vs. But if wee will iudge at the firste dashe without further knowing of the partie, than onely by that wee see him scourged: and therevpon say he is cursed: Behold, this is a rashe and ouerpresumptuous iudgement, and suche a one as God findeth fault withall. Therefore we muste haue a stay of our selues, and proceede with suche mildenesse and aduisednesse, as I haue shewed heretofore. But after that Eliphaz hath spoken so, he addeth that such maner of men, (that is to wit, as haue practysed deceyte and violence to oppresse their neighbours, & haue put their wicked practizes in execution) shall be destroyed by the blaste of God, and by the breath of his mouthe. VVhereby he sheweth, that although menne cease too doo their duties, yet God ceaseth not too doo his in punishinge suche as are so giuen too outrage, crueltie, and annoyance. And that is a thing very true and well worthie too bee throughly marked by vs. And wherefore? what thing is it that hardeneth the wicked, and which causeth them to go through with their vngraciousnesse? Bycause they beare themselues in hand, that no manne dare open his lippes agaynst them, that men will stande in feare of them if they behaue themselues like wilde beastes, that euery man shoulde stande in such awe of them as all the world should quake at their onely looke, and that when they haue piled and polled all that ever they can, noman can once speake agaynst them, bicause they haue wherewith to currie fauour with such as may annoy them, according as wee see howe those that haue

2. Cor. 6. 6. 6

Esa. 33. a. 1.

Psal. 7. d. 16
James. 2. c. 13

Psal. 120. b. 7.

Psal. 69. a.
5. & 1. Pet.
3. b. 10.

haue vsed suche wicked practyzes, haue alwayes brybes at hand to stop the mouthes of them that may punishe them. For asmuch therefore as the wicked which giue themselues to suche misdealing, hope to scape all punishment at mans hande: it is sayde, that they shall bee destroyed by the blast of God: that is to say, that although men omitte their duetie, so as there is no iustice executed, and that they which haue the vsing of the swoorde, holde their peace and play the dumbe Idolles, so as there is no man to maynteyne right and reason, but wickednesse is borne out: Yet will not God be idle in heauen. Then lette vs beare in minde, that if the whole worlde soothe vs vp in our naughtinesse: yet shall our cace bee neuer the better for all that, neyther shall wee haue gayned any thing by beeing so flattered in our vyces at mens handes: for we must come to our account before the heauenly iudge. Behold here a speciall poynt which wee haue to marke. And therefore let no man blindfolde his owne eyes to giue ouer himselfe too naughtinesse, when he seeth [he may saye,] VVell, if I plucke this thing to my selfe, no man dare speake agaynst mee. Yea: but wee heare howe it is sayde here, that if men giue vs libertie to doo euill, is God idle in the meane while? will he bolstre the euill? hath he not tolde vs that like as he is neere too suche as call vpon him: so also he beholdeth and marketh with his eyes, all the wicked and all those that doo men violence and extortion? Then seing the cace is so: let it prouoke vs too walke in feare, assuring our selues that wee must yeelde our account before our iudge, and that we shall haue gayned nothing by the fauour of men. Thus we see what we haue to marke. But it is a sentence of great weyght when it is sayde, that the wicked perishe by the blaste of God and by the breath of his mouth. For herein it is signified vnto vs, that God needeth not to make any greate preparacion, or to arme himselfe when he intendeth to repressse such as are stubborne, or whiche deuour all things, or which giue themselues too guylefulnesse too deceyue their neighbours, and specially which are full of crueltie and extorcion too deuour the whole worlde. God then needeth not to leuie greate powers of men too strengthen himselfe with all: he needeth not to seeke meanes here and there how to ouerthrow them: let him but onely blowe vpon them, and behold all is dispatched. Nowe therefore we see that this maner of speaking, (wherein it is sayde that the wicked perish at the blast of God and at the breath of his mouth) importeth very much: like as Esay also speaking of men generally, setteth vs downe this selfsame blast, to shewe vs howe brittle our state is, and therefore that wee haue neede to be maynteyned by God, or els we shall be in hazard of perishing euery minute of an houre: & furthermore to make vs to vnderstande that although the wicked haue their full scope in this worlde, that they triumphe, and that they be both stoute and strong, so as they seeme inuincible: yet there needeth no great force to destroy them, for the onely blast of God wil be inough to dispatch them quite and cleane. And now let vs come to that which is sayd concerning the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ. For this sayd power is referred to the breath of his mouth, and to his word: that is to wit, that the wicked shall be rooted out by it. Behold how Esay speaketh, and Paule applieth the same texte to the latter comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. How then is it that Iesus Christ reigneth? It is when his enimies are confounded by his simple woorde, which is as a blaste, and he needeth no other thunderboltes to ouerthrow them. Sith the cace standeth so: let vs looke to our selues. For as oft as the Gospell is preached, God thundereth vpon all the despizers thereof, and vpon all such as become harde harted and stubborne against him. True it is that for a tyme wee perceyue not the force of this woorde in punishing the wicked. But yet in the ende they shall be sayne too feele, how it is not in vayne that God hath sayde by his Prophet, and confirmed it by his Apostle, that Iesus Christ shall destroy the wicked by the blast of his mouth and by the vertue of his word. And therefore (for feare of the said sentence) let vs submit our selues to the Gospell, that we feele not the force inclosed in the same to our owne confusion, but rather see the experience of it to our welfare. Thus muche concerning this texte. Afterward there is a similitude of Lyons, Lionesses, and Lionesses whelpes, howe all of them shall bee scattered and destroyed. There is no doubt but that Eliphasis meening here, is that God stretcheth out his strong arme against suche as are outrageous, and violent against men, and to be shorte, which resemble Lyons and wilde beastes. Here wee see what the effect is. True it is that wee see the meeke ones so afflicted, as it seemeth that God would breake them and brooze them in pieces, as wee haue example in Dauid. But yet for all that, this sentence cōfesseth not to bee true, specially if wee consider Gods iudgements, howe he proceedeth with them mooste ordinarily. For as touching the punishments that God layeth vpon the worlde, there can no rule bee made of them without exception. VVhen it is sayde that suche as are mercylese shall haue iudgement without mercie: wee muste not vnderstande it in all poyntes and in all caces according too the present course of things whiche wee see: neyther muste wee conclude that all suche as are cruelly persecuted, haue therefore bene cruell. VVee see what befell too our Lorde Iesus Christe who is the Head, the Mirroure, and the Patterne of all Gods children. VVee see also what hath befallne too mooste of the saythfull. But (as I haue erst sayde) wee muste take it as an ordinarie iudgement. And that it is so, wee heare by the promise on the contrarie parte. That is, Blessed are the meeke for they shall inherite the earthe. Iesus Christe telleth vs there, that if wee bee mylde and louing, if wee liue gently among our neyghbours, and if wee indeuer too doo euery man good: wee shall inioye the earth: that is too say, wee shall continue in quietnesse and wee shall not bee troubled. Yea: But (as I haue declared before) it is not mente hereby, that wee shall bee exempted from all inconueniences: onely God will cause that wee shall possesse the earth, verely so farre forth as shall bee expedient for vs. Lo what wee haue to beare in remembrance. So then, lette vs not thinke that thing straunge whiche is spoken in this texte, that is too witte, that the Lyons teeth shall be broken, and that the roring which they make shall be stunted, that is too say, that God will stretche out his arme and his power to daunt such as are so full of pryde and fiercenesse, as they seeke nothing but to eate vp and too deuour all. God therefore sheweth his arme too bee strong, as wee ordinarily see. For wherevpon shal God shewe his iudgements more greate and notable, than vpon these Lyons that are like woodde beastes, set vpon the spoyle, yea and glutted with mannes bloude. VVee see howe God sheweth himselfe a iudge more notably in that cace, than vpon the litle ones and vpon those that haue not exercised suche violence. And therefore lette vs learne too bee afrayde of Gods iudgements, and too preuent them: and as oft as we executeth suche thinges vpon those that are giuen too hurte their neyghbours, lette vs glorifie him, assuring our selues that hee wil iudge the whole worlde, and

Psal. 11. b. 4.
5. & 34. c. 17.
& 37. c. 13.

Lames. 2. c. 13

Psal. 37. b. 11
& Math. 5
a. 5.

Esai. 11. b. 4.
2. Theß. 2.
b. 8.

haue pitie of such as are wrongfully vexed, so as in the end he wil bee their safety, and shewe by verye deede that he neuer forgate them, no not euen then when they seemed to be vtterly cast off. What is to be done the? we must looke vpon Gods iudgements in such wyse as we may perceyue them whē he sheweth them. For this world is as a Stage, wher vpon God setteth vs forth manie examples, which we must turne to our owne behoues, that we may walk in his feare absteyning from all euill, and dooing good to our neyours, by walking foundly, and vpryghtly among them in all respects. And if wee doo so: no doubt but wee shall feele the power of our God too maynteyne vs, notwithstanding that wee must bee fayne too walk through many miseries in this world, and (to be short) although we be as it were among a thousand deaths, and perceyue not as yet the help that he promifeth, yet shall wee not ceasse too be maynteyned by him after a woonderfull maner.

But let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgment of our faults, praying him to make vs perceyue them better than wee haue doone heretofore, and that in hauing an eye to his promises wherby he allureth vs so gently vntoo him, wee may warrant our selues, that if wee walk in his feare, he will neuer forget vs. And that although wee haue offended him so manie wayes, as wee bee well woorthie to bee shaken off by him, and that Satan also would make vs beleue, that wee shall no more bee receyued to mercie: yet notwithstanding he will cause vs too knowe that he hathe pardoned vs, yea and that he is readye to receyue vs at all tymes and as often as we will come backe to him. And that wee may rest vpon his promises for the performance hereof, let vs pray him so to guyde vs by the same, as we may atteyne to the perfect fulnesse of his benefits which he hathe promised vs, and which he hathe prepared for vs in heauen. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The sixteenth Sermon, which is the second vpon the third Chapter.

12. But one thing hathe bin brought to me in secret vvhether of myne eare hathe heard a little.
13. Among the thoughts of nyght visions vwhen men are asleepe.
14. Fearfulnesse and trembling came vpon mee, and made my bones afrayd.
15. The vvynd vvhisked here and there, and made the heare of my bodie to stare.
16. There stode one, and I knevv not his face: there vvas an image before myne eyes, and I heard a voyce in silence.
17. Is man more ryghtouse than God? Is man more pure than his maker?
18. Behold, he fyndeth no stedfastnesse in his seruants, And he hathe put vanitie in his Angels.
19. How much more [then in] them that dwell in houses of clay, vvhose foundation is dust, vvhich are consumed and destroyed by the moth?

After that Eliphaz hathe shewed his reason, that Iob had not serued God faithfully, and with a pure heart, at least wyse not of any affection that he had to doo so: heere he addeth Gods authoritie, to shewe that Iob neither can nor ought by any means to replie, that he should not be condemned of God by good right. Some men thinke that Eliphaz boasteth here of the hauing of some reuelation, which he neuertheless had not. But if al be wel considered: there is no dout, but that his pretending that God had reueled such a matter vnto hym, is a matter of certaintie. For wee must holde this for a principle, that these generall sentences whiche he alledgeth are good, but yet ill applied. And we muste not thinke it straunge, that God should inspire him after that maner. For nowe adays we be taught after another fashion than were the fathers of that age. God speaketh vnto vs. But howe? It is in suche wyse, as that the Prophets are the instrumentes of the holie Ghoste, and wee haue the gospell wherin God sheweth himselfe familiarly.

Then let vs looke vpon the maner of speaking which God vseth nowe adayes in his Church: which is, that he hath disclosed his whole will vnto vs in his holie scriptures. In tymes past God opened himselfe to such as it pleased him to shewe that speciall fauour. And how? By visions, as the holie Scripture witneseth. So then let vs assure our selues that Eliphaz was an excellent man: and therefore we must not thinke it strange, that God should appeere vnto him in vision by night, and that he should knowe that thing whiche the Scripture teacheth vs this daye. Then is not the pretending of this matter a false brag. But Eliphaz doth out of dout in this case misapplier that thing to an euill purpose in the person of Iob, which had bene reueled vnto him for another ende and vse. For we see that God sheweth him, that men oughte too walke in lowlynesse.

Beholde, wher vnto this vision which was giuen him tendeth: that is to wit, that menne shoulde not stande in their owne conceyte, nor bee puffed vp in pryde, too thinke themselues ryghteous or of great woorthinesse: but that they shoulde vnderstande, that when they come to shewe themselues before God, there is nothing but sinne in them, by reason whereof they must needes bee confounded, and therefore must haue an eye to their corruptions and bee sorie for the same. Eliphaz had receyued suche maner of doctrine as this, whiche was good. But now he layeth al the burthen vpon Iob, and thinketh himselfe to haue woonne his spures by ouercharging him that had serued God faithfully. VVe see then, that for the generall case, Eliphaz boasteth not in vayne, that he had bin taught of God. But he playeth the ill scholer in this poynt, that he taketh no heede too himself, but intendeth too oppresse Iob contrarie too the truth.

Now let vs come too lay foorth the whole matter particularly. He sayeth, That a thing was brought to him in secreete, and that his eare had hearde a little of it: Yea (sayeth he) in a vision by night, that I hearde a blast which whisked hitber and thither, and at the laste there was a voyce, whiche spake to mee in silence. True it is that he addeth, that there was also an Image: and wheras he sayeth he knew not what it was, sauing that he was abashed euen that he shuddered all his bodie ouer, and that heares of his flesh stood staring vp for feare and astonishment, and that he was as in a traunce: all this tendeth to shewe, that that he reporteth no dreames here, but that it is the very testimonie of God which muste bee receiued with authoritie. And hereby wee see that in all the visions

Gen. 15. c. 12. which the auncient fathers had, God did set certeine
28. d. 17. tokens to amaze them, and to put them in some terrour Act. 7. d. 31. and feare which serued to authorize his woord, too the 32. end it should bee receiued the better. For wee see how Esai. 6. b. 5. men are not so well inclined too heare God speake as they ought too bee, except he make them too feele his Maiestie. If a man of some greate estate speake vntoo vs, it is a wonder too see how wee bee more earnest too hearken vntoo him, than wee bee too heare or reade the holie scripture. VVherof cometh this, but of that wee be carnall and beastly? Now too remedie such faultinesse, it hath pleased God too giue alwayes some tokens of his Maiestie, too the intent that his woord myght bee receiued, and that men should take them to bee of the greater credit and authoritie. Also when mention is made of any visions in the holie scripture, it is alwayes sayd that the holie fathers haue bin striken in some feare, and not without cause for so it behoued them too bee prepared to humilitie, that they myght obey God simply. There is yet another reason: which is, that although we seeme to be well minded to heare God, yet are we not of capacitie to receiue that which he telleth vs, except our flesh bee tamed. For there is an inward pryde in vs which puffeth vs vp after such a sort, that we knowe not what is good & conuenient for vs, vntill such tyme as God haue striken vs downe. Thus wee see wherfore God neuer appeered vntoo men, but he gaue them some feeling of feare, namely to the end they should not like to well of theselues, nor stand too much vpon their owne reputation, nor trust too much too their owne strength. Now then wee perceiue wherunto the long description that Eliphaz maketh here, is referred. But he saith it is a secreet matter, and whereof he had had but small intelligence. True it is that at the first blushe it may seeme a trifling, whē he calleth it a secreet, that God should at leastwise be as rightuouse as men, or (as hee concludeth in the ende) that men haue not regarded to be so rightuous as he. Euery man confesseth this in wordes: and not so much as the very heathen haue euer gaynsayd it. VVhat mystetie then or what Secret is there in this matter? Let vs assure our selues it is more than necessarie: for although we agree in this point, that there is none rightuous but onely God, and that we bee full of infirmities in comparison of him: yet notwithstanding wee acknowledge it not sufficiently, neither is it sufficiently imprinted in vs: for were wee fully and throughly perswaded of Gods rightuoufenesse, and of our owne naughtinesse: it is certeine that wee should not doubt as we commonly doo, there should no grudgings bee hearde in our mouthes, there should bee no gaynsaying nor replying in our harts, wee should bee altoogither quiet, and whensoever it should please God too put vs too shame, wee would confesse he had good right so to do. But now the case standeth so, as ye shall see we kicke against God as soone as he toucheth them: nay, if he spare their sinnes and do but warne them of them, they wil not come to any true acknowledgemēt of them. And so a man may perceiue hereby, that all men are puffed vp with presumptuousenesse, and knowe not what Gods rightuoufenesse is, that they might humble themselves vnder it. And therefore it is not without cause that Eliphaz termeth it here a secreet, when God sheweth him that he himself only is rightuous, that all men ought to be ashamed of their wants, and knoweledge themselves to be wretched. And after the same maner also
 Rom. 3. c. 21. doth Sainct Paule take it, when he telleth the Romanes

how it was an vnknowne and secreet thing vntoo men, that God purposed too vtter foorth his ryghtuoufenesse by Iesus Christ, to the end that all the world should acknowledge themselves indetted vntoo God. True it is that a man cannot say there is anye difficultie herein: but yet (as I haue shewed afore) men attribute I wote not what too themselves, and they cannot fynd in their harts too vnace themselves out of the sayde vayne overstateliness: in so much that in their owne opinion, they thinke themselves able to worke wonders by their free will. Herevpon they beare themselves in hande, that they shall purchase rewarde at Gods hande. But contrariwise God will bee knowen to be onely rightuous, and that there is nothing but wickednesse to be founde in men. Thus much concerning this poynt. But Eliphaz in saying that he herde a little of the sayde woorde, sheweth wel that he exalted not himselfe to farre. For he taketh not vpon him a perfection of wisedomē, to say that nothing had escaped him, and that he had comprehended euery whit of it to the vttermoste: but he sayeth he had some taste of the saide doctrine of God, and that he had conceyued some part of it. VVee see then that here he speaketh modestly: declaring that he is not as an Angell of heauen, so as he could behold Gods glorie in full sight: but that according to mans rudenesse, he had bene taught to know how to communicate that thing vnto his neighbours, which he had receiued of God. Lo what he ment to say in effect. And hereby we be admonished, that how familiarly so euer God shewe himselfe vnto vs: it is a great matter that wee [be admitted to] knowe things in part, and we must not thinke that we cā haue any so perfect vnderstanding, as there may be no lacke in it. For they that thinke so of themselves, beguile themselves, and thereby shet themselves out of the gate that was open for them to come in at afore. And so let vs marke well, that there is much done for vs, when wee haue any little taste, or any enterance into the knowledge of Gods truth. If this bee ment of the Prophets and teachers whom God hath chozen and ordeyned, and vnto whom he hath giuen most excellent giftes, (as wee see here an example in Eliphaz:) what shall be sayd of vs? for he is set before vs, not as one of the simple and cōmon sort of people: but as one to whom God himselfe hath appeared: and yet he telleth vs he heard but a little. Behold then what we haue to marke in the firste place. Truly were wee throughly perswaded of this, there should no suche ouerweening be seene in our talke. For euery of vs beares himselfe in hande, that he is ignorant in nothing: and they that are least exercysed in the hoie Scriptures, will needes haue this reputation of themselves, that they be so surtle and sharpwitted, as they speake nothing but good reason, as though the holy Ghost were in their sleue. And whence cometh such pride, but that they which are not yet out of their apcee, imagine themselves to vnderstand all things? And furthermore this pride is accompanied with carelesnesse: for the most part passe not to profite themselves. And why so? They weene they be come to the perfection of all knowledge: and many men when they haue heard a two or three woordes of the Gospell, yee shall see them so full of it, as they can be. They passe not for learning of any more knowledge: no, they will needes teach other men: to be shorte, they be more than Doctours. But God laugheth such presumption to shorne. For the little that they might haue receiued must be takē from them, & so shal they go away empty, according to that which is written in the song of the virgin Marie: which is that such as are full of winde, esteeming themselves riche, and standing vpon their reputatiō: haue bene starued for hunger. Then let vs learne to prayse God in such wise for that which he hath giuen vs, and so to know that we haue neede to proceede dayly more and more, as wee may haue an earnest desire too profite more and more, and come too it with all modestie. And the more familiarly that wee be taught concerning God and his worde, so much the more must we be as little scholers, that we steppe not to it with such pride as to thinke that all is in our owne brayne, but that we come to it according to our abilitie, as I haue sayd. For there muste be none that hath the perfection of all wisdom, saue Iesus Christ, to the intent that he may deale it to euery man in measure and certaine portion. Furthermore let vs marke well the circumstance of this place. For it treateth of Gods rightuoufnesse wherof we haue spoken, and of our knowing how we be full of sinnes & corruptiōs, to the end we may apply our whole studie to the same doctrine, assuring our selues well, that we shall neuer bring it throughly to passe. Wherefore it behoueth vs to minde it so much the more, and to applie our whole lyfe therevnto. For had it bene throughly knowen, men had not falne into so horrible darknesse in the papacie. But what: There it seemeth to them to be a superfluous thing to treat of free iustification by fayth: they counte that as a madde doctrine, and skoffe at vs for stāding so much vpon it. Yea: but here it is shewed vs, that euen those which haue had visions from heauen, haue had much a do to vnderstand a little of such secrecie. So then, let vs vnderstand, that it behoueth vs to be diligent in this article: for when we haue imployed all our wittes about it, yet shall we not comprehend the hundreth parte of that which is in it. And for prooffe hereof, is not Gods rightuoufnesse an infinite thing? And are not our corruptiōs, as a Sea, or as a boittomesse pitte? Therefore we must not maruell at Eliphaz for telling vs here that he had but a small taste of this article. But let vs nowe come to that which he addeth, which is, That a breath (or winde) went to and fro, so as his bodie quaked and shuddered, and his beare stood vpon stiffe through out all his bodie: and that there appeared an image vnto him, which he knew not, and that at the ende he heard a voyce in silence. All this was done to the ende which I haue touched: that is to wit, to make Eliphaz readie to receyue that which God purposed to say to him, and to prepare him in such wise, as he might vnderstand how it was God that spake, to the ende that his doctrine might be of authoritie: and furthermore that Eliphaz might be humbled, so as he might no more be hoyssed vp with presumption, according as men commonly chalenge to themselves I wote not what. It behoued Eliphaz to be altogether abased, to the end he might know his owne want, and giue the glorie vnto God. True it is that in these dayes we haue no such visions as they had in times past. But it behoueth vs to knowe, that whereas God gaue such signes to the auncient Fathers, they must serue for vs also at this day. And therefore when we reade the holie Scripture, or come to a sermon: we muste be touched with the Maiestie of God, to yeelde him reuerence, so as we defile not his holy truth by esteeming it as if a man should tell vs some merie conceyted tale, but rather thinke thus: Seing that our maker speaketh vnto vs, it behoueth all knees to bowe before him, and all men ought to quake at that which he sayeth. Lo what we haue to marke in this sentence. And morcouer wee knowe, that God in publishing his lawe, shewed tokens to affray all such as he ment to teache at that time: and therevpon the people sayd: Let vs not come neere the mountayne, for wee shall all die if God speake vnto vs. Thus yee see how it was Gods will to authorize his lawe in such wise, as the people were vtterly dismayed by reason of

Luke. 1. c. 13.

Exod. 19. c.
16. & 20. c.
18. 12.
Heb. 12. e. 18 19.

the greate number of miracles that he shewed. And was this done for their sakes onely which were of that time? No, but God ment to giue vs also knowledge of his power which is permanent vnto the worldes end. The Gospell hath had yet greater prooffe of maiestie. So then, there is nothing that eyther can or ought to hinder vs fro receyuing of the Gospell, except our owne vnthankfulnesse and vngracioufnesse put out our eyes. Although wee can not see all the wonders that God hath shewed: yet muste wee holde our selues contented in that God teacheth vs by his woorde, without any longing for new visions, as many wandring spirites doo, which woulde that the Angels shoulde come downe from heauen, and bring them some newe reuelations. But herein they doo God great wrong, for that they content not themselves in that God hath shewed himself so familiarly vnto vs. For seing that wee haue the holy Scripture, it is certayne that wee cannot want any thing. And about all thinges, in this brightnesse of the Gospell wee haue a perfection of wisdom, as Sainct Paule sheweth. Sith the case standeth so: they that are tickled with a fonde desire to haue some visions, doo well bewray, that they neuer knewe what the holy Scripture is. Then let vs content vs with that which it hath pleased God to disclose vnto vs, as well by his Prophetes, as by his sonne our Lorde Iesus Christe, assuring our selues, that there he maketh vs a finall conclusion without any further passing. And hereby wee see whereto they are come, that haue such a desire to raunge abrode, and to leape beyonde their boundes. Here wee see from whence came the horrible confusion that is in the Popedome: here wee see wherevpon the Pope groundeth all his doctrine. For he sayeth that the Apostles haue not declared all that is for the profite of the Church, and that the holy Ghost is come too make men to frame new articles, and to make menne to reffe themselves vpon holy Councils. For asmuch then as the Pope and all his hangers on, haue not hild themselves to the purenesse of the holy Scripture: God hath vndoubtedly blinded them in their owne folies, and we see some among them to be so dull and brutishe, and finally which haue bene growen so farre out of kinde, as to worshipp stones and stockes of timber, and that thinges are so farre out of square, that euen little babes might well bee ashamed of them. And this cometh of that Diuelish curiositie, that they bee not contented to be taught simply by the holy Scripture. Beholde also wherevpon the Religion of the Turkes is founded. Mahomet hath reported himselfe to bee the partie, that should bring the full Reuelation ouer and besides the Gospell. And by meanes therof, they be vtterly become brute beastes. And at this day wee see, that those poore beastes buzie their heades about as doltish and vn sensible thinges, as any can bee. But it is the iuste vengeance of God, who hath giuen them ouer to a wilfull stubborne mynde. As much hath bene done to other fantasticall persones (and specially of our dayes) whiche haue troubled the Church, and woulde needes haue their visions. And it was one of the Articles of that cursed creature that was burnt. For he sayde that the holy Ghost had not reigned as yet, but that he was to come. That wicked creature dishonored God, as though the Fathers of olde time had had but a shadow of the holy Ghoste, and as though that after he had once shedde out himselfe visibly vpon the Apostles, he had retyred againe incontinently, in suche sorte as the Church hath bene destitute of the holy Ghoste. Beholde what he did sette downe: and as in respect of himselfe, he would haue made himselfe a Mahomet, to haue the holy Ghost at his comandement.

Hee meeth Seruet the Spaniarde.

But

But a man may see how the deuill had caried him away : & it was requisite that God should bring some such men to that poynt, to the end we might the more abhorre the. But for our part, let vs follow the order that I haue tolde already : that is to wit, let vs bee taught according to the rule that God hath ordeyned, and let vs not be so headie as to binde God to agree to oure desires, nor to our fashions : but let vs content vs with the holy Scripture, seeing that God hath inclosed vs within the bounds thereof. Furthermore as touching that Eliphaz sayeth, That hee 10 heard the voyce in silence : It is too shewe, that God had prepared him in such wise, as hee bare away that which was spoken vnto him. For a man that is rauished as it were in a traunce, may well heare a thing, and yet haue no remembrance of it when he commeth againe to himselfe : and so there are many, who when they come to sermons, doo heare well the matter that is treated of, but it setteth not in them, insomuch that if one aske them what was treated of, they cannot tell him one worde. And why so? for (as the prouerbe sayth) their wittes were a 20 woolgathering : one of them mused on this thing, and another on that : they were howering in the aire, and they were not settled to giue eare vnto God. For all such vaine fancies as we conceyue, and as come in our mindes, are as many turmoyles to hinder vs from giuing such eare and audience vnto God, as we ought to giue. So then, those that wander in their owne imaginations, cannot comprehend these things, to say, I see a lesson whiche ought to bee common among vs, and wee must bee fully settled in it by fayth. For this cause Eliphaz sayth, 30 that this voyce came to him in silence or stillnesse. For before that God had so disposed him, he presupposed that it stode him on hande to giue eare, and to bee attentue to that which should bee spoken vnto him. And this is it that I haue touched already: namely that when we come to heare Gods woorde, wee must not haue our wits roving here and there after that maner : but we must holde them short, to giue diligent hearing vnto God, so as our fleshly affections and vanities canie vs not vnto wickednesse, and turne vs not hither and thither out of the way. 40 And to be short, wee must be quiet to heare all that God will haue sayde, to the ende that the same may be rightly vnderstoode of vs. VVe see then what wee haue to gather vpon this sentence. And nowe let vs come to the doctrine that Eliphaz handleth heere. Shall man be righteouser than God? and shall man be more righteous than his maker? Beholde he findeth no stedfastnesse (or truth) in his seruants, he hath iudged that there is follie (or vanitie) in his Angelles. And howe shall they do then which dwell in houses of Clay? In the first place heere Eliphaz setteth downe the 50 sentence, and as it were the Theme that hee groundeth himselfe vpon : that is to wit, that it is an vnreasonablenesse in men, to desire to glorifie themselves in comparison of their maker. Must not men needes bee destitute of wit and reason, when they will so glorifie themselves in comparing themselves with God? Lo here his Theme or grounde. And forasmuch as men cannot easily abyde to haue their owne authoritie condemned : Beholde here the reason whiche hee addeth to confirme his doctrine, which is, that if God shoulde examine his Angells, hee should finde fault in them, and he should not finde them stedfast : but they should perceiue themselves to be vaine and weake creatures. Now if the Angells be such: what shall become of men, which dwell in houses of Clay? For what is our bodie? what foundation hath it? what firmnesse soeuer seemeth too be in it : there needes but one little shoure of raine too washe it quite away. Then sith the case standeth so : let vs now assure our selues, that we cannot stande in Gods presence, if wee come thither presuming to bring any righteousnesse of our owne, considering that the verye Angells are not able to doo that. Thus we see in effect what is sayde vnto vs heere. But we haue too consider what is ment by the mention that is made here of Angells. Some imagining it to be against reason that God should not finde his Angells throughly righteous : haue concluded, that it is not ment here concerning those Angelles that continued in their obedience to God, but of those that are false and become renegates. For the Devils were once Gods Angells, But they kept not the state wherein God had created them, but fell an horrible fall, insomuch that they are faine to bee the mirrours of damnation. VVe see then after what maner diuers haue expounded this text : namely, that seeing there was no stedfastnesse in these Angells which fell : what is to bee looked for in men whose foundation is of Clay? But we must not seke out forced expositions to magnifie the Angells. For this place speaketh of Gods seruants, & the tytle is honorable. Eliphaz would not haue sayd, God hath not found stedfastnesse in his seruants, but he would haue sayd, Beholde the Devils which were heere tofore appointed to the seruice of God : But nowe they be false after such an horrible fashion, that by their fall all things are brought into a waucring, insomuch that euē mankind also is come to like perdition, and is drawne into the selfe same decay. Eliphaz would haue spoken so : but he sayth, God found no truth in his Angelles : he founde follie or vanitie : He sayth not that hee founde Rebellion or backsliding, but he sayth onely vanitie, which is a greater maner of speeche. So then when all is well considered, no doubt but Eliphaz speaketh heere, of the Angelles that serue God, and giue themselves wholly therevnto. And what meaneth he then by saying that there was no stedfastnesse, but rather vanitie and vnstedfastnesse in them? 1.Tim.4.16. VVhen Sainct Paule sayth that there is none Immortall but onely God : it is certaine that hee excludeth all creatures. And yet we know that the Angells are immortall spirites. For God hath created them of purpose, that they should not any more returne to nothing, no more than the soule of man may at any time die. Howe then shall we make these sentences agree, that the Angelles are created to liue euerlastingly : and that there is none immortall but onely God? The solution is verie easie. For the Angells are immortall, bicause they bee sustayned by power from aboue, and by cause God mainteyneth them, who beeing the immortall nature it selfe and the verie fountaine of life, is in them, as it is sayde in the Psalme. Psa.36.c.10 O Lorde, the fountaine of lyfe dwellth in thee, and in thy light shall we see light. Then seeing there is no life but in God onely, and yet notwithstanding the same is no hinderance to the spredding of life into all creatures, bicause it proceedeth of his grace : wee perceyue howe the Angelles are immortall, and yet haue no stedfastnesse in themselves, but haue need of God to strengthen them by his meere goodnesse. VVithout this, the thing would happen vnto them which is spoken in the hundred and fourth Psalme, which sayth, when thou withdrawest thy 104 d.29 spirite, all decayeth. VVhat is it then that giueth liuelinesse to the Angelles of heauen, but the spirit of God? And so wee see they haue not that thing of themselves, which is giuen them of God, neither could they inioy it for euer, if GOD shoulde not continue the sayde grace which he hath put into them. And like as wee speake of life, so must we speake of righteousnesse also. The Angells are not stedfast furtherforth than GOD holdeth them vp by his hande. Rightly are they called Principalities and powers : but that is bicause God executeth his power by them and guideth them. To bee short, the Angels haue nothing in themselues whereof to make their boast. For all the power and stedfastnesse whiche they haue, they holde it of God, and are so much the more indetted to him for it. As touching that which followeth, namely, that God findeth or putteth (for the Hebrew word importeth that God putteth) follic or vanitie: it implyeth not that the vanitie which is in the Angels commeth of God: but the meening of it is, that he putteth it to the [or chargeth them with it] by his iudgement: that is to say, that as a iudge hee giueth sentence that there is folly and vanitie, (that is to say, that there is faultinesse) in the Angels, yea & that they couide not stande before him, if hee would deale rigorously with them. Verily this seemeth straunge to such as are not exercised in the holy scripture. But if wee wist what the righteousnesse of God is: wee should not marueyle that the Angels themselues are found to bee faultie, if he should compare them with himselfe. For we must alwayes come backe to this poynt, that the good things that are in all creatures, are small in estimation of that which is in God which is vtterly infinite. Therefore we must alwayes put a difference betwene the one & the other. VVe see the Angels haue wonderfull power & vertues, specially in respect of vs: for notwithstanding that the Angels abide in the degree of creatures, yet may wee well glorifie them. But when wee come to God: the greatnesse of him must swallow vp all the rest, in likewise as wee see how the Sunne darkneth all the Starres of the Skie. And what is the Sunne? He is a planet as well as the rest: and yet neuertheless by cause God hath granted that creature to haue more brightnesse than the other Starres: all of them must needes bee ouershadowed, so as no Starre can bee perceyued when the Sunne hath his full power. And what will be done then, when God himselfe commeth foorth? As the Prophete Esay sayth, there shall bee neither Sunne nor Moone any more, but the brightnesse of God shall bee such, as it shall be seene and knowne ouer all. VVhen Esay speaketh of Gods kingdom, he sheweth that all things must be done away, and nothing bee glorified but onely God. Seeing it is so, let vs referre it also to that which is spoken here: that is to wit, that God findeth lacke in his Angels, although they be his seruants. And yet this is no let, but that the seruice which the Angels do vnto God, is perfect, according to the perfection that can be in creatures: likewise as in that respect, when in praying wee desire God that his will may be done on earth as it is in heauen, we witnesse that there is no vntowardnesse in the obedience which the Angels yeeld vnto him, but that he reigneth in them after such a peaceable maner, as they bee wholly confirmable to his will. But wee must alwayes beare in minde that which I haue touched: that as long as we go no further but to the degree and state of creatures: there shall be a perfection in the Angels, verily such perfection as may in creatures. But come we once vnto God: the sayd perfection is as it were swallowed vp, like as the Starres appeere not any more when the Sunne giues his light. Furthermore it behooueth vs to marke well howe S. Paule sayth, that Iesus Christ is come too gather together the things that are in heauen and earth. And therby he sheweth, that the Angels haue their stedfastnesse in the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ, forsomuch as he is the mediator betwene God & his creatures. True it is that Iesus Christ redemed not the Angels, for they needed not to be raunsomed from death wherunto they were not yet falne: but yet was he their mediator. And howso: to the intent to ioyne the vnto god in all perfection, and afterward to mainteyne them by his grace, that they may be preserued fro falling. Now seeing that God findeth faultinesse in his Angels: that is to say, that they haue no stedfastnesse in them further than they be mainteyned from aboue: what is to be thought of vs? VVe must be fain to come to that which Eliphaz addeth. Are men of such glorie, yea or of such power as the Angels of heauen? Let their case be considered. For howe were we created? we dwell in corruptible and transitorie lodgings. Brag wee as much as we list, yet is there nothing but vanitie in vs: that is to say, our bodies are but dust and poulder, and all must go into corruption. Then seeing that wee dwell in houies of Clay: will wee bee excellenter than those that dwell in the glorie of God, and beholde his face already? The Angelles being not subiect to any of the chaunges & turnings of this world, dwell already in the heauenly immortalitie. And we find by experience, that our life is no better than a blast, and we looke to be dispatched out of this worlde euery minute of an houre. Sith the case standeth so: how commes it to passe that we presume so of our selues? To be short, there is no stedfastnesse in men, which doth not slip and vanishe away by and by. Then if the case stand betwene God and vs, let vs learne to haue good regarde too the one side, that is to wit vnto God. True it is that we vnderstand not his mightie power as apperteyneth: but the Angels (which are now much neerer to him than we bee) and which beholde his face) haue no such perfection but that some fault may be found in them, if hee list to examine them with rigor. VVhat shall become of vs then, if we consider our owne weaknesse? what shall become of our vertues, if we would compare them with the Angels which are so noble and excellent creatures? Thus we see what we haue to remember in this sentence. For the residue cannot be declared at this present.

Now let vs fall down before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him so too dispose vs to the receiuing of his worde, as wee may not come to it heedlessly, as the things that we heare, may run in at the one eare and out at the other, but that wee may beare them away, and imprint the throughly in our harts, to make vs chaunge our wicked affectiōs, & to renounce our selues: that being quite ridde of all vaine trust in our selues, wee may desire nothing but to worship the great God, and to yeeld him the praise that he deserueth, specially for the inestimable grace that he giueth vs in our lord Iesus Christ, and for the loue that hee hath shewed vs in him, in that he spared him not, but deliuered him to death for vs: and that he may make vs so too feeble the frute and effectualnesse which hee hath purchased vs by his death and passion, as in the ende we maye bee receyued as righteous and giltlesse by God his father. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also. &c.

The seuententh Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the fourth Chapter, and the first vpon the fifth Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth still the exposition of the .xxviij. and .xix. verses of the fourth Chapter, and then as followeth.

20. From Morning to Euening they bee destroyed, and bicaufe no man setteth his minde vpon it, they perish for euer.
21. Doth not their excellencie go avway with them? they shall perishe, [but] not in vvifedome.

Nowe followeth the fift Chapter.

1. CALL novv if there be any to aunsvvere thee, and consider any one of the Sainctes.
2. Doubleesse, Anger sleaeth the foole, and enuie killeth the vvitleffe person.

WE haue seene already whervnto this talke tendeth: that is to wit, to humble men, bicaufe they be farre from the perfection of the Angels. And sith the case standeth so, that if God listeth to iudge his angels with rigor, he should find fault ynough in the: what then should become of them which are so vnable to say any thing for themselves, as they haue nothing in the but vanitie: Neuertheless it might seeme, that that which is reherfed here, was not sufficient to proue the intent of Eliphaz. For albeit that men bee feeble, and albeit that their lyfe be nothing: yet doth it not therefore followe, that they be eyther sinners or faultie before God. For they be several things to say, our life is transitorie, and vanissheth away euery minute of an houre, and to saye that God may condemne vs. But if all things be well considered: the reasons that are heere alleaged, are fitte for the purpose. For the case standeth not simplie vpon mens frailtie as in respect of their bodies: but vpon their dwelling here in this corruptible flesh, and that they bee so earthly as they thinke not on themselves, although they haue death continually before their eies. Also wee must marke the comparison in such maner and forme as it is set downe heere, betweene the Angels and mortall men. VVe see the Angels are neere vnto God, and behold his glorie, and are wholly giuen to his seruice: and yet for all that, there is no stedfastnesse in them, further than they be vphild by the grace of God: They might fade and vanissh away of themselves, were it not that God of hys meere goodnesse mainteyned them. But now let vs come to men. VVhere dwell they? They bee farre ynough off from the sayd heauenly glorie, they are here in the sayde transitorie lodging: for what else are our bodies? Then are we (to speake properly) in our graues. For our bodies are prisons, as darke to hinder vs from the beholding of God, as if we were alreadie vnder the earth. VVhat is our foundation? dust: and yet wee consider our selues neuer the more, how that we continually go into decay, and that death threatmeth vs incessantly: we consider not this a whitte. Therefore wee neede not too woonder though there be nothing else but infirmitie in men, seing that the Angels which are so neere vnto God, haue not so exquisite a perfection, but that God may condemne them if hee list to enter into iudgement with them. Now we see that the argumēt which Eliphaz vseth here, is very fit and agreeing to his purpose. But now remayneth to wey the words that are touched here, that we may aduantage our selues by them. Truely when any man speaketh to vs of the shortnesse of our life, we thinke it to be but a needlesse talk: for who is he that knowes it not? But it is not for nought that God speaketh so oft of it, and putteth vs in remembrance of it. For had we throughly conceyued what our life is: it is certaine, that first wee woulde not bee so worldly as wee bee, neither woulde oure thoughts bee so blockish as they bee: And secondly wee would haue regarde of the heauenly kingdome, and rest our selues wholly ther vpon. But we dispise the heauenly life and are so intangled heere, as we cannot bee drawne hence. It foloweth then that none of vs knowe what the thing is which euery of vs confesseth: that is to say, that our life is but as a shadow that passeth away, & that a mā is but like a floure, or a greene herbe, which incontinently is cut downe and withereth. To be short, although the prouerbs that import the ouershortnesse of this worldly life haue alwayes bene rife ynough, & yet still are: yet do they not peece to the harts of vs. And here we see why we be warned to thinke vpon it the better. Surely if wee could reckon our yeares as Moyses speaketh of them in the .xc. Psalme: certesse wee should bee taught as well to thinke vpon death, as also to tend to the marke that God calles vs to. But what? we wote not how to count them vpon our fingers. For beholde our childhod is such, that they which are in it, differ little or nothing from brute beastes, sauing that there is more incombrance and trouble with them: but as for vnderstanding or reason, there is small or none in little ones. And certesse, draw we once neere mans estate, our lustes are so ouerboyling, as wee cannot bee bridlede. Are wee come to mans estate? It passeth away out of hande: and anon olde age attacheth vs, so as there remayneth nothing to vs, but to bee weerie of our life, and to put other folkes to trouble & paine. Nowe then if wee wist howe to reckon the race of our life vpon our fingers: certeynly we should not bee such dullards as wee bee. And therefore let vs not thinke wee lose our time, when we set our mindes vpon this lesson: that is to wit, to knowe that our life is nothing, and that a hundred thousande deatnes manace vs in the cheefe lustinesse that we haue heere bylowe, when any of our kinsfolke or friendes depart, or if we see any Corse go to buriall: wee haue the witte to say, And what is mans life? If there bee anie great death in a Towne or in a Countrey, wee bee yet more mooued. But all this is forgotten with vs by and by. Therefore haue wee neede to exercise our selues in this doctrine all the tyme of oure life. And thus wee see why the Scripture speaketh so vnto vs. As concerning the present text, it is sayd first of all, That men dwell in houses of Clay, and that theyr foundation is but dust. That is too say, if we consider this present life by it selfe, wherein consisteth it? In beeing inclosed within lodgings that tende but to corruption. And what else are those but oure bodies? Beholde then what our stedfastnesse is: that is to wit, that every whit of it goeth incontinently vnto dust, and we be consumed either by woormes or by winde: that is to say, wee bee dispatched as soone as a worme which is but a thing of nought, and which we scarce esteeme as a liuing creature: and yet are we consumed sooner than it. Thus wee see what is sayde vnto vs in the first place. Afterwarde Eliphaz addeth: That men perishe and are consumed from morning vnto the euening. Some expound this, as though it were ment that men perishe in small time: and that is verie true. But heere withall there is yet more: that is to witte, that wee passe not a minute of oure lyfe, but it is as it were in approaching vnto death. If wee consider it well, when a man riseth in the Morning, hee is sure hee shall not steppe foorth one pace, hee is sure hee shall not take hys repaste, hee is sure hee shall not turne about his hande, but hee shall still wax elder and elder, and his life euer shortneth.

Then

Then must wee consider euen by eye sight, that our lyfe fleeteth and flydeth away from vs. Thus wee see what is ment by beeing consumed from Morning to Euening. And it is sayd afterward, that men perish for euer, bicause no man thinkes vpon it. VVee must treat of these two poyntes, that we may profite our selues by this doctrine. The one poynt is, that whatsoeuer wee doo, we should alwayes haue death before our eyes, and bee prouoked to thinke vpon it. This (as I haue sayde) is well knowne among men: the verie Heathen had skill to say so. But what for that? Euerie man can play the Doctor in teaching other men that, which is conteyned heere, and yet in the meane while there is neuer a good scholler of vs all in this behalfe. For there is not any man which sheweth by his dooings, that euer he knewe what it is to bee consumed from Morning to Euening: that is to wit, that all his lustinesse is but feeblenesse, and that there is no stedfastnesse in vs, to holde our selues in one continuall state: but that we alwayes haste toward death, and death towardes vs, so as we must needs come thither at length. Verely if wee had no more but this single doctrine alone: It woulde stande vs in no steade, but to make vs storme and torment our selues: lyke as when the Paynims knewe that our life was so slightfull, they concluded therevpon, that it was best neuer too bee borne, and that the sooner wee dyed the better it was for vs. Lo howe the Paynims reiected the grace of God, bicause they knewe not the honour that hee doth vs when he sendeth vs into this worlde, euen to shewe himselfe a father towardes vs. For in as much as wee bee reasonable creatures, and haue the Image of God printed in our nature: wee haue a recorde, that he holdeth vs heere as his children. And to dispize such a grace, and to say, it had bene better for vs neuer too haue bene created: is it not apparant blasphemie? So then it is not ynough for vs to knowe, that so long as wee bee in this worlde, wee bee consumed euerie minute of an houre: But we must come to the seconde poynt: that is too witte, that when wee haue well behilde howe brittle our lyfe is: wee must also marke how wee bee repayred againe by Gods grace, and specially howe wee bee susteyned and vphilde by the same: according also as these two poyntes are matched together in the hundred and fourth Psalme. For it is sayde there, that as soone as GOD withdraweth his spirite and working, all goeth too decay. Yea: but the Prophete addeth also, that if God spred foorth hys power, all is renewed in this worlde, and all things take their liuelinesse of him. VVee see then what wee haue to marke: that is to wit, that when wee knowe our selues to bee lesse than nothing, and that wee bee so subiect vnto death, as we must run thither (as ye would say) spite of our teeth: we must vnderstand also, that in this so great weaknesse, God holdeth vs by the hand, so as we be vphild by his power, & strengthened by his grace. Behold wherein we haue to reioyce. But the chiefe poynt is, that we should haue an eie to the benefit & good grace which God hath giuē vs about the order of nature in restoring vs by his worde, as the Prophet Esay sayth: All flesh is but as grasse. Verely man is greene and flourisheth for a while: but he withereth by and by. VVhereas the worde of the Lorde indureth for euer: yea, not onely too continue in heauen, but also to the ende that by it we may haue eueralting life, & be redeemed out of the vniuersall corruption of this earthly life, that God may dwell in vs & make vs partakers of his eueraltingnesse. VVee see then wherto we must come to profit our selues by this lesson, as we shal say yet once againe anon. Furthermore forasmuch as wee see our selues wanze away so fast, that from Morning to

Euening we go continually to our decay: therefore must we be the busier to bestow the time well that God giueth vs, bicause it is so short. God hath put vs into this worlde to keep vs occupied in his seruice: if we haue long time, yet can we not bee too diligent nor earnest in dooing our dutie, to discharge our selues when it shall come to the poynt to doo God seruice, both with our bodies and our soules. But forasmuch as wee see that he needeth but to turne his hand, and beholde we be at the last cast: ought we not to bee much more earnest to runne? according also as the Scripture exhorteth vs, shewing vs that this life heere is but as a race, and therefore wee may not go loyteringly, but euery man must cheere vp himselfe, and pricke and spurre forwarde himselfe. Thus wee see what we had as yet to note vpon this sentence, where it is sayd that men are consumed away from morning to night. But now let vs come to that which Eliphaz addeth. He sayth. That they perish for euer, bicause no man thinketh vpon it. A man might demaunde heere, whether we shun death when we thinke not vpon it. For in the nine and fortie Psalme, it is sayd that the wise men and fooles are gathered all into one herde. So then it behoueth vs to vnderstande, that all mankind is shet vp vnder this necessitie of dying. And wherefore then is it sayd heere, that all perishe for euer, bicause none thinke of it? First of all Eliphaz ment to teach vs heere, that men doo as it were wex beastly when they looke not to them selues. For loke what he speaketh here, we must alwayes referre it to the present case. He maketh it not his generall case to treat of, that mans life is transitorie, without going any further: but he intendeth to shewe vs, that forasmuch as wee bee poore filie creatures creeping heere vpon the earth: wee cannot attaine to the perfection of Angels, nor yet come neere it. So then whereas he sayth that all perish for euer bicause none thinke of it: he meeneth that men go on as brute beastes, without iudgement, without discretion, without thinking vpon death any long time aforehande, and therefore are taken tardie. On the other side he purpoueth to declare, what me are of their owne nature, were it not that God hath gathered them to himselfe, and gouerned them by his holie spirite, to the ende they should take heede to his doctrine. Beholde the two poyntes which wee haue to marke heere. And as touching the first, It draweth neere to the text which we alledged euen nowe out of the Prophet. For there the Prophet mocketh the carelesnesse of men, that make their account to dwell here bilow for euer, notwithstanding that they ought wel to perceyue what their life is: that is to wit, that in the turning of a hande ye shall see it broken off. But no man thinks of that: It should seeme that men take pleasure in beguiling & forgetting theselues: they consider not their endes, but they beare themselves in hande, that they be as it were Idols. Is not this a wilfull sotting of themselves in brutishnesse? But the Prophete sayth this follie is reproued, and that it is well knowne by experience, that men deceyue themselves and throw themselves hedlong into destruction, when they frame themselves such an immortalitye, as to imagine that they shall dwell here for euer. Thus wee see a folie heere, which is conuincid euen by eiesight. But yet (sayth he) so farre of are their posteritie from wexing any whitte the wyzer by it: that they be gathered thither in one flocke like sheepe, and the graue swalloweth them vp both great and small: and yet of all the while, none of them thinks vpon it. See howe this geere replyeth to the purpose of Eliphaz. So then let vs marke that the holie Ghoste intendeth too doo vs too vnderstande, that forasmuch as wee bee so flyghtfull, wee ought to haue death alwayes

Psal. 104. d.
29. 30.

Esay. 40. b.
6. 7. 8.

Psal. 49. b. 11

Psal. 49. c.
14. 15.

alwayes before our eyes, to the ende we should make hast thitherward, and not be attached with fearefulnesse when it shall please God to take vs out of this world, nor yet be amazed as wee see the most part to bee, who are stricken with such an astonishment, that they know not where they be. Therefore if we bethinke vs a great while afore hand what our end shall be, and vpon what condition we were created: then shall we not perish like fooles without thinking vpon it. But there is yet more: that is to wit, that we must haue a further foresight than to this matter onely, if we will not perish for euer. VVhy so? For here is mention made but of men in their owne kinde. Now it is certaine, that if we haue not an eie to the renewment which God maketh by the power of his spirite: we must all of vs be consumed. And for the better conceyuing heereof, let vs take the helpe of that which is sayd in the hundred and second psalme. There, to the intent that men should not ouerlike of themselves in their owne state, nor brag of any lustinesse of their owne: the Prophet giueth vs euen the very skies for an example. Although wee see so high a maiestie in them, as wee bee driuen into a maze with it: yet notwithstanding, euen those selfe same skies must grow olde, and be chaunged, and go into corruption as a garment doth. And what then shall become of men? Must not they needes be much more frayle? But in the meane season (saith he) the sonnes of Gods children shall continue. If we bee giuen to the feare of God, wee shall haue a firme and well settled state. Beholde how the Prophete separateth Gods children from the common order of nature, when they haue once the seede of life in them, whereof Sainct Paule also speaketh in the eight to the Romanes. For see howe he comforteth vs: forasmuch as we be loden with the burthen and with the corruptible weight of this bodie, wee haue (sayth hee) the spirite of God, which is the seede of our true life, and by his power we shall one day be fully restored. And therefore let vs marke well, that such as thinke vpon their frailtie as they ought to do: after they haue knowne themselves to be nothing, and that there is nought else but vanitie and leasing in them: shall not perish for a together. And why so? For they seeke the remedie which God hath offered them: which is, that they shall bee gathered out of this bondage of death, and be reued by God, who hath chosen them to himselfe, and make his power to flowe downe vpon them, that they may drawe water out of that fountaine of lyfe. VVe see then how such as bethinke themselves both of this present life, and of the ende thereof, cannot be consumed for euer, bicause God remedieth the wretched state wherein wee bee borne by nature, and calleth them to him selfe. This is it that we haue to gather of this sentence: and this is it that I touched not long since: that is to witte, that when we haue singly perceyued that our life is nothing, our so doing will not greatly boote vs. VVhy so? For it will but make vs dismayde. But if wee will take courage: we must haue an eie to both the points: that is to wit, that when we see the necessitie that is in vs vntil we draw neere vnto our God, we must mourne, and not do as the worldlings do, who beeing drunken in their pompes, pleasures, or riches, doo wittingly and willingly mocke and beguile themselves. But (as I haue sayd) wee must cast away all these kinde of blindfoldings, and open our eies: and when we be come vnto our God, and haue acknowledged the miserable plight wherein we bee, wee must assure our selues, that God will reach out his hand vnto vs, bicause hee seeketh nothing else but to succour vs, and to draw vs out of the darkenesse wherein we bee by nature. Thus wee see what wee haue to marke in effect. And immediately after, it is sayde, That the excellencie of men shall bee taken away in them, and that they shall perish [and] not in wisdom.

excellencie of men shall bee taken away in them, and that they shall perish [and] not in wisdom. True it is, that it behoueth vs to bee humbled by death: that is to witte, that God should bereue vs of all glorie, and that wee shoulde bee brought as it were to nothing, to the ende wee might know that al our stedfastnesse and power proceedeth not from else where, than from the free goodnesse of our God: and to be short, that we liue, not in our selues, but bicause it pleaseth God to haue vs too come neere vnto him, and that we should drawe out of the fulnesse that is in him, according as he hath giuen it vs in our Lord Iesus Christ. For hee is the fountaine that is opened vnto vs, and which God sheweth vs, and wherunto he leadeth vs, to the intent we may be filled therewith. Then behoueth it vs to be brought to nothing in our owne nature: and yet therewithall to know, that after that God hath once stripped vs out of it, he will cloth vs with it againe. And heere we see wherefore S. Paule (when he hath sayde that wee must grone so long as we liue in this world) addeth, not for that wee desire to bee vncloded, (for wee desire too bee heere still: beholde wherewith our nature driueth vs) but bicause wee knowe there is another better dwelling place prepared for vs, when this lodging of ours is once destroyed, and that God will cloth vs with his owne immortallitie, and bring vs againe into our true state. And this is the thing wherein wee differ from the vnbelieuers, and from those that haue not tasted a whitte of Gods grace. Thus we see why it is sayde in this sentence, Shall not all their excellencie bee taken away with them? For if ye do but behold what the present state of men is, and consider what they be in themselves: ye must needes conclude that they be brought to nothing by death. But we haue the grace of God, which is a supernaturall succor to vs, insomuch that in perishing we perish not, and when we be vncloded we be immediately clothed againe, as I haue sayd already. And thus we see why Eliphaz addeth, Not in wisdom. For he intendeth alwayes to condemne men bicause they bee so blockishe, as they neuer thinke vpon themselves. Then let vs marke, that it is great wisdom to prepare our selues vnto death, & to passe through it cheerfully when we come at it. I say we shall haue profited greatly, and be reputed for wise in Gods sight, when we shall haue learned this present lesson throughly, and be able to put it in vre to receyue frute by it: and yet notwithstanding we see how euery man shunneth it. For it is a melancholike matter, insomuch that if a man speake of death, euery man is greued at it, & falles into his dumps. Neuerthelessse the case so standeth, that if men set not their mindes vpon it: they must needes ouershoot themselves in all their deuises, and in all their consultations: and all the greatest wisdom that they weene too haue, must needes bee turned into foolishnesse. And wherefore? For is there any greater folly, than for a man not to know him selfe? to what purpose serue all our wisdom and discretion, but to looke too our selues? And so they that thinke not vpon death, ne put themselves in mind of it, ouershoot themselves as much as is possible for them. Yea they could finde in their hearts, to play the wilde Colts in forgetting themselves. VVe see then how it is all one, as if men ment to burie all the wit and reason that God hath giuen them. Therefore it is not without cause that Eliphaz condemne men heere, for dying without wisdom. For it is as much to say, as although God haue tolde them wherunto they must come, & haue set the Butte before their eies, as if he should say, Go me thither: yet they run astray all their life long, & know not whither they go. And when it cometh to the poynt that they must depart hence, they grunt and grudge at it, struing & fighting against god: and although it boote

Psal. 102. d.
27. 28. 29.

Rom. 8. b.
10. 11.

2. Cor. 5. 4. 2

it boote them not to doo so : yet shew they a furious sturdinesse. Thus then doo wee now see in effect, what wee haue to marke in this text. It remayneth to see the conclusion that Eliphaz maketh here : which is, that he sayth to Iob, that when hee hath turned him on all sides, hee shall not finde any saythfull man of his sort, nor of his companie, but that he is as a man vtterly forsaken of God. Hereby we see, that when he spake of men heretofore, he toke them as they are in their owne proper nature: that is too wit, without hauing any respect to the special grace which God giueth too those that are his, in opening his kingdom vnto him, in giuing them the hope of saluation, in gouerning them by his holy spirit, and in making them to go to a better and an everlasting life. Eliphaz then ment here, to set me down in their owne proper state & plight, such as they be of their owne selues, during the time that they be separated from god. And this appeareth in that he sayth to Iob, Thou canst not finde so much as one saythfull man of thy sorte, or whome thou mayest call thy companion. Why so? For (sayth hee) Anger sleaeth the sooles, and Enuie, (or spite, or fretting, or choler, or moodinesse, which gnaweth a man like a wilde beaft) is the thing (sayth he) which killeth the witleffe. But certesse, according as I haue declared a readie, Eliphaz doth amisse in applying this to the person of Iob: yea and hee doth him great wrong in it. Yet notwithstanding, this doctrine ceaseth not to be both true and verie profitable. As how? That is to wit, that as oft as we be chastized at Gods hande, wee must haue an eye to those that haue gone afore vs, to see whether they haue suffered the like torments and anguish or no. For if wee see Gods children too haue traced the path before vs: it must not grieue vs to bee ioyned with them. As how? VVe see that the holy fathers which were farre excellenter than all other men, haue indured aduersitie, no men more. Now if God haue not spared them: why should we chalenge more priuilege than they had? So then, as oft as we see that Gods children haue bene beaten with diuers rods, and vexed with many miseries and griefes: we haue wherewith to comfort our selues, and to cheere vp our hartes. For we must alwayes haue an eye to the ende, howe God neuer forsooke them, but pitied them when they were come too such extremities. So must wee also hope that hee will doo as much for vs. Marke this for a speciall poynt. Furthermore if wee will haue God too be pitifull and mercifull vnto vs in our aduersities: let vs beware that wee frette not agaynst him, and that we kicke not agaynst the spurre. For if we doo, then shall this sentence bee verified vpon vs, That anger sleaeth the foole: as if it were sayde, that such as chafe and grinde their teeth agaynst their afflictions, shew themselves too haue profited euil in Gods schole. And what shall they gaine by it in the ende? It shall bee a doubling of their miserie. VVhen they shall haue fomed out their rage agaynst GOD, or when they shall haue spewed out their blasphemies: do they thinke they haue wonne their pryze by it? Alas, it maye not bee so: they deceyue themselves too much. For (as I haue sayde a readie) it shall bee but a doubling of their miserie. Lo howe Anger sleaeth the foole. Moreouer when they haue a spyte at others, and shew the pleading agaynst GOD for dealing roughlier with them, than with such and such: what else doth suche manner of fretting, but make them to pine the selues awaye, so as in the ende they perishe and come vtterly too nought? Beholde what wee haue too gather vpon this Text. But the Papistes were too farre ouersotted, when they made this saying of Eliphaz to serue their turne, too prooue that men ought too pray too the Sainctes that are departed, and that men ought to flee to them for refuge. Beholde (say they) it is sayde that Iob shoulde haue a respect too some one of the Sainctes, and that he shoulde seeke to him, if peradventure hee would answer him. This is much to the purpose. For is it sayd heere, that Iob went to seeke to the dead too make intercession for him vntoo God? No: but contrariily (as I haue shewed heretofore) the very truth of the matter is, that he should not finde any of the Sainctes too bee of his companie. And why so? For the Sainctes were alwayes of a meeke mynde in theyr aduersities: and God chastized them after such a sort, as hee refrayned his rygour, so as the end was good and happye. And althoughe they had for a time bene as it were shaken off at his hande, in suche fort as it coule not be perceyued that hee had any care of them: yet notwithstanding they referred themselves vntoo him, and prayed alwayes vnto him, assuring themselves they should neuer be vtterly forsaken of him, nor disappointed of the saluation that he had promised them. Lo heere the intent of Eliphaz. So then we see heere that the Papistes are falsifiers, and haue manifestly corrupted the holy Scriptures. Verely they had neede to be borne withall in one behalfe: I meene not in their beaftlinesse: but in that they had verie great neede to wrest and wring the holic Scripture too prooue their dreames. They woulde make men beleue, that they ought too pray vnto Sainctes deceassed: and yet the holy Scripture cyphereth not one woorde of it, neyther can a man finde so much as one sillable there for the good prooue of it. But they wil proue it: and therefore they muste needes confounde all, and white must bee turned into blacke. But in the meane while it behooueth vs too shunne all mennes inuentions, which haue bene foolishly contriued without Gods warrant. And wherefore? For first of all men wander out of the right way of saluation, when they follow their owne deuises: and secondlie it causeth the holy Scripture too bee torne a peeces, so as men corrupt it and turne it vpyde downe. Therefore let vs learne to mislyke whatsoever thing men haue forged of their owne braine, and let vs holde vs to this simpliciie, namely that we must not couet too knowe ought, sauing that which God hath declared too vs with his owne mouth. And too conclude, let vs marke well these twoo poyntes, which wee haue glaunced at a readie: that is too witte, as often as we be scourged by Gods hande, let vs marke well whither the saythfull that haue gone before vs, haue not bene in the lyke plight. If wee finde that God hath exercysed them in manye tribulations: let vs comfort oure selues when it commeth too our turne too followe them, and let vs bee sure that God will not forsake vs at our neede, no more than hee forsooke them. Furthermore when wee see that God doth scourge vs in these dayes as well generally as particularly, and that wee must bee fayne to indure manye tormentes and troubles: Let vs acknowledge our selues too bee well woorthie of them, considering the great thanklesse that is too bee seene in vs. For whereas it hath pleased God to call vs vntoo the knowledge of his Gospell, and too haue vs yelde a recorde that wee bee hys children: howe doo wee take anye profite by this hys grace? Nay, contrarywise it seemeth, that there is in vs a delight too disanull it and too make it vnauayelable. Howe is God serued and honoured at our handes? wee ought too bee (as yee woulde saye) little Angelles, considering the light of the Gospell whiche GOD hath giuen vnto vs. And yet wee see there is nothing but naughtinesse and hypocrisie in the most part of men: VVe can good skill to make some preteltation of oure sayth: But let a man man examine oure lyfe, and hee shall finde no conformitie to the Gospell, but rather it seemeth, that wee haue conspired against God, to withdraw our selues from him. VVe see how they that haue some goodly outward shew, become brutish: and therefore let vs be sure that God visiteth vs with his whippes because of our sinnes. Yet notwithstanding let vs not cease to trust in him continually, and to call vpon him, praying him too burie our former faultes, and too guide vs in such wise hencefoorth, as it may serue to drawe vs vntoo limselfe: And too the intent hee may haue pitie vpon vs, let vs come vntoo him with a lowly minde, so as wee haue no peece of the enuie and hartburning in vs whereof mention is made heere: assuring our selues, that if wee haue, it will but styrrer vp and inflame Gods vengeance the more agaynste vs. VVhen wee be come too suche a sturdinesse, it behoueth GOD also too rushe stoutely vpon vs, as it is sayde in the eighteenth Psalme. VVith the frowarde thou wilt deale frowardely. For if men wyll needes playe the wyld beasts: it is sayde that God will stryke them both sidelings & ouerthwart. And therefore let vs beware of this fretting and chafing, and of such maner of repyning: and let vs rather acknowledge oure selues woorthie of an hundred thousand deathes, were it not that God pytieth vs and succoreth vs of his infinite goodnesse. And if wee doo thus, let vs not doubt but God will performe that which he hath promised vs: that is too witte, that after hee hath beaten vs, (howbeit with mens rods, keeping such measure as we shall not bee vtterly destroyed) he will withdraw his hande againe, and we shall feele him mercifull and fauourable in our Lorde Iesus Christ, as in whom he hath set fourth the riches of his goodnesse and fatherly loue towards vs.

Then let vs humble our selues before the throne of his maiestie, beseeching him to make vs perceyue our faults is such sort, as wee may become our owne iudge in preventing his iudgemēt, to the intent that being so cōdēned by our owne selues, we may desire nothing but to please him in al respects, vntill hee haue bereft vs of this mortall body, & deliuered vs frō the bondage of sin (wherin we be as yet shut vp) to take vs into his heauenly kingdome. And so let vs say, Almighty God and heauenly father. &c.

The eighteenth Sermon, which is the seconde vpon the fift Chapter.

3. I haue seene the foole taking roote, and immediately I haue cursed his house.
4. His children shall bee farre from helpe, they shall bee troden dovvne in the gate and no man shall deliuer them.
5. The hungrie shall eate vp his haruest, and picke it out of the midst of the thornes, and the thirstie shall drinke vp his riches.
6. Miserie commeth not from out of the dust, neyther dooth trouble growe out of the earth.
7. But man is borne to trauaile, and the sparkes flie vpvuarde.

E haue seene heretofore what they win which repine against God, and accuse him of crueltie, & passe their boundes into al impaciencie: that is to wit, that they make their case the worser, and that they must bee consumed in their fretting and rage.

But forasmuch as oftentimes the despizers of God doo prosper and are well at their ease: here is mention made of their state, notwithstanding that men esteeme them happie to the worldward. Eliphaz sayth that when he sawe a foolish man in prosperitie, he iudged not after the common trade, (which is to say, This man is happie, he is blessed of God:) but knewe by and by that the ende of him should bee euill, and that hee should be punished euen in his offspring. And although Eliphaz do misapplie this sentence vntoo Iobs person: yet is it the doctrine of God and of the holye Ghoste, and not of man. For God doth oftentimes vtter such kinde of sayings too turne vs from the false opinion which wee may conceyue, when wee see not them punished out of hande which runne intoo such excessse of wickednesse, but rather (too oure seeming) are fauoured of God. I knowe what the common opinion is, for wee esteeme things after as they may bee seene by the eye, and our minde wadeth no further. If God lift vp his hande and execute any iustice that may bee seene: scarcely will men vouchsafe too regarde it. But if hee wynde at things, and tarie patiently for the sinners, wee thinke him too bee asleepe, and that hee gouerneth not the world, but letteth things go at randon without anye minde too remedie them. See howe blockishe we bee. But our Lorde sheweth vs, that the wicked cease not to bee cursed, euen in the middes of their prosperitie, and that we neede not to spite them for their good fortune as they terme it. For they must bee double punished, so as it were farre better for them that they were miserable, bycause they shall paye ouer deere for theyr pleasures. Beholde in effect what Eliphaz sayeth. And beholde also why I sayde that it behoueth vs too marke well this sentence: namely because it conteyneth a verie profitable lesson. And that wee maye the better profite our selues by that which is conteyned heere: first it behoueth vs to note, that this worde foole, is put for all such as regarde not God. For although the worlde take those too bee wise men, which can skil to deale well for their owne profit, and can shift their matters cunningly (as they say:) the holy scripture telleth vs, there is none other wisdome, but the feare of God. Then if we haue our eie vpon God, so as we direct our life according too his will, and put our whole trust in him, to haue recourse too him for succour: behold, the same is our true wisdome. And here we see why S. Paule sayth, that such as are learned in the Gospell, are perfectly wise. For there they find howe to order their whole life without misising or erring. Although then that men bee full of suttletie and fine conueyance, and wene themselues too bee verie wise. Yet must wee holde vs to this that is taught vs heere, how it is eueriwhit of it but folly and vanity, so long as the feare of God raigenth not in them. And now let vs come to that which is sayde heere. I haue cursed the, notwithstanding that hee had taken roote, yea and I haue cursed his house immediately. VVhen hee speaketh of taking roote: it is to expresse, that it seemed well that the prosperitie should haue continued firme and stable. If Eliphaz had sayd, I haue seen the foole aduanced aloft to great dignitie: hee had not expressed so much as hee doth. For hee sayeth hee is planted, because the despizers of God and all peruerse and frowarde folke, hope to haue fortune alwayes in their sleeue.

And

Col. 1. d. 28.

And like as a tree that is throughly well fattled and deeply rooted in the ground, standeth fast though it be shaken with windes and stormes: euen so it seemeth that after God hath once aduanced the wicked, they shall reigne continually, & their triumphes shall neuer come to an end. But Eliphaz sayth, that when he saw such a likelihood, hee forbare not too curse the wicked out of hande: and hee sayth out of hand or immediatly, meening that he taried not til there came a change, as we comonly do, who at the first blush, whē we see the despisers of God to be in their cheefe ruffe, and to haue the winde at their sterne as they terme it, doo linger the time and are as it were astonied, saying, what will this geere proue to? If we perceiue them to be falling into decay, then we chaunge our minde: but so long as we see them flourish, we wote not what to say, we be at our wits end. Contrariwise Eliphaz telleth vs, that hee was not abashed a whitte at the matter, but spake his minde according to that which God had vttered. For his comming to giue iudgement and condemnation heere, is not of his owne head and after his owne fancie: but hee declareth that according as God sheweth vs that the wicked shall be confounded in the end, so he grounded himselfe therevpon, and was not shaken from it by any temptation, but although he had seene the wicked flie so high a pitch, yet hee hilde still at one stay, saying: They must needes come to nought. Nowe wee see in effect what is conteyned here. And let vs applie this lesson to our owne vse, that we may knowe how well agreeable the same is vnto vs. True it is that we haue not to do with that condemning of other men: for it standeth euery man in hand, rather to looke vnto himselfe, and that is the thing wher-vnto euery one of vs must applie his indeuer. For those that meddle so hastily with the iudging of their neighbors, forget themselues, & God will not spare thē though they flatter themselues: they must be faine to come before their iudge, who wil handle them rigorously, bicause they ouerslipt themselues so much in their owne faults. Let vs note then, that our minde must not gad heere and there ro seeke out the euill that is in our neighbours: but euery man must enter into himselfe, and examin his owne state and life: and when we finde any fault in our selues, we must condemne it. Furthermore whereas it is sayd that we must also curse the wicked and the despizers of God: it is not to yelde such authoritie or preheminence to vs as of our selues. Howe is it then? First of all if the wicked sort persecute or trouble vs, so as they doo vs any wrong or annoyance: wee imagine that God hath giuen vs ouer, and that he careth no more for vs. And heerevpon we be tempted too conceyue a greefe as though we had lost our time by walking in singleness and vprightness, saying: Howe nowe? I looked that God should haue succoured mee at my neede: but I haue serued him, I haue put my trust in him, and yet he suffereth mee too bee tormented to the vttermost, I finde no releef: when I pray vnto him, hee makes as though he were deafe. VVee see heere a verie troublesome temptation, when GOD seemeth too make none account of succoring vs, at such tyme as men misintreate vs and persecute vs. And therefore, too comfort our selues withall, wee must practise this lesson in all our troubles and incomerances: which is, that though the wicked bee in their tryumphe too daye, so as they sette their foote vpon out throte: it is not for that GOD hath forgotten vs, or for that hee will not sende vs remedie of it in the ende: But let vs wayte with patience, and wee shall fynde the issue too bee suche as GOD hath promised: that is to witte, that he will regarde vs with mercie. Nowe then wee see what profite redoundeth vntoo vs by cursing the wicked: that is to wit, wee shall perceyue howe there is nothing but unhappinesse in all their estate throughout. But let vs proccede yet further. VVhen wee see the wicked too haue a better tyme than the good men and the children of God: when wee see them craftie and politike: when we see them triumph: and euen when they seeme to bee exempted from the common miseries of this earthly life: I say when we see this: we be vexed, and wee wote not what too say, nor what too thinke: for it seemeth that it were better to giue our selues to lewdnesse than to good, forsomuch as God setteth no better order in the matters of this world. But to the intent we bee not prouoked to doo amisse, wee must take this for a conclusion: that is to wit, that when the despisers of God seeme too bee as Kings and Princes, so as they take theyr pleasure and glorie in their estate: yet they ceasse not too bee cursed. True it is that this cursednesse appeereth not at the first day, for it is secreete: But it must haue leysure too shewe it selfe. And on the other side, we must beholde the thing though it cannot be seene with eie: yea we must beholde it by fayth: and bicause God hath spoken it already with his owne mouth, we must stick vntoo that which hee sayth. And it is the selfe same matter that the seuen and thirtie Psalmes treateth of. For as much as wee see things so confounded during this mortall life, as the wicked and frowarde fort not onely haue their ease as well as the good, but also it seemeth that God is minded too cocker them and to shewe them al fauour: by reason whereof wee may see them perking vp and flourishing like the Ceders in mount Libanus, and to be short, all that they desire commeth to effect, and it seemeth that their eyes will stroute out of their heades for fatnesse, as the three score and thirteenth Psalmes saith. VVhat is to bee done in this case? The worlde deemeth such folke blessed: and men clap their handes at them on all sides. VVee must curse them: that is to say, we must bee fully resolued with our selues that all this is nothing, and why so? For God hath tolde vs it is so. Then will he not haue our eyes to bee bleared with present things: but he will haue vs assure our selues by fayth, that all this shal turne to the mischief and vtter vndooing of such as submit not themselues vntoo him. And as concerning this worde Curse, let vs marke that it giueth not vs scope too wishe the mischief or confusion of the partie, (I meane through desire of vengeance, as oftentimes we bee so carryed away by our pafsions, as there raigneth nothing in vs but hartburning and bitternesse, or at leastwise a foolish and vndiscrete zeale: ) But whereas it is sayde that Eliphaz cursed the wicked mans house: it importeth nothing else, but that he hilde him to that which the Scripture teacheth and sheweth vs. And therefore it is not for vs to be iudges: for it were too great a rashnesse, if wee should take so much preheminence vpon vs as to say, O, that man shall make an euill end, or such a man shall come to shame. A man must not presume so farre: but it belögeth to God only to curse or to blesse. On our part we haue no more to do, but to agree to that which he saith, answering, So be it Lord, thou only art the competent iudge of all the worlde. Then doth it behoue vs to herken what he telleth vs, and to obey his sayings, without any replying to the contrary, or without any demanding how it should bee possible too bee done, or howe it maye bee gone in hande with. For if GOD haue once spoken the worde, euerie one of vs must holde himselfe contented with it. Nowe wee see what this worde Curse importeth. It remayneth that we gather the whole summe of that which is conteyned heere. For these two temptations which are cast in our way are so commō, that euery of vs seeleth feeleth himselfe to haue neede to bee armed against it : for we shall euer be in daunger of miscarying, vnlesse we take hold of the conclusion that is set down here. Therefore whensoever wee bee outrageously mistreated by the wicked, and that they haue vs at any aduantage, so as it should seeme they would deuoure vs, and that wee haue no meanes to put them from vs : let vs make much of this sentence, and call it to remembrance, that in the end God will not suffer the wicked to ruffle it out continually (for he is wel able to redresse things amisse) which thing we may be sure of, seing that he sheweth it vs in verie effect and by experience. Beholde heere an inestimable comfort for the faithfull when they be oppressed and tormented wrongfully : which is, to knowe that those which so persecute them, are cursed of God.

And furthermore let vs vnderstand on the contrary part also, that our afflictions are blisfed : that is to say, that although the worlde esteeme vs as wretches, so as we be a gazingstock, and haue our fleeces eaten from our backs, yea and be also troubled and tormented : yet for all this, God ceaseth not to dispose things in suche wyse, as the euill is to vs warde turned intoo good, and all this their dealing shall further our welfare. Behold how the children of God ought to cheere vp themselves in the mids of their sorowes. And heere wee see why it is sayd in the Psalme, that God will cutte asunder the cordes of the wicked, which draw the plough vpon the backe of his churche : namely to the intente that good men shoulde not stretche out their handes to doo euill, as commonly we thinke that things shal continue alway in that broile, and that there shall neuer be any better ende of them : & therupon we be tempted to giue ouer our selues vnto euill, and when any man goeth about to doo vs wrong, it is the next way to set vs in a chafe against him. VVe see then that such as be desirous to walk in the feare of God and in singleness, are in daunger to stretche oute their handes vnto euill, that is to say, to giue themselves to the folowing of the wicked. But God sheweth that hee will cut asunder the cordes of them that tormente vs so, and that they shal haue no more abilitie to anoy vs hereafter. Marke this for a speciall poynt. And furthermore when we see that suche as scorne God to the full, and are giuen ouer to all lewdnesse, are not restrayned of their full scope, but take the benefite of the tyme, so as Ladie Fortune (as they terme it) seemeth to laugh vpon them: Let vs not cease to curse them, that is to say, let vs patiently wayt what the ende of them shall be, and assure our selues that all their prosperitie shall turne to their confusion, to the intent that we should not enuie them for it. And finally let vs learne to applye all this to oure vse, as I haue sayd. Therefore if God suffer vs to indure much in this worlde too humble vs withall, so as one of vs is smitten with sicknesse, another with pouertie, and euery man beareth his owne crosse : let vs not thinke for all this, that God hath forgotten vs, or that our state is the woorse. And why so? For like as we curse the wicked in their prosperitie, and know it is nothing else but a dream which glideth away by and by : so also on the contrary part, when it shall seeme that God hath shaken vs off, when the worlde iudgeth the fame of vs, and when oure own flesh and our own nature prouoke vs to such temptations : Let vs assure our selues that God will turne all to our welfare, and that his afflicting of vs is, because we haue neede to be wounde out of this intangling worlde here, and that in so doing, he dothe the duetie of a Physicion towards vs, intending to purge vs from all oure naughtie corruptions, and from all the outrageous lustes of our fleshe, which make vs to kicke agaynst our master lyke horffes that are ouerpampere.d God then foreseeeth all this. Also let vs holde it for certayne and sure, that wee bee blisfed when the worlde seeth nothing but cursednesse in vs : and that euen when (according too the fleshe) wee can perceyue nothyng but vnhappy-nesse : euen then wee see by fayth, that we can not lyght otherwyse than vpon oure feete, bycause God loueth vs and sheweth himselfe to bee our father. VVe see in effect what we haue to beare in mynde. But lette vs bee well aduysed, that we cast not foorth suche sentence of cursing, but agaynst fooles. As for vs, we can not iudge who be fooles, except we haue Gods spirite to guyde vs with suche discretion as we maye not iudge at all aduerture. I haue tolde you alredie who be the fooles that Eliphaz speaketh of : that is to wit, those whome menne woulde take too be the wysest, and whiche glorie of the fynenesse and fittletie of their wittes. Yea, but for so muche as they feare not the liuing God, and are so carryed away as they looke not cuen to themselves : we see the reason why there is nothing but folie in them. VVil we iudge of suche men? First of all lette vs haue an eye vntoo God, and secondly lette euerye of vs enter intoo himselfe, and examine himselfe well. For that is the true wisdom, and therein it consisteth. I saye we must first and formoste haue an eye vnto God : that is too wit, too submit our selues wholly vntoo him, too serue him in true humilitie, too frame our selues vntoo his woorde, to put oure whole trust in his grace, too call vpon hym, and to flee to him for refuge.

Thus wee see at what poynte wee must begin, if wee mynde too haue a true rule of wysedome. And afterwarde lette vs enter intoo our owne selues too vnderstande our owne vices and wantes, that wee may myslyke our selues for them, and syghe when we see that wee keepe not our way foorth on to Godwarde as wee oughte to doo. VVhen wee haue doone so, wee maye haue a good discretion to iudge of fooles. For although the worlde clappe their handes at the wicked : yet lette not vs cease to set light by them, yea and to hate them, and to abhorre them, as it is said in the fiftenth Psalme. For wee muste haue none in estimation but suche as walke in the feare of God. Psalme. 15. b. 4

Beholde who ought to be honourable, and honoured among vs. For as for all these despisers of God whiche delight in naughtynesse : we must esteeme them but as dirt and myre, wee must accounte their dooings but as fylth, so as wee can not abyde the stinche of it. For they liue not but too the dishonour of God : and when men make reuerence too them, or sooth them vp : we muste abhorre them as dogges, and as filthinesse that dothe but infect the whole worlde. Thus we see howe we ought to procede, that wee may iudge accordingly with God. And therewithall let vs also practise the thing that is set downe here when Eliphaz sayeth, that he out of hande demed them accursed whom the world thought to haue attayned to the full measure of all felicitie. VVherby it is met, that we must not change our opinion, according to the alterations that we see in the world, whē we perceiue the wicked to be exalted, so as it seemeth too vs that all will come to naughte, or rather that God executeh not his office any more, and that it is all one to doo good or euill, and that it is to no purpose to doo well. Therefore let vs not be so swift and hastie to iudge according too the successe of things : but lette vs consider, that bee the world neuer so troublesome, wee must always conclude, that whatsoeuer God hath once declared vntoo vs, shall be fulfilled. Too be shorte, there is no reason why wee should measure Gods iudgements after our owne fan-

He. But let vs hearken to that whiche he sayth vnto vs: and although that at the firste dash we perceiue not the effect and accomplishment of that whiche is conteyned in the holie scripture: yet let sayth worke in that behalf, and hold vs backe, and lette not our wits roaue here and there, but let vs say: Seing it is so, that this man is a despizer of God, and leadeth a loose life: it can not be but he must come to an euill end. And why so? Not for that wee know it alreadie, nor for that the missehap sheweth it selfe: but bycause God hathe sayde it: and that muste suffyze vs.

Moreouer, lette vs learne too saye it as it is conteyned here. For Eliphaz meaneth not that he heard other men report, behold such a man shall be cursed, or he shall be vnhappy: but he saith he trusted in God that it should be so. And although he sawe things confused in the worlde: yet notwithstanding, he was fully perswaded that none were blisfed but the children of God, and such as honored him, and leaned altogether to his goodnesse, yea and that although they were persecuted, and mocked, and reiected, and made a laughingstocke, so as it should seeme they were starke doltes because they had not the iolitie of this worlde: yet for all that, they ceased not too bee accepted and allowed of at Gods hande, notwithstanding that the worlde deemed the contrarie.

Beholde what we haue to remember in this sentence. But if euer any tyme required too practize this lesson: these dayes require it. For the worlde is full of the contempt of God. Verely a man shall see wylinesse inough, and that folks wittes are sharpe and futtle inough in these dayes: but a man shall see few or none that regard God, the number of these is verie smal: nay rather, men walk so rashly and headily, as yee would say, there were no religion at all: all the worlde seeth it. Also we see that iniquitie reigneth extremely, euen in such wise as the most part of men are become shamelesse, and are no more ashamed to do euill. Wee see things thus confused, and yet, which are they whome wee esteeme to be mooste in Gods fauour? Euen the woofte, and such as are furthest out of square, conditionally that they be futtle and sharpe witted to bring their matters wel about: for if they be full of wiles and shifts, then behold they be wise and discrete men. But although the wicked bee had in suche estimation, and euery man make much of them: yet let vs holde them accursed, bycause God is at oddes wyth them, and can not shew them any fauor. And herewithall let vs curse the euill men, yea and let vs doe it out of hande. That is to say, let vs nottarie till God lift vp his hande, and worke by some manifeste meanes: for that were to do him verie smal honour, and too make no further account of his iustice, than wee see it in execution. But when the wicked men are in their brauerie, and are proud of their good fortune, as they terme it: then let vs take some of them and abhorre them, and let vs holde them for accursed whatsoeuer come of it. Specially wee ought to marke well that whiche Eliphaz addeth: which is, That the children of them that despyse God, shall fall downe in the Gate, and shall bee sette farre from saluation, and no man shall succoure them.

Hee dothe vs too vnderstande, that if God accomplish his iudgements heere, hee can well worke them vpon the offspring of suche as shal seeme too haue escaped his hande. Howe is that? There may be some that shall giue themselues wholly vnto euill, so long as they liue, and God shall suffer them too gather goodes, and too increase continually, and too heape vp riches anewe, euen till their dying day: and yet notwithstanding for all thys they bee cursed, and their ryches and reuenues are cursed as well as they. Not that the curffe is perceyued in the person of the father, but bycause it shall shewe it selfe in his children.

Hereby we bee admonished, that God hathe diuers manners of executing his vengeance, and therefore lette vs learne to walke in feare and aduisednesse. Verely at the fyrste syghte it maye seeme straunge, why God should punishe children for their fathers sakes: but yet thys doctrine is ryfe ynoughe in the Scripture. And besides this, it is meant heere, of suche as are like theyr Fathers. For God doothe well shewe hymselfe too bee the Sauoure of suche as are borne and descended of euill auncesters, as wee see examples of it in holie Scripture. But yet for all that, it falleth out mooste commonly, that the issue of the wicked sort is accursed, according also as God auoucheth, that hee will pursue his vengeance too the thirde and fourthe generation, vpon those that despyze hym, and lifte vp themselues agaynste him.

And there is a double manner of punishing the wickednesse of the fathers vpon their children. For sometymes God sheweth mercie to the children, and yet notwithstanding cesseth not to chastize the vnrightuousnesse of their fathers in the persones of theyr children. As for example: wee see a father that hathe gotten muche goodes, howbeit by wicked bargayning, by futtleie, by craft, and by crueltie: and yet will God haue pitie vpon the chyld of suche a man. And what will hee doo? Hee will ridde him quite and cleane of all those euil gotten goodes, because they would but bring him too confusion: according as it is sayd, that suche kynde of riches are as wood, whiche in the ende will kindle the fyre of Gods wrath. Therefore when our Lorde meaneth too saue the chyld of a wicked man that hath liued amisse: he bereueth him of all his euil gotten goods, as though he should let him bloud to saue his lyfe, that hee mighte not bee wrapped in the mischiefe and corruption which his father had drawne vntoo himselfe.

*Esa. 5. f. 24.
Zach. 5. b. 4.*

Beholde, howe God punisheth the wickednesse of the fathers vpon the chyldren, and yet ceaseth not too bee the Sauoure of the chyldren, and too shewe them mercie. Sometymes hee passeth further, and because the fathers haue bene so farre oute of all square, as they haue ledde a stubbornne frowarde lyfe, GOD forsaketh theyr offspring, insomuche that the grace of his holie Spirit dwelleth not wyth them. Nowe when wee bee so destitute of Gods guying, wee must needs runne into destruction, and needs must the mischief increase more and more.

Thus wee see that when the children of the vngodlie doo beare the synnes of theyr fathers, it is not onely for that God forsaketh them, and leaueth them vp in the state of their owne nature: but also for that he gyueth Satan full power ouer them, and letteth hym haue the brydle, too reygne in suche houses at his own pleasure. And when the diuell hathe ledde awaye the fathers, and caryed them too all naughtynesse: theyr chyldren shall also ouershoote themselues intoo excessive outrage. Wee see then as now what is ment heere, that is too wit, that when the chyldren of wicked men are once destitute of Gods grace, and walke after their owne inordinate lustes: they muste needs come too greater confusyon than their fathers.

And thus yee may see why it is sayd, that they shall bee destitute of healpe, and that they shall fall downe at the gate: that is too witte, bycause they shall fall, not in a Forrest among theeues, but by open iustice.

For

For in the Scripture the word Gate signifieth iudgement, bycause mens caces were wont to be debated there, and it was the place where common assemblies were made, and finally it was the seate of iustice. And this is it that is ment in the Psalme where it is said, that the children of good men and of suche as are blisfed of God, shall be mainteyned in the Gate, and put their enemies to confusion. Likewise on the contrary part it is sayde in this text that the children of the wicked shall stumble, and be crushed in peeces, yea euen by playne iustice. VVhereby it is the better expressed, how God persecuteth them openly, so as it is apparant to the eye, that it is he which layeth his hand vpon them. For he addeth immediatly, That no man shall succoure them. For when God mindeth to put men so to destruction, hee leaueth them destitute of all meanes of help and succoure. In deede some do referre this vnto men: but it is to be vnderstoode, how it is God that hath bestripped them and left them destitute of all succoure, to the intent they should neuer be holpen vpon agayne. But as for our partes, (according to that whiche I haue touched already) we haue so muche the more cause to cast downe our eyes, & to pray God to make vs walke aright in his obedience, and that although wee perceiue not his curse vpon vs nor vpon our childre, yet notwithstanding we may take it for a conclusion, that God hath meanes to vs inco[n]prehensible, in somuche that when it shall seeme vnto vs that all thinges go well, and that wee haue provided aforehande, not onely for our whole life, but also for after our death, that our children also may be in good surenesse of welfare, so as it may seeme we haue set all thinges in good order, and nothing is amisse: we may consider that all this is nothing, and that as soone as God do but blowe vpon our determinacions and deuises, he shall turne them all vpside downe. VVhen wee knowe this, let vs not abuse his pacience: and if hee spare vs for a time, let it not make vs to ouersleepe our selues and to sooth our selues in our vices: but let it learne vs to returne vnto him in due season, and to prevent this vengeance wherewith he menaceth al despisers in this place. But herewithall let vs marke, that oftentimes the good men and their childre may happen to be persecuted vniustly. Neuertheless the holy Ghost presupposeth that which is true, and which we also may sticke vnto as most certayne and infallible: whiche is, that in scourging and troubling of vs, God hath a respect to provide for vs by it in the end: and when he hath sufficiently tried vs, and humbled vs, he will turne the euill to our benefite and to our welfare, as I haue saide. But contrarywise, whereas it is said that the race of the wicked shall stumble and be set farre from help: it is to expresse that whē God intendeth to punish the wicked, he proceedeth with it in such sorte, as men may perceiue hee doth it not to tame them, that they might returne vnto him, nor to mortifie their fleshly affections, nor finally to cure them like a phisicion: but to confound them and to bring them to vtter destruction. Behold what the holy ghost presupposeth. Also let vs learne to discern the chastizements that God vseth towardes his children to their benefite, from the punishments which he sendeth vpon the wicked, not to amend them, but to shew himselfe a iudge against them. It fo-loweth, That the goodes of such men shall be deuoured by the hungrie, yea euen to the picking out of their corne from among the thornes: so as not only their feelds shall be reaped by their enemies, who shall deuoure al their substance: but also men shall scrape altogether that is betweene the hedges, so as if there be any thing hidden, (and it be but a two or three eares of corne among the bushes,) it shall be gleaned vp. Heereby Eliphaz meeneth, that Gods iudgements vpon the wicked, are not lyke vnto the corrections which he sendeth too his children: but that he sheweth howe he hath vtterly cast them off, and that he pitieth them not any more, and that hee will not haue them feele any more of his fatherly goodnesse, bycause he acknowledgeth them not for his. Lo what the effect is of that whiche is spoken here.

And heerevpon wee haue now too call too mynde what I haue declared afore: that is too wit, that if wee be troubled, vexed and tormented by the wicked: wee must patiently abyde Gods leysure till hee put too his hande to succour vs. And although wee perceiue not Gods iudgements at the first pulhe: yet notwithstanding let vs assure our selues, that hee will execute them in due tyme and place. Also when we see the execution of them, let the same make vs too stande in awe: and sith we see his vengeance is so horrible, let vs brydle our selues, and beware wee tempt not God, as saincte Paule also exhorteth vs. Lette no man abuse you (sayeth hee) with vayne woordes. For by reason of suche things, the vengeance of God is wont to come vpon the vnbelie-
Ephes. 5. 6. uers and stubborne persons. Therefore when God doth so shewe vs his iudgements, lette vs quake at them, and lette vs stande in feare and awe of him, submitting our selues wholly too that which he sayeth and vttereth. And this is it that he addeth (howbeit, that it can not be expounded at this present) namely, that it becommeth vs too yelde our selues in suche wyse too Gods wil, as we maye answere Sobeit too all that euer he sayth vnto vs, assuring our selues that things fall not out by chaunce in this world: nor that it is long of the earth, aire, or heauen that men are afflicted: but that men beare their bane in themselues. Then let vs acknowledge it, and when there happen any afflictions in the worlde, let vs bee sure it is the hand of God, which lighteth vpon vs for our sinnes, & that al the mischief cometh of our selues, and that wee haue the verie welspring & groundwork thereof within vs. Let vs (I saye) acknowledge this, to the ende we may misselike of our selues in our vices, and thervpon praye God to drawe vs too himselfe, and too make his graces whiche he hath put into vs, auaylable to oure sauation, that being maynteyned by his power whiche he hath openly shewed towards vs in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, we may be able to prosper through his blissing.

And let vs cast our selues doune before the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of oure faultes, praying him to make vs feele the in such wise, as we may returne to him in true repētance, and suffer our selues to be gouerned henceforth by his hand, yea after such manner, as his holie name may bee glorified by vs in all our whole lyfe. And so lette vs all saye, Almighty God and heauenly father, &c.

The ninteenth Sermon, which is the thirde vpon the fifth Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth yet still the exposition of the sixth and seuenth verses, and then as foloweth.

8. But I vvill reason vvith God and turne my talke vnto God.
9. It is hee that dothe greate vvoorckes, yea euen vviscerchable vvoorcks, and vvwhich doth vvonderfull deedes vvithout ende.
10. VVhich giueth rain vpon the earth, vvwhich maketh the vvaters to igushe dovvne the streetes.

Began heretofore too tell what is meant by this saying, That trouble commeth not out of the earth, nor miserie out of the dust, but that man is borne to labour. For when wee bee troubled with any inconuenience, wee gaze about vs here and there, and searche all the corners of our wits, to fynd the cause of it out of ourselues, & yet of al the whyle we perceiue not that God scourgeth vs for oure sinnes, and that the fountaine of all the aduersities and mishaps that we indure here belowe, must be sought for in oure owne lyfe. Then are wee warned by this sentence, that when wee heare speaking of the miseries of mannes lyfe, and that ech one of vs also feeleth his part & portion therof: our wittes must not wander abrode, nor fetch long wyndlasses atoneside or atother: but every man muste enter into himselfe too searche out his owne sinnes, and so shall wee finde, that it is no maruel though we be beset round about with so many necessities, and our lyfe subiect to this so wretched state. VVhy so? For lyke as wood carryeth that nature and proprietie in it, that hee receyueth fire and kindleth easily: so alio standeth the case with vs. For we haue sin, which is as it were the wood and matter of all afflictions: wherevpon commeth the wrath of god, & so must we nedes be consumed. The sparkles therfore do flye aloft (saith Eliphaz) and yet if there were not a secret operatiō in the steele when it is striken vpon the stiche, it is certain that no sparks would passe out. Euē so it behoueth vs to vnderstand, that the fyre of all our miseries is inclosed in our selues. And we shal haue profited greatly if we beare away this lesson. For although every one of vs confesse, that God scourgeth vs iustly: yet doo we not enter into this foresayd consideration, but rather labour to shunne it as muche as we can. VVhensoever a man hath any aduersitie, God knocketh at his dore, and prouoketh him to thinke vpon his sinnes. But the man makes none account of it, yea rather (which woorse is) he sleepeth soundly in his aduersitie, and fathereth it either vpon this thing or vpon that, and he will fynd some casual chauce or other, which he goeth to seeke a great way off, and neuer entreteth into the examination of his owne lyfe. Therefore wheras we be subiecte to so many miseries and wantes: let vs learne to take the whole burthen and blame of it vpon our selues, and not charge eyther heauē or earth with it. As for example, when we see the weather distempered, so as there commeth frost, or thunder, or hayle: lette vs assure our selues, it is not the aire that is so disposed of it self: or if there come a drought, it is not the heauen that is so hardened of it owne nature: or if the earth be barrein, it proceedeth not of it owne kinde, but we our selues are the cause of all. And therefore when it is said that wee be borne vnto it, Eliphaz presuppofeth, that forasmuche as we bee borne too euill, and are wholly inclined to ouermany vices: it is meeete that we should be handled thereafter, and that God shuld answer vs according as we come vnto him. But verily we bring all corruption with vs out of oure mothers wombe, so as we be naturally giuen to naughtinesse and sinne: and therefore must our state be sutable therevnto: that is to say, forasmuch as God findeth vs to be such, he must also sende vs that which he knoweth to be conuenient, iust and ryghtful for vs. And so Eliphaz meeneth not that God hath created vs of purpose to deale so hardly with vs: but he taketh man in his corrupt nature ever since he was turned away from God, and saith it is requisite that his estate shuld be such as it is. bicause we be not able to conceiue how God spreadeth oute his goodnesse vppon vs, and intreateth vs gently, as if we were obedient vnto him in all pointes. But forasmuch as men doo neuer humble themselues excepte they bee constrayned therto by force, but indeuer to striue against God: Eliphaz addeth here another sentence, that is to wit, that he turneth himself vnto God, and purposeth to reason with him, as if he should saye: Men can not abyde to receyue this doctrine, namely that it shoulde bee tolde them that they be well worthie to be scourged, and therefore that they must not striue against it, but take al in good worth, and not blame the other creatures for the miseries that they indure, but rather acknowledge theselues to be the cause therof. Men then can not stoupe to conceiue that this is true, excepte they bee made too stoupe, by shewing them what the Maiestie of God is. And therefore vntill wee haue our sinnes layde afore vs, and be made to perceyue howe it is God with whom we haue to deale: there is not that man whiche will not holde himselfe aloofe, or that hath not his answers readie at his tongues end, or that setteth not some colour vpon his misdoings. And though we be not altogether rebellious: yet notwithstanding there will be such a carelesnesse in vs, that what fouer men say to vs, it is all one, and we are neither greued nor moued at all at our vices. VVhat must wee doo then? VVe shall neuer learne true humilitie, vntill wee be made too vnderstand, that it is God too whome wee must answer, that we bee cited to appeare at his throne, to feele him our iudge, and moreouer also that wee can not escape his hand, but that all our lyfe must be knowne and examined there. VVhen we be brought to this point that we must be fayne to looke vnto God: we begin after a sort too rouze vp ourselues, so as wee be no more so carelesse and drowzie as wee were: there is no more of this loftinesse and sonde ouerweening, too soothe and flatter oure selues withall: wee come to haue some feeling and perceyung of oure myseries: but aboue all, when Gods maiestie is sette before oure eyes, it is too make vs feele howe dreadfull it is: and when his greatnesse is sette afore vs, it maketh vs too tremble yet the more. VVe see it is no sporting matter, heere is no sleeping for vs, nor no bearing of our selues in hande with this or that. VVherefore? for there is no more roome for flatteries, when God, who is a consuming fire, appeereth, and maketh vs to come neere vnto him, so as wee perceiue howe it is hee that maketh the mountaines to melt, and is able to make cleane riddance of all things. Therefore when wee knowe this greatnesse of God, needes muste wee sinke vnder it, and forgette all pryde.

Thus much concerning the intent of Eliphaz. But now must we consider this doctrine, to applye it to our selues. Firste of all, as oft as we feele not ourselues sufficiently wakened to condemne ourselues in our sinnes: lette vs vse the order that is sette downe too vs heere: whyche is, too haue an eye vnto God. Howe is that? VVe may see some man that is sufficiently conuincd of his sinnes, who notwithstanding goeth on styll, and followeth his owne swynge: and if he bee reprobued, or else otherwyse feele remorse in hys owne conscience, hee passeth it ouer, and taketh no greate greefe for it, and why so? Bycause hee hath not his eye vppon God.

Thus yee see what maketh vs too continue in oure sinnes: ye see what is the cause why wee bee not caste downe with true humilitie: namely bycause wee perceiue not that God is oure iudge, and that it is hee wyth whom we haue to do. Then is there none other remedy than that which I haue spoken of: that is to wit, that first of all wee bee as it were wakened out of oure sinnes, for other-otherwise wee will neuer thynke of them too bee sorie for them. But forasmuche as it may fall out, that the diuell shall as it were so bewitch vs, that when we be constrained to perceiue that all goeth not well with vs, wee shall become as amazed at it: wee must come to the seconde point, to say: Alas poore creature, art thou able to scape the vengeace of thy God? VVhen the world hath magnified thee, yet shalt thou not misse to be condemned for the same. So it is that al creatures perceue thy shame, thou must be brought to shame before the little babes, and euen vnto the beastes: thou canst not shift thy handes of it. And what shall become of thee, when thou must be faine to come before the heavenly iudge? Thynkest thou that he hath not a dreadful iudgemēt of damnation against thee, seeing that thou continuest so in naughty-nesse? Thus see we the meane to waken ourselues when oure sinnes displeas vs not inough, and when we feele not so liuely and earnest a forinesse for them as were requisite.

Thus wee see that we must reason with God and not with men. For we imagine our selues to haue the better ende of the staffe so long as we abyde here belowe, and we trauel always to that end, according as our fleshe and our nature is ouermuch giuen that way. For if a man be rebuked, he bestirres him at him that spake to him, and sayth, Hast thou to doo with that? If thou loke wel vpon thy selfe, thou shalt fynde more to be blamed at home: thou art too hastie vpon me: thou seemest as though thou wouldest quarell with mee, it seemeth that thou wouldest deface me. Behold how we snap at mē if they rebuke vs: Yea and wee will doo as muche to God, specially if there bee no man to accuse vs: for then wee will not sticke to seeke still for such a startinghole. As howe? VVhen a man considereth himselfe, he perceyueh well that if God punishe him, he dealeth rightely with him: but then will he starte out to the examinynge of his ney- bours, [and he will saye in himselfe,] is not suche a one woorse than I? or at least wise as badde as I? and hate not suche a one deserued as greate punishment as I?

Thus wee see howe we labour alwayes to iustifie oure own case by fleeing from God. And therefore it behoueth vs too marke well this lesson, that wee muste not reason with men, that is to say, we must not stay there: for wee shall gayne nothing by dooing so: but wee muste rather call home our wittes, and aduisedly saye: Alas, I see well that my God scourgeth mee, and therefore it behoueth mee too be heedful to consider his hande, and thereypon to prepare my selfe to humilitie, as I haue sayde alreadie. Furthermore where as I sayd, that we shall be the better touched by thinking ypon God: my meaning is, that we must know God to be such a one as hee is. For so long as men beare themselves in hande with this or that, they disgyuse God by their false imaginations, bending him as it were some reede, and dalyng with hym as with a little babie. Yea (which woorse is) there is greater libertie vsed with God, than with a little babe. And whereof proceedeth such outrage, but of that we consider not his greatnesse? Therefore wee must not so surmyze of God, as to presume to disgyuse him, and to make him suche a one as our fansie and lust can away with: but wee muste knowe him to be such a one as he sheweth himselfe too bee [by his word,] and we must also conceue him after suche a sort as he vttereth himself by his works. VVhen we haue wel bethought vs of this: it is certaine that our prattling will be well stinted: we will be no more so pert nor so rashe as too come and pleade against him, or too beare our selues in hande that he tormenteth vs without cause, and that we haue not deserued it. Such maner self flatterings muste be thrust downe, all hypocrisie must be doone away, and we must be abashed and dismayd at the sayd greatnesse of the maiestie which we shall haue conceyued in our God. Thus then we see a seconde poynte which is wel worthie to be noted: which is, that we ought to know God truly and not faynedly. And here we see why Saint Paule sayth, that men vanished away in their owne imaginations: namely bicause they transiourmed God. For inasmuch as they robbed God of his glorie, God also did put them too shame, so as he gaue them vp into a lewd mynd, by reason wherof, they gaue themselves ouer to all villanie and shameful doings, and cast themselves into suche dishonestie, as a man might be ashamed of their siltinesse. And why so? For (sayth he) they glorified not God, but did wrongfully as it were deface his maiestie, whē they so turned his truth into a lye, & transformed him in that wise. Seing then that this maladie is ouercomon, and euery man hath experience of it in himselfe: therefore it standeth vs the more on hande, too marke well this doctrine here: that is to wit, that when we thinke of God, it must be done with all reuerence to know him as he is, and not as we falsly surmyze him to bee. True it is that God sheweth himselfe too vs by his word: but yet neuertheless we are vnexcusable, if we consider him not in his works also, inasmuch as he hath not left himselfe without witness there, as sayth S. Paule in the .xiiij. of the Actes, where he speaketh of the order of nature, which is as it wer a glasse for vs to behold god in. S. Paule then saith expressely, that whē God maketh the Sunne to shine, when he sendeth raine, when he sendeth diuersitie of seasons, when he maketh the earth to yelde frute: herein hee leaueth not himselfe without good recorde, but it is all one as if he should pleade his own case and say: VVheras men haue not knowne my glory and maiestie, nor perceiued that I haue all things in my hand to gouerne the things that I haue created: there is no reason why they should alledge ignorance: for by the verie order of nature, they might haue perceiued how there is one creator whiche disposeth all. So then, let vs but open our eyes, and we shall haue proofes ynowe to shewe vs what the greatnesse of God is, to the end we may learne to honour him as he deserueth. Thus wee see what Eli- phas doth here. And it is a lesson that will turne greatly to our profit, if we can practise it throughly. To be short then, let vs beare in mynde, that as oft as there is any communication concerning God: it is not moued vntoo vs to thinke, we haue but ony the worde: but let vs marke that which is properly belonging vnto God, and whiche can not be separated from his being, to the end wee may magnifie him as he is worthie. VVere this once wel settled in vs, we should no more be so much giuen to superstition as we be, neyther shoude wee bee so worldly as we bee.

There are two vices that reigne and haue alwayes reigned in the worlde: the one is Contempe of God, that men care not at all for hym, but trample him vnder their feete, as muche as in them lyeth. True it is, that they bee not able too impeache his maiestie: Neuertheless there is suche a diuelishe pride too bee seene in men, that in steade of wooshipping GOD, and of submitting themselves vntoo him, they coulde fynde in theyr hearte to throwe him vnder foote, and to triumph ouer him, and not suffer him to haue any kynde of authoriti: ouer them. Thus see we a maladie that is ouer- greate and outrageous, and yet hath it bene in all tymes: that is too saye, that menne are so ouerheathenish, as they knowe not the reuerence, whyche they owe vntoo God. The other vice is superstition: whiche is, that vnder the shadowe of deuotion, men gad here and there, to seeke after foolish inuentions. And whereof cometh this mischief: euen bicause God is not known rightly with that which is properly belonging vnto him: for were it wel vnderstode what his mightinesse, iustice, and goodnesse are: it is certayn that men would not be caryed so awaye. For men forge too themselues vnder-goddes: that is too saye, they forge idols in their owne heades: and asigne offices too them, as though they would deale out the vertues that pertain vnto God, and are in hym alone, or as though they would putte him too the spoyle, and euery one haue his share and bootie of him. Now ye see why I sayd, that we must be so muche the more diligent to know God aright: nante-ly too the ende he be not robbed of his honour, and that no man bereue him of that which is his owne, and whiche refterh only in him. And howe may they doo that? I haue alreadie briefly tolde you, howe they neede no more but only to open their eyes: for God vttereth him selfe after suche a sorte in the order of Nature, as we are vtterly vnexcusable, if we yeeld him not that whiche is his. And this is that whiche Eliphaz sheweth heere. For he beginneth to say, That Gods workes are greate, and vnable to be feared out, and that bee dothe wonderfull deeds without number.

Here Eliphaz taketh a general sentence, and afterward specifeth that thing by particular examples, whiche he had spoken in a summe. This therefore is as a preface as if he should in one worde foreshew what he ment to say in this wyse: God doth exceeding great and incomprehensible things, his doings are wonderfull and without ende. VVhen we vnderstand that Gods workes are exceeding great and incomprehensible: shall we not be forced to lift vp our myndes, and to perceyue that we must not disguise him, nor surmize any thing of him after oure naturall reason, but that wee muste mounte vp higher? It is certaine, that we be ledde therevnto whether wee will or no. Thus then we see, what Eliphazs meaning is. VVhen men looke vnto Godwarde, they be not touched with suche a feare, nor with such an humilitie as were requisite. VVhat is the reason? It is bicause they thinke not on his woorkes. If Gods workes come in discourse, euery man thynkes himselfe a competent iudge too speake his verdite vpon them: yea and wee will bee bolde inough (or rather ouerbolde) too controll them. For if God worke not after our fashon, we wil bee full of grudging, and wee will saye, wherefore did he not this, and why went suche a matter so? VVhat is the cause of suche ouerboldnesse, that men are so saucie with God as too holde pleagaynst him, and specially as to make themselues his iudges? It is bicause they haue not considered howe greate and incomprehensible his woorkes are. But if the woorkes of God bee incomprehensible: haue we a measure that is great inough to declare what is in them? VVhat is oure witte? VVhen wee haue stretched it out too the vttermoste length and breadth that maye bee: is it able too comprehend the hundreth parte of Gods woorkes, and of his determination whiche is so highe as all of it is hidden from vs? VVee muste goe out of our selues; if wee mynde but only too taste the wonderfull and infinite wisdom that appeereth in Gods woorkes. Nowe if we must mount aboute all our owne wittes, too gette but a little taste of them: what shall become of vs when wee will incloze all, and when wee will knowe all that is in them too the vttermoste? I pray you, can we attayne therevnto? VVe see then howe men are worse than mad when they bee so presumptuouse as too desyre too determine of Gods woorkes which are incomprehensible. For true it is that wee cannot gage the bottom of Gods woorkes, too comprehend the reason of them: but yet God keepeth a good way to giue vs such a knowledge of them, as hee knoweth too be for our behoof. And so we note, that Gods woorkes are incomprehensible in themselves: that is to say, that if we will searche out all that euer is in them by parcelmeale, wee shall neuer bee able too atteyne too the depth of them: Therefore wee must bee as it were whelmed vnder the sayd greatnesse, assuring ourselues that if wee take vpon vs too bee iudges of Gods woorkes, wee shall fynd wherwith to stoppe our eyes, bycause wee cannot atteyne too the secrets that are in them. Furthermore when wee shall haue proceeded in such humilitie, knowing that wee bee not competent iudges too knowe the thing that is too hygh and too deepe for vs: lette vs pray God too giue vs the spirite of wisdom, that wee maye iudge arighte of his woorkes: and then will hee graunte vs the grace too perceyue so muche as is for our behoofe. Not that wee maye discouer and decypher all that is in them, so as nothyng shoulde bee vnknowne too vs, and all shoulde fall oute after oure imagination: No, God will holde vs shorte of that, so as wee shall not knowe but in part: but in the meane season, the sayde knowledge muste suffyze vs, for as muche as nothyng shall be hidden from vs, that is good and conueniente for oure welfare. And therefore lette vs contente oure selues herewith. For otherwyse what an vnthankfulnesse is it for vs too bee desirous too enter so intoo Gods secretes, as to reade therein, and that wee woulde not haue any thing to escape vs, but are so fonde and curious as to haue a desire to make him subiect to oure fonde braine?

Thus wee see the two poynts that we haue to marke heere. But if there be infinite wisdom in those woorkes of God which are the smallest and basest: what is there in the greatest sorte, and in such as surmount all our capacitie? Specially when the case concerneth our redemption, and when it concerneth Gods sealing vp of the recorde of our adoption in vs by his holie Spirite: it is a matter that surmounteth the common order of nature. Chiefly when it is sayd that he hath chozen vs before the worlde was made, and that he hath chozen vs, not all in generall, but so many as he thought good, and that hee hath forsaken the reste: do we not see secretes that are too high for vs? VVhat is to be done then? Let vs assure our selues we be tooo vnexcusable, if in this behalf we walk not with feare and warenesse, considering that these are things incomprehensible: and if we thinke to attayn so high, our desire to stye vp after that maner aboute the skyes, hauing no wings, will make vs breake our necks. Moreover, when we haue giuen the glory vnto God, and confessed not onely with mouth, but also in very deede, that his woorkes are incomprehensible, and as a bottomlesse pit to swallowe vp all our vnderstanding: let vs not cease to pray him to make vs perceyue them, so farre forth as he knoweth them meete for our capacite: and therewithall let vs also searche that which is shewed vs in the holie scripture. For God will not haue vs negligent: it is not for vs to say with the Papists, O wee muste not bee inquisitiue of Gods secretes. For why then was the holie Scripture giuen vs? Gods wyll is, that euery man shoulde seeke after him: but yet therewithall, his wyll is also, that men shoulde holde the way whiche he sheweth them: that is to wit, that they shuld with al humilitie, folow that which is contained in the holy scripture. Now when we haue learned that whiche God teacheth vs in his scholl, let vs hold vs to it: and if there come any toy in our head to the cōtrarie: so as our harts be tickled to seeke for more than is meete for vs to know: let vs beware that we haue the wisdome & modesty to say: Poore creature, is it meete that thou shouldest presume to haue a larger instructiō, thā that which God giueth thee in the holy scripture? So thē let vs wey well this saying, to the end we may hold ourselues in such sobrietie, as we iudge not rashly of Gods works. For by and by it is sayde, That God is he which doth wōderful deedes without end. VVheras Gods works are called wonderfull, or secret (for so the word importeth: ) it is to bring vs to the reuerencing of thē. For Gods meening is not, that our knowing of such greatnesse in his works, should be to astonishe vs, and to driue vs further off from him: but contrariwise to draw vs to such a reuerence, as we should honor him, saying: Lord how mightie art thou? Lord how great is thy power, thy goodnesse, thy iustice, and thy wisdome? Vndoubtedly Dauid knew wel the infinit greatnesse of gods works: and yet notwithstanding he ceaseth not to say, Lord thy works are full of wisdome and righteousnesse. He knew well what we haue to consider of Gods works: and yet he honored them neuerthelessse. Let vs learne then, not to conceyue suche a greatnesse in Gods works, as might make vs dull, like brute beastes, so as we should not knowe where to become, nor take any instruction of good learning by them: but so to conceyue of it, as the same may serue to repress vs, that our wits be not overwandring, and that we play not horses that are broken loose, and so take libertie (as I haue told you) to say, I wil know how this and this cometh to passe. Not so: but let vs be modest. For our true wisdome is to be ignorant in the things that God will haue hidden frō vs. Thus we see how we must prepare ourselues to lowiinesse & modestie. And furthermore let vs vnderstād therewithal that we must reuerence the works of God. And howe? To comprehend the infinite wisdome, righteousnesse, and power that is conteyned in thē, according to our small capacitie, assuring our selues that God doth not any thing without reason, no not although the same be not knowē vnto vs at the first dash. For God doth not always vter a present reason in his works, so as mē may perceiue thē: and agayne, the sayd wisdome is so deepe, as it is named a bottomlesse pit. Therefore let vs learne to reuerēce gods works, although we perceiue not euermore the cause why he worketh so. VVe see well then in what wise Gods works are wonderfull. And he sayth expressely, that they haue none ende. VVhereby men are yet better humbled. For if we chauce to come to the full vnderstanding of some one thing: O it seemeth to vs that nothing can go beyonde vs: we bee so cunning, that all questions which can be propounded vnto vs shal be assioned out of hand. But put the case we be able to iudge of Gods works, as of two or of three, or of a hundred: VVhat is that? it is rightnought. And why so? For they are without number. But (as I haue sayd already) the least of Gods workes is inough to ouerwhelme vs: and what then shall become of vs, whē we come to the sayd bottomlesse depth wherof there is none ende? Lo howe it behouereth vs to wey well that which is spoken heere generally in way of preface, to make vs to enter into better consideration of all Gods works than we are wont to do, that we may yeeld the honor vnto his Maiestie which is due to him. But (as I haue touched heretofore) after that Eliphath hath spoken so in general, he speaketh particularly also, saying: that God giueth rayne vpon the earth, and maketh the waters to gush down the streetes. This seemeth to be nothing to the purpose. For the matter in hand, is only that mē may perceiue thāselues to be rightly punished, & that if God handle thē after his own wil, they must not stād pleading against him, for they shal gayne nothing by so doing, but must of necessitie be ouercome. And why thē is mention made here of the rayne? This shuld seeme to be a bymatter. But we must marke, that when we be put in minde of the cōmon order which god keepeth in gouerning his creatures: it is to the end that we should apply it al wholly to our owne vse. For whē we haue runne vp & doune, & trauerfed frō one side to another, we must enter into our selues, we must waken vp our wits, and we must apply al this doctrine to suche vse as I haue spoken of, which is, that we may honor God as he deserueth. Thus yee see why here is mention made of the rayne. And no doubt, but that vnder one particular, Eliphath cōprehēdeth them all, as if he should say: VVe not only see that God hath created all things, and that there is such workmanship in the skies & in the earth, as all they that think vpō it must needes be astonied at it: but also we see how he guydeth and disposeth al things, giueth rayne and winde, and sendeth the cōtrarie also when he listeth. And thus much concerning this saying of Eliphath. Furthermore let vs mark, how it is not inough to yeelde vnto God this honor and soueraintie to dispoie of all his creatures [at his owne pleasure] but we must also consider the end wherefore. VVhich is, that we shuld lern therby to submit ourselues vnto him, & to acknowlege him for our father & master. See wherat the holy scripture aimed: but we fayle therof in two poyntes. For first and formost we regard not god: whether he rayne, or whether he make fayre wether, we shet our eyes. True it is that wee be glad if rayne comē when it may serue our turne: but in the meane while we passe, not to know how it is of Gods sending: our minds are so tied to the earth, as they can not mount vp thither. Also whē we haue fayre wether, so as we see the sunne, and are glad of his shining: yet notwithstanding we cōsider not how it is god that hath kindled such a Cresset to giue vs light. Thus haue we no regarde at all of God, which is a very great & ouerbeastly vice. But let vs put the case that God come into our thought: yet is not that all. For there are many that should say, God be prayfed for this fayre wether, but in the meane while they forget all this, they neuer remēber to say, It is God that giueth vs this fayre wether to shewe him selfe a farther towards vs. Therefore it becōmeth vs to be like minded vnto him, & behaue ourselues as his true children, and therewithal to bethinke ourselues thus: behold how all Gods creatures obey him, & yet what obedience hath he at our hād: Vndoubtedly when we behold the order of nature: it must lead vs to a certen fear of god, & to the present tasting of his goodnesse, to the end we may be giuē vp vnto him, & wholly dedicated to his obediēce. Lo in what maner we must praetize the sayd lesson which Eliphath sheweth vs heere: that is to wit, when God sendeth rayne and maketh the water too runne gushing thorough the streetes. VVe see also after what maner the holy scripture speketh therof. And I haue told you already, how it is good wisdome to know to what end & intēt the holy ghost setteth down these things vnto vs: which is, that therby we may lerne to feare & to honor our god, & to know what maner of authoritie it is that we graunt vnto him, and what maner of soueraintie he hath ouer vs: & therypon come to his iustice also, to humble ourselues vnder the same. True it is that Eliphath misbehaueth himselfe in applying this thing to the person of Iob: neuerthelessse (as I haue said heretofore) the doctrine is good, & of the holy ghost, & we must not receiue it as the doctrine of a mortal mā, but we must say that the spirit of god spake in him: & therefore no more remaineth for vs to do, but to haue

the sayde wifdome and discretion of knowing howe too profite our selues in time and place, by that which is shewed vs heere. Then let vs not be like Eliphaz, who wresteth all things to the person of Iob. But when wee haue receyued this generall doctrine, and confessed the same to be true: let euery one of vs arme him seife with it accordingly. Nowe then we see in effect what is shewed vs heere: that is too wit, that all the inconueniences wherevnto our life is subiect, must be fathered vpon our sinnes, and that wee muste not blame nother heauen nor earth, 10 nor any other creatures if wee prosper not as wee would wishe: but euery one of vs must condemne himselfe, and consider how we haue the woord within vs, which is the fewell that kindleth the fire of Gods wrath: and that forso muche as wee bee giuen to euill, euen from our birth, wee must not maruell though wee bee subiect to so many miseries and necessities. So then, if we be troubled in diuers maners, let vs not blame God for it, but let vs haue an eye too the wellspring: that is too wit, that our sinnes are the cause of all the inconueniences which we endure 20 in this world. Let vs take heede therefore that we pleade not any more agaynst him as wee haue bene wont too doo: but rather let vs yeelde our selues gilty, and let vs knowe that he is righteous in punishing vs, to the intent wee may learne too feare and honour him in all humbleness as becommeth vs. Thus yee see what wee haue too remember vpon this text, wayting till the residue may bee layde foorth more fully.

Nowe let vs cast our selues downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our offences, beseeching him too make vs knowe them better than we haue done: and aboute al things too holde vs in such awe vnder his maiestie, as wee maye bee touched too the quicke, and bee no more so dull as wee haue bene heretofore: but may knowe after what maner wee ought too iudge of all his works, and therewithall haue an eye too that which is in them, according as he sheweth it vnto vs by his worde, too the intent that wee humbling oure selues vnder the greatnesse of his Maiestie, may desire nothing but too glorifie his name in all poyntes, not onely with our mouth, but also in very deede: and shewe that he is well worthy too reigne ouer vs, and that all things bothe great and small ought too humble them selues vnto him and too honour him. That it may please him too graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The twentieth Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the fifth Chapter.

11. It is in him too exalte the dispayred, and [too bring] them too safetie vvhiche are vexed at the heart.
12. He disappoynteth the thoughtes of the vvicked, in suche vvise as their handes doo not the thing that they enterprife.
13. He ouertaketh the vvise in their ovvne vvilynesse, and disappoynteth the determination of the craftie,
14. So as at noonetyde they vvalke in darkenesse, and grope about them in the brode daylight as in the night.
15. He plucketh avway the oppressed from the svvorde, from the mouth, and from the hand of them that are too strong.
16. So is there hope for heereafter for the oppressed, and the mouth of vvickednesse shall bee stopped out

Hereas it is sayde heere, that God exalteth suche as are despised: it is a sentence well worthy to bee borne in minde. For heereby we be warned too repayre vnto him when wee see our selues so oppressed by the proude, as it seemeth that wee shall bee vtterly overwhelmed: specially forasmuche as it is sayde, that God plucketh him backe too safetie, which is vexed at the heart. If wee bee so tormented with aduersities, as wee bee in extreme anguifhe: let vs learne to call vpon our God, sith he chalengeth it as his office to saue those that are in such distresse as they are able too indure no more. True it is that God can giue his seruauents such prosperitie, as they shall neuer be disquieted: but he hath rightfull reason too moue him not too doo it. For we see the pride that is in mans nature, and although it appeare not fully, yet is the seede of it hidden there. God therefore must remedie it: and the meane thereof is to tame vs by affliction. Surely wee shall see diuers that will suffer many aduersities, and yet for all that bee neuer the more humbled. For like as a restie iade will suffer him selfe too bee beaten, and his belly to bee ript, rather than he will obey: so is it with them that are stubborn too the vttermost. But when it pleaseth God too tame men, he maketh the afflictions too bee of force which he sendeth too them, so as they serue for medicines too purge them of the sayde pride and presumptuousnesse, whereout of they coule not otherwise draw them selues. VVe see then howe it is not without cause that God dothe so exercise his children, as euen too suffer them too bee despized too the worldwarde, and too bee scorned, and too bee quite and cleane without authoritie or credite, and (to bee shorte) to seeme to bee vtterly forsaken of him. VVhy then dothe he so? Bicause they haue neede to bee in suche a schole. VVherefore sendeth he them so many aduersities, that they are fayne to sighe and grone, and wote not on which side too turne them? It is too make them too call vpon him, and too flee vnto him for refuge. VVe see then howe that by these afflictions we bee taught, first to knowe our selues, that we presume not any thing of our selues, nor bee puffed vp with pride and statelynesse: and secondly not too take too muche pleasure in our owne lustes, but rather too forsake all worldly things, and finally too call vpon God, which is the principallest poynt of all. For as long as men bee at their ease, although they dare not say, that they can go beyond God: yet by their doings they shew themselves so sotted, as they haue no minde too call vpon God, nor too commende themselves vnto him. Ye see then why God suffreth his seruauents to bee afflicted in such wise, yea euen as to bee pinched with anguifhe of heart, that they wote not where to become any more. Therefore let vs beare this doctrine well in minde, considering that it is so is so muche for our profite: and furthermore aboute all, let vs aduise oure selues too practife it at oure neede. Whenfoeuer we shall bee oppressed by men, and when it shall seeme that wee must needes perish: seeing it is declared heere howe it is Gods office too lifte vp them that are so oppressed, and too recomfort them that are so in sorrowe: let vs not doubt but he will performe his promise: for he hath not forgotten his nature: wee shall certainly finde that he will shewe him selfe too bee the same which he was at the beginning. And heere wee see also wherefore he abaceth suche as are aduanced too some dignitie or honor. When some man beholdeth suche backtumblings, he thinks it to bee but the wheele of fortune: the wicked forte grudge that God should play so with men as with a ball: but this happeneth by reason of the vnthankfulnesse of suche as are in highe estate. For they forget from whence their welfare cometh, and therevpon they bee so fotted with their greatnesse, that they waxe stoute agaynst God, and diuers wayes fall too outrage, and therefore God is fayne too abate suche maner of pride. And so wee see the cause that maketh God too pull downe those whome he had exalted afore: namely (I say) bicause they cannot keepe them selues within the bounds of modestie, nor giue the glory vnto God, nor knowe what they are of them selues, and contrarywise the honor that God hath done vnto them, but forget them selues, and aduance them selues without measure. And therefore God is fayne to shewe them howe they bee nothing, and that they doo but beguyle them selues by their pride. And therefore let them that are aduanced too highe estate, beware that they walke in the feare of God, and in carefulnesse. Moreouer, suche as are bace and despyzed, haue inough where-with too comferte them selues (as I haue sayde) in that they haue this promise, that it belongeth too God too giue helpe too suche as are in distresse. Lo what we haue to marke. And although this bee not done alwayes apparantly to the eye: yet notwithstanding suche as are sorrowfull at the heart a right, (that is to say, which are so cast downe as they flee vnto God, and seeke no reliefe but at his hand) shal feele the operation of his doctrine. And certesse all of vs in general doo finde by experience, that God listeth vp them that are despized: for what are wee by nature? In what plight doth God finde vs when he adopteth vs to bee his children: are we not plunged in all filthinesse and infection? And not onely so: but also he is fayne to drawe vs out of the gulfe of hell. By reason whereof it may well bee sayde, that doubtlesse of nature wee bee cursed caytifs, we bring nothing with vs but the image of death, there is nothing in vs but sinne. and specially (as it is sayde in Exechiell) wee bee lyke a childe that is newly come out of the wombe of his mother, yea euen of a mother that is full of corruption, in-somuche as besides the other miseries wherein hee is wrapped, he hath also al maner of filthinesse, gore bloud, and all maner of vncleannesse, as the Prophet speaketh there. We see then what our state is till God haue made vs cleane. And so seeing that euery one of vs already knoweth in him selfe, and in his owne behalfe, howe God hath exalted vs, calling vs too the hope of the kingdome of heauen, and of eternall life, yea and that he hath plucked vs euen out of the bottomlesse pit of death, and clenzed vs from our so stinking filthinesse: haue we not cause too hope for the like heereafter? And therefore aboute all things, when wee bee in suche distresse, as wee can beare no more: let vs then put vp our sute vnto him, that it may please him too succour vs, and too haue pitie of vs. We see then howe God regardeth suche as bee

as it were the ofcastes of the worlde, too the ende too succour them. For it followeth immediatly, that he breake the determinations of the wicked, too the ende that their bandes shoulde not accomplishe any of their enterprifes. We see here yet one comfort more, which it beloueth vs too marke well, that we may be pacient in this world, notwithstanding that our enimies assaile vs on all sides. True it is that God spareth vs sometimes, and that he sheweth not open warre agaynst vs, and that the wicked haue not alwayes the power too persecute vs, but are otherwise letted, or else God dothe after a forte brydle their rage, in somuch that wee haue not alwayes open warre with them. But yet it is impossibill that Gods children should liue in this world, and not be in many perils continually. And why so? for they must walke in simplicitie. True it is that they ought to be wise, and our Lord hath giuen them so muche wisdom as is requisite for them. But howefoeuer the worlde go, they must not mayntaine them selues by crafte and wylinesse, nor by wicked practises. Although they bee among wolues, yet must they bee as Lambes and sheepe: and although they bee among foxes, yet must they continue as doves, and they must keepe still the same simplicitie whiche God commaundeth them. We see howe the worlde is fraught with naughtinesse: in somuche that if yee finde a right honest man, it is (as they say) a very fine seede and rare [too bee met withall.] Nowe then, if God should not worke too disappoynt the purposes of the wicked, what should become of vs? should wee not perishe an hundreth times aday? So then wee see heere a text whereof wee must make our owne profite: whiche is, that God watcheth from out of heauen, too disappoynt the enterprifes and practizes whiche the wicked forte doo contriue agaynst vs. For first and formost it will bee a temptation too vs when wee see our selues watched and wayted vpon, and nothing else sought but too catche vs at auantage, and too winde about vs: I say, it will bee a tempting of vs to doo the like, [and to say in our selues.] I haue to doo with a futtle foxe, and therefore I must bee fayne to keepe good watche. And howe? that is to wit, agaynst him that is wyly and double wyly, as they say in the prouerbe. Beholde howe we be giuen to decline vnto euill, and to make two diuels for one (as the prouerbe sayth) when we bee so assayled by the naughtinesse of men. But there is no way too holde vs in obedience vnto God, and too make vs too walke on in simplicitie and foundnesse, but by acknowledging G O D too bee our buckler, and that he will prouide wel ynough for all mischeeues that are prepared agaynst vs. True it is that wee ought too defende our selues: yea verily so far forth as God giueth leaue: that is too wit, so wee steppe not aside from the vprightnesse which he commaundeth, and that howefoeuer the case standeth, wee vse not any guyle, nor practize any thing that is vnlawfull for vs to doo. When wee procede after this maner: let vs assure oure selues that God will wel ynough finde meanes, too dispatche all the enterprifes, of suche as thinke to catche vs as it were in a pitfall by their craftynesse. God then will prouide in such wise, as he knoweth to bee profitable for vs. And furthermore there is nothing spoken heere, which we finde not dayly by experience. For if the children of God bee at any time deceyued: they knowe that if God hilde them not vnder his protection, to saue the from the snares and ginnes of suche as seeke nothing but to winde about them, they should bee ouertaken at euery blowe, not onely in some small things, but also in all their whole life: we see this wel ynough. So then, seeing wee haue suche a proof of this doctrine, we ought to be the better confirmed thereby. As howe? When any man hath an eye to him selfe: we haue skill enough to say, that there is nothing but naughtinesse in the world, so as a man can not tell whom he may trust. On whiche side soeuer a man turneth him selfe, he is in danger to be deceyued: we be come to suche a confusion, as there is no faith nor trustinesse, nother in kinsfolke, nor in freends. Weill then, sith that euery man maketh suche complainyt, if wee bee not beguyled, let vs marke well how it is God that defendeth vs. For it is likely that we should be beguyled at euery blow: and what would become of vs then, if God should not remedie it? Therefore let euery man acknowledge that he is preferred by the hande of God, & that it is not without cause that God hath auouched it to be his office, to make the deuises of the wicked to vanish away, to the ende they should not execute their attempts. True it is that although God giueth the wicked men strength to execute their deuices: yet he is well able to preuent all their practizes, and too ouerthrowe them euerychone: 20 for (as he sayth anone after) he ouertaketh the wise in their owne wyllynesse. Sometimes God blyndeth them that weene them selues too bee very suttle and cunning, soo as he maketh them to be naked. Lo here one way whiche he hathe too saue those that are his. But albeit that he let the wicked men runne vpon the brydle, albeit that they haue many deuises, and albeit that it seeme impossible that wee should by any meanes escape their handes: yet notwithstanding euen when God shall haue giuen them suche libertie, a manne shall see 30 in the ende, that all this geere shall vanishe away, and that when they bee euen at the poynt too set all their practizes abroche, and too say, wee see what wee haue too doo, yee see howe wee must proceede: euen then all their deuises shall washe away. Therefore when they shall haue set all things in a readinesse, and when they shall haue concluded vpon their matters, so as there is no likelyhoode but their deuises shall come too effect: God will mocke them, and a man woulde wonder too see howe all things shall fall out cleane contrarie too 40 that whiche they imagined. True it is that wee shall not perceyue howe this is done: and that is, to the intent wee should know how God worketh after a wonderfull fashion, and therefore that his gracious goodnesse must needes appeare the better thereby towarde vs. So then let vs marke well what is sayde heere in effect: namely that God suffreth the wicked too haue store of wyles and suttle deuises, so as it may seeme that they shall vterly ouerthrowe the whole Church: or else that if they go about too oppresse some one man, or two, or three, 50 it is likely that they can not by any meanes bee resisted. What is too bee doone in this case? Wee must flee too our God too say, well Lorde, it is true wee see our enimies haue store of guyles: if the matter come to incountering with them by suttle shiftes and pollicies, wee shall bee farre ouermatched, and vterly vndone. But what for that? Nowe commeth thy turne too dashe all their deuises, and too make them flee away in the ayre, so as they may not haue any power in their hande too put them in execution. Beholde howe wee 60 must haue recourse vnto God, and sticke too the promyses whiche he hathe made vs heere. Therefore when God shall haue suffred the wicked sorte too debate what they liste in their mindes, and too vndertake this or that: he is able too holde their handes tyed welinoughe. It may bee that hee will giue them leaue too raunge farre inough: but yet therewithall when it commeth too the poynte of accomplishing the thing whiche they had debated, they shall bee disappoynted, and their handes shall bee tyed: and when they beleue that they haue all thinges at commaundement, they shall bee destitute of all counsell and aduisement, yea and of all force and power, forsomuche as God hath provided for the matter after an incomprehensible maner. Thus much as concerning this strayne. But Eliphaz proceedeth yet further, saying, that God ouertaketh the wise in their owne wyllynesse, and that the determination of the wicked is defeated, yea euen in sube wyse as they stumble in the open lighte, as in the darke, and grope aboute them at noone dayes as in the night. Heere Eliphaz not onely declareth that God will not suffer the wicked too accomplishe that which they had conceyued in their hearts: but also addeth, that God ouertaketh them in their owne wyles, and in suche wyse ouerthwarteth their deuises, as they bee berefte of their wittes, and wote no more what too doo than little babes, so as their practizes become altogether laughingstockes. But wee must marke well these two things. For (as I haue sayde heeretofore) if wee see that God disappoynt not our enimies of their pollicies, and that on our side wee haue no great aduice, so as by all likelyhoode wee shall not misse too be oppressed: yee shall see vs ouertaken with dispayre, bycause that too our seeming, if God ment too ayde vs, he woulde put fourth himselfe, & not make so long taryng. Therefore if he make delay, we are astonied & afraid. But it is mete that we should bee patient, though God resist not the wicked when they confederate themselues in suche wyse agaynst vs, but rather giueth them leaue too debate vpon the matter. And wherefore? For he will come in due time too deliuer vs out of their handes, notwithstanding that they beleue certenly too bring their attempts about too our vter ouerthrowe. And yet neuerthelesse sometimes God tarieth not so long, but pitieth our feeblenesse: and when he seeth vs in daunger too bee shaken, he preuenteth the matter, and maketh hast too succour vs. And howe is that? Beholde, our enimies are ouersuttle and politike, and moreouer they bee so practized as a man woulde suppose that all the suttle shiftes of the whole worlde had passed throughe their handes: and good cause haue wee too bee afraid, when wee see they haue made tryall of suche manner of pollicies. But what for that? God is able too sorte them in suche sorte, as they shall become as beastes: that whereas they were thought to haue bene as handesome men as coulde bee, they become like little babes, infomuche that it is a wonder too see them consulte of things, wherein there is neither ryme nor reason as they say. And howe commeth this too passe, GOD can well skill howe too sende men the spirite of drunkennesse, so as they shall stagger and reele without drinking any drop of wyne, according as hee declareth by his Prophetes. Like as Esay. 19. c. 14. 29. c. 19. he is the giuer of witte and discretion too suche as are filie Idiotes: so contrary wyse hee knoweth howe too blinde the vnderstanding of suche as thinke themselues too see farre afore them, infomuche that euen at highe noonetide they doo nothyng but grope like poore lily blinde soules. Wee see then what Eliphaz ment to shewe heere. And this doctrine extendeth it selfe very farre. For thereby we be taught, that when we see our enimies practize all that is possible agaynst vs: wee may set light by them, assuring oureselues that our God will make all their attempts vayne, according as wee see howe the Prophet Esay speaketh of them in two sentences. Go your way (saythe hee) take counsell together: yet shall it come too nothing. And why? The Lorde will disappoynt it euery whit. Go your way (saythe hee) to make your your great deliberations, gather your selues together, and yet muste all of it be disappointed. And whyso? for God holdeth his counsell in heauen, and will make all your naughtinesse and fittleties to be turned backe, yee shall win nothing againste him. Beholde also the great force that was prepared against the Citie of Ierusalem: the poore king Ezechias is come to vtter extremitie, in so much that he made no countenance to withstand his enemye, but when he sawe himself vnable to match him, he mynded to purchase peace for money, and therevpon 10 spoyled himself of all his substance, and was contented that the temple of God should be fleeced, so as there was not left the value of one dodkin in the citie of Ierusalem, and his palace was quite emptye of all riches. Behold here a poore king, who refuseth not to pay what rasome soeuer a man would aske, so he myght scape from the Lyons mouth: It was verye likely then that they should haue bin vtterly vndoone. But herevpon God sendeth his prophet, who mocketh his enemyes, Go to, lay your heads together, and deuise yee what yee can, yet shall yee bring 20 none of your enterprises to passe. And whyso? for the lord setteth himself against all your practizes, too maynteyne his people and his Church. Thus you see why I haue sayd, that it behoueth vs to take heede that wee put this lesson in vre. Therefore when we be come to the poynt that we knowe not whither there be anye way out for vs or no, yea euen that it semeth we be vtterly vndoone alreadye: let vs flee to the goodnesse of God, who will easly fynd meanes vnknown to vs. But aboue all things, when soeuer we see that the wicked persecute vs for the quarel 30 of the Gospell, let vs not doubt at all but God will vtter his power after a speciall maner in that behalf. Like as in these dayes it is true that Gods enemyes are full ynough of fittle deuises, and they haue a mayster (that is too wit the diuell) which hath his shop well furnished with such stufte. If the Pope and all his adherents haue not wyles ynow in them, the diuell will forge ynow for them. And still we see that all the mischeuous practizes that can be, are on their syde: we see how those whom men think to be of greatest skill, are there kept in wages to blasphem 40 God, to flander the doctrine of truthe, and to make vs be hated of all the world: and finally they buy and sell vs on all sides, to the intent we should come too vtter decay. VVhen all these things aforcayd come before our eyes: what haue we else too do, but to wayt with patience, specially seing we be sure that God can well tell how to hold their hand fast tyed, and that when they haue sought all the corners of their witts, and proled about the whole earthe, yea and mounted aboue the cloudes, God will not suffer them to put anything in execution, and further- 50 more that hee is well able too make those men dullards, which take themselues to be verye politike and wyse me: I say he will make them so dull, as that euen the little children shall laugh at their beastlinesse, according as we see in verye deede. For if wee marke how Gods truthe is in- counted now adayes by these clawebaks and by all the Popes vpholders, we shall see them so befoted, as it were not likely that men could come to such doltishnesse. Specially if a man marke those which weene themselues to be cunningest: it should seeme that they be cofederate with 60 vs, and that we haue giuen them wages to mocke Antichriste their mistter: they wold fayne pleasure him, and they disgrace him more and more. And for proof hereof, if a man reade their books, hee wil say they speake in fauour of vs: and for my part I knowe it to be so. VVherof cometh this then? no doubt but God accomplissheth that thing in the which is spoken heere, and I knowe it manifestly. Sothie seing that God sheweth in verye deed, how the thing which he hath spoken here is not in vayne: Let vs lerne to stave ourselues vpo him, not doubting but he is able to ouerthrowe all the practizes and deuices of such as take themselues to be the cunningest, and that he will make them to grope about them at hygh none, as if they were blyndfolded in the dark. And he sayeth expresly, That God ouertaketh the wyse in their wylineffe. VVhen Eliphaz vseth this woord wyse: he doeth it after the maner of men, who glorifye themselues in that behalf. VVif- dome is the singular gift of God, and a good and comendable thing: and in good soothe fro whence cometh it, but fro the holie Ghost, who is the fountaine and wellspring therof according also as the holie scripture sheweth vs? And we ourselues also doo knowe it to be so, if we be not to ro vnthankfull. Seing then that wisdom is so excellent a thing, ca it be comdemned? It is certeine that all the wittinesse and wylineffe which we see in the wicked and in the enemyes of God, deserueth not to be called wisdom. But what? Forasmuch as they boaste of it, and are taken to be so to the worldward: Eliphaz vseth the same woord, according also as it is ouercommon to say, behold yonder goes a wyse man. And what is ment by this wyse man? In effect a verye ciuelish creatur. For if a man will be taken for a wyse man: he must haue no loyaltie, no faythfulnesse, no vpryght dealing, no conscience in him: he must be able too mocke the whole world, he must be able to aduance himself, he must haue manye faire colours to beguyle and deceyue me withall. O this is a ma full of wisdom: and yet in the meane whyle he shall haue nothing in him but fraud and naughtinesse, hee shall haue nothing in him but hypocrisie and dissimulation. And if a man be mynded too walk in simplicitie and vpryghtnesse, and meneth not to do any man wrong: rush he shall be counted a dolt and an idiot, yea and although he haue wit ynough in him, and that euen the wicked men themselues are inforced to confesse it, insomuch as they are fayne to say, ye see how such a man is wyse ynough if he listeth to put foorth himself: but he is to carelesse and passeth for nothing but to welter in his owne ease without putting of himself in hazard. Behold how the world iudgeth of him. And whyso? Bycause that such a one giueth not himself to craftinesse & snatching as other me doo. Sothen, forsomuch as the world hath this woord wisdom in his mouth and vnhaloweth it, (for it is a holie thing howbeit falsly abused): ye see why Eliphaz sayeth, very well, let vs put the cace that these wyles were wisdom in deede, as they be termed, and as they be comonly taken too be, howbeit that they are not so, but I will graunt them that tittle: yet notwithstanding God knoweth well ynough how to disappoint them in their owne naughtinesse. For here it is shewed, that the sayd wisdom wherof the wicked vaunt themselues, is not woorthie of so honorable a tittle. And wherfore? for whe all is sayd, it is but wylineffe. Thus ye see what we haue too mark in this text. But now must we receyue warning to be lowely, when we see God put himself here as principall partie against all such as practyze any euill against their neighbours, and seeke to wynd about them by fittletie. VVhen we see how God setteth himself against them in that behalf, and sheweth himself, too be the aduersarie partie: I pray you ought we not to haue good hold of ourselues, notwithstanding that wee be tempted too vse craft and fittletie, and therewithall haue wit ynough to bring our matters about? As for example, it may oftentimes happen, that God putteth good men into our hands, whom we may beguyle and leade about by the noze as the pro- uerb sayeth: verye well, when such occasions are offered, wee ought to haue good stay, considering how God say- eth,

Esay. 19. c. 14. 29. c. 19.

Esay. 8. 6. 9. 10.

Esa. 29. c. 15.

eth, If ye vse deceyte and guyle, you make not warre against men, [but against me]. True it is that you may easily beguyle a filie soule: but [in very deede] your leueling is at me, therefore I will step before you, and shewe you how it is mine office to dath & disapoynt al the vngacious practizes that wicked folk take in hand. Sothen, brag as much as you list of your owne wisdom, for I will put you to confusion, and euery man shall laugh you too skorne. And wherefore? Bycause your enterpryses are against me, and yee beare yourselues in hand that yee be able to compasse all things by your policies and wyles: but you shall fynd how there is no wisdom but in mee. furthermore about all, when the cace standeth vpon walking before God: let vs looke that we rid and clenze ourselues from all hypocrisie: for the woorst wylinesse in the whole world, is when men would beguyle God not that they say they will doo it, nor that they vse any such language, but so it is that they haue it printed in their hart. And it is not without cause that the prophet Esay sayeth. VVo be to you that dig caues vnder the earth, as who should say yee could hyde your selues in them: from whom? euen from God himself. And this is ouerryse now adayes. VVhat is to be seene in all the world? for first of all what is it that men doo think concerning God? There is not that man which thinketh not himselfe futtle ynough to scape out of his hand. And this is the very cause why the wicked and the despyzers of God doo run at royt and beare themselues in hand how it is but a beastlinesse for vs to be afrayd of the iudgemēt to come. VVhen they see vs stand vpon the same, that is to wit, when they see vs exhort the people too feare the wrath and vengeance of God, and [shewe them] how it may be prepared for vs: they make a mocke at it, saying: O see how these fellowes turmoyle themselues in vayne: but yet let vs not cease to make lustie cheere: if we must needs come before God, well then the tyme is woorth the monie. Behold the diuelish blasphemies which a man shall heare: and although they passe not out of their mouthes, yet are their harts full fraught with them. Too be short, we see vngodlinesse too be so vnreasonable and outrageous in these dayes, as it may well be sayd that men doo make their reckening to prouoke God to anger. Let vs lerne therefore on our side to walk in such singlehartednesse, as God may not be compelled too lift vp his hand, to execute his dreadfull power wherof mention is made heere: that is to wit, that we perish not, ne be overtaken in our owne wylinesse. Thus we see what we haue to mark in this sentence. And consequently it is sayd, that God deliuereth from the sword and from the band of them that are to myghtie, and that he which is afflicted shall haue hope berafter, and that the mouth of wickednesse shall be stopped. This is added further for the comfort of Gods children. For what else is our state in this world than a tormenting with many greifs, and a troubling with many anguishes and anoyances? VVe are then in a continuall battell. True it is that God spareth vs now and then, as I haue sayd hertofore, bycause he seeth how we are weake and that if he should giue the brydle looce to Satan and his mates, we should be deuoured at the first chop. VVell then, our lord keepeth vs as it were brooded vnder his wings, and yet doth he suffer vs to be vexed and troubled, and to haue many hartfores giuen vs. And wherefore? Too the intent we should be prouoked too desyre his help, and also to the intent we should lerne to take heede to ourselues, that we be not surprized by Satan: for there is no other cause of our decay but this negleage, which is, that we flee not vnto God in such wyse as wee be prouoked to call vpon him. Lo after what maner all of vs must be in this world that is to wit, we must be afflicted. And in very deede, the woord that signifieth Poore or oppressed in this place, signifieth also wel bumbled or brought lowe. And why so? Bycause that pouertie is the true scholes mistresse to bring men to meeldnesse that they may not be to hyghmynded in themselues, nor haue the sayd ouerhardinesse and spirituall drunkennesse to aduenture too farre. But that they may walk according to their measure, assuring themselues that if God did not succour them euery minute of an houre, they should bee vtterly vndone. Thus ye see (I say) how Gods children must be fayne to be beset round about with manie afflictions in this world, if they purpose to be parttakers of Gods kingdom hereafter. But we see little in this cace. For riche mē are cōmonly puffed vp with statelinesse, and so dazelled in their pompes and pleasures, as it is a very hard matter to make them humble. True it is that whensoever it pleaseth God, he can saue the riche and greate ones as well as the poorest and moste despyzed. But that is by brydling them, and by laying such afflictions vpon them, as they may be poore, I meene euen in the mids of their riches, and that they may knowe how their state is miserable, and therby be constreyned too seeke God, and too hang wholly vpon him. Thus ye see in what plyght God setteth vs at the first. But afterward it is sayd that he plucketh vs backe from the sword, and that he deliuereth vs from the throte and from the hand of him that is ouermyghtie. At a woord, it is not Gods will that his faythfull ones should be mainteyned by ordinarie meanes, nor that they should alwayes haue armyes in a redinesse to reuege themselues when they be assayled by their enimies, nor that they should haue greate fortifications, nor that they should be strongly alyed, and such other things: no: they shall be vnprouyded of all such geere as to the worldward: or else if they haue them, it shall not bee to barre their enimies from being to strong and to myghtie for them, so as they should not bee able too stand against them by that meanes. VVe se then that we must not bee maynteyned by worldly meanes. But whensoever wee be hemmed in by such as are myghtyer than wee, which seeke nothing else but to ouerwhelme vs: if we be rescowed frō them, it is to the end we should know, how it is God that defendeth vs, and which preserueth vs vnder his protection, & that wee be as it were brooded vnder his wings in such sort as he suffereth not the wicked to woork their malice vpon vs as they fayne would, and as they be redie to do, were it not that they be letted from about. Thus ye see what we haue to mark. And in deede we see a sufficient cleere mirroure of it in these dayes. For how goeth the world with vs? It seemeth that Gods enimies who are stark mad at his churche, should eate vs vp with one grayne of Salt as the prouerb sayeth. If a man make comparison of power, alas what power is there on our side? VVe are as one little stocke of sheepe, and they are not only one herd of woolues, but as an infinire number of woolues. The whole world is full of such as could fynd in their harts to eate the very bowels of vs. And they are not satiffyed with putting of vs to single death: but there is such crueltie among them, as a man may well perceyue it to be altogether hellish. Seing then that the power is so greate, I meene of them which seeke nothing but to destroy vs and to make cleane riddance of vs: and yet neuertheless that wee continue still [for all that they can doo]: if it be our chauce to liue but one day, yet is it wel seene thereby, that God executeth his office which is spoken of heere, that is to wit, that he deliuereth him that is oppressed, out of the hand of him that is ouermyghtie. VVe see then how we ought too be the better confirmed to trust to trust in God, that as he hath begonne so he will continue to the end, and that if his poore church be threatened or conspyred against, so as shee seemeth to be already as good as halfe oppressed: yet notwithstanding he both can and will remedie all things. And whyso? for he hath sayd it, and he hath not forgotten his cunning, he knoweth the meanes, howbeit that they be vnknowne vnto vs. Therefore let vs tarie his leysure patiently. And in conclusion he sayeth: That there shall bee hope for the afflicted for hereafter, and the mouth of wickednesse shall be stopped. Here is declared vnto vs for what purpose all that we haue herd hitherto hath bin spoken: that is to wit, to the intent wee should lerne to trust in God: for that is a very hard matter to doo. True it is that euery man will protest that he trusteth in God: but this trusting importeth much more than we can tell how to vtter: inso much that euen they which shall haue studied this lesson all their lyfe long, shall haue profited well, if they haue lerned but half of it: that is to wit, to be thoroughly perswaded that God will not forsake them. VVhen this poynt (I say) is well settled in our harts, it will be a greate forwardnesse for all our lyfe after. And it is expressly sayd, The hope for hereafter. And whyso? for we must hope against hope: that is too say, if we mynd too shewe that wee trust in God in good earnest, there must be no likelyhod of hope to the worldward, for vs to trust vnto, but death must hem vs in on all sides, & we must be so ouercast with darknesse in that respect, as there may, not be one spark of lyght to comforte vs. Too bee short, we must haue nothing left vs saue only the promis that God hath made vs, saying, I will be your Sauour, when as notwithstanding he seemeth therewithall to turne his backe vpon vs, and that he hath shaken vs off, yea and that he euen fauoreth our enemyes, and that he putteth the cudgell into their hand too strike vs with, and is altoogither against vs. I say when all this betyde, yet neuertheless must we trust continually in him. Thus ye see why it is sayd, that there is hope for hereafter for the oppressed. As if Eliphas should say, VVhē Gods children be come to the last cast: so as they wote not any more which way to turne them, that there is no way for them to scape: yet let them not cease too hope that God will shewe himself to be their father and Sauour, and that he will neuer fayle them, condicionally that they rest themselves vpon the sayd promis that there shall be hope for hereafter for the oppressed, and that they cease not too haue an eye to the lyfe that is prepared for them, though they see death before their eyes. Lo how wee ought too practyze this doctrine. Moreouer though our enemyes be not confounded at the first dash: yet will God woork in such wyse as shame shall lyght vpon them spyght of their teethe. And this is it that is ment by this saying: That the mouth of wickednes shall be stopped, which is as much to say, as the wicked shall not knowe how to reply against Gods iudgemēt. On our part it behoueth vs to haue our mouth open to glorifye God. For we must not resemble the wicked, who being confounded cease neuer a whit the more to blaspheme God and too grynd their teethe at him, although they haue not what to reply against him. And this is the same saying wich clozeth vp the hundreth and seuenth Psalme, where Gods prouidence is spoken of. For there it is sayd, that after God had punished the inhabitants of the land for their sinnes, so as one sort of them were vexed with warre: or sicknesse, and another sort suffered much inconuenience bothe by sea and by land: when he commeth to the diliuering of them, from all their miseries, the good men haue wherefore to glorifye him, and therewithall the mouth of wickednesse is stopped, that is to say, although the wicked dooers desyre nothing but to mocke God, and to cast out skoffs against him: yet must they be shet vp, that they may not knowe what to say, but be vtterly confounded for shame. By the report of this, wee knowe what Gods prouidence is in gouerning things here beneath. And when we see his iudgements so manifest, let vs lerne too glorifye his holie name, and therewithall let vs flee vnto him in all our aduersties: and when he shall haue succored vs, let vs render thanks vnto him accordingly.

Now let vs cast downe ourselues before the presence, of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to voutsafe to make vs perceyue them better than wee haue doone, to the intent that wee knowing how vnwoorthie we are to be helped at his hand, may be so muche the willinger too resort vnto him for succour, following the way which he sheweth vs: that is to wit, that wee may come to our lord Iesus Christ too synd grace by his meanes before the heauenly throne: and that we may come thither displeas'd with ourselues for our sinnes, beseeching him to clenze vs from them, too the intent that nothing may hinder vs of our resorting vnto him, and of the obteyning of all our requests, according as he shall perceyue to be expedient for vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only vnto vs but also to all, &c.

The xxj. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the fifth Chapter.

17. Behold, the man is blis'd vvhom God correcteth: Therefore refuze not thou the chastizement of the Almyghtie.
18. It is he that maketh the vvhound, and vvhich byndeth it vp [It is he] vvhich smyteth, and vvhich bringeth lyfe.

Heretofore Eliphas hath declared what the power of God is, that wee myght be in the better redinesse to receyue the doctrine which he addeth. For we see what the cause is why we be not so teachable as were requisite, namely, bycause we know not what the maiestie of God is: that we myght stand in awe of it. Therefore we haue neede to knowe, how God gouerneth the world, and to consider his insynite ryghtuousnesse, power, and wisdom. Now if the wicked be confounded bycause God sheweth himself against them, and so haue their mouthes stopped: what must become of vs? for God must not constreine vs too doo him honour: it is ynough that he giueth vs occasion, and that he sheweth vs how there is iust cause for vs to do it, and wee must come to it of our owne good accord. Sothen, let vs beare in mynd what hath ben declared heretofore: namely, that when Gods iudgements are layd afore vs, it is no matter to laught at, nor to dalie with, but it behoueth all creatures to tremble at them. And now it is sayd, that the man is blis'd whom God chastizeth, and therefore that we must not refuze the corrections of the Almyghtie. If a man should tell vs that God dooeth men no wrong when he becommeth their iudge and vseth greate seueritie and rigour towards them: verely this ought too touche vs neere

neere ynough: but yet wee would bee so astonished at this doctrine, as if a man had giuen vs a knocke on the heade with a beetle. What is too bee doone then? There must some sweetnesse bee mingled with it, that wee may take some taste of that which shal bee sayd vntoo vs, assuring our selues that it is profitable too our saluation. So then, after that Eliphaz hath set forth Gods iudgements in generall, too dispose vs too feare him with all humilitie: now hee sheweth that God will bee louing vntoo vs howsoever the world go: and specially that when he chastizeth vs, he neuer vseth such sharpnesse towardes vs, but he will make vs feele his goodnesse and mercye therewithall, too the intent wee should approche vntoo him, and not bee dysmayed like those that are afrayd too bee confounded. God then meeneth not that his maiestie should bee so dreadfull too vs: but his meening is too drawe vs vntoo him, too the ende wee should loue him, not only when he dooth vs good, but also euen when he chastizeth vs for our sinnes. This wee see in effect what wee haue too gather vpon this sentence. But it should seeme that this sentence is contrarie too that which is written [elsewhere] in the holie scripture: which is, that all the miseries and aduersities which wee suffer in this earthly lyfe, procede of sin, and consequently of Gods curse. How can these things agree, that wee should bee blissed when God chastizeth vs, and yet neuertheless that all the miseries which come vntoo vs from his hand, are as many signes of his displeasure, and that wee haue offended him, and that he curseth vs? For whence come our happinesse and our ioy, but from God? And on the contrarie part, when God is against vs, wee see our lyfe is curled. Againe when wee feele that God is angry with vs by his punishing of vs, it should seeme there is smal blissednesse in that. But wee haue too mark heere, how Eliphaz hath an eye too the intent and end wherat God ameth when hee chastizeth men. True it is that God dooth vs well too vnderstande, that hee abhorreth sinne, and in very deede the order which he appoynted at the making of the worlde, is troubled when he handlth vs not like a father. Yee see then how all the aduersities of this lyfe shewe vs some signe of Gods curse, too the end that thereby wee should vnderstand, that sinne displeaseth him, and that hee hateth and abhorreth it, and cannot beare with it, by cause he is the fountayne of all ryghtuousenesse. But yet for all this, after that God hath so declared the hatred which hee beareth against sin: he will also haue vs too perceyue how he draweth, exhorteth, and sommoneth vs too repentance. And so, dooth God scourge vs? It is a token then that he is loth wee should perish, and that hee dooth rather prouoke vs too returne vntoo him. For corrections are records that God is redye too receyue vs too mercye, if wee acknowledge our faults and ask him forgiuenesse vnfeynedly. Seing the case standeth so, wee must not think it strange that Eliphaz should say, that the man is happie whom God chastizeth. But wee must beare in mynd the twoo poynts that I haue touched, wherof the one is, that so soone as any aduersitie befalleth vs, the wrath of God must come before our eyes, so as wee may vnderstand that he cannot away with sin: and therevpon wee must consider the rigour of his iustice, so as wee may be hartely sorie that wee haue offended. Behold at what poynt wee ought too begin. And therewithall also let vs moreouer take holde of Gods goodnesse, in that he suffereth vs not too runne intoo destruction without drawing of vs home againe to himself, and in that his meening is too bring vs backe so often as he scourgeth vs. Thus yee see what wee haue too conceyue in all our afflictions. But there remaineth yet one hard poynt: for in the meane season wee see how afflictions lyght vpon all men without exception. God chastizeth those too whom hee is mynded too shewe mercie: and wee see also that he punisheth the castawayes, and yet shall the same turne too their greater damnation. What auayled all the rodde that Pharao felt, sauing that they made him the more vnexcusable, by cause hee continewd stubborne and vnable too bee amended, against God euen too his end? Forasmuch then as God scourgeth bothe good and bad, and wee see by experience that afflictions are as fyre too kindle Gods wrath more and more against the castawayes: it foloweth therevpon, that God chastizeth many folks which are not reckened too bee happie therefore. And herevpon it behoueth vs too note, that Eliphaz speaketh heere but of those whom God chastizeth as his children too their profit, as he declareth by that which foloweth, saying, that God byndeth vp the woundes which be bath made, swadling them, and laying playsters too them, and making them whole. Yee see then how Eliphaz restreyneth this sentence too those in whom God maketh his chasticements too turne too true amendment. But this sentence wil bee somewhat with the darkest, if it bee not layd foorth somewhat more at large, that yee may haue a sure and cleere resolution of it. Let vs mark how God woorketh toward the castawayes. True it is that he exhorteth all men too repentance when he chastizeth the (as I haue sayd alrebye) and it is all one as he should wake them vp and say, knowe your faults, and continew no longer in them, but returne vntoo mee, and I am redye too shewe you mercie. But yet for all that, it is well knowne that these sayd chastizements profit not all men, and also that he giueth not all men the grace too returne vntoo him. For it is not ynough for God too stryke vs with his hand, except he touche vs within also by his holie spirit. If God soften not the hardnesse of our harts, it will fall out with vs as it did with Pharao. For men are like vntoo stithies or Anuils: the beating vpon them is not able to chaunge their nature, for wee see how they beate backe the blowes again. Euen so then vntill God haue touched vs too the quicke within, it is certeine that wee shall doo nothing but kicke against him and gather rankour more and more: and whensoever he chastizeth vs, wee shall gnash our teethe at him, and wee shall doo nothing else but storme at him. And in good soothe the wickednesse of men is so mischeuous, so headstrong, and so desperate, that the more that God chastizeth them, the more doo they spew out theyr blasphemyes, and shewe themselves too bee vterly past amendment, so as there is no way too bring them vntoo reason. Let vs lerne then, that till God haue touched vs with his holie spirit, it is vnpossible that his chastizements should serue to bring vs backe to repentance, but rather they shall make vs too wex woorie, and woorse. Yet can it not bee sayd that God is not ryghtuous in so dooing. And whyso? for thereby men are conuincid, inso much as if God hid them not at a bay in that sort by punishing their sinnes, they myght pleade ignorance, that they neuer wist of it, and that they ouershot themselves by cause God had not prouoked them too acknowledge their faults. But when they haue felt the hand of God, so as they haue bin fayne too perceyue his iudgements byte of their teethe, and haue bin as it were sommoned, and yet notwithstanding haue not only gone onward from euill too woorse, but also ben puffed vp with open and manifest rebellion against God: Hereby wee see, that in effect they haue their mouth stopped, and that they haue not any more too say for themselves. Yee see then how God sheweth his iustice as often as hee punisheth men, notwithstanding that the sinne bee not found too bee a correction too their amendment. Furthermore, when God chastizeth the castaways, it is all one as if hee should out of hand begin too shewe his wrath vpon them, and that the fyre of it were alreadye kindled. True it is that they are not vterly consumed 10 for the present tyme, howbeit they are tokens of the horrible vengeance that is prepared for them at the latter day. Yee see then that many men are touched with Gods hand, which notwithstanding are accursed. For they begin their hell alreadye in this world, according as wee haue examples in all such as amend not their wicked lyfe when God sendeth afflictions vpon them, but a man shall see them take a corner and stande barking like dogges, and thoughte they bee able too doo no more, yet cease they not too shewe 20 a continuall woodnesse. Or else they are like restiades as comparison is made in the twoo and thirtieth Psalme: or finally they are altoogither ouersotted, so as they knowe not their owne harme, I meene as too consider the hand that striketh as the Prophet sayeth: They will crye alas, and they shall feele the blowes. But what for that? they think neuer the more vpon Gods hand, neyther knowe they howe it is hee that visiteth them. VVee see then before our eyes, that many men are the more unhappie for being chastized 30 at Gods hand, by cause they profit not in his schoole, nor yet take any good by his corrections. But heere is mention made precisely of those whom God chastyzeth by touching them with his holie spirit. Therefore let vs assure our selues, that when God maketh vs too feele his hand, so as wee are humbled vnder the same: hee dooth vs a speciall good turne, and it is a priuiledge which he giueth too none but too his owne children. VVhen wee feele the corrections which he sendeth vs, and moreouer are taught too mislike of 40 our selues for our offences, too sygh and grone for them before him, and too flee too his mercye for refuge: I say, when wee haue such a feeling of Gods chastyzements: it is a token that he hath wrought in our harts by his holie spirit. For it is too hygh a poynt of wisdom too growe in the mynd of man: it must procede of the free goodnesse of our God: the holie Ghost must first haue softened the sayd cursed hardnesse and stubbornesse wherevntoo wee are inclined of nature. Let vs vnderstand then that this present 50 text is spoken precisely of Gods children, who are not stubborne against his hand, but are ouermaystred and tamed by the holie Ghost, too the intent they should not stryue agaynst the afflictions which he sendeth vntoo them. But yet will this saying seeme strange after the opinion of the flesh. VVhyso? VVhatfoeuer inconueniences fall out otherwyse than wee would haue them, wee terme them Aduersities. VVhen wee indure anye hunger, thirst, cold, or heate, wee say that euerye one of these is an aduersitie. VVhyso? for 60 wee would fayne haue our owne appetytes and desyres. And in good soothe this maner of speaking (too say that the mishappes which God sendeth vpon vs are aduersities that is too say things against vs) is not without reason. Neuerthelesse wee must vnderstand the end of them: namely that Gods scourging of vs is by cause of our sinnes. And therefore let vs not bee beguyled by flattering of our selues. Furthermore I haue alreadye told you, not only that it is requisyte for vs too consider, that Gods scourging of vs is by cause hee hateth sinne, and that his summoning of vs before him, is too make vs feele him too bee our iudge: but also that he had neede too reache out his armes vntoo vs, and too shewe vs that hee is redie too bee at one with vs whensoever wee shall come too him with true repentance. So then wee perceyue, that they whom God chastyzeth are happie, notwithstanding that wee shunne aduersitie as much as wee possibly can. Also wee shall neuer consent too this doctrine too receyue it with our hart: vntill fayth haue made vs too behold the goodnesse that God vscth towards his seruants, when hee draweth them backe too himself. And that wee may the better comprehend this, let vs marke what becommeth of men when God leaueth them too themselves, and maketh no countenance of clenzing them from their sinnes. Looke vpon a man that is giuen too all euell: as for example, let vs take a despyzer of God: if God let him alone and seeme not too chastyze him, yee shall see such a one harden himself, and the diuell shall carye him still further and further: and therefore it were much better for him, that hee had ben chastyzed sooner. And so, the greatest mishappe that can lyght vpon vs, is when God suffereth vs too welter in our owne wickednesse: for then must wee needs rotte away in it in the end. Verely it were greatly too bee desyred, that men would come vntoo God of their owne accord without spurring, and that they would cleaue vnto him without any warning giuen them of their faults, and without any rebuking of them: this (I say) were a thing greatly too bee wished, yea and moreouer, that there were no faulte in vs, and that wee were as Angels, desyring nothing but too yeelde obedience too our maker, and too honour and loue him as our father. But forasmuch as wee bee so froward, that wee cease not too offend God: [and besydes that] doo 10 play the hypocrites with him, seeking too conceale our faultes from him: and forasmuch as there is so greate pryde in vs, that wee would haue God too let vs alone and too vphold vs in our luts, and fynally would bee his iudges rather than hee should bee ours, considering (I say) how wee bee so froward: it standeth God on hand too vse some violent remedie too drawe vs vntoo him. For if hee should handle vs altoogither by gentlenesse, what would become of it? VVee see this thing partly euen in young children. For if their fathers and moothers chastyze them not, they send them too the gallows. True it is that they perceyue it not: howbeit experience sheweth it, and wee haue common prouerbes of it, that the more that fathers cocker their children, the more doo they marre them: and the moothers doo it yet much more: for they bee fond in flattering of them, and in the meane whyle doo bring them too naught: Herein God sheweth vs as it were small beames of that thing which is much more in himself. For if hee should handle vs myldely, wee should 20 bee vterly vndoone and past recouerie. Therefore he must bee fayne too shewe himselfe a father towards vs, and too bee rowgh with vs, being wee are of so sturdie a nature, that if he should deale gently with vs, wee should take no good by it. Yee see how wee may atteyne too the truth of this doctrine, that the man is happie whom God chastyzeth: that is too wit, by considering what our nature is, namely how it is 30 stubstubborne, how it is hard to be framed to order, and that if God should neuer chastize vs, it were not for our profit: and therefore that it is needfull that hee should hold vs short, and that he should giue vs so manie lashses with the whippe, as wee should bee constreyned too regard him whither wee would or no. Then shall wee at length come too conclude, that the man is happie whom God chastizeth: yea verely if he adde the second grace vntoo it: that is too wit, if hee make his roddes and his corrections too auayle, and cause the hoie Ghost too woork in such wyfe in the hart, as a man may no more bee hardened too aduaunce himself against God, but may haue the care too think vpon his owne sinnes, and be ryghtly tamed and humbled. Thus yee see why I sayd that the greatest benefyte which wee can haue, is too bee corrected at Gods hand, in so much that when wee haue cast our account too the full, wee shall fynd that the corrections which hee sendeth vs, are more for our profit than the bread that wee cate. For if wee starue for hunger, God will haue pitie vpon vs in taking of vs out of this world. But if wee liue still heere bylowe, and cease not too prouoke the wrath of him that sheweth himselfe so good and liberall a father too wards vs: see yee not too shamefull an vnthankfulness? I pray you, had it not ben better that wee had ben borne dead, than that wee should so prolong our lyfe too our damnation? But if God preuent vs and vse chastyzements as [preferuatyue] medicines, and tarye not till the disease bee too farre ouergrowne: is it not a greate benefyte too vs, and such a one as wee ought too wish for? Sor hen, as oft and so long as his corrections are hard and bitter too vs, and that our flesh prouoke vs too impaciencie and dispayre, let vs lerne too call this lesson too remembrance, that the man is happie whom God chastyzeth, howbeit that our imagination will not say so: for contrarily wee surmyze that nothing is better, than too bee spared and borne withall. But certainly although wee knowe by experience, how it is not without cause that the hoie Ghoste hath vttered such a sentence: yet notwithstanding it is not ment thereby, that the corrections which wee haue too indure, are not cuermore sowre and paynfull in themselves, according as the Apostle sayeth: and God also will haue vs too feele the prickings that put vs too payne. For if wee feele no greif when God correcteth vs, where is our obedientnesse? And furthermore, how shall wee lerne too bee angrie with our selues for our sinnes? How shall wee bee afrayd of Gods iudgements too bee tamed aright? Then behoueth it vs too bee greued with the aduersitie which God sendeth vs. And although the aduersitie bee turned too our benefyte, and that God doo therby shewe that he loueth vs: yet is it requisyte that there bee some pricking and paynfulnesse in it, too the intent wee may perceyue the wrath of God, and bee displeas'd with our selues for our sinnes. But yet heere withall wee must mount vp hygher, and when wee haue found how our nature is inclyned too all euill: let vs confesse ourselues to haue neede that God should vse some sharppunishment too purge vs withall, as wee see phisicians doo, who now and then put some kynd of poyson in their medicines, after as they see the maladies too bee greate and decperooted. The Phisicion seeth well ynough how it is too the weakening of a poore man and too the vnstrengthening of his veynes and sinewes: and specially when no gentler meanes will serue than letting of blood, it is euen as much as too drawe the substance out of a mannes bodye, and yet must he needs vse suche violent meanes, too remedie such a maladie: Euen so is God fayne too woork with vs, howbeeit that the same bee an extraordinarie maner with him. For when wee say wee bee happie too bee chastized at Gods hand: it must leade vs vntoo lowelinessse, feing that God cannot procure our saluation, but by shewing himself too bee against vs. Is it not too bee sayd iustly, that there is a maruellouse corruptnesse in men, sith God cannot bee their Sauour and father but by handling them roughly? For his nature is too shewe himself gracious and gentle too all his creatures. And he foloweth the order which he would keepe as in respect of himself: he dooth nothing else but spred out his goodnesse vpon vs, in such wyfe as wee should bee replenished with his grace to bee wholly rauished therat. But now, if hee handle vs gently according too his owne nature and inclinacion: wee are vndoone. And therefore hee is fayne as it were too alter his mynd: that is too say, too shewe himselfe otherwyfe too wards vs than hee would bee. And what is the cause thereof? Our vnrecoverable naughtinesse. And therefore wee haue good cause heere too bee confounded with shame, when wee see that hee is fayne (as yee would say) too disguise himselfe, if hee intend that wee should not perish. Thus much as touching this sentence. Howbeeit forasmuch as wee cannot well apply this doctrine too our vse, without the adding of that which foloweth: let vs ioyne them bothe toogether. It is sayd, Refuse not the correction of the Almyghtie: for he that hath made the wound, byndeth it vp, and layeth conuenient playsters too it, and when he hath sent the maladie, he healeth it. Heere wee are exhorted, not too refuse Gods corrections. And the cause thereof is added by and by: that is too witte, by cause God will giue it a good issue. Loe wherein consisteth the sayd happinesse whercof Eliphaz hath made mention. Let vs learne heere, that when God purposeth too exhort vs too patience, hee rot only telleth vs that wee cannot eschew his hand, that wee doe but lose tyme in rebelling against him, that wee must passe that way spyte of our teethe, and that wee cannot withstand necessitie: for that were but the patience of a Lumbard as they say, when wee should grynd our teethe after that maner, and therewithall list vp our selues against God as much as in vs lyeth, so as wee should not bee patient, but perforce. Therefore if wee will bee patient too Godward, wee must bee drawn too him after another maner: that is too wit, wee must bee soone comforted as saynt Paule speaketh in the fiftenth too the Romanes, where he putteth these twoo things toogether as inseparable: that is too witte, that too the intent wee may haue patience in all our aduersities, wee must haue a taste of Gods goodnesse, wee must reioyce of his grace, and wee must assure our selues that his scourging of vs is for our welfare. And this is the thing that is shewed vs in this streyne: when it is sayd: Refuze not the correction of the almyghtie. For it is hee that is the Surgeon of all your sores, it is he that will send you helth of all your diseases. God then sheweth vs heere, how his meaning is not that mennes submitting of themselves vntoo him should be too say: Seing wee can nonetherwyfe doo, needs must God haue the maystrie of vs, for wee cannot exempt ourselues from his iurisdiction. The case standeth not vpon comming too him so, but our lord sayeth: No: but bee ye patient, humble your selues vnto mee, and take warning by my iudgements that yee murmure not against mee, ne stomack the matter: or otherwyfe ye shal bee fayne too bee beaten downe by my hand, yea euen in such wyfe as yee shal bee vtterly ouerwhelmed. But if yee hüby acknowledge your faults, and come to me to craue pardon: ye shall feele assuagement of your miseries, in suche sorte as yee shall haue cause to yeelde mee thanks, euen in the middes of your greatest troubles. Beholde (say I) what we haue to mize vpon, that wee may haue the true pacience. Seing then that of our owne nature wee be stubborne against God, and are angrie with him if he do but touche vs with his little finger: seing also that wee haue suche a prouderesse in vs, as wee thinke that God dothe vs wrong if he chastyze vs: Seing (I say) that wee haue these two so greate vices: it is a very harde matter too purge vs of them. So much the more therefore must wee minde the lesson that is shewed vs here: that is too witte, that God by scourging vs meeneth to bring vs backe to himselfe, yea euen to our benefite and welfare. Furthermore it behoueth vs to marke well the promise that is set downe here: that is too wit, that God will heale the woundes which he hath made. True it is that this healing pertayneth not to all men, but onely to suche as receyue his corrections meekely. And by the way lette vs marke, that God will haue all menne put in minde to returne vnto him, considering the gentlenesse whiche he sheweth them. But what? There are many which taste not the thing that is conteyned here: and this also is the cause why we see so much impacience, so much murmuring, and so much blasphemie vsed against God. The corrections light on all through out, but where is the repentance? There is none at all. But we see how it seemeth that men had conspired to withstand God to the vtermost. Why is that? Bicause there are very fewe that conceyue this present doctrine, or that receyue the sayde promise to say, Lorde it is thine office too binde vp the woundes which thou haste made, and to heale the sore. And therefore lette vs remember well this lesson, specially seing it is so often repeated. For it is not onely in this sentence, that the holy Ghoste speaketh so: but also wee see howe it is sayde, the Lorde smyteth vs, and healeth vs againe the thirde day after: so that if he haue giuen vs any strype with his rodde, wee shoulde not therefore imagine that he will not bee mercifull too vs when wee come vnto him. When suche exhortacions are made vnto vs in the Prophetes, it is all one as if God should say vnto vs, true it is that I haue scourged you for a while, but I will sprede out my mercie vpon you, and that shall bee euerlasting: so as if yee felte any anger or any signe of choler (as in a father that is displeas'd with his children,) it was not bicause I haue hated you, but bycause I haue bene sayne to make you feele the fruite of your sinnes, and to doo you to vnderstande that I hate them: neuer thelesse, in the ende yee shall finde that I purpose nothing els but too heale the woundes, and too cure the diseales which I haue sent. True it is that at the first blushe, to our seeming, it is not meete that God shoulde take pleasure, to wounde men first, and then to heale them. Why rather dothe he not lette vs alone in peace and prosperitie? But I haue already shewed that the woundes which God maketh are as good as medicines too vs. It is then a double grace which God graunteth vs here. The one is that when God scourgeth vs, he procureth our welfare by drawing vs too repentance and by purging vs from our sinnes, specially from the sinnes that wee know not of. For God is not contented to remedie the inconueniencies that are already present: but he considereth also that there is much seede of sicknesse hidden within vs. Therefore he layeth holde on vs aforehande, he redresseth things amisse, and singular is the benefite that he dothe vnto vs when he seemeth too come against vs with naked swordes, and pretendeth to bee angrie with vs, and yet notwithstanding sheweth himselfe a Philicion how soeuer the worlde go. Marke this for a speciall poynt. Then followeth the second grace which also is well shewed vnto vs: that is to witte, that God bindeth vp the woundes which he hath made, and healeth them. And this is it which I haue alledged already out of Sainct Paule, how he suffereth vs not to be reimped aboute our power, but giueth a good issue to all our miseries. So then although corrections bee profitable, yea and necessarie for vs, and that God is sayne to promouke vs by diuers meanes to returne vnto him: yet notwithstanding he spareth vs, and looketh not altogether what our sinnes require, but what wee are able to beare. And here yee see why he sayeth that he will chastize vs with a mans hande, that is too say he will not proceede according too his owne mightie power. For what would become of vs, if God should stretch out his arme against vs? Alas, what creature were able too stande before him? Verily he needeth no more but to shewe one angrie looke, and beholde all the worlde shoulde perishe. And though he doo not so: yet let him but withdrawe his spirite, and all muste needes decay, as it is sayde in the hundred and fourth Psalm. But he handleth vs gently, and therewithall also withdraweth his hande when he seeth vs to sore oppressed, and spareth vs when wee bow vnder the burthen, condicionally that wee bee of a lowly and meeke minde. For wee knowe how he telleth vs in his lawe, that if wee fall to sturdincesse against him, he will be sturdie towardes vs, as he sayeth also in the eighteenth Psalm, I will be stubborne against suche as are stubborne. VVee make a fayre hande if we be stout, and stubborne, and furnish against God: let vs not thinke to compasse him by that meanes. For he will be frowarde with the frowarde: that is too say, he will be ouer terrible when he seeth men vse such an obstinate malice against him, and therefore needes must they bee vtterly oppressed. But if wee bee of a meeke minde to submitte our selues too the mightie hande of God: it is certayne that wee shall alwayes finde that thing in him which is spoken of here. Then let vs folow that which is shewed vs by the Apostle. Humble your selues (sayeth he) vnder the mightie hand of God. For who soeuer stoupeth downe with his head, who soeuer boweth his knee before God to honour him, shall feele his hande ready to releue him if he fall. But he that listeth himselfe vp against God, shall bee sure to feele Gods hande against him. Desire wee to feele Gods hande vnder vs to ayde vs? Then let vs humble our selues. But who soeuer aduanceth himselfe, he muste needes rushe against the hande of God, and feele the thunderclap that shall vtterly ouerwhelme him. And so let vs beare well in minde this lesson when it is sayde, Refuse not the correction of the almightie. VVhen wee shall haue caught holde of Gods goodnesse, so as we know his fatherly loue: it will serue to sweeten the afflictions, whiche otherwise will seeme harsh and sharpe to vs. But in the meane while euery one of vs muste apply this lesson to his owne vse. For it will bee an easie matter for vs to say, Blessed bee God for chastizing men so: and yet in the meane season, when we our selues be chastized, we do not prayse him, but rather grudge against him. Truly wee muste not deale so with him. But when soeuer wee our selues are scourged, lette vs receyue the corrections patiently, and let vs our selues take those things for incoragements, which wee can skill to giue for comfortes vnto others. Let vs vnderstand then how there is not that man of vs, which hath not many vices, in him, and that the same are as many diseases, which God cannot heale but by means of the afflictions which he sendeth vs. True it is that if he listeth too vse an absolute power, he could well doo it otherwise: but wee speake not now of Gods a mightinesse, wee treate onely of the meane which his will is too keepe towards vs. For asmuch then as it is Gods will too holde this sayde order of remedying our vices by scourging vs: it behoueth euery of vs to studie this lesson for himselfe, to the ende wee may all confesse with Dauid, Lorde it is too my profite, that thou haste brought me lowe. Dauid speaketh not there of other men, to say, Lord thou haste done well too chastize such as haue done amisse: but he beginneth at himselfe. And so muste wee doo. And that is it which the holy Ghost sheweth vs here, saying, Behold the man is happie whom God chastizeth. And why so? For men cannot abide to bee gouerned by God, but they striue against him and continue alwayes vncommendable, and therefore it is needefull and profitable for them to be chastized of God. And for asmuch as wee see Gods hand listeth vp now a dayes bothe generally and seuerally: wee ought too bee the more touched with this doctrine. It is apparant into what enormities the worlde is come: and is it any wonder then, if God shewe suche rigour? And yet is it certayne that he beareth very muche with vs in doing thereof. True it is that a man may see he punisheth not the wicked as he doth vs, notwithstanding that they bee rebellious and obstinate to the vttermoste, and will not yeelde themselues vnto God for all the warnings that a man can giue them. But what? He summoneth them by all the afflictions which he layeth before their eyes in the persones of other men, and specially by those which he maketh them too feeble nowe and then in their owne persones. And he will condemne them of stubborne wilfulnesse bicause they continue so rebellious and obstinate. But on our side, lette vs pray him that he will not suffer vs too bee so hardened: but that assoone as he shall shewe vs the signes of his displeasure, he will worke in suche wise in vs by his holy spirit, as he may soften the sayde hardnesse of our hartes, that his grace may take place when he shall haue receyued vs to mercie, according as we haue neede thereof, and as wee may perceyue if we be not tooo ouerblockishe.

*Psalm. 119.
Ib. 10.*

But let vs fal downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, beseeching him to make vs so to mislike of them, as we may desire nothing so much as to returne to him to craue pardon, framing our selues wholly too his good will, according as he hath shewed the same to vs in his holy lawe, to walke all our lyfe long in his feare, to glorifie his holy name, and too honour him accordingly. And so lette vs say, Almighty God and our heauenly father, &c.

The xxij. Sermon, which is the sixth vpon the fifth Chapter.

19. He will deliuer thee from sixe afflictions, and in the seuenth the euill shall not touch thee.
20. In the time of dearth he shall preterue thee from death, & from the sword in the time of vvarre.
21. Thou shalt bee hidden from the scourge of the tong, and thou shalt not bee afraid vwhen destruction commeth.
22. Thou shalt laugh in destruction and dearth, and shalt not be afraid of the beasts of the field.
23. Thou shalt haue league vwith the stones, and the wilde beasts shall be brought to haue peace vwith thee.
24. Thou shalt perceyue that thy Tent is in suretie, and in visiting thy house thou shalt not be greued.
25. Thou shalt see thy linage increace, and thine offspring as the grasse of the ground.
26. Thou shalt come to thy graue, being full as a reeke of corne gathered in due season.
27. Behold, vve haue inquired of these things, it is so: therefore herken, and marke it for thy self.

Yesterday I intreated of the comfort that is set downe here for all the faithfull when God afflicteth the: which is, that their wounds are not deadly, bicause God will at length deliuer them from their miseries, for so much as he is the Surgion to cure their stripes. And truly he tempereth them with such measure, as wee are not vterly oppressed, bicause he vpholdeth vs for partie of the feeblenesse that is in vs. Therefore to be short, God by his wonderfull prouidence doth continually cause the issue of our afflictions to be happie, and ministretu matter of gladnesse vnto vs, considering how it is for our benefit and welfare, as Sainct Paule also speaketh in the eight too the Romanes. And nowe too

Rom. 8. f. 27

confirmeth the same matter it is sayde, That God will deliuer his chozen from sixe troubles, or daungers, and that in the seuenth the euill shall not come at them. Hereby it is signified vnto vs, that God will perchance suffer vs to indure many miseries, and when we be escaped out of one, we shall enter into another, and that it may be as a continually exercise for vs all the time of our life, so as there shall be no respite for the poore children of God, but that they shall be tormeted now after one fashion & now after another: Yea (which more is) it behoueth them & it is expedient for them to be so hadled, bicause of their sinnes: but yet neuertheless God giueth their afflictions a good end, notwithstanding that the number of the be infinite. Thus yee see in effect what is shewed vs here. And wee haue neede of this promise, considering the vntowardnesse that is in vs. For albeit we haue felt by experience, that God haue ayded and succored vs in some aduersitie: yet afterward if we be in daunger againe, it seemeth to vs that there is no looking for succor at his hand. See ye not an ouer great vnthankfulnesse & frowardnesse? Yet notwithstanding, as oft as God helpeth those that are his, it is to assure the for the time to come, to the end they might alwaies haue recourse vnto him, reasoning thus with themselves: seing that my God hath helped me & pitied me at my neede, he will not forget me any more so long as I liue: therefore wil I call vpo him and resort vnto him for refuge, & I am sure he is ready alwayes to remedie all the incoueniēces that can happen vnto me. Behold then how God would assure vs of his succor, & yet we cannot find in our hartes to trust vnto it. On the cōtrarie part, when he doeth vs good, wee imagine that he is verie to be overcloyed by vs, & that he would not haue vs to trouble him any more, or rather we forget his releeuing of vs, so as we

put

put no trust in him as he would that wee shoulde doo. VVee see then how wee haue neede to minde well this lesson, that is too witte, that God will deliuer vs out of sixe troubles: as if it had bene sayde, wee must not trust in God, onely for a day or twoo, or onely for one push: but for asmuche as our life is full of many miseries, so as wee bee no sooner copen out of one aduersitie, but there commeth another freshe in the necke of it, and so wee bee tormented with miseries out of number: therefore inasmuche as wee haue a continuall battell, and shoulde bee ouerthrowne incontinently if God were not at hande too helpe vs: we must beleuee it for a certaintie, that he will not fayle vs. Some expound this text more precisely, as though it were sayd, that God will deliuer vs from miseries all the time of our lyfe, and in the ende make vs to passe out of all, by taking vs out of this worlde. For like as the worlde was made in sixe dayes: so also mans lyfe is willingly compreheded in that number, and then commeth rest when God strippeth vs out of this mortall bodie: for ye see how he then maketh an ende of all our labours, griefes, and battelles. But lette it suffize vs too haue the playne meening of this texte: whiche is, that although wee bee tossed with many miseries during this present life: God will continually make vs way out of them, and bring vs to a good hauen. To be short, mention is made here of seuen corrections after the common maner of the holie Scripture: for this sayd number of Seuen importeth a greate, and as it were an infinite quantitie. And here yee see why it is sayde in the Prouerbes, That the righteous man falleth seuen times a day and riseth againe. True it is that some men vnderstande this too bee ment of sinning: but Salomon speaketh onely of the mischaunces that we fall into. For wee be beaten with many roddes, one while there commeth some disease, and an other time some other aduersitie: now some man shal trouble vs, & anon another shal do vs some wrong. Yee see then the falles which Gods children fall into, so that in steede of holding them vp with strong hande, it seemeth that he letteth them tumble downe like little babes which haue no strength. But what? VVhen wee be so falne, God dothe alwayes releeue vs: and specially (as he sayeth in another text,) he will haue his hande vnder vs, and will not suffer vs too fall ouer harde. Then lette vs learne by this streyne, that we are warned first of al not to maruell though it behoue vs to come in many tribulations. And why? for God hath set vs in the worlde to the same purpose and ende: and therefore it is not for vs too promise our selues this or that. And what shall wee gayne by bearing our selues in hande that wee shall haue that thing which is not in our power to haue? Also God will alwayes suffer vs to be disapointed of our expectation, when we be so foolish as too make our reckening without him, and submit not our selues to his government. Therefore noman muste warrant himselfe a continuall reste, seing that God will haue vs to fight, and that it is his pleasure too exercise vs so. Furthermore, sith wee see that wee ceasse not too prouoke Gods wrath, and that there is suche store of faults in vs: is it meete that wee shoulde therevpon desire too liue at our ease, and in pleasures, neuer too parte from them? were not that inough too make vs rotte in our owne dung, if God shoulde not skoure vs from them by afflictions? Lette vs learne then to prepare our selues too bataille, assuring our selues that while we liue in this worlde, wee are not here as in a Paradise, but wee be here to haue many miseries and troubles, bycause Gods will is so. And so wee knowe that aduersities are profitable for vs, yea and necessarie for our saluation, and that God is fayne to visite and quicken vs vp after that maner. Thus much concerning the first poynt, how the holy Ghost declareth here that the faithfull shall bee subiect too many infirmities. For he speaketh not but of Gods children, euen of those too whom he sheweth mercie: and yet notwithstanding he sayeth euen of them, that they shall bee tormented, not of one affliction alone, but of sixe or seuen. Nowe by the way after wee bee warned too be pacient in all our aduersities: lette vs also beare in minde the presente comfote that is giuen vs here: that is too witte, that God will neuer fayle vs at our neede. True it is that he will not succour vs at eue-ry pinche, to exempt vs vterly from all miserie: but yet will he succor vs in due season, and that shall bee inough for vs, although wee bee driuen too an afterdeale, and bee not ayded by him so soone as our desire would craue it. For our desires are as boyling as may bee, and God delayeth and letteth vs alone too trie our pacience. But in the meane season (as I haue sayde) lette that suffyze vs whiche God hath declared vnto vs: namely that we shall not bee disapoynted of his helpe, so wee tarie his leysure quietly, till he see it good too deliuer vs. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in minde. And in conclusion, whensoever God shall haue made vs too wade out of many miseries, so as he suffereth vs not too enter into them any more, but deliuereth vs out of them once for all: It is as much too say, as God will continually increafe his goodnesse towards vs, and that if wee haue felte his helpe sixe times (that is too say many a time and often) in the ende he will shewe himselfe yet more fauorable towards vs, and his meening is, not onely to reach vs his hande at all times, too make vs way out of the miseries wherein wee bee: but also will take vs into his eternal rest, and make an ende of all the troubles wherewith wee are incompassed as nowe. So then, all the benefites that God bestoweth vpon vs in this present life, doo guyde vs vnto this one marke: that isto witte, that in the ende our saluation shall bee perfect and full. God as nowe giueth vs a little taste of it: but lette vs tarie till he haue brought things to their true perfection, and then shall wee perceyue him too bee our Sauour. Lo howe the benefites whiche wee receyue in this worlde, ought too giue vs a more large and high expectation of Gods goodnesse, the whiche is shewed nowe in parte, and not all wholly. But after he hath sayde so, he addeth, That wee shall bee deliuered in the tyme of dearth. Some are of opinion, that Eliphaz declareth here the seuen afflictions whereof he hath spoken. But this so curious exposition, hath no substantialnesse for a man too reste fully vpon. Therefore lette vs followe the naturall sence such as it is: that is too witte, that according as the miseries are infinite wherewith God scourgeth vs in this worlde: so muste our hope stretch out it selfe farre and wide, too the ende wee may continually wayte for the sayde deliuerance which he hath promised vs, what soeuer kinde of miseries wee indure. Yee see why here is men-made of dearth, of warre, of wilde beastes, of stormes and tempestes, of fyre, and of other calamities, according as wee see howe our poore lyfe is besieged with so many sortes of aduersities as nothing can bee more. The thing then that is declared to vs in effect, is that God not onely draweth vs out of dearth, nor onely deliuereth vs from warre: but also that in what trouble soeuer wee bee, wee shall finde that he hath the issue of it in his hande, according as it is sayde that he hath the issues [or outgoings] of deathe in his hande. And this is a righte necessarie poynte. For wee see what the superstition of menne is: that is too witte, that they distribute G.ij. Gods

Prouerb. 24
b. 16.

Psalms. 91. c.
12.

Psalms. 68.
d. 26

Gods offices vnto others, bycause that (too their seeming) they coule not finde remedie for all inconueniencies, if they shoulde resort to all too one place. Here yee see why the Papiſtes make one Sainct or two, or three, or fower to haue the charge of Agues, another too haue the keeping of the fruites of the earth, and a thirde too haue rule of ſuche a diſeaſe. And why is it? for they imagine that if they shoulde resort vnto God when they haue the ague, or if they shoulde come too him for helpe when they haue the dropſie: he were not able too intende too ſo many things at once, and therefore it were better that eche feuerall office were committed too a feuerall Sainct, or els to two or three of them, and ſo conſequently that the lyke ſhould bee done too this Sainct and that Sainct. Behold how men teare Gods maiestie in pieces by their diueliſh ſuperſtitious, when they robbe him after that ſorte of his operation, and put it ouer too his creatures. Also lette vs marke well this doctrine, wherein it is declared vnto vs, that if God keepe vs from the plague, he will also keepe vs from the ſwoorde, ſo as men neede not too go ditribute his office too this man or that: for lette vs assure our ſelues that he will be our Sauour, not onely in parte, but also throughout in all things. Therefore lette vs boldly haue our recourse vnto him, not onely in one kinde of aduerſitie, but in as many as shall come vpon vs, affuring our ſelues that his power shall extende euen vnto all the deathes that can threaten vs, according as it is ſayd, that he not only hath a way too deliuer vs from death, but also hath wayes which are incomprehenſible too vs. VVhen wee be afflicted on the one ſide, God will on thother ſide make vs feele that wee bee helped. VVhen wee bee locked vp ſo as there ſeemeth no way for vs to ſcape, God will finde one for vs, yea after his owne faſhion, that is too ſay, aboute the vnderſtanding and opinion of the fleſhe. But by the way wee bee here new againe warned too prepare our ſelues to pacience, not onely for ſome one kinde of aduerſitie, but for all that euer can betyde vs, according as wee ſee howe menne are borne too diuers afflictions. And I ſay this, bicaufe that ſuche as are ſtrong inough too indure ſome one aduerſitie, will immediatly bee ouercome of ſome other temptation. As for example, a man shall finde ſome that can indure pouertie: and yet one ſickenefſe will carie them away in ſuche ſorte, as they shall frette againſt God and there shall be no meane too appeaſe them. Other ſome can well away with ſickenefſe, or with this thing or that: but if a man doo them any wrong or iniurie, or if a man go about too deface them, in that cace they haue loſt all their pacience. Then may there nowe and then bee an apparance of vertue in a man, as in reſpect of ſome one kinde of temptation: but in ſome other he shall fayle. For this cace it behooueth vs too marke well what is conteyned in this ſtreyne: namely that God will not commend a man for ſhewing himſelfe ſtoute in ſome one poynt, if he bee colde and incontinently quayed in the reſte. But our pacience muſte reache further: that is too witte, wee muſte yeelde our ſelues peaceably in all that euer God shall ſende vs. For when wee bee exhorted too bee patient, God ſetteth not before our eyes one miſeric, or two, or three: but he ſayeth that euery of vs muſt take vp his croſſe or fardell. And what manner fardell muſte this bee? wee muſte not make our owne packet, too ſay, I will haue ſuch a meature or ſuche a portion: but it belongeth too God too giue vs our burthen. And he aduertizeth vs, that when wee shall haue bene perfecuted after one faſhion, wee muſte bee fayne too enter into a newe and farre diuers battell. Therefore wee muſt prepare our ſelues therevnto. And here yee ſee also why afflictions are termed, A cup or drinking glaſſe. For like as when a Phiſition giueth his pacient ſuche quantitie as he thinketh good, the pacient muſt bee fayne to receyue the drinke in ſuche portion as the Phiſicion ſhall haue appointed: or like as a father in cheriſhing his children, cutteth euery of them their pittance, and giueth them too eate and drinke after his owne pleaſure: euen ſo muſte God diſpoſe of vs, and haue the authoritie ouer vs too charge vs, and to giue vs ſuch portion of miſeries as he shall thinke good. Seing the cace ſtandeth ſo, lette vs remember the doctrine that is ſette downe here, how God wil deliuer vs from famine in the tyme of dearth, that he will ſaue vs from the ſwoorde in the time of warre, and that he will defende vs from wilde beaſtes: as if it were ſayde, that menne shall not onely bee affayed, ſome by famine, ſome by warre, ſome by peſtilence, and otherſome by anoyances of wilde beaſtes: but also that as well the one as the other shall feele, that they may haue as many anoyances, as wee ſee there are meanes to trouble vs, and that they are as many enimies neere aboute vs, and that if our God haue not his hande ſtretched out continually too haue pitie vpon vs and too deliuer vs, wee ſee a hundred thouſande deathes which threaten vs and incompaſſe vs on all ſides. Yee ſee then howe it ſtandeth euery one of vs on hande, too thinke well vpon the daungers wherein he is, and too knowe howe miſerable our ſtate is, too the ende he may bee the more earneſt in calling vpon God. And herewithall lette vs also bee readie to indure patiently, not onely ſome one kinde of aduerſitie, but also an infinite number of them, according as it shall pleaſe God too ſcourage euery of vs. For it is not ſayde, that God contenteth himſelfe with exercyſing of vs after ſome one ſorte: but that wee muſte bee fayne too paſſe through fyre and water: that is too ſay, wee shall not haue one ſorte of affliction alone: but aſſoone as we be paſſed out of one aduerſitie, wee muſte ſtreight wayes enter into another. Yee ſee in effect what is ſignified vnto vs here. But it is ſayde immediatly, That wee shall bee in league with the ſtones and with the wilde beaſtes. VVhereby Eliphaz meeneth, that the things whiche are woonte too anoy and too trouble menne, (ſuche as the ſtones of the ſielde and the wilde beaſtes are) shall not diſquiet vs. And howe shall not the ſtones of the ſielde trouble vs? Nother in walking, nor in tilling the ground. For wee knowe that the tilling of a grounde is the more painefull, if it bee ſtonie, and that it is the more labourſome for a poore man where his plough shall bee oftentimes in daunger of breaking, if he turne not away the ſtones. Lo wherefore our Lord telleth vs that the ſtones shall not hurte our walking nor our labouring in the ſielde: our walking (I ſay) to haue any vnhappy ſtumblingplot. Also he addeth the beaſtes of the earth: for wee ſee that the beaſtes are againſt vs. True it is that the beaſtes ought of their nature too obey vs, bicaufe God hath giuen man dominion ouer all his creatures, and ſpecially bicaufe he hath created the beaſtes too the ende they shoulde bee ſubiect vnto menne, and acknowledge man as the Prince that reigneth here beneath according as God hath ordeyned. But yet notwithstanding, nowe are the beaſtes fayne too ryſe vp agaynſt vs. And that is, bicaufe wee haue not done homage too God in reſpecte of the ſoueraigne Lordſhip whiche he hath ouer all creatures, and whereof he hath made vs partakers. And lyke as if a man holding a fee of a Prince, and being his leege man had committed ſome offence, as of treaſon or rebellion, the goods which he hath shall be excheated: Euen ſo dealeth our Lord. For, for our vnthank-

Pſal. 66. 12
Eſai. 43. 2.

Gen. 1. 28.

vnthankfulnesse sake he hath bene fayne too berecue vs of the goodes that he had put into our handes, in so much that he hath armed the wylde beastes which ought too yeelde vs full obedience, and he rayseth them vp dayly against vs. Behold whereof commeth the contrarie, and as it were the enmitie that is betweene men and beastes. But here it is sayde that wee shall bee in league with the beastes: that is too say, that God will restrayne the rage that is in beastes, so as they shall haue no desire too doo vs harme. Truly wee see that God hath not as yet vterly bereft vs of the dominion whiche he gaue vs in Adam. For although that Horses and Bulles also bee beastes full of fiercenesse, so as it seemeth that they shoulde ouermayster menne: yet notwithstanding they bee commonly tamed, and menne bring them too their lure. And for asmuche as men haue their liuing in this worlde: it is Gods will that there shoulde still remayne some traces of his goodnesse, and that they shoulde inioy his creatures in parte. But yet for all that, they haue not this sayde league in suche perfection as God promisseth here, neyther were it conuenient for them too haue it. It behoueth vs too bee troubled and vexed by the beastes, too the intent wee may feele the fruite of our rebellion against God. Yet notwithstanding it is a speciall gifte which God giueth too those that are his, when they are vnder his defence and protection: that is too wit, that the wilde beastes are peaceable towards them, as if there were a league [betweene them,] and that God had treated a peace, and were come betwixt them too say, True it is that the beastes haue hitherto bene enimies too you, but now I will that there shall bee peace and agreement betweene you. Yee see then what is promised here, yea euen as it were a singular benefite too suche as shrowd themselues vnder the shadowe of Gods winges. But the meane howe too obtayne suche priuiledge, is shewed vs yet better in Osee, when he sayeth in his seconde Chapter, that God will cause a league too bee betweene vs and the wilde beastes, namely by our Lorde Iesus Christe. For in that place is expressely handled the restitution of the Church which was decayed and desolate. It is sayd that God will send peace throughout: and therewith it is added in particular, that he will cause vs too bee in league with the wilde beastes. And why so? Bycause that Iesus Christe is the vniuersall heire of all creatures, and all things are giuen into his handes: and if wee bee his members, we shall bee partakers of all the benefites whiche the father hath committed too him in all perfection. Yee see then how wee may walke through all the anoyances of this world without wounding: that is too witte, bycause Christe is our keeper, and ouerseeth our lyfe too maynteyne our welfare. Yet notwithstanding wee shall not ceasse too bee troubled: according as it is needefull that God shoulde chastyze vs in diuers sortes. But how soeuer the worlde go, wee shall finde howe it is not for nought sayde here, that God will make the wilde beastes too become as it were tame, so as they shal not ryse vp against vs with such rage as they haue bene wonte too doo, bicause that he will holde them shorte. And here wee haue a very profitable lesson: that is too witte, that wee muste not measure the assistance of our God by our eyefight, but by the promise of succour that is behighted vs from aboue. And why so? For yee see after what sorte God will be honored by vs: that is too witte, he will haue vs beholde the daungers that are neere vnto vs, and when wee see howe there are alwayes as it were a hundred perilles for vs too fall into, wee muste not therefore ceasse to truste too the ayde of our God, [and say:] Beholde Lord, it is true that if wee looke no further but onely here bylow, wee shall bee too too much confounded. But for asmuche as thou haste promised too helpe vs at our neede, our life muste nowe reste vpon thee, and wee muste put it into thy handes. Lo here a greate honor which wee doo vnto God, when wee can shette our eyes at all the daungers that threaten vs, and imbrace the promise that he hath made too maynteyne our welfare. And too shewe that the faythfull muste yeelde themselues wholly into Gods protection, it is sayde that they shall laugh in the time of calamitie and famine. Not that wee shall bee senselesse, no nor that wee ought too be so: but this laughing here importeth such a boldnesse, as we be not afrayde like the wretched vnbeleeuers, who know not what to say when they see themselues in any hazarde. Lette vs marke then that bothe the good and the badde shall feele the miserie that pincheth them, and conceyue the daungers too bee afrayde of them. But yet in the meane season, if an vnbeleuer perceyue any mischiefe towards him: ye shall see him so caried away with fearefulnesse, as there is no comforting of him. And (which woorte is) menne doo muze continually vpon their tormentes, according as Leuit. 26. 17. & f. 36. & f. 36. & f. 36. it is sayde that the wicked shall flee when noman followeth him. And in another texte it is sayd, that there needeth but a leafe too fall from a tree, too afright those that haue no trust in God. Yee see then that if men trust not in God, and committe not themselues wholly vnto him, they shall bee so scared out of their wittes, as they can haue no reste, according as it is sayde in the Lawe, that their life shall bee hanging as at a threede. In the morning they shall say, is it possible that I may go forth vntill night? and at night they shall bee in perplexitie too knowe if they may see the morning. Yee see then how they that regarde not God, are in continual thoughtfulness: and not so onely, but also they are in so extreeme agonies, as they wote not whither they be alieue or dead. But contrariwise, when Gods children haue perceyued the inconueniences, and haue fighed and bene attached with some feare: alwayes they come too saye thus: Lorde, into thy handes I commende my soule, thou haste redeemed mee, thou arte soothfaste, thou wilt continue thy goodnesse towards mee, euen too the end: euen so Lorde, therefore prouide thou for all my daungers. The faithfull hauing called thus vpon God, doo truste that he will heare them, and therefore they call vpon him without ceasing. And although they perceyue not that he helpeth them: yet notwithstanding they hold on still their course, warranting themselues that their welfare is assured, bycause it is grounded vpon Gods truth, which is infallible and vnchangeable. So then, yee see that by the Laughing whereof mention is made here, it is not ment that Gods children should become altogether senselesse too conceyue nothing, or that they should make a sport of it when God thretneeth them with any aduersitie: for that were no manlinesse, it were rather a beastlinesse. The children of God then muste be afrayde, and specially when they perceyue that God visiteth them for their sinnes, they muste thinke of it thoroughly, yea and they muste haue a feeling of the miseries of their neighbours, too pitie them: but yet therewithall they shall also laugh, that is too say, they shall be able too despise all aduersities, according as wee see how Sainct Paule speaketh when he triumpheth against pouertie, against all diseases, against hunger, thirst, sword, rhings present, and things too come: yea and specially when the cace concerned fighting against the powers aboue. And wherefore? For when we know that God hath taken vs into his keeping, and that he will bee our shie'de: wee may desie all the harmes that can come too vs from menne. And it is successiuelly sayde, that the faithfull man shall visit his tent, and shall not meete with any mishappe to greeue him. He shall see his linage increas'd, and the very breede of his cattell shall bee blisfed of God. Herein it is shewed vnto vs, that God, to shewe the loue whiche he beareth vs, is not contented onely too remedie our mishappes and too deliuer vs from them: but also blisseth vs in diuers sortes, and maketh vs too prosper, too the intent wee shoulde feele his grace vpon vs. Thus yee see the summe of that whiche is conteyned here. But as we haue neede to consider Gods goodnesse thoroughly because he succoreth vs in our afflictions: so on the other side, in all the benefites which he bestoweth vpon vs, it behoueth vs too bee attentiuē to knowe the fatherly care whiche he hath of vs. And specially that when focuer he shall take vs out of this worlde, wee may knowe that which the holie Ghōst sheweth vs here, according as I shall set it fourth anon: and finally that in all caces and in all respectes God will bee the guyder of those that are his, and that although they bee sayne too indure things in this mortal lyfe, and are subiect too many chaunges and ouerturnings: yet God will preferue them, and his blissing will bee sufficient too defende them euen too the ende. Yee see what the holie Ghōst ment to shewe vs here by the mouth of Eliphas. But among the other graces whiche our Lorde promisseth vnto men, and whereby he will bee knowne too bee gentle and louing, one is when he giueth vs children.

Psalm. 127. For wee knowe howe linage is a singular honor whiche God doeth vnto men. And verily if hee will haue his goodnesse knowne euen in respecte of the beastes in that the beastes doo thriue and increace: If God (I say) will haue his goodnesse and fauour caught hold of thereby: what is too bee done then, when he createth children and formeth them after his owne image? for is there not a more excellent and greater dignitie in mans nature, than in all other creatures? So then, no maruell though God doo so often in the holie Scripture marke out this sayde blissing as a precious thing. By the way, if men bee afflicted by their children, lette them vnderstande that the same proceedeth of sinne, and that Gods order is reuerfed in that cace: Neuerthelesse wee may manifestly perceyue, that God could not tel in the world howe too vtter the loue that he beareth vs, nor his greate goodnesse towards vs, better than by giuing vs issue. Finally it is sayde, that the faythfull man shall bee gathered into his graue, as a stacke of corne is gathered together in dewe tyme, and layde into the Berne: and also that a man shall come thither in abundance, that is too say, he shall haue liued his fill. Here Eliphas ment to say, that God will preferue his seruants from violent death, and guyde them after suche sorte in this worlde, that when soeuer they must departe, it shall be as if a man gathered corne in haruest tyme. And it is better that corne shoulde bee layde into a Berne, than that it should perishe in the fieldes: for what were it too leaue corne standing in the fielde after that it is dead rype? The graynes must needes shedde and come too naught: the birdes will eate some of it, and the reste of it muste rotte and bee troden into the dirte. But if it bee gathered into the berne a man may apply it too good vse. So then Eliphas promisseth that after that God hath made the faithfull too bring fourth fruite in the world, they shall come too full rypenesse, and he will gather them vp too himselfe as menne gather corne. True it is that he doth not thus alwayes: for wee see sometimes howe God suffereth his seruants too fall into violent death, and that he plucketh them out of this worlde in the floure of their age, yea and euen in their infancie. VVee see that Cain came too greate yeeres of age, and Abell was raught away by the swoorde. Howe is it ment then that God will preferue his faythfull ones euen till they bee full rype, as if a man shoulde gather corne into a Berne? wee muste marke firste of all that when the holie Scripture speaketh of these worldly blissinges: it intendeth that it falleth out so commonly, and not that it falleth out so continually. Furthermore wee muste make comparison betweene the greater benefite and the lesser. VVhen God suffereth his children too bee taken out of the worlde betimes: it is for their profite. For God prouideth better for the faythfull man when he calleth him too him at the age of twentie or thirtie yeeres, than when he letteth him liue till threescore. And specially when wee see the worlde flowing out into suche corruption, that all is confounded nowe a dayes: I pray you ought wee not too esteeme them more happie in that God hath drawn them away too himselfe, than if they had longer time too languishe here? It were a miracle if menne coulde continue here and come all too olde age. For wee see what snares Satan layeth for vs, and howe it is right harde too walke through so many outrages. Therefore if God pull away his children quickly: lette vs bee sure that he dooth it for their greater benefite. And specially wee haue here vpon too vnderstand, that although they bee bereft of this blissing whiche is small in respect of that which God will giue them: yet dothe he not ceasse too loue and fauour them by suffering them too fall so into speedie death, like as these that are persecuted by tyrantes, haue a moste precious death. For they offer vp a sacrifice whiche is moste acceptable too God: and it is an offering of sweete fauour when he seeth his woorde sealed vp with the bloud of Martyrs. So then, when wee compare the lesse with the greater, wee shall finde that this promise of feeling continually the sayde blissing of God in sending them to their graue as corne that is gathered in his due time, is not in vayne towards the faithfull. For how soeuer the world go, he rypeneth them continually. If a faythfull man die at the age of thirtie yeeres, what doth he? It seemeth not that he is greatly sorie for it, he maketh no greate struggling against it as wee see the vnbeleeuers do, yea when they bee euen as stale as earth, as the Prouerbe sayeth. Beholde a despyzer of God and a worldling, which neuer thought vpon death: and when it commeth too the poynte that God will pinche him in good earnest, it will make him grinde his teethe and frette with himselfe, weening too withstande death, and saying: Can I not prolong my lyfe one yeere longer? He takes himselfe too bee a peece of greene woode that crackleth on all sides. Contrariwyfe when a faythfull persone dieth, although he indure muche, yet he betaketh himselfe vnto God, and comforteth himselfe in him: and although there bee stryuing seene in his bodie, yet hath he his minde quiet, and he desireth nothing but to frame himselfe to Gods good will, choozing rather too dye when God calleth him, than too liue here. To be short he desireth nothing but too obey his good heauenly father. VVee see then howe God dothe alwayes rypen his seruants before he call them out of the worlde, so as they bee fully satisfied when they come too their graues: and he that bringeth but twentie yeeres too his graue, is more rype than another that shall bring (as ye would say) a million of yeeres with him: according as we see how the vnbeleuers do fret and chafe them selues against God when he calleth them, so as they bee neuer type nor olde ynough. So then let vs marke that God berecueth not his children of the thing that he promiſeth them in this texte, that is too witte, that how ſo euer the worlde go, they ſhall come too their graue like corne that is through rype, and meete too bee applyed to good uſe. And therefore lette euey one of vs bee contented, when God hath giuen him the grace too liue in this worlde, ſeing wee haue recorde [in our conſciences] that wee bee verely his, and that he will drawe vs to himſelfe. And although it pleaſe him too keepe vs in this worlde for a time too exerciſe vs with many afflictions and miſeries: yet lette vs not ceaſſe too taſte continually of his goodneſſe, which he maketh vs too feele ſo many wayes, and whereof we ſhall haue full fruition after this preſent lyfe, when he ſhall haue called vs too the eternal reſte whiche he hath prepared for vs, and which is purchaced for vs by the death and paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt.

And lette vs fall downe in the preſence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him too giue vs the grace, that in walking through ſo many daungers, wee may knowe howe our finnes are the cauſe of it, and that wee haue neede too bee ſo beaten and chaſtyzed at his hande. And therewithall lette vs pray him too graunt vs the grace, that the corrections whiche he ſendeth vs may not bee vnprofitable too vs, but that we may through them learne to feare his Iuſtice, ſo as wee may be the earneſter to call vpon him in our neceſſities: And alſo that he will giue vs the grace too walke together in one right brotherhood, and thereby ſhewe how wee bee rightly his children, and that wee ſeeke nothing but too knit our ſelues together in all goodneſſe, whereas we ſee the vnbeleeuers conſpyre too deſpiſe God and all right and reaſon. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people and nations of the Earth, &c.

The xxiiij. Sermon, which is the firſt vpon the ſixth Chapter.

1. IOB anſwered and ſayd vnto them.
2. O that my diſtreſſe vvere vvell vveyed, and that my ſorrovves vwere put into the balance.
3. It vwould be heauier than the ſand of the Sea, vwherefore my vvoordes are ſvvalloved vp.
4. For the arrowes of the almightie are in me, vwhereof the poyſon drinketh vp my ſpirit, the terrours of God are directed againſt mee.
5. VWill the vvilde Aſſe bray vwhen he hath graſſe, or vvil the Oxe lovv vwhen he hath fodder?
6. Shall that vvwhich is vnſauerie bee eaten vvithout falte? or is there any taſte in the vvwhite of an egge?
7. But the thing vvwhich my ſoule hath lothed to touche, is as it vvwere the diſeaſe of my fleſhe.
8. O that the thing vvwhich I deſire might happen to me, and that the thing vvwhich I loue vwere graunted mee.
9. That is, that God vwould cruſhe me and breake mee, and that he vwould cut mee as a boyve.

Here wee haue to conſider, what the ſtate of a poore man is when God ſcourgeth him, and maketh him to feele ſuch miſerie, as it may ſeeme too him, that he hath God againſt him. VVee ſee there is no power in men, that can holde out when the eace is ſo. And it is very true that Iob was neuer yet vterly ouerthrowen, ſo as he ſhould haue no pacience at all: but yet notwithstanding it was not without muche difficultie, that he could gather his wittes to him, to haue ſome comfort. By the way (as I haue ſayde) wee haue to behold, in what anguiſh mortall man is, when God ſheweth himſelfe as his aduerſarie partie. And it is greatly for our behoofe too minde this leſſon, bicauſe wee be ouer negligent, yea and there are ouerfewe that thinke vpon this kinde of temptation. For when wee be ſpoken too of ſuffering any miſerie, and of being pacient in aduerſitie: we be fleſhly, and we mount no higher than our ſenſualitie is able too comprehend: that is too ſay, that we may indure diſeaſes, wee may bee put too ſome troubles, this or that may happen vnto vs. But the greateſt miſchiefe of all, whiche is able too ouerwhelme men vterly, is when God preſſeth them, and maketh them too feele his wrath, as if he were bente full againſt them to ſay, why haue yee offended mee ſo? Therefore when God ſheweth himſelfe ſo fore againſt men: beholde, it is a temptation which paſſeth all that euer wee may indure in our bodie. And here yee ſee why I ſayde, howe it is good too trie that thing thoroughly whiche is con-teyned here. Iob then ſayeth, that he would ſayne that his diſtreſſe were well vveyed, and on the other ſide, that his ſorowes and greefes (that is to witte, the miſerie whiche he indureth and ſuffereth) were put together with it into the balance. For then (ſayeth he) it ſhould be ſeene, that this miſerie of mine is heavier than the ſande of the ſea.

And for prooſe hereof, God hath ſhotte his arrowes at mee, yea euen poyſoned arrowes, in ſo muche that I am as it were ſyred, my Spirit is as it were ſvvalloved vp, or my ſpirit is as it were ſteeped in bitterneſſe, by reaſon of Gods ſayde arrowes whiche haue perced mee.
Behold whereat he beginneth. But it ſeemeth here, that he frameth an vnjuſte complaynt, when he ſayeth that his miſerie is ſo greate, as no ſorowe can bee able too matche it or bee anſwereable too it. And this complaint draweth neere too that whiche Cain made, the whiche (as wee knowe) was not without blaſphemie. For aſ-ſoone as Cain herde the condemnation whiche God pronounced againſt him: it is certaine that he could not iuſtifie himſelfe, (for his ſinne was manifeſt, and he was conuinced of it:) but he accuſed God of crueltie or ouergreat ri-gour. My puniſhment (ſayeth he) is ouergreat, I am not able too beare it, thou wilt chace mee ouer all the earth,
I am not able to ſtande before thy face: how doeſt thou handle mee? wee ſee here that although this wretched caytife coulde not denie but he was puniſhed iuſtly: yet notwithſtanding he had his ſtaringhole, that God puniſhed him not vp rightly, but paſſed meaſure in rigorousneſſe

Gen. 4. 13.

against him. I sayde it seemeth that Iob doeth the like here. For he sayeth it is no maruell though he be in great distresse, bicause the affliction whiche he indureth is exceeding greate, and muche more heauie. As if he should say, he could not lament inough, seyng that God handled him so roughly. But wee haue seene, howe he hath come alreadie euen too the cursing of his birthday, and howe he woulde that he had bene borne dead. And not onely so, but he also banneth the day wherein he was borne. It seemeth then that Iob mighte not bee excused. And in deede (as I haue tolde you alreadie) although he haue a good cace: yet dothe he handle it amisse: and it behoueth men too knowe howe there is some faultinesse in this respecte. Neuerthelesse he ceaseth not too speake truthe when he sayeth that the miserie whiche he indureth is so greate and so extreme, as euen his woordes are swallowed vp, in so much as in that behalfe he is as a man ouerwhelmed, whiche hath no lyuelinesse in him, so that all that euer he is able too say, is nothing in comparison of the affliction wherewith God presseth him. Lette vs marke therefore, that wee haue here two things: the one is, that wee see what a poore silie creature is, when God presseth him with his iudgement, as I haue sayde alreadie: And the other is, that wee shoulde knowe, that in fighting against our temptations, although wee doo the beste wee can too withstand them, and too submitte our selues vnto God: yet notwithstanding wee swaye aside eyther one way or other through infirmitie, so as there is neuer sufficient strength in vs, except God holde vs vp and suffer vs not too bowe at all. And why so? It is expedient for vs too knowe, that wee bee not made of steele, nor that wee bee not as rockes of stone: but that wee bee mortall men, full of frayltie. It is behoofefull that God shoulde make vs feele this. Also although he asist vs in our afflictions, so as wee bee not ouercome: yet doth he make vs to bee wounded and too halte, that is too say [he leaueth] alwayes some feeblenesse [in vs] which sheweth it selfe in the mightie operacion which he giueth vs. Thus yee see the two poyntes whiche wee haue to consider here. But first of all let vs call too remembrance that whiche I haue touched heretofore: whiche is, that if wee bee tempted, and when soeuer wee bee pinched with any aduersitie in our bodie: wee muste the more feare still this spirituall temptation, when God citeth vs too his iudgement and becommeth as it were our iudge, so as wee muste bee fayne too answeere before him, and too render him our account. True it is that wee shall muche more perceyue that thing whiche toucheth vs in our flesh. And why so? For wee bee wholly giuen too that. So then wee see commonly that menne feare famine, pestilence, sickenesse, or death which is the vtermoste. If a man threaten vs with this, wee bee afrayde: but if a man speake too vs of God, wee bee not moued a whit. And why so? Herein wee shewe our selues to bee dull, yea euen too the vtermoste, as they that differ nothing from Oxen and Asses, in that wee make so small reckening of Gods wrath, and of the damnation that is prepared for our soules, I meene of them that continue enemies vnto God: But if a man talke to vs of any thing that concerneth this present lyfe, wee are amazed out of measure. Neuerthelesse, in the meane time whyle other continue in their dulnesse, God ceaseth not too exercise those that are his, after suche a maner as he maketh them too feele his wrath, and then (as I sayde) they bee tempted muche more without all comparison, than if they indured all the miseries that are possible to bee imagined. Sometimes wee shall thinke it straunge that the

faythful should speake thus: And what? God hath shewed himselfe as a Lyon towards mee: he hath broken all my bones, I am on a burning fire, I wote not where too become, my soule is as it were swallowed vp, my bodie is as good as rotten, and there is nothing but stinche in mee. VVherefore is it that the faythfull speake so? It seemeth that they bee nice and womannish: and yet notwithstanding these are they that were moeste strong and stedfaste, and whome wee haue seene gouerned by the spirite of God, so as they haue had an inuincible courage. Had not Dauid a goodly pacience: God exercised him very much: & yet we see he alwayes had the vpper hande, so as he was neuer caried away vnto wickednesse for all the trouble that befell him. Yee see here a man of armes, who hath bene practysed in all maner of battelles, not onely for a daye or for a yeere, but all his lyfe long: and yet for all his experience, he complayneth as if he had neuer bene acquainted with any aduersitie, or as if he wist not what it were to bee afflicted. Yea verely. But (as I haue sayde) lette vs marke that he was not pressed with bodily harmes. And although he were sensible as other men are: yet had it not greatly grieved him too beare any sickenesse or to suffer any suche other like thing. VVhat is it then, that driueth him too complayne so? It is bycause he entereth into himselfe, and is touched in his conscience, as though God had not onely forsaken him, but also were become his deadly foe, and pursued him euen vnto hell, too say: thou shalt haue nother peace nor truce, but I will drowne thee altogether. Seing then that Dauid was so pressed with the feeling of his sinnes, and perceyued that Gods wrath was kindled against him: yee see what nipped him euen too the hart. Ezechias felte as muche. For God not onely afflicted him with sickenesse as may commonly befall vnto vs: but also besides that, he shewed him a token of his displeasure. Therefore it seemed vnto him, that God woulde repeale and disanull all the grace that he had graunted him before: and further that his death should cause Gods seruice too be quite ouerthrowne, which had bene stablished by his hande. VVhen Ezechias conceyued so greate and so horrible vengeance of God: there was good reason why he should be so dismayed. And so yee see why he made suche complayntes as are conteyned in his song. Therefore lette vs marke that when God afflicteth vs in our bodies, wee can well take patiently the miseries that he sendeth vs: for, that is nothing in comparison of the anguyshe which they indure, whom he maketh to feele his wrath and vengeance: and yet notwithstanding it is for our profite too come therevnto. And although it bee so harde and bitter a thing vnto vs: yet neuerthelesse wee muste bee fayne too come too it. And why so? For they that conceyue not their bodily tribulations, passe not too seeke helpe of the diseases of their soules, bycause they perceyue them not at all: and so consequently they passe not too seeke attonement with God, for they consider not his iustice. So then (as I sayde) it is more than necessarrie for vs too bee wounded with Gods iudgement, that when we haue taken holde of it, wee maye bee constreyned too grone vnder suche anguyshe, according as wee see it too haue bene in Iob. True it is that euery man shall not haue like measure, and God also knoweth what wee be able too beare. According as a man shall bee weake, and as God shall not haue indewed him with so greate a grace of his holy spiite: so verily will he make him to feele his iudgement thereafter: howbeit hee will holde him vp, and make him to taste of his mercie in the middes of his wrath, so as the same shall not vterly dismaye him.

But

Eesai. 38. c. 13
Psal. 31. c. 10
38. a. 3.
42. b. 8.
88. a. 4.

But as for him that hath receiued a more singular strength, and whom God hath fortified with his holy spirite: hee must be faine to sustain greater brunts, and farre rougher assaults, than such as are feeble like little children. And heere yee perceyue why wee see these spirituall battayles in Dauid, Ezechias, and Iob, which neuer a one of vs shall finde in himselfe. True it is that wee shall haue oure porcion of them: for (as I haue sayde) without it wee would become dullardes, & it would bee a signe that we were forsaken of God, so as wee shoulde haue our consciences rocked a sleepe too much. But when God preseth vs with his iudgement, it is but for a small while if wee compare our selues with the holy persons that haue incountred agaynst the sorrowes of death and hell. And why so? for God had armed them, yea and he had so fenced them with his owne strength: that although they were bowed, yet were they not vtterly beaten downe: and if they were beaten downe, yet did God lift them vp againe. And therefore it behoueth vs to marke well what is sayde vnto vs heere. Furthermoie when wee see Iob so fore pressed, euen Iob I say, who was the mirrour of patience: let vs learne to walke aduisedly. For if this happened too the greene tree, what shall become of the drie tree? VVe see that Iob was so hartburned with anguish, and wee see hee was so dulle with torments, as hee wist not what to speake: and what shall become of vs then, if God list to scourge vs rigorously? must we not needes quaike vtterly? But this must not astonie vs: neuertheless it standeth vs on hande too bee afrayde. For we can bee hardie ynough while we be farre from blowes, as our ordinarie maner is: in so much as there is none of vs all, but he will make himselfe as valiant as can be, and it seemeth that nothing shall be able to daunt vs. Let vs rather consider what our feebleness is, to the ende that we may not bee puffed vp with vaine presumption, but may vnderstande howe we be but poore creatures, and that we cannot well holde out one minute of an houre, agaynst the assaults that may bee giuen vs on eyther side, except we flee to our God, praying him to strengthen vs. Ye see then what wee haue to doo, when wee beholde the example of Iob. Moreover let vs marke well this woorde 40 when hee sayth, that the arrowes of God are in bim, and that the venim of them hath drunke vp his spirite, or that his spirite hath sucked in the venim, for eyther of both wayes may be spoken. But the principall poynt that we haue to marke heere, is that Iob doth vs to vnderstand heere, that he hath not to deale with men, nor that the case standeth as when wee indure some afflictions in the flesh. I knowe (sayth he) that it is God which warreth agaynst me: and not onely so, but his arrowes also (sayth hee) are in mee: 50 they haue striken mee too the hart and are runne quyte through mee. In the first place, Iob sheweth, that hee is fayne to indure battayles, as if God himselfe warred agaynst him. And what a matter is it when a mortall man who is a thing of nothing, should bee forced so farre, as too feele that God prepareth and bendeth himselfe agaynst him, and yet notwithstanding be able to outstande it? Howe shoulde that bee possible? Neuertheless (as I haue sayde alreadie) we must needes bee brought to that poynt, for our owne profite. And in good sooth wee profite euill vnder Gods scourges, if in the meane while wee beate our braynes, or reason with men, to see from whence the aduersities come vnto vs, and linger here still below: this is verie yll considered of vs. As for example, if one that is diseased thinke with himselfe: such an inconuenience is light vpon mee: Lo suche a thing is the cause: and that hee cannot suffer anye other affliction whereby God shall giue him occasion too feele his wrath: this man is farre from receiuing frute by the chastizements which God sendeth him. I say, when we cease not to alledge this or that, to holde our selues still too the creatures: wee profite verie yll. Therefore wee muste mount vp to this step: that is, that the aduersities come of God, and that they come vpon vs bicause of our sinnes: and heere withall let vs vnderstande howe it is as muche as if God had shotte his arrowes at vs, and wounded vs. So then let vs bethinke vs well of this woorde, when Iob sayth, that the arrowes of the almightie were let flee agaynst him. Yea and hee sayeth expresly, that they sticke fast in him, and that his spirite is as it were swallowed vp. VVhereby hee meeneth, that his distresse commeth of the fayde fearing of God, according also as hee addeth, that the terrours of God are bent agaynst him. And for the better vnderstanding of this streyne: let vs marke, that God dooth ostentymes afflict those that are willfull and harde harted. But what? Their minde is neuer the more humbled for all that. For they beate backe all Gods iudgements, as an Anuyll beateth backe the hammer. But God woundeth whome he listeth when he meeneth to humble them, in so much that they bee striken quite through, yea euen to the bottome of their hart. Thus ye see what Iob ment to expresse. True it is that somtimes the like shall happen to the reprobates also. But when full account is made: it is a speciall grace which God bestoweth vpon his owne children, when hee peerceth them so throughout, & maketh them to feele his vengeace within their harts, in such wise as they are as it were swallowed vp by it, and their harts are consumed by it. This will be verie hard for vs, and wee will flee from it if it be possible. But therby God worketh our welfare, & it is much better that it shoulde be so, than that we should bee blockish too beate backe all the conceytes which God sendeth vs when hee purpofeth to scourge vs for our sinnes, and too make vs feele howe it is a terrible thing too haue him agaynst vs. Beholde howe wee must profite our selues by such woundings, knowing that God intendeth to humble vs, to the ende wee shoulde not bee as the scorers, who doo nothing but mocke at his iudgements: and that hys making of vs to feele them to the quicke, is to the ende wee should quake at them. Furthermore wee see what neede wee haue of such a medicine, si the wee bee such dullards as to follow the lustes of our flesh. For what are we the better for Gods woorde? howe are wee mooued for all the threatnings that are made too vs? It seemeth that wee would holde our owne agaynst God, and spyte him by our defiances. Beholde the pride which is to be seene commonly in men: and wee also should be subiect therevnto, were it not that God clengeth vs of it by shewing himselfe so rough towarde vs, as we might feele his arrowes in our hartes, and that all our courage might be swallowed vp by it. And likewise Iob sayth, that the terrours of God are directed [or leuelled] at bim. And why so? For his wordes are as it were swallowed vp, or consumed. VVhereas he sayeth that the terribleness of God was leueled at him, he meeneth (as I haue sayd alreadie) that he hath not men too his enemies, but that it is God himselfe which warreth agaynst him. True it is that wee may bee assaulted at mens handes: and yet notwithstanding we must not cease too acknowledge that which is sayde heere: that is to wit, that God armeth his creatures agaynst vs, to the ende to shewe vs his displeasure. At a worde, on what side so euer the mischeefe doo threaten Iob, yea euen that he be wounded, he must acknowledge howe it is the hande of God that toucheth and presseth him. And this is the cause why he sayth, the terrours [or the terribleness.] Hee knowes well ynough that when

God scourgeth him, his intent is to haue him returne vnto him, and that God seeketh nothing but to receyue his seruants to mercie, and to deliuer them from the trouble which they indure. But in these serrowes which he suffereth, he is not able to take hold of the goodnesse which God intendeth too vs towards him. And thus yee see what is the cause of our impacience: euen for that wee are not touched as were requisite, too tender GOD his due honour. For prooffe hereof, when we speake of calling vpon God, and of desiring him to haue pitie vpon vs: we do it but ceremonially vntill we knowe that wee are at the last cast, and that wee bee as poore damned soules and forlorne creatures: Vntill wee knowe this thoroughly to the quicke, it is certaine that oure desyring of God to haue pitie vpon vs, shall be but from the teeth outwarde. And therefore a man neuer honoureth God in good earnest, vnlesse hee bee confounded in himselfe. For the matter consisteth not altogether in saying, that God must be superior ouer vs, and wee subiect too him as all other creatures are: But wee must yeelde hym this honour which is specified here: namely that he onely is righteous, and that there is nothing else in vs but all maner of wickednesse, too the ende wee may haue our mouth shet, and bee destitute of all excuse, so as we may not make any account of our selues, but acknowledge that nothing belongeth too vs but shame, and that wee deserue too bee cast away as stinking and cursed creatures. If wee bee not come too this poynt, it is no honouring nor seruing of God, according as Saint Paule sheweth in the thirde to the Romanes. For in speaking of Gods infinite glorie, hee sayth it becommeth vs too come before him with such feare and lowlinesse, as we may bee lyke poore offenders with haltes about theyr neckes, so as wee shoulde go too hell, if hee plucked vs not back of his infinite goodnesse. So then it is not without cause that God afflicteth his seruants, and proueth them in such wise as he bringeth them to this poynt, too the ende hee may bee glorified in them. As touching that he sayth, that his woordes are swallowed vp: it is as muche as if hee had sayde, that hee speaketh not Rhetorically as we see some men doo, who are eloquent in setting out their owne aduersities. As for those that are Cokneys, if they indure any litle aduersitie, they neede no man of lawe to pleade theyr case, it seemeth (too heare them speake) that there are none but they on whom men shoulde haue compassion. But they that can so well pleade and babble, shewe well ynough that their aduersitie did not so greatly greue them: for had they bene touched in good earnest, it is certayne that they woulde shewe that which is sayde heere. And heere ye see wherefore it is expressly sayde in the song of Ezechias, that he had chattered lyke the swallows, and that hee had no more had the voyce of a man to vtter his conceyte, but had bene so shet vp at that tyme in sorrowe, that hee wist not what to say, nor howe to couche his woordes to vtter what his mynde was. Let vs marke then that when God summoneth his seruantes in such wise, hee sheweth himselfe too bee theyr iudge, and pincheth them so too the quicke, as they are euen destitute of woordes, and confounded, and know not howe too expresse their meenings. Although (say I) that God worke so, and that hee oftentimes deale roughly with vs: yet notwithstanding let vs call to minde the conuenient remedie, least wee bee put too vtter confusion. And this is it that Saint Paule meeneth when hee sayeth that God by hys holie spirite giueth vs gronings whiche are inuoluerable. VVhen Saint Paule speaketh of the prayers of the saythfull, (I meene of the better fort:)

hee sayeth that when God maketh vs pray earnestly, then wee grone: yea wee euen grone, but wee haue not a woorde at hande: for if a man shoulde demaunde of vs, what is it that thou sayest? VVhat is it that thou desirest of God? VVee wist not what to say to hym. VVee must keepe that as a thing locked vp, so as wee cannot declare by woorde of mouth, what wee ment too say. Yee see then howe God remedieth that which is spoken heere: which is, that although all our speeches were swallowed vp, yet hee giueth vs a meane too finde him, and to get too him, which meane he alloweth: and although that this kinde of language bee not vnderstood of men, yea and that euen the partie himselfe whiche prayeth vnto God bee intangled, so as hee cannot vtter his woordes: yet doth God vnderstande suche maner of speeche. Nowe forasmuch as wee see that God heareth our gronings when wee bee so abashed that wee bee vterly dismayde in our selues: Let vs beare patiently the aduersities which hee sendeth vs, seeing that hee giueth such successe as all of it redoundeth too our profite and welfare. Lo what wee haue to marke vpon this straine. Heerewithall Iob vseth certaine similitudes, too shewe howe it is not without cause that hee complayneth so. He sayeth, will the wilde asse bray when hee hath grasse? no more will the Oxe when hee hath fodder. And furthermore, Can a man eat a thing that hath no savor, as the whyte of an Egge without salt? By suche similitudes Iob meeneth, that both men and beastes are glad when thinges fall out too them after their minde or desire. VVhat is the thing that the wilde Asse seeketh? Hee desyret pasture. Therefore when hee hath grasse at will he careth not to bray or too greue himselfe. VVhy so? For hee hath the thing that hee desireth. An Oxe likewise is contented when hee hath fodder given him. But contrary wise (sayth hee) howe is it possible that a man shoulde bee made too lyke of the thing that is agaynst him? Verily wee will not eat the meates that are vnsauorie. If a man shoulde make vs too suppe off the white of an Egge, it were ynough too make vs spewe: for it were a thing that woulde go agaynst our stomacke. Seeing that this worde betokeneth an vnsauory thing: what is to bee sayde of a Litter thirg that shoulde serue too choke vs? But yet muche worse are the miseries wherewith Iob was afflicted. And therefore hee concludeth therevpon, that hee woulde sayne haue his owne wishe: whiche is, that God woulde kill him at the first blowe, and not make him to pine away after that sort. Yee see in effect what is ment here. And first of al let vs marke, that this sentence is good and true, yea and that the doctrine conteyned therein is verie profitable: for it is expedient for vs too bee warned of our passions. There are whiche stande muche vpon the reputation of theyr owne vertues: and therefore it is good for vs too knowe that wee haue neede too haue our fleshly desyres repressed. VVhy so? Too the ende that if thinges fall out according too our minde, wee may haue skill to say: Beholde, God giueth vs our hartes desire, and therefore wee haue whereof too reioyce. And that if thinges fall out agaynst vs, wee may acknowledge and say, beholde, it is God that afflicteth vs: VVherefore? Euen because wee haue offended him, and hee will cut vs out our morselles. It is good therefore that these thinges heere shoulde bee knowne vnto vs, and that wee should minde them, and that the remembrance of them should oftentimes bee renewed. And speciallye it is a greate shame for men that they haue no discretion, seeing that the brute beastes can shewe them howe that according to their measure they haue some discretion. True it is that that there is no reason nor iudgement in an Oxe, nor in an Ass. Yet hath God giuen them a certaine witte, which leadeth them thither as their nature goeth. Nowe let vs consider what it is that God giueth vnto man who ought to haue iudgement. By cause of the spirite which is imprinted in his soule. It behoueth him too haue discretion. But yet let vs note further, howe it behoueth vs inespically too fight agaynst our lustes. Howe so? An Ass will leaue his braying when hee hath pasture afore him: so will not a man do, he will not content himselfe. Verie well. It is good that a man shoulde thanke God when he hath prosperitie, and that he should know how hee is so much the more beholding to God: but he must not fall asleepe vpon it. Let vs learne then that heere are twoo things. The one is, that when God giueth vs meate and drinke, we bee worse than the brute beastes if wee make not account of suche a libertie, but bee so blockish in our hartes, that wee consider not howe liberrall and gracious God is towards vs. Thus much for the first poynt. But we perceyue the cleane contrary in many men: yea after a maner in all men. For howe great is our vnthankfulness? if God giue vs meate and drinke, haue we the stayednesse that is in brute beastes, to holde our selues in quiet and contented? No: we be like vnfa-20 tiable Seagules. Howe fowle and howe excessiue are our appetites? See howe an Ass eateth. Although hee haue trauayled with great paine, when he is put to pasture he satisfieth him selfe, and then layes him downe vpon it, hee is contented. But as for a man, though hee haue crammed in as much as foure or fiue men could swallow 30 vp, he is not contented with it, he regardeth not what is meete for him, but hee will still bee heaping vp and gathering in of more. VVhen a man hath his Garner full, yet hath he a bellie to bigge for it. VVhen hee hath hys wine seller well stored, hee thinketh that that is nothing. VVhen he hath prouision ynough for a whole doozen of persons, yet will hee not be contented: hee is like a Seagulse that can neuer bee filled. Yee see then howe men are caryed away by theyr lustes, so as they bee neuer satisfied: such is their vnthankfulness. And what iudge 40 muste suche maner of folke haue? Euen the Asses and Oxen. The Angels neede not to come downe from heauen to poure Gods condemnation vpon their heades. In the order of nature a man may perceyue, that there is much more reason and modestie in the dulnesse that is in these beastes, than there is in men who ought to haue a further consideration. Beholde a speciall poynt whiche wee haue to marke heere. But on the other side also let vs learne, that wee muste not bee lyke the brute beastes in seeking nothing else but bellie cheere. For when 50 GOD sendeth vs prosperitie, wee must not holde vs there, that must not bee our butte to shoote at. VVhat then? Let vs vse the sayde prosperitie, passing continually still further, and preparing our selues too affliction if God list to sende vs any: to the intent wee bee not taken vnwares by cause we made reckening to haue liued always at our ease. I say let vs beware we fall not a sleepe in such carelesnesse when God sendeth vs pasture, and that wee bee handeled as well as wee would wishe. But let vs continually quicken vp oure selues, that we may attayne too the benefite wherevntoo hee calleth vs. Marke thys for a speciall poynt. Nowe whereas it is sayde that wee cannot bee made too eate that which is without sauour, and that we cannot suppe off the whyte of an Egge without salt: Heereby wee may knowe (as I haue sayde) howe that before the blowe come, it is good too forethinke our selues, that colde and heate, vnfa-uerie vittayles and all other suche thinges are as it were aduersities whiche wee shunne by nature. Verie well, needes must wee feele this geere, for we bee not senselesse. But howe soeuer the worlde go, let vs make oure selues readie too indure patiently the thing that is vnfa-uerie. Let vs bee contented that God shall doo it for our profite. And therewithall let vs assure oure selues, that iithe hee ordeyneth it, his oneye will muste bee a better taste vnto vs, than all the things that happen too 20 vs by our owne good will. VVhat shall be our salt then too make vs finde good taste in all the aduersities that can befall vs, so as wee maye beare them patiently? Obedience, so as wee acknowledge, and say, go too, I see heere howe God afflicteth vs. And why? First bi-cause wee bee woorthie of it: and secondely by cause it is his will too aduaunce oure welfare by that meane. Beholde (I saye) what will make vs too finde good fa-uour in that whiche heeretofore was (as yee would say) lothsome. This then is the poynt that wee must come 30 vntoo, when wee bee desyrous too finde sauour in all our aduersities, that wee may patiently receyue all the corrections which it shall please G O D too sende vs, and that wee maye frame our selues too his good pleasure, desiring nothing but that hee will accomplishe as he hath begonne, too the intent that beeing guided and gouerned by his holy spirit, we may seeke nothing but to loue, serue, and honour him, and to hold all that for good and rightfull, which it shall please him too sende vs.

And nowe let vs cast our selues downe before the face 40 of our good God in acknowledging our faultes, praying him to make vs perceyue them better than we haue done hitherto: and that when it shall please him too make vs feele his iudgements, although we be pressed out of measure to our owne seeming, yet notwithstanding wee may not cease to resort vntoo him continually, hoping that he will deliuer vs from all our aduersities, according as of his infinite mercie it is his will to reach out his hande too vs continually: and that although that at the first wee per-50 ceyue not that he is minded to ayde vs, yet we may wayt patiently till tyme conuenient come too shewe vs that he hath alwayes beene frendly and fauourable too vs, yea, truly by meane of our Lorde Iesus Christ, according as it hath pleased him to chooze vs in him, and to call vs to the knowledge of him, too the ende too make vs all members of his bodie. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The .xxiiij. Sermon, which is the seconde vpon the sixt Chapter.

8. VVho vwill cause my desire to come to passe, and that God may sende me my longing?
9. VVhich is, that hee shoulde breake mee in peeces, and that hee shoulde stretch out his hande and cut mee off.
10. For then shoulde I yet haue comfort: I shoulde reioyce in my greefe: let him not spare me, and I vwill not denie the vvordes of the holy one.
11. VVhat is my strength, that I should be able to indure? and vwhat is mine ende if I shoulde prolong my life?

12. Is my strength the strength of stones? or is my flesh of Steele?
 13. I can no more, and my might fayleth mee.
 14. He that is afflicted ought too haue a good turne of his friende: but men haue forsaken the feare of the almightie God.

We haue to go forward with the matter that I began already: which is; that Iob tormenteth him selfe heere, not for the miserie which he indureth in his bodie, but because

God hidde him as a poore condemned person, and because he

dealeth as a iudge with him, and is altogether against him. Yee see then wherefore Iob is more greeued than for all the rest that hee coule suffer. That is to wit, because hee feeleth Gods hand heaue vpon him, as Dauid speaketh in the two and thirtie Psalme. And let vs marke thys well alwayes. For otherwise we shall not know to what purpose hee sayth, I woulde I were dead, I woulde God woulde kill mee, I would I were cut off from the world, for then shoulde I haue some ease, and I shoulde bee no more so sore pressed. And coule there befall him any worse thing than death, specially than a death of Gods sending, wherein he should knowe that God would vterly ouerwhelme him? And were not that the extremest of all miseries? and yet for all that hee sayth, that if God would dispatch him at one blowe, he could well beare it: but to linger pyning as hee doth, and too bee pressed so long a while, he sayth it is impossible for him too keepe measure, for it is all one as if hee were hidde in a burning fire. Then let vs marke well this diuersitie which is betweene a man that is ouerwhelmed at the first stroke, and another whom God holdeth (as it were) vpon the Rack, whom he scourgeth a long while without giuing him any respite, and which is not releued in his miserie, but must be fayne too abide it out continually. Let vs nowe come to the ripping vp of the case that Iob pleadeth here. First he sheweth that his cheefe desire shoulde bee to die and to bee cut off. True it is (as I haue touched heeretofore) that Gods children may well wishe death: howbeit to an other ende, and for another respect [than hee doth heere,] like as all of vs must with S. Paule desire to be let looce from the bondage of sin wherein we bee hidde prisoners. Saint Paule is not moued there with any temptations of his fleshe: but rather, the desire that hee hath to imploy himselfe in Gods seruice without let, drieth him too wish that he might passe out of the prison of hys bodie. VVhy so? For so long as wee bee in this worlde, we must alwayes be wrapped in many miseries, and wee ceasse not too offende God, being so weake as wee bee. Saint Paule then is sorie that hee must liue so long in offending God, and this kinde of desire is good and holy, and proceedeth of the holy Ghost. But there are verie feawe that desire to go out of the worlde in this respect. For so long as we bee at our ease, we care not a whit what vices and imperfections we haue, nor to be so forward in seruing God as were requisite: this geere toucheth vs not a whit. VVhat then? If there betide vs any trouble, if we fall into any disease, if matters fall not out as we would haue them: then we wish our selues out of the worlde, and there is none other talke but of oure wearinesse in despizing of our life. Yee see then what Iobs wisshing was: it was not cheefly because he knewe what his state was: but because the miserie that he felt did nippe him, therefore hee was desirous too haue his request at Gods hande. For hee not onely desireth it [in his hart,] but also addresseth himselfe to God to make sute for it. And this is yet another mischiefe, that a man wisshing death, as Iob doth heere, shall bee as yee would say, shet vp and shrunke into himselfe, so as he shall not dare present him selfe vnto God to pray for it, though it so be that he haue committed a great offence before. For we must not presume to hyde our selues, nor to haue any backe nookes wherein to make wisshes that are wicked and reiected of God. But yet when a man shall come so farre foorth as to make such request vnto God: no doubt but he sinneth double. VVhy so? For it is an ouergreat rashnesse for vs, to come to vnhalow the name of God. How is it then that we must pray? VVhat rule must we obserue in that behalfe? That wee request nothing which is not agreeable to his will, according as Saint Iohn speaketh in hys Canonick Epistle. And verely our Lorde Iesus Christ sheweth full well that wee must keepe the sayd modestie, when he setteth downe this petition, That Gods will be done. Yee see then howe Iob vnhalloeth the name of God when he dareth make such & so excessiue a request. Nowe then for the first poynt, whereas it is lawfull for men too wishe that God would deliuer them quickly out of this mortall bodie, when their life is beseegeed heere with so many wantes and miseries: it is not by reason of the troubles that we must indure heere, but because wee are alwayes subiect to many vices. Marke this for a speciall poynt. Let vs marke further, that when God afflicteth vs, and that there happen things that are fowre too vs: wee must not wish death therefore: but rather wee must buckle our selues to the combate, sith that the will of God is so. Thirdely, when we desire too bee set free from this bondage of sinne, and that God should breake the bondes that holde vs as nowe: Let men do it measureably, so as we may be readie to bee humbled as much as shall please him. And although it greeue vs, and that wee fighe because we can not giue our selues wholly too doo what God commaundeth: wee must first haue this consideration to say, VVell Lorde, if it bee thy will, that I being a poore sinner and hauing vices continually lurking in me should serue thee: graunt me the grace to acknowledge my faultes, that I may sigh before thee to craue pardon for them at thy hande. Beholde (say I) the measure which it behoueth vs to keepe. Furthermore let vs learne by the example of Iob, that when we come before God, it is not for vs to bring thither our owne desires and our owne lustes, and to speake whatsoever commeth at our tunges ende: but our requestes must alwayes bee framed according to Gods promises, & according to that which he giueth vs leaue to demaunde of him. Yee see then whereat we must begin, if we will pray vnto God as becommeth vs. That is, we must not be rash to threape this or that at his hande: but wee must consider well what is lawfull for vs according to his will. For what honour do al those yeelde vnto God, which craue whatsoever commeth in their minde, without foreconsideration? Their meening is to haue his heade vnder their gyrdle. Beholde (say I) an vtollerable presumptuousnesse, when a mortall man will beare such sway, as God must be subiect to his demaundes. Besides this, wee haue shewed already, howe God will haue vs yeelde him such reuerence, as to seeke to knowe no more than hee giueth vs leaue, and than hee thinketh good, and that he will haue vs too doo it with all modestie. Seeing then that Iob hath happened to ouershooote himselfe so farre, and too make such a request vnto God as is naughtie, & as we our selues would finde

Psal. 32. 4. 4.

Ro. S. d. 24.
Phil. 1. c. 23.

1. Iob. 5. 14

Ende fault with : let vs be well aduised that wee be sober minded when we fall in hande with praying vnto God, and that we haue well considered aforehand what things God promisseth and permitteth. And by the way the remedie hereof is not, that we should not pray vnto God, whē our flesh prouoketh vs to desire this or that: as there are some who (if a man tell them that it is a peruerting of true praier, to demaund any thing of God other thā he hath allowed:) I say there are some which will answere, verie well sir, I will not pray God at all, for I should displeasē him if I should make him subiect after that sort to my desires: but I may well ynough wish this or that, and yet all the while not bee mynded that God shoulde bee subiect to my desires: But we must not vse such byleapes. VVhat is to bee done then? VVhen wee see such wishes, so foolish and full of vanitie, and which are not onely sonde, but also wicked: what is to be done? There is no seeking of any lurking holes. VVhat then? Let vs rather lay open our hartes before God, (as the holy scripture speaketh thereof) so as we haue nothing wrapped vp in them. But as soone as any desire comes in our minde, [let vs thinke thus:] Is it lawfull for mee too wishe such things? Doth God permit me then? Let vs fall to examining of our selues, that the thing whiche is entred into our hart may be layde open: and when we haue made God priuie too it, let vs dispose our selues to pray vnto him according to his will. VVhen wee haue so done, let vs on our part consider, that wee must not come vnto God with oure heade vp right, nor bee so bolde as too make so farre account of him, that hee shoulde do whatsoeuer wee haue conceyued in oure brayne: but wee must bee subiect too him in all poyntes, and in all respectes. Nowe then if wee holde vs too this measure: yee shall see all oure euill lustes corrected and repressed, and our knowing that a man must not couet any thing which he might not be bolde to aske at Gods hande, will bee a bridle too vs. And wee must not presume too aske any thing, but that whiche God hath graunted by hys worde. If it bee so, we must needes bee restrayned, and our flesh must not ouermayster vs to cary vs away to this or that. Lo what wee haue too marke concerning Iob in this straine. Yet notwithstanding it is a lesson that is verie slenderly practized in all the worlde. For wee see howe one sort make their wishes without anye submitting of them vnto God at all: in another sort, there are such vaine and fantastickall mindes, as they desyre contraries: there is none other conceyte wyth them but of coyning and framing newe deuises in theyr heade, and neuer too pray vnto God. Beholde heere an intollerable vyce. Howe so? In that men wander away so, whereas God allureth them familiarly too come vnto him? And whereas hee telleth them they may bee vnburthened, by casting all their cares vpon him: is it not a great wilfull frowardnesse that men will make themselves such straungers and drawe backe from him? Yet notwithstanding it is an ordinarie matter. Let euerie man search what is in himselfe. I pray you howe manie foolish desires haue wee in vs, which mooue vs too sigh in oure selues, although God were not priuie too them? Another sort swarue asyde too a contrarie extremitie: whiche is, that they become like blockes before GOD, asking this and that, without knowing howe, and without hauing any rule or choyce. And hereby it is too bee seene, that this sayde lesson which I haue carst set afore you, is verie yll knowne, not onely of those that haue not bene instructed in Gods worde: but also of all of vs. And therefore so muche the better must wee marke this text, too the ende that euerie of vs may hold himselfe in awe, and learne too frame our desires better than we haue done: and to bring this to passe, wee must lay them open before God, assuring our selues that wee shall winne nothing by our sinking asyde. For all things must come to account in their time. And therefore as oft as we shall be prouoked and minded to desire any thing: let vs learne to be at this poynt with God, that he may alwayes be made priuie to them. And for the doing hereof, let vs examine well all our sinnes, that we may condemne whatsoeuer we see is not agreeing to the will of him that ought to haue the whole dominion ouer vs. But let vs come backe once againe to that Iob sayth, that his wishe was that God should slea him, and stretche out his hande to cut him off. I haue already breefly shewed whereto these wordes tende: that is to wit, that God shoulde at one stroke quite dispatche a man without making him to linger. Yea, but what gayneth hee by that? Shall a man fare the better by that? Yea, so it seemes to him. For we knowe that when wee must bee sayne too endure anye torment: it is a comfort to vs, when it is not long a doing. But Iob hath heere a further respect: which is, that when God sheweth himselfe a iudge towards vs, and we feele him too bee agaynst vs, it is an intollerable torment: insomuch that wee coulde finde in our hartes, that the mountaynes shoulde fall vpon vs, and Iesus Christ also sayth: we coulde finde in our hartes that the whole worlde shoulde bee turned vpside downe, and wee had much leuer that all creatures rose vp agaynst vs, that euerie of them shoulde bring oure bane, and that wee were too passe through infinite daungers: so we might not come before the face of God so dreadfull agaynst vs. Yee see then wherewith Iob had an eye. And true it is, that this is not knowne too many. VVhy so? Bycause the more part are so blockishe, that there is nothing else but hardenesse and stubbornesse in them. If a man or a woman bee pinched with sicknesse: they crie oute alas. If they bee pinched with pouertie, or hunger, or any other thing: euerie man can complaine as hee hath occasion. But as for the torment of minde, wee can no skill of it, when God persecuteth vs and sheweth vs howe dreadfull his wrath is. And for prooffe heereof, our consciences are so rockt asleepe, that hardely can one bee founde among a thousande, that euer tasted what is ment by the hande of God so terrible as Iob setteth it forth heere. But yet neuertheless we haue neede to be so much the better sēced, as we be of the lesse power agaynst such afflictions. For if God spare vs for a time, we know not that he keepeth vs for the ende. VVe see many that haue bene carelesse and haue made good cheere all the tyme of their lyfe: yea and euen when men haue laboured to make them feele God and his iudgemēt, they haue turned all into mockage: But whose iolitie God hath so abated when they drew towards death, that in steede of the iesting and sporting wherunto they had bene giuen, they haue bene sayne as then to feele the terrors of hell, and were (as ye would say) locked vp in them, yea and vterly ouerwhelmed of them, bicause God had cast his lightning vpon them. I say we shal see some come to this state. And why so? God punisheth the pride wherewith they were puffed vp in their owne conceyte, too greue him with. Therefore when the scripture speaketh to vs of the dreadfulness which they conceiue that feele God to be their iudge: let vs learne, howe it is to the ende that euerie of vs should thinke vpon it. And certainly the bodily harmes doo wey very much with vs, according as we bee wholly giuen too oure flesh and too this present lyfe. But beholde heere the Scripture which speaketh to vs of a mischeefe that is farre more to bee feared, and which

Psal. 62. b. 9
Lam. 2. f. 19.

Luk. 23. e. 39

oughr

ought to astonish vs more: which is, whē he maketh vs to feele our sinnes and summoneth vs too appeare before him. For then he toucheth vs much more, than if our bodie were torne in peeces. or if he should lay as many miseries vpon vs as were possible. Sith the case standeth so, let vs feare God, and let vs not thinke our selues to haue made the better market when we shunne his iudgement: but let vs holde vs to it with our good will, and let euery of vs come too this obedience of examining his life in such wise, as he lay the account of his sinnes open afore it. Ye see then howe we must deale when wee heare the wordes that are rehersed to vs heere. And Iob sayth, that then hee should haue comfort, and that hee should warme himselfe (or rather be merrie) in his sorrow or greefe. For the Hebrew worde which he vseth in this place, signifieth to burn, or to be warmed, and some translate it to be merrie. To keepe the proper and naturall meening of the worde, let vs take, I should be warmed in my sorrow. His meening then is, that hee should haue ease if God would stretch out his hande to cut him off at the first blow: and that it greeueth him too bee pyned, and that God vsseth not his force to ouerwhelme him at once, that his miserie might quickly bee at an ende. But yet surely they that are so dispatched vpon the sodaine, ceasse not too bee afflicted still. It easeth them not so farre, as that they feele no more any great payne. But Iob speaketh lyke a man ouerpasionate, that knoweth no more where he is: and therefore (too his seeming) there is no better comfort, than to bee vtterly razed out as soone as God layeth his hande vpon him. As howe? VVhen we haue any present passion: wee imagin that there is none other miserie in the whole worlde, but that. VVhen a man is pressed with a sorowe that is great and excessiue: he thinketh nothing at all of other mens greefes, those are nothing with him. If he be in a heate: he could finde in his hart too bee cooled, yea euen in yce. And yet if hee bee formummed with colde, the same passion also will bee greuous too him to beare, and as bitter as the heate that he shall haue indured afore. Yea verely. If a man haue eyther heate or colde, or any other thing that troubleth him in his bodie: yee shall see him so ouertaken, as hee shall thinke that all the contrarie miseries would be an ease vntoo him: and that is bicause oure passions carie vs away. Lo how Iob hath spoken Let vs marke then, that when we fancie releces and easements, it is not that they would be so, though God should sende vs all our desyres: wee should fynde that wee did but fall out of one miserie into an other, and that there is none other ease, but to haue God fauourable vnto vs. And for proof hereof, if it please him to giue vs patience when wee lose but a finger: he can also well giue it vs when we lose the whole hande, yea and euen when wee shall be fayne to lose the whole bodie. Then must wee not thinke that the miserie is in the thing it selfe: but rather in our owne frailtie. For if we be weak and left vp to our selues: no doubt but we shall be vtterly confounded. But if God haue strengthened vs with his grace: although wee haue a huge mountaine to beare: yet shall we well beare it out. And why? For Gods power shall be ynough in that behalfe. There needeth but one foote of water to drowne a man, and one other will drawe him out of the sea. Therefore if God reech vs his hande, although wee were plunged ouer heade and eares: yet might we scape. But if it please not him to deliuer vs: wee shall not sayle too come too vtter ruine. Sith the case standeth so: let vs not thinke too haue ease when God shall haue changed the kynde of miserie: but let vs assure oure selues that wee cannot be eased, except God bee mercifull and fauourable to vs, and except hee haue pitie vpon vs, and shewe vs that hee hath forgiuen our sinnes. See heere the true rest. Otherwise wee must bee fayne too liue in continuall vnquietnesse, lyke as when a sicke man turneth and tumbleth hither and thither, he thinketh he hath some releefe, or if hee bee suffered to shift from one bedde too another, beholde too his owne seeming he is halfe whole. But when hee hath tossed and turmoyled himselfe thoroughly, hee seeth that his maladie is the feercer vpon him, so little or nothing at all is hee mended by it. Euen so is it with all of vs. It seemeth too vs that wee should be in better case, if God would assist vs after another maner than he doth: but that would neuer a whit assuage our greefe. In this case it behoueth vs too flee vnto God, and too pray him too withdrawe his hande from vs: and when hee hath once receyued vs too his mercie: then we shall see our selues rightly eased. As concerning that Iob sayth that hee should be warmed in his sorowe: hee meeneth that his sorowe should be asswaged to his comfort: Like as when there is a great fyre vnder a pot, the flesh will by and by bee sodden as soone as the pot is thoroughly heated: otherwise the fleshe will lie saping a long while, and become vsfauerie. So then is it: It seemeth to Iob, that when wee pine and linger in suche extremities, it is nothing else but too make vs rotte away in our miseries. But yet neuerthelesse (as I haue sayde) men doo not then ceasse to shewe themselves vtterly desperate: that is to witte, not euen then when God forbeareth to make them to languish. But it behoueth vs too vnderstande, that if God list to prolong our miseries, it is ynough for vs that hee giueth vs patience: and that seeing he hath giuen it vs to day, he will continue it too morrowe. If God woorke after this maner: it is well, the aduersities will be easie to be borne, so as if hee plunge vs ouer head and eares a hundred thousande tymes, we will alwayes remit our selues vnto him, so be it that he sustaine vs by his grace which he hath giuen vs from heauen, making vs to feele this comfort of the holy Scripture in our hartes: inso muche that if God touch vs, whither hee fillip vs with his finger, or stryke vs with his hande, whether hee giue vs great blowes with a beetle, or whether hee make vs too pine awaye by peecemeale, or dispatche vs out of hande: surely nothing shall happen without his will, and his will tendeth too oure welfare, and so seeing wee bee his children, there is no cause for vs to doubt. And when Iob sayth, Let him not spare mee, I will not conceale the wordes of the bolie one: He maketh a protestation which hee was not able to perfourme. But hee speaketh after the maner of them, which are caryed away by theyr affections. Behold (sayth hee) though God haue so ouerpressed mee at the first blowe: yet will I not condemne him, specially I will not grudge agaynst him, but I will rather blisse his name, and confesse him to be righteous: neuerthelesse sith I am tormented so long, and can haue no ease: I lose my patientnesse thereby. Lo howe men proceede according as it hath beene declared. And Iob addeth, that hee can no more, and that his strength fayleth him, and that he which is afflicted ought too haue a good turne at his frendes bande. I haue shewed already, that Iob ought too haue returned vntoo God, and too haue hilde himselfe there. But what? He buckleth himselfe agaynst those that haue founde fault with hym: and it is a temptation whereof we ought to take good heede, according as the cause why the holye Ghost bringeth this storie too oure remembrance, is too the intent wee may vnderstande, that when men come too heaue at vs, so as they scoffe

at vs, and driue vs to dispayre, or at leastwise do the best they can too driue vs too it: wee must take good heede of our going, that we bee not intrapped by them. VVhy so? Beholde a man commeth to mee and sayes, thinkest thou that God hath a care of thee? Thou callest vpō him: but thou beguilest thy selfe in so dooyng: and surely if God did not as it were abhorre thee, thinkest thou that he would haue exercised thee with such extremitie: Thou seeest thy selfe heere to bee a poore damned creature, and perceyuest thou not how God is agaynst thee? If a man come to me to whet me after this sort, see what a deadly plague it is. But we must warde it off, specially bicause we haue our eares beaten with such temptations, as we may see them and say, beholde the diuill is come to set me on fire, to the intent I shoulde fret and chafe agaynst God. But I must beate backe al his wyles, and gather my wittes aboute mee to consider that I haue not to deale with men, but with God. And therefore me must put vp oure complaintes vntoo him, and say, Lorde thou seeest howe this man seeketh nothing but to driue mee into dispayre: he is come hither to make mee fall quite and cleane away: vouchsafe therefore to receyue mee to mercie, and let mee vnderstande, that all that euer I muste indure, commeth not of man, but of thee alone. For although men be woorkers in it through vnduifednesse, or rather through maliciousnesse, and by craft and outrage: yet doth not any thing happen without thy will: but thy will is good, righteous, and for my welfare. Lo howe we ought too procede. But Iob hath missed in this poynt, and his fault must serue for oure learning. And certeynly the holy Ghost hath ment verie well, in that this holy personage, (who is as it were a mirroure of pacience,) is set heere before our eyes too bee looked vpon, to the intent that the same thing may profite vs, and that wee may thereby receyue a lesson which we may applie to our owne behoofe. So then let vs vnderstande that as oft and whensoever there happeneth any great inconuenience vntoo vs, wee must not make suche excuses as these: yea I cannot abyde this present misadventure, but if God would handle mee after some other maner, I shall well come too it. Let vs not set our trust so: but let vs consider howe nothing ought too put vs oute of pacience, too turne vs aside from God, and to make vs ytter rebelles agaynst him. Then let vs condemne oure selues in oure owne vices, in whole and in part: and let vs acknowledge, Alas, If God shoulde exercise mee after any other sort, then woulde the thing shewe it selfe which is nowe hidden. There are a number of diseases hidde within mee, whiche I knowe not of my selfe, but God knoweth them. Therefore it standes mee in hande to knowe my selfe, and too pray him that hee suffer not the great number of vices which are in mee, too burst oute at libertie too make battell agaynst hym: but rather that hee will purge them and correct them. Lo howe wee ought too do in this case. And in so doing, let vs not take this conclusion at aduētūre which Iob setteth downe here when he saith, I will not grudge though God spare mee not, I will not denie the words of the holy one. VVhat is ment by this suppressyng or concealing of the words of the holy one? It is ment of not giuing glorie vnto God in all poynts & in all respects. Then Iobs meening in effect, is this: when God shall haue scourged mee to the vttermost, yet will I not denie him too bee woorthie of all prayse, and acknowledge, Lorde it is good right that thou shouldest scourge me, I am thy creature, and forasmuch as I am in thy hande, dispose thou of me at thy good pleasure. Iob protesteth assuredly that he will do so: but he protesteth

it, not knowing himselfe. Then (as I haue sayde) let vs learne to enter into our selues, and not to tie our selues vnto men. For assoone as we shal haue made such a protestation, God will laugh vs to scorne. It is nothing else but follie and fondnesse for a man too say, if such a thing happen I will do this or that, Therefore if a man come to that poynt, needes must God laugh his pride too scorne. And in good sooth what is our strength? whereof can we boast? So then let vs knowe that after what maner so euer God handle and intreate vs, we must alwayes haue the discretion too glorifie him, beseeching him so too guide vs by hys holie spirite, as hee will giue vs the vertue of pacience thereafter as it shall please him too afflict vs. Thus yee see what wee haue too marke in thys streyne. And heerewithall hee addeth: What is my strength that I shoulde bee able too indure? Is my strength the strength of stones? or is my fleshe as steele? Heere Iob entreteth intoo his complayntes, too shewe that hee hath iust cause too chafe after that maner, although hee passe measure. And why so? For God (sayeth hee) on his syde is too excessiue in chastizing. Yee see in effect what hee purposeth too saye. And wee see that whiche I haue touched heeretofore: that is too witte, that Iob is so ouerpressed with the present payne, as hee hath no regarde of all the rest, but is vtterly blynde in it. And this is a poynt that wee must marke well. For yee see in what case wee bee, and experience sheweth the same. VVhensoever wee haue any trouble, straightwayes withoute regarding what it is, our eyes are dazeled at it, so as wee cannot discern betweene redde and greene, but wee babble out this and that too no purpose. So much the more then must wee marke what is conteyned heere. Iob sayeth heere, What is my strength? True it is that his strength is nothing. But when hee knoweth it and stayeth vpon it, is it not the next way too make him more impacient than hee was afore? Iob thinkes that his strength fayleth him not, saue in the present miserie that hee indureth. But contrarywise let men trie them selues throughly, and search well what is in them: and they shall finde that the least inconuenience that troubleth them and pricketh them, is not without great greefe, I meene as touching the bodie. But this is nothing in respect of that which Iob indureth through his spirituall temptations whereof I haue spoken. He desyret not too bee eased of his miserie, that hee might knowe his infirmitie and humble himselfe before God, so as he might confesse it to bee good reason that he shoulde be handled after that maner. VVhat then? He intendeth to shewe how God handleth him after an extraordinarie fashion, and that men are not woont too bee so ouerpressed. His meening thē is to enter as it were into the field of battell with God, and that God should likewise take his sword or I wote not what. Lo how Iob runnes a head. But we must demaund and seeke what our strength is: not in our selues, but in him that strengthneth vs. For we shall neuer finde any thing but vanitie in our selues. If we think our selues to haue strength to carie but one fardel, we shall finde our selues ouerwhelmed vnder it. For we are faynte of oure selues, and there needeth no aduersitie too come from otherwhere to beare vs down. Our strength then is none at all to Godward. True it is that to outward shew there may well seeme to be some strength in vs: but the same is deede is but a verie shadowe. So then forasmuch as wee knowe howe oure strength is nothing, let vs conclude in generall, Alas, what shall become of me if God laye hys hande vpon mee? Ought I not too indure a farre greuouser torment, and yet notwithstanding not

Lift vp my selfe agaynst him? Then although God assist vs as well in our bodies, as in our mindes: yet muste wee not grudge agaynst him to condemne him, as if hee did vs wrong. But forsomuch as we knowe that oure strength in all cares and respects is nothing: ye see howe wee must learne to humble our selues before God, and beseech him to strength vs, assuring our selues that it is hee which hath the spirite of strength, and howe it belongeth to him onely to giue it vs. For else if wee were not sustayned by him, and that yet neuerthelesse it behoueth vs to indure a long time: what a thing were it? Let vs assure our selues we should be vterly beaten downe at the first blowe. God should not neede to make the miserie indure long to destroy vs: for who is he that could warrant himselfe to continue pacie: at one only day, or but one houre onely? Then needeth not God to prolong our miseries to shew our feeblenesse, & to make vs to be conuicted of it: but let vs assure our selues that we cannot so much as begin any good thing, and much lesse performe it. And therefore so much the more must we be prouoked to pray God to mainteyne vs, and to lift vs vp euen when we be ouerthrowne. Lo in what maner wee must consider our owne weakenesse wee must consider it as Job did, to say that God keepeth out measure towardes vs: but rather let vs marke that when wee haue displeas'd our God, and that he chaizeth vs: in steed of amending vnder his rods, we become worse and worse. Why so? Because that when God toucheth vs, we fall to blaspheming of his name, and beholde, that is the vttermost and full height of all euill. So then let vs learne, that if God will remedie our vyces, hee must abate this deuillish pride of ours, to make vs to knowe it. Otherwise we shall neuer profite by all the chaizements that hee can sende vs. And when wee knowe the euill that is in vs: we must mistyke of it and seeke remedie of it, to say, Alas my God: true it is that I am so feeble and weake as there is nothing but vanitie in mee: neuerthelesse if it please thee to strengthen mee, thou not onely hast the strength of stone or steele, but also thy strength is infinite. Let all stones and rockes come rushe agaynst thee, let ther be what stormes and tempestes there will, so as it may seeme that the whole worlde shall be sunken to the bottomlesse pitte: and yet is it certaine Lorde, that thy strength is alwayes inuincible. And therefore vouchsafe to fortifie me with thy holy spirite, to the ende that although I be frayle of mine owne nature: yet I maye not cease to fight agaynst the temptations that come to assaye vs. When wee shall haue done thus, wee shall haue profited greatly in this poynt of learning. And herewithall let vs vnderstande on the other side also, that if God passe our measure, and sende vs such temptations as we may haue no leysure to take breath: it behoueth vs to crie, alas. Then if God sende vs such a temptation, yea or euen a hundred of them: what will become of it? True it is that our nature will quaike in that case. But if God haue pitie vpon vs, and that we call vpon him too helpe vs in our troubles: that is the way wherby we may be deliuered yea and ouercome al through pacience. Then behoueth it all men to prepare themselues by all meanes to afflictions, that they may feele the hande of God: and if they will haue him to succour them, that they may withstand the combats that shal be put to them, they must haue recourse vnto him, praying him to strengthen them with the power of his holy spirite, that they may constantly passe through all aduersities of this worlde, vntill they be gathered into the euerlasting rest, which is prepared for them in heauen, according as it hath bene purchas'd for vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ.

And so let vs cast our selues downe before the face of our good god, with acknowledgemēt of our faults, praying him to make vs to better perceiue thē than we haue done, in such wise as we being conuinc'd of our wants, may haue our whole recourse to his mercie, beseeching him to be our father in our Lorde Iesus Christ: and that although we be not worthie to be reckened among his creatures, yet he will accept vs for his children, so as wee may learne to taste of his loue and goodnesse: and therewithall that he wil strengthen vs in such wise in al the afflictions which he shall make vs to feele, as we may be able to withstand thē all, euen till he haue drawne vs away to himself, to make vs in ioy the victorie that is purchas'd by our Lord Iesus Christ, & the triumph that tarieth for vs in heauen. That it may please him to graūt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations. &c.

The .xxv. Sermon, which is the thirde vpon the sixt Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth the rest of the exposition of the .xiiij. and .xiiij. verses, and then as followeth.

15. My brothers haue beguiled mee as a drie brooke, and as the vvaters that passe through the valleyes.
16. They be troubled vvith yce, and are full of snovve.
17. And after vvarde fayle through drought, and are taken out of their places by heate.
18. They turne aside by diuerse vvayes, and vanish and perish.
19. They that haue scene [them] vvayung in the quarters of Thema, come in Seba.
20. But being there, they vvere confounded: and hauing hoped, vvhen they vvere come too the place, they vvere ashamed.
21. Behold hovv you be to me as drie brookes: for ye haue bene amazed at the sight of me.
22. Haue I sayd to you, bring hither, giue me of your goodes?
23. Deliuer me from the enimie, rescue me from the hand of Tyrants.

The first sentence that we haue herd, tendeth to this ende. That the man whiche is pressed so as hee can no more, deserues well to be excused if he be excessiue in his passions. And that is it that Job allegeth for his excuse. Although I speake out of measure (sayth hee) men must not thinke me much too blame, for the miserie inforceth me to do it. True it is that this colour may be admitted among men: but as too Godward, it cannot be iustified if we alledge that the miserie is so excessiue, that we wote not what to do. For god is able to asswage it, if we desire it at his hande. And furthermore wee cannot excuse our selues after this present maner, but God shall by and by be accused as if he had no regard of our welfare, or as if he had handled vs without anye aduysment. Verely men think not of this: and yet when we speake of God, we ought not to open our mouth but with all reuerence and sobernesse. Now let vs consider whether God chastyze vs with discretion or no. VVhen it is once agreed vpon, that God knoweth why hee afflicteth vs, and that he neuer passeth measure: the same must not go for payment when we come to excuse our selues: but rather we must yeeld our selues giltye. So then, seing that Iob hath sayled in this behalfe: let vs go the rather to the remedie: which is, that if wee bee combered with greate aduersities, wee should haue our recourse vntoo God, praying him too voutsafe to succour vs. In so dooing wee shall fynd, that he wil ease vs so much as shall bee needfull, and also that hee will not suffer vs too quayle. Although it shall seeme that our calamities are as gulfs to swallowe vs vp: yet will God vphold vs with his hand, and preserue vs in such wyse, as wee shall not come too the poynt to bee vterly ouerthrowe. True it is that in respect of our selues, Gods intent is that our weakenesse should bee knowne, and that it should shewe it selfe to the intent wee myght not haue whereof to boast our selues, but rather that the foolish haultinesse that is in vs might bee beaten downe: but yet for all that, we shall bee succored by him in due tyme. Yee see then [what is to be sayd] concerning this sentence. And it is sayd: That a freend ought to doo him good which is afflicted: But Iob complayneth that men haue not the feare of God. This sentence ought too bee common among vs. For wee must not go to schoole to say, Let vs haue compas-

 30
 35
 40
 45
 50
 55 60
 65
 70
 75
 80
 85
 90
 95 100
 105
 110
 115
 120
 125
 130
 135
 140
 145
 150
 155
 160
 165
 170
 175
 180
 185
 190
 195
 200
 205
 210
 215
 220
 225
 230
 235
 240
 245
 250
 255
 260
 265
 270
 275
 280
 285
 290
 295
 300
 305
 310
 315
 320
 325
 330
 335
 340
 345
 350
 355
 360
 365
 370
 375
 380
 385
 390
 395
 400
 405
 410
 415
 420
 425
 430
 435
 440
 445
 450
 455
 460
 465
 470
 475
 480
 485
 490
 495
 500
 505
 510
 515
 520
 525
 530
 535
 540
 545
 550
 555
 560
 565
 570
 575
 580
 585
 590
 595
 600
 605
 610
 615
 620
 625
 630
 635
 640
 645
 650
 655
 660 665
 670
 675
 680
 685
 690
 695
 700
 705
 710
 715
 720
 725
 730
 735
 740
 745
 750
 755
 760
 765
 770
 775
 780 785
 790 795
 800
 805
 810
 815
 820
 825
 830
 835
 840
 845
 850
 855
 860
 865
 870
 875
 880
 885
 890
 895
 900
 905
 910
 915
 920
 925
 930
 935
 940
 945
 950
 955
 960
 965
 970
 975
 980
 985
 990 995 with them that mourne (as the scripture exhorteth vs) Rom. 12. 15 and to bee glad of our neyghbours prosperitie. Yee see then what wee haue to mark. But it is sayd: that a man forsaketh the feare of God when he hath not compas-10

 15 20 25 30
 35
 40
 45
 50
 55 60
 65
 70
 75
 80
 85
 90
 95 100
 105
 110
 115
 120
 125
 130
 135
 140
 145
 150
 155
 160
 165
 170
 175
 180
 185
 190
 195
 200
 205
 210
 215
 220
 225
 230
 235
 240
 245
 250
 255
 260
 265
 270
 275
 280
 285
 290
 295
 300
 305
 310
 315
 320
 325
 330
 335
 340
 345
 350
 355
 360
 365
 370
 375
 380
 385
 390
 395
 400
 405
 410
 415
 420
 425
 430
 435
 440
 445
 450
 455
 460
 465
 470
 475
 480
 485
 490
 495
 500
 505
 510
 515
 520
 525
 530
 535
 540
 545
 550
 555
 560
 565
 570
 575
 580
 585
 590
 595
 600
 605
 610
 615
 620
 625
 630
 635
 640
 645
 650
 655
 660 665
 670
 675
 680
 685
 690
 695
 700
 705
 710
 715
 720
 725
 730
 735
 740
 745
 750
 755
 760
 765
 770
 775
 780
 785
 790 795
 800
 805
 810
 815
 820
 825
 830
 835
 840
 845
 850
 855
 860
 865
 870
 875
 880
 885
 890
 895
 900
 905
 910
 915
 920
 925
 930
 935
 940
 945
 950
 955
 960
 965
 970
 975
 980
 985
 990
 995

poore folk that are in miserie and heauinesse, they are not only vnkynd bycause they haue no compasfion: but also they exceede further, forsomuch as they come to increase the mischeef. If I see a man that mourneth and desyreth succour of mee, and I turne my backe vpon him: I am cruell, and I shewe my self to knowe nother God nor nature. But if another come and laugh and mocke at him that desyreth to bee some what releued, so as his comming doubleth his greef: such a one is also double cruell. True it is that I haue delt churlishly on my behalfe: but as for him that commeth to set his foote vpon the poore mannes throte, dooth not he shewe himself to be a wyld beast, yea and more than beastly? But such are Jobs freends of whom he complayneth. Therefore if we will proue ourselues to bee Gods children, let vs lerne, not to shake off the that are in miserie, assuring ourselues how it is the thing wherevnto God calleth vs, and wherby he will haue a record whither wee take him for our father or no: that is to say, if we vse brotherlynesse towards men. But in any wise let vs beware wee li't not vp ourselues against such as indure any aduersitie, and that we oppresse them not moreouer. For wee see how that is a greater despying of God, than if wee made no reckening of them. Thus yee see what wee haue too marke.

And heere vpon Job vseth a similitude, comparing his freends too a drye brooke. Looke vpon a brooke (sayeth he) which runneth not at all tymes, but is sometymes drye. If there come anye great flote of water, and that it freze, a man shall see a great houghe heape while the frost lasteth. And afterward if there fall a snowe, behold the waters come gushing downe, and the brooke is so swolne, as he can scarce keepe himself within his banks, but ouerfloweth: a man would think that it should continue so alwayes. But the brooke passeth. He goeth here and there (sayeth he) and in the end dryeth vp: so as if a mā go to the way of Thema, or to the way of Seba, in hope to fynd water there, he shall be deceyued. Now these countryes were wyld in respect of the land of Iewrye, and there were deserts betwixt them: it had a drye way and in maner vntrauellable, and therefore it was a place that had the more neede of water to refresh men. Behold the traouellers (sayeth he), when they shall haue seene such a brooke, they bee glad and surmise with themselues, we haue a riuer that will giue vs some refreshing if we bee athirst, wee may drink water: for wee shall haue it continually at hand. But when they come too the drye places and think to refresh themselues and to haue water there when the heate is greate: they see themselues deceyued, and therefore they are abashed, and greeued, and angrye at the matter. Lo (sayeth he) euen such are you. And it is not without cause that Job alledgeth this similitude here. For we haue seene heretofore, that his freends which are come too comfort him, are men of greate countenance. And no doubt but they were honored and renoumed as wyse men. For euen ourselues may perceyue they were no common perfones, but had excellent gifts of grace in them. As touching the matter Job sayeth that all their wisdom was but as a blast of wynd. And whyso? For the cheef poynt in a man, is too haue an egall stedinesse, that hee bee not full of vaunts too sling into the feeld and too make greate flourishies with his sheeld, and afterward too meene nothing in deede but only a brauerye, according as wee shall see some that make fayre faces, and by and by in the turning of a hand they are become other men, in somuch that at sometymes a man would say: Behold yonder Angells: and anon a man shall see them wash away like water, so as there is no hold of them. Job then in applying this comparifon to his freends, sheweth that they haue not the sayd egall stedinesse, and the sayd hold of themselues, which is requisite about all things in men: Therefore wee haue a very profitable lesson to gather vpon this sentence: That is, that it were much better for vs to bee as some little spring, which shall not seeme too haue anie greate store of water in it, than too bee as greate brooks to bee dryed vp at tymes. There may bee some little spring, and perchance it is well seene that it hath but one little hole, so as a man shall haue much a doo to drawe vp one pot of water: but yet notwithstanding the spring cotinueth alwayes still, it serueth ones turne, it keepeth his course, it dryeth not vp. True it is that such a one beareth no greate shewe, it is not much made of among men: the spring it self shall lye hid, so as a man may passe ouer it and not perceyue it, for the head of it is innermore, and yet it is much better for vs too haue this little trickling groope in vs that holdeth out and continueth still from tyme too tyme, than too haue houghe gushing streames that make a greate shewe, and at length drye vp. As how? yee shall see some man that is a still man, and maketh no great talk: he is a laboring mā, or he shall be some handycraftes man that is of no great reputation: but what soeuer he is he leads a blamelesse lyfe, he laboreth faythfully, and referring himself too God, he contenteth himself with the little that he hath: if God giue him children, hee bringeth them vp; hee is a good example too them, and he giueth no occasion of stumbling. Moreouer hee is sure hee can make no greate troubles nor royots: for his hands are not so long, as that he can stretch them hither or thither. But (as I haue sayd) he sheweth in his littleness, that he is able to help his neyghbour, for beyds his confirming of them by his good example, God dooth also giue him the grace to imploy himself for them in any small matters. Truly he hath no greate shewe too the worldward: but yet the case so standeth, as he may serue a mannes turne euen with his littleness. Yee see then how such a man holding himself after that sort in lowliness, and continuing his race, may be copared to a pretie spring which neuer drieth though it be but little. But there shall bee other some that will work wonders, it would seeme there were no mo men but they, and at the first blush yee would say, behold wee see woonders. But let a man looke throughly vpon them, and he shall fynd the same lacke in them that is spoken of here. There are that bee practized and lerned in the scripture: yea for to talk of it, and to countenance themselues with it, and peradventure also there will bee some gay shewe of it in their lyfe. See here the likenesse of a dry brooke that makes a greate noyse when the waters come downe together: and when the snowes are melted into it, it should seeme that a whole doozen of greate springs fell intoo it and gushed through it with great violence. But what? Yee shall see a man that beareth a greate countenance: but let him be throughly vewed, that is to say let it be marked what he dooth at length, and he shall bee found to fayle and not to hold on. So that if he haue anye shewe of vertue, he shall haue so greate vyces matched with the, as it is pitie to see it, in somuch that a mā shall see he seeketh nothing but to make himself well esteemed, where as he hath so ynreasonable faults in him, (backebyting one man and beguyling another,) that all the world shall bee ashamed of him, or rather laugh him to skorne. Yee see here the dry brooks that are well swolne for a whyle, but in the ende are dryed vp. And for this cause I haue sayd that wee ought too bee well aduised, and too take good heede every man to himself, and to pray God to make vs perceyue our owne infirmities, to the end that wee cast not our selues in that sorte out of our bounds, to purchace greate reputation among men: but that our cheef studie be to haue the liuing waters that are

Iohn. 7. f. 38. spoken of in the seuenth of saint Iohn. True it is that our waters ought to flowe foorth, and that wee ought to make one another partakers of the gifts that God hath giuen vs: but yet in the meane season the headspring must lye couered within; and we must be satisfied with that which God hath giuen vs, and afterward deale thereof among our neyghbours, euery man according too his abilitie. Behold here in effect, whervnto we must apply the comparifon that is set downe here. But this extendeth very farre. For wee see how Job speaketh of his freends that made pretence to be redye to succoure him at his neede, and yet fayled in such wyse as he was deceyued of the hope that he had in them: according as Dauid sayeth, that they are Tablefreends, but they shewe not their heads in the tyme of neede. Ps. 14. b. 10. We see then dayly the experience of that which is sayd here, how there are a greate sort of drye brookes in the world, that is too say, that there are a greate sort of howge waters that rore and make a myghtie noyze: but there is no certieintie in them, neyther haue they an euensflowing course to holde out too the end. But to the intent wee bee not shamed, forasmuche as God warneth vs of it aforehande, let vs consider that men are as it were dryebrookes, and although they seeme to bee maruelouse streames for a tyme: yet notwithstanding they vanish and slippe away in suche wise, as a man cannot tell where the water is become which they had trusted vpon. Seing then that God sheweth vs how it shal bee so, yea and that besyds his woord, we haue experience of it also: shall wee maruell when the matter is come to passe? So then let vs beare well in mynd, that we must not gaze at men here bylowe: for in so dooing wee shall bee disappointed of our expectation. Let vs rather learne to hold vs to the fountayne of liuing water as it is shewed vnto vs by the prophet Ieremie. For God blameth the vnthankfulnesse of men which dig themselues pitts and cranyed cesterne that can hold no water, and in the meane tyme forsake him that is the welspring of the liuing water, wherwith they ought too bee filled continually. If one should make a man greate promises, there would be greate fault found if he should fayle him at his neede. Howe so? [it would be sayd] he hath promised mee mountaynes and mynes, I haue wayted vpon him, and in good fayth I haue indeuered myself to do him seruice, and now he giueth mee the slip, he makes none account of me. Behold (say I) the complaynts that wil be made of ordinarie: But we mark not that God chastizeth vs, when we haue not leaned vnto him, as became vs to do: nor that it was not long of him that we were not succored as he hath promised, because we haue shrunk away to creatures, and put our trust more in them than in the creator, and therefore that it is good reason we should bee disappointed of our hope, and put to shame, and be brought vnder foote with those whom wee haue trusted vnto so foolishly. Thus ye see what wee haue to beare in mynd. Yet by the way, wee must abhorre such as are like dryebrookes. For God hath ioyned vs one with another, too the intent that our continuing here, should be to comfort one another, and that euery one of vs should take a peece of his neyghbours burthen. For if there bee nothing but gay countenances, and in the meane whyle wee haue no care one of another: see yee not a thing that tendeth to peruert the order of nature? So then wee must mislyke of them that make fayre protestations, and in the end shrink in the wetting, in such wise as the waters which they made shewe of, were nothing else but too bleate folks eyes: for mennes wayting vpon them was in vaine. Nowe if such maner of men deserue too bee condemned: what is too bee sayd of the brookes that defile all things [with their mud] and carye out all afore them? For it is much better that the brookes should dry vp still, than too haue such swellings too marre the feelds and the medowes by turning vp all afore them, according as wee see that when brookes ouerflowe their banks, they leaue nother land, nor house, nor trees, but sweep all away afore them. And the damage thereof shal not bee for that one yeere alone: but sometymes the grounds feele it a good whyle after, yea euen after such a maner, as men shal not bee able too sowe anything vpon them, for all shal be turned too sande and grauell. And wee see many of these dryebrookes, yea and wee must bee fayne too bee accustomed to them. They that are in authoritie and beare the mace of Iustice, ought too bee as a riuer too refresh such as are readye too faynt, and too succour such as are distressed. But what? They trample folk vnder their feete, they oppresse all ryght and equitie, and they maynteyne naughtypacks that would put all to hauocke, and lift vp themselues openly againt God.

There needs no long examination of these things, they are apparant too the eye. They that are riche of the goods of the world, they that haue lands and possessions too liue of their rents, the merchants that haue good trade off traffick, these ought too bee as riuers, and too water the places where they passe through, with the aboundance that God hath giuen them. But what? They ouerflowe their banks, and there is nothing else with them but of ouerthrowing one and of turning vp another, and thereafter as God hath giuen euery of them the more abilitie, so thinketh he himself to haue the more power to any and to greue his neyghbours. Ye see then after what sort men doo through this default beguyle those that haue wayted vpon them. For they haue a streame of water as it were a floud: yea [but that is] too destroy and turne vp all things. When we see this geere, let vs assure ourselues that such men are enemies too nature, and woork spyte vntoo God. But herewithall let vs also mark, that by this meanes God wakeneth vs and draweth vs too him, too the intent wee should learne too put all our trust in him. Furthermore (as I haue touched alre dye) euery of vs is put in mynd of his duetie. which is, that when wee haue the sayd waterspring in vs, thereafter as we haue drawne of the sayd fountayne of liuing water, (that is to say of our God) wee must not keepe the sayd grace inclosed in vs, but it must bee a spring that neuer dryeth vp, and therewithall the waters must flowe out to our neyghbours also. And according to the meafure that euery man shal haue receyued: so let him studye to do that which may bee to the common profit and furtherance of others: according as it is not Gods will that the thing which I haue receyued should serue for my self alone, and that I should suppress it: but his will is that I should deale it foorth to suche as haue wante, and that euery man should indeuer to do the like.

Thus ye see what wee haue to remember in effect vpon this streyne. Furthermore wee must also wey how it is sayd, that when a man commeth too the way of Thema, and too the greate beate, the waters of the Sommerbrookes wil fayle him, notwithstanding that in wintertyme and in the moyster grounds there had ben a greate quantitie of water, and that it seemed too bee maruelous . But this is it that is commonly too bee scene in these iolly fellows that stande so muche vpon their reputation, and that make so great noise. VVhy so?

 for they holde not themselues in modestie, but they ouerflowe their bankes, and swell in suche sorte, as it should seeme there were toto an inuincible strength in them. They spred out their wings, and when they bee at their ease they promis this and that . But when it commeth to the pulsh, it is nothing so nor so . For as a riuer is more requysite in the greate heate of Sommer, and in a drye coast, than it shal be in winter & in moytt grounds:
 so also must our vertuoufnesse shewe it self when it commes to the true tryall . If God afflict a man : it is the thing wherein he ought to shewe himselfe pacient . And afterward if it behoue him to imploy himself vppon his neyghbours: ye see wherein he ought to shewe his charitic . Then let vs beare well in mynd that such as indeuer to make them selues renoumed a farre off, doo shew themselues to bee dryebrooks in the end, whereas they that walk by measure and compasse, keeping themsel-ues in modestie, making no greate shewe nor greate noyse, nor raunging farre to inlarge their borders , shall bee as a wellspring that is couered and hidden : the which (as I haue touched heretoofores) wil not cease too doo well, and yet (howsoeuer it bee) we see it hathe not any greate abundance, that a man myght say it were likely that it should neuer fayle: howbeit this same is more commodious and bringeth more profit, than all these greate brooks that make so greate noyze in ouerflowing their banks. And so they that make their greate shewes and musters before hand, are nothing else but little apes toyes : and for our part let vs take them too bee so, that wee may shunne them . For God suffereth this foolish vayngloriousnesse that is in men so giuen to vanitie, to turne to a mockerie, and themselues to bee put to shame.
 It is certaine, that all such as set such store by themsel-ues and would make themselues renoumed, are led by vayngloriousnesse : and if there were not such wyndinesse and swelling in them, they would be more still and quiet than they be, and they would not hunt for so greate reputation . But forasmuch as they bee so haughty in themselues, that is to say, forasmuch as they bee driuen and led with vayngloriousnesse : it is good reason that God should make them reprochefull among men, and that in the end wee should knowe how there was nothing but leasing in their case . Yee see what ought too hold vs yet still the more in awe, that wee become not dryebrooks, but that euery of vs may referue himself till neede requyre . Although the world despyse vs, yet notwithstanding let vs like better to walk in lowliness, than to make shewes and to say, I haue this and I haue that.
 Nay, let vs referue our selues to good purpose, to releue
 the necessitie bothe of ourselues and of our neygh-bours, and let vs not be lauish for a tyme to lash our all at aduerture and at one push, and afterward drye vp in the end . For if wee do so, wee shall bee like too the dryebrooks . Thus yee see what wee haue to mark in this streyne . And byandy Iob addeth , That he had not desyred his freendes too releue him with their gondes , nor yet too bee his borowe too rescowe him out of the hands of his enimyes , and yet notwithstanding in the meane season they were drawne backe from him . VVhen Iob sayeth that he had not requested his freends to giue him anything, nor to pay any raunfome for him : he meeneth to apply the similitude which wee haue expounded, to his owne purpose : as if hee should say , when did I desyre you too giue mee of your goods ? If I haue doone so, then myght yee well withdrawe yourselues from mee . And much more reason were it that the waters should be dryed vp by you : ye myght cut off the way to the fountayne if I should sue to you to help mee . I craue nothing of you : and yet neuerthelesse a man may see yee are as it were dazeled at the only syght of my miseries . Therefore in so dooing yee shewe yourselues well too bee dryebrooks . Now let vs remember well this accusation heere, that wee may profit ourselues by it . For although wee haue some shewe, and that it seeme wee were as redie and as foreward as myght bee : yet if wee succour not our neyghbours when they haue lacke of vs: therein wee shewe our sel-ues to bee but dryebrooks . And the matter standeth not only vpon our succouring off those with our goods, which stand in neede : but also vpon hauing compassion on them, without anye abatement of our substance. For sith it costeth vs nothing, so much the more shall wee bee vnexcusable, if wee bee nigardly and haue no pi-tie vpon such as are in distresse . Thus yee see wherein Iob ment to shewe the ouergreate hypocrisie of those, that haue had so fayre a glosse for a little whyle, and yet had no stedinesse nor firmenesse in them . This therefore serueth to condemne such as are of the same sute in these dayes according as wee see some so farre of from taking any of their goods too succour them that haue neede of it, that although nothing bee desyred of them, yet is it a greef and peyne to them, to vnderstand off the wants of their neyghbours : I say it is a greef too them, not that they sygh for sorinesse, for a man cannot wrest a sygh from them, but rather they could fynd in their harts that their poore neyghbours were rooted out:

 not that they would wish them dead for pitiees sake or for sorowe to see them in distresse: but rather of a skorn-fulnesse which maketh them too shunne such as they see are in necessitie . Is there any so greate an vnkynd-nesse as this ? Yee shall see some man that will bee a freend to the vttermost: yea so long as hee is in prosperitie . But if God lay his hand vpon him, wee voutsafe not to regard him, as a creature made after the image of God : but wee would bee as it were in a new world, that wee myght haue no such thing too meete with, infomuch as wee are ashamed only too say, such a man spake with mee euen now, or I spake with him . Seing that the holie Ghoste dooth by the mouth of Iob condemne such extreme hypocrisie : let vs looke too ourselues, and when wee see the afflictions that are eyther in greate or small, let vs assure our selues that God summoneth vs, to make vs vnderstand the louing kyndnesse which we ought to put in vre towards those that are so ioyned vnto vs. God should proude wel for all mākynd, if it were his good pleasure that no man were in paine,
 but that euery man were contented and well at his ease.
 But what ? His will is too send such necessities, to the end that they which are not in such want and needinesse, should haue pitie on them that are, and that euery man on his owne behalf and according to the abilitie that God hath giuen him, should streyne himself too help those that haue neede. As for example. A mā perchance is well at his ease : but assoone as he seeth any poore bodye, he shall bee touched with carefulnesse, it grieu-ueth him to see him that is in necessitie, and although he distribute not all his goods, yet will he succour ? man or twayne, and not cease to haue pitie vpon those that are not succored by him as he could fynd in his hart too do.
 Such a man as this shall bee much more set by than another that shall be much richer, bycause he hath as it were a longing too giue meate and drink to such as lacke it :
 and God also will cause men too haue pitie on him in tyme

Mat. 5. 4. 7.
Psa. 41. 4. 4.
in tyme of his neede, according as hee promiffeth that such as haue ben mercifull and pitifull, shall fynd the like. And when they happen too be pinched with any aduersitie, others shall pay them such measure as they haue meafured vnto others. Yee see then what wee haue too beare in mynd: namely that when we see our neybour in aduersitie, we must frame ourselues too be moued and affectioned too releue them as well as wee can. Yet notwithstanding if we performe not our dutie too discharge our selues in giuing of our goods too the releef of others: at leastwise let vs shewe how wee haue not the sayd pryde, that we would cut off those from vs which are in such necessitie and whom God afflicteth: but rather let vs knowe how it is the meane whereby God will trye if we haue any kyndely affection in vs. And in very deede wee must alwayes bee more warer of disdeyning those that are in pouertie and trouble: than of louing those that are in prosperitie and at their ease, or of soothing them vp in all respects bycause they beare a goodly port too the worldward. And whyso? For our charitie is not well grounded, if wee loue our neighbours but in respect too be helped by them, and too serue our owne turnes with their credit, or with their goods and fauour. Nay rather let vs haue regard too followe that which God commaundeth vs: that is to wit too shewe our charitie vpon those whom we knowe to haue more neede. And furthermore let vs extend this doctrine too ourselues: that is to say. Let vs not think it is ynough to blisse God when wee bee in prosperitie: but if God fend vs any affliction, yet for all that, let vs not cease to glorifie him in all respects, and to put our trust in him. And although we be tossed from poste to pillar with the miseries and greeuances of the world: yet neuerthelesse let vs assure our selues, that God is strong ynough to deliuer vs, and that he will also doo it, so wee referre our selues wholly too his prouidence, too glorifie his holie name in all that it shall please him to send vs, as wel in prosperitie as aduersitie. This ye se in effecte what we haue to mark concerning this text. As touching that Job addeth, Teache mee if I haue doone amisse: it cannot be declared as now, and therefore wee will referre it till too morowe.

But let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceyue them better, too the end that being beaten downe in our selues, wee may haue our recourse too his soueraine goodnesse, and not rest our selues any more vpon any of the vayne trusts and false imaginations wherewith the world beguyleth it selfe wilfully: And that whensoever hee shall suffer vs too be afflicted in this world, euen by the meane of men and of other creatures, yet notwithstanding wee may acknowledge it too be his hand that beareth vs, too the end wee may induer too retorne vntoo him, and seeke the remedy and cure of all our maladies in his only mercie: and therefore that he will giue vs the grace that wee may neuer bee withdrawne from this consideration, namely that wee may all of vs one and other labour too bee brought thervntoo, too the end that with one comon accord wee may yeeld our selues wholly too his seruice, too walk after his will in feare and obedience before him, vntill hee haue taken vs out of this mortal bodie, too make vs partakers of his endlesse glorie. That it may please him too graunt this grace not only too vs, but also too all people and nacions of the earth, &c.

The xxxij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the sixth Chapter.

24. Teache ye mee and I vwill hold my peace, shevve ye mee vverhin I haue doone amisse.
25. Hovv stedfast are the ryghtuouse vvoords, vwhat is it that the faultfinder: among you can find fault vvithall?
26. Frame your reasons too ouerthrowve matters, and let the vvoords of the afflicted go into the vvynd.
27. You vvynd about the fatherlesse, ye dig a pit for your freend.
28. Turne ye againe and consider, and mark my reasons if I lye.
29. Turne ye againe and there shal be none iniquitie. Turne ye yet againe and my ryghtuoufnesse shall appeere in that behalfe.
30. There is no vvickednesse in my toung, and dooth not my mouth feele bitternesse?

It is a greate vertue in a man too yeeld himself teachable, that is too say, too submit himself too reason: for without that, men must needs ouershoote themselues, as it were, in despite of God: for proof hereof the cheef honour that God requyreth at our hands, is that whatsoeuer we knowe too pro-ceede from him, be receyued without any gainfaying, that it be hild for good & rightfull, and that men frame them selues thervnto. And certainly all truthe and reason pro-ceede from God. Therefore let vs conclude, that God hath no souerainie nor authoritie ouer vs, except men yeeld themselues fully to that which they knowe to bee true & reasonable. So then we shall haue profited greatly in all our lyfe, when wee shall haue lerned to humble oursel-ues so farfoorth, that assoone as the reason of a thing is knowne vntoo vs, wee make no more gaynfaying, nor shewe our selues stubborne and hard too agree vntoo

it: but rather doo such honour to God as too say, Lord wee see it were to make warre against thee, if wee should stand any more in this case: for thy truthe is the true mark of thy diuine glorie: and therefore whosoever will woorslip thee, must obey thy truthe: for otherwise, all must needs bee troden vnder foote. And this is the matter that Job treateth of in this streyne. For he protesteth, that if he bee taught, he will hold his tung:
his desyre is too haue it shewed him wherein hee hath doone amisse. No doubt but Job dooth heere in his owne persone giue a common rule too all the children of God. VVhich rule is, that when God shall haue shewed vs wherein wee haue doone amisse, wee must no more open our mouthes too alledge tryfing excuses, and too enter intoo defence of our dooings, but wee must giue care too that which shall bee told vs, without incountering it: and generally wee must receyue all good doctrine as soone as it is spoken, without asking whither it bee so or no, and when wee knowe it too

be so, we must go through with it, without kicking against the pricke. And as I haue sayd that it is a greate vertue to bee so teachable: so also let vs vnderstand, that it is a verye rare vertue and not lyghtly too bee founde among men. Nay rather, wee see a foolish presumptuousnesse, so as euerye man weeneth too bee wyse in his owne conceyt: and herevpon groweth such a deuilish wilfulnesse, that although wee shewe our selues too bee more than conuicted, yet many of vs will neuer yeeld, but are rather so shamelesse and brazenfaste, as they will maynteyne that which is against reason: for all is wellynough so they bee not foyled. So much the more ought wee too mark well what is sayd heere: for although Iob treate heere of his owne vertuousnesse: yet notwithstanding, Gods holie spirit setteth it heere before our eyes as a lookingglasse or an example for vs to followe. So then, let vs not be wedded to our owne fancies, that we should not quietly herken too that which is told vs, yea euen when it cometh too the poynt that wee must bee rebuked for our faults. For Iob treateth thereof in especiall: And it is against the foolish ouerweening that is in men for when they bee conuicted to haue doone amisse, and too haue ouerseene themselues, they bee not ashamed too cast themselues intoo a thousand absurdities, and too be caryed away by them, so as they become like brute beasts, facing out the matter as it were in despyte of God, and all their glorie is to be opinionholders, and to be men that will neuer be overcome.

First therefore let vs mark, that when any thing shall be propounded vntoo vs, wee must not be so wilfulmynded as too say, wee must not be so wilfulmynded as too say, look what I haue conceyued, that will I stand vntoo. No, no: let vs beware of such wilfulnesse. For it is a deadly plague when wee shall be so headstrong and wilfull in the matters that wee take in hand. It is all one as if wee should shet the gate against God, and say hee shall not come in, and that although hee visit vs, and although he be desyrons too shewe vs that which is greatly for our welfare: yet notwithstanding, wee will repulse that grace. And this is that I haue sayd alreedye: namely, that if wee will be Gods children, we must haue the spirit of meeknesse, that is too say, wee must haue a peasable and quyet mynd, and wee must suffer our selues too bee handled by him.

Iohn. 16. 4-5.

Behold also wherefore our Lord Iesus Christ likeneth his children too lambes or too sheepe which folowe the voyce of their shepherd, and herken vntoo him as sone as he call:th them. Therefore let vs lerne too bee reprobued, and too receyue correction whensoever it is brought vs: and generally let vs lerne too yeeld our selues too all things that wee knowe to bee good and of God. Are wee taught? Then must wee followe. And as I haue touched alreedye, as for those that are so wedded to their owne opinion: it is certaine that God setteth them scorth to bee a mockerie and reproche, so as he suffereth them not to haue any more shamefastnesse and modestie, but letteth them bee as wyld beasts, and so reuengeth himself of such stiffneckednesse when men cannot find in their harts too yeeld and too bow their necks in agreeing to his will. And this is it that Iob meeneth by Holdng of his peace or by holdng of his tong. For a man may teache vs, and we perchaunce shall say. It is true, yea and wee may perchaunce alwayes say, Amen Sobeeit. But yet peradventure there may be some that will hold their tong, and yet notwithstanding cōtinue still stubborne in their owne fancies whatsoever befall. If yee speake too a man that is fully determined not too yeeld: he will bee mum, he wil not vtter a woord, yee shall not get him once to open his lippes: and yet notwithstanding this his holding of his peace is not without stubbornesse. But when Iob speaketh of holding his peace: he meeneth that when a man is warned, it is not for that he should incounter it, so as if a man giue him one woord, hee should giue three to the contrarie: but that wee should simply giue eare to that which is sayd. Thus yee see what the holie scripture meeneth by holdng ones peace or by holdng ones tong. For when wee bee commaunded to hold our peace vntoo God, it is too the intent wee should not make any adoo, bycause that all our passions are as roarings, which make such a noyse as God can haue no audience nor bee heard of vs. And so let vs lerne to speake and to hold our peace when wee bee taught. First let vs learne too hold our tongs. That it to witte, that wee hinder not the grace of God when it is offered vs, but that wee giue eare, and keepe our mouth shet so as wee reply not. And furthermore let vs also learne speake: that is to say, to confesse that Gods trithe is good, and that there is no fault to bee found in it, according as it is sayd, I haue beleueued, and therefore will I speake: and not only let vs yeeld such record vnto Gods goodnesse, but also in deuer too drawe others to it. Lo wherevnto our speaking must serue: namely to the end that the ignorant may bee desyed, and that wee may with one common accord bee Gods true scholers, so as his doctrine may bee receyued whensoever he listeth to play the schoolemaister among vs. And thus yee see what wee haue too mark vpon this streyne. But if euer this doctrine were needfull to bee practyzed: nowadays is the tyme: for wee see what ignorance is in the world. I pray you in what darknesse haue wee ben? and if wee will needs hold vs too that which wee haue conceyued, what shall become of vs? VVee haue ben so lewdly taught, as there hath ben nothing but confusion in our whole lyfe. Now if God had not graunted vs the grace too giue him the hearing that is mencioned in this place: what a thing had it ben? And at this day wee see manye that continue in their ignorance, bycause they cannot abyde too heare paciently what is told them: and God dooth iustly punish them for this hastinesse of theirs in lifting vp themselues against him. And furthermore wee see how things are so confuzed throughout, that if wee bee not weldispozod and settled to herken what is shewed vs in Gods name, and too apply the same too our behoof: it is certaine that wee shall bee like straying beasts: euety man shall wander here and there, and none of vs all shall keepe the ryght way. So then, seing wee haue such neede to bee teachable: and to haue a meeke mynd to receyue what is sayd vntoo vs: let vs lerne too repress all these fond affections that auance themselues, when wee see any vayngloriousnesse in our selues, according as some bee desyrous too set out themselues, and too speake against the trithe which they knowe, of purpose too purchace themselues fame: and other some are sūrie, and their wits runne at rouers in such fort as a man cā neuer brydle thē. Seing that wee knowe all these vices too bee in vs: let vs learne to correct them, to the intent there may not bee any thing too hinder vs from holding of our peace, and to keepe our selues quiet, till wee haue lerned that which is good, and that which God teacheth vs. Thus much cōcerning this first verse. And touchig the residue, he sayeth, Teache ye me and therewe me wherein I haue doone anysse. By this he meeneth that although Gods children ought to bee meeke to receyue correctiō & good doctrine: yet-

Ps. 116. 10.

not-

notwithstanding it is not ment that they should be without wisdom and discretion. For we see what is happened in the popedome vnder colour of being simple. Men say there, O we must walk in simplicitie. It is true: but their meaning is, that men should suffer themselves to be led like brute beasts, without discerning betweene whyte and blacke. But it is not for nought that our Lord promisseth his faythfull ones the spirit of discretion: It is to the intent they should not be led here and there to daunce at euery mānes pype, nor be led about like poore blind men. VVhat is to be doone then? VVe must be taught, and we must haue the knowledge and certaintie of Gods truthe, to followe and obey the same, and when any man shall haue shewed vs our faults, wee must take warning aright, therby to followe the good and eschue the euill. Thus ye see what is ment by this woord Teache which is placed here. And it is a verie profitable warning. For there are many folk which think it ynough to receyue whatsoeuer is sayd to them: Yea euen without any warrant that it is so, or without hauing any firmenesse in the same. But if we will haue a true sayth: Gods truthe must be sealed in our hartes by the holie Ghoste, so as wee may be fully resoluēd of it according as saynēt Iohn sayeth, that wee knowe ourselues to be the children of God. He sayeth not, that wee suppose or weene it, nor that wee haue conceyued a confuzed and intangled opinion: but he spēaketh of a knowledge. True it is that this wisdom commeth not of our fleshly reason, nother can our owne wit and vnderstanding bring vs to it: for Gods learning surmounteth all capacitie of man. Yet neuerthelesse it behoueth vs to consider, what truth is, and to be thoroughly resoluēd of it, and not to receyue whatsoeuer men tell vs at auenture and vnder the shadowe of simplicitie without knowing why or how. But wee must diligently inquire of the thing that is told vs, and when we vnderstand a doctrine to be good, wee must determine fully with our selues to hold vs to it. For thencefoorth there is no more replying: it is hygh treason when we will open our mouth against God. Thus ye see what we haue to mark here. Sothen, such as are rightly taught concerning God, may well bee angry with those that would disguyze Gods truth with their leasings: like as in these dayes it is verie requisite for vs to be armed with the example of Iob, that wee may beate backe all the wicked slanders, wherwith the enemies of God and of his woord labour, to ouerthrowe and turne away our sayth. Ye see how the Papists doo vs greate wrongs: inso-much as it should seeme wee are not woorthye that the ground should beare vs. But in the meane whyle there is no talk of shewing why. It is ynough for them that they haue filled the eares of the ignorant sort afore hand, [bearing them in hand] that we spēake against the holy church because wee wil not be subiect to all the traditions which they haue made. Yea: but it is sayd that Gods word is it that must be receyued: and therefore that whosoever speaketh, must not aduaunce himself to bring fancies, but must spēake in such wyse as mē may knowe that the thing which he vttereth is godly and of God. Then must God be exalted among vs. Also when the Papists pryē out and cast vp their skum: it behoueth vs to be alwayes redye to be taught. Yea howbeit so as it be the doctrine, not of men but of the liuing God, and of him whom he hath appointed to be our only maister, that isto wit our Lord Iesus Christ, who nameth himself a shepherd, to the intent that we should be his flocke, that his only voyce should be herd among vs, and that we should shake off the voyce of straungers. And moreouer it is not against the Papists only, that wee must be armed with this warning: But we are at this day in so miserable a tyme, as the childre of God haue greate neede of inuincible cōstancie to resist so many and so sundry aduersaries. In these dayes it booteth not to find fault with the euill and to condēne it: for euery man supporteth it too manifestly. In these dayes we be come to such a bottomlesse gulf, that if there happen any wickednesse, euery man couereth it, yea and iustificieth it: and if there be any good, O it must needs be condemned. And howsoeuer doo not men feare this horrible curse which God hath vttered by his prophet, Cursed be you that call euill good, and good euill? Truly so little doo men think of it, that (as I haue sayd) the euill shall be borne withall, yea and borne out: and the good shall be borne downe. VVhen a man shall not only haue done amisse, once or twyce, but also proceeded so farre as to spyte God to the full: it is all one, so it haue some shewe of ceremoniousnesse. A man shall come and say to him, see, thou haste doone amisse: yea, but that is all [that is done to him.] This is like as if some seruant in a house haue confederate himselfe with the children to guzzle wyne and to play the gluttons in some corner, and to do all maner of naughtinesse: and yet when the fault is espyed, the children should make countenance to say, thou haste done amisse: when as notwithstanding, they haue all of them with one accord compacted themselves together with them, to commit such royots and vnchristinesse. And men vse the like ceremonies at this day, to mocke God withall, when the euill is as excessiue as can be. Contrarily needs must they be cōdemned that haue walked in simplicitie and vprightnesse, and which haue maynteyned Gods quarel. These must passe the pikes & be cōdemned, whyle the wicked be bolstered out, and fauored at all mennes hands. But what is there for vs to do? we may hardly despise those that mocke God in such sort, & take to vs this cudgell here, which wil serue to beate them downe, & to put them to confuziō before the heauenly iudge: that is to say, whensoeuer any man shall teache vs [aright:] let vs be tractable and quiet. But if we perceyue him to indueuer to confound Gods truthe, or to turne it into a lie: let vs abhorre all such maner of dealing, and let vs alwayes hold on our owne race. And this is it that is sayd consequently, I bat the wordes of ryghtnesse are strong, and what faultfynder is there that can find any faulci in them? Hereby Iob meeneth to shewe, that when a man hath a good conscience, he shall continew stedfast and neuer bee shaken for any thing that can be sayd to him. True it is that the wicked wil labour thoroughly to ouerwhelme him: but yet shall he continew alwayes in his stedfastnesse. And hereby we be warned to walk rightly before God, and to haue a good [inward] witnesse that there hath ben no hypocrisie in vs. Haue we done so? Let men assaile vs on all sides, and we shall haue wherwith to hold them tacked. True it is that we shall not cease to be greued: but yet shall the wicked neuer haue the vpper hand against vs, if we haue this ryghtnesse wherof Iob spēaketh here. And it is an inestimable priuiledge, that such as haue kept on their way in this rightnesse & soundnesse, cā neuer be cōfounded. True it is that to the worldward men may oppresse thē with false slanders, & mē may diffame thē in such wise as it shall seeme that they be the worst folk in the whole world: according as we see the frowardnesse that reigneth nowadays, so as there is nother right nor indifferencie remainyng. VVe be come to the tyme wherof the prophet Esay cōplayneth: namely that right is openly oppressed, and vprightnesse and truthe are chased out of the world. And besides this (sayeth he) although the mischeet be increased, & ouerfloweth his bounds more & more: yet hath there not ben any man that hath vttered one

1. Iob. 5. 4. 19

1. Pet. 4. 5. 11.

Mat. 23. 4. 8. 10.

Iob. 10. b. 11.

Esa. 5. c. 20.

Esa. 59. c. 14.

woord to cleere these things that are so confuzed: but rather it hath seemed that euery man hath had a desyre to augment the mischeef. Behold at what poynnt we be. But (as I haue sayd heretoofoore) yee see it is an inestimable priuiledge that we can hold that thing for good which the world hateth, and that when men poynnt at vs with their singlar, when they spit in our faces, and when they trample all reason vnder foote. Although we see all this: yet notwithstanding we be not abashed so as wee should inelyne to any wickednesse, but doo alwayes continewe fast rooted and grounded in the sayd truthe, which is myghtie ynough to maynteyne vs. And so folowing that which is shewed heere, let vs lerne to hold vs alwayes too the word of ryghtuousnesse, assuring our selues that God will euermore bee on our side, and that his truth will bee so myghtie, that in the end it will get the vpper had. True it is that forso much as men are fugitiue, and runne on so headily: the truth hath not alwayes his full scope, and it will seeme erewhyles to be vtterly ouerthrowne: but let vs haue patience vntill the day of the lord do apeere as sayeth sainct Paule. For that is it whervnto he calleth them, mocking at the ouerweening of such as iudge so awkly, ouerthwartly and confuzedly, in charging him with those reproches. But (sayeth he) I wil wayt for the day of the lord, till God at length discouer the faise slaunders wherewith I haue ben charged. For whē that day (sayeth he) beginneth to appeere, thē must ryghtfulnesse come abrode, then must slaunders be conuicted and then must all things turne to their confuzion. Now if God euen in our whole lyfe, graunt vs the grace too get the vpper hand of all maliciouse persones that go about to trample vs vnder foote, when we shall haue walked vnfeynedly in truthe: much more shall we haue that preheminece when the cace concerneth fayth and the seruice of God, & the doctrine of saluation, that is to wit, God will giue vs such & so stedfast a constancie, that when the diuell shall haue bent all his force against vs, he shall gayne nothing at our hands, according also as we haue a promis therof. VVherof is it long then, that wee be no stedfaster now adayes, seing the troubles that are in the woorld? whereof cometh it that wee see so many men giue themselues too naughtinesse? Eue by cause they haue not this sayd ryghtnesse, and by cause they bee not fenfed against the manifold assaults which Satan bendeth against them. Verely there are some of a good mynd: if a man warne them, they receyue chastyzement quietly: if noman trouble them, it is well, they will hurt noman, neyther will they giue any cause of offence. But if they once see that iniquitie hath full scope, and that if a man meene too liue simply and vpryghtly, he shall bee pricked on the one syde, and punched on the other: then he starteth a syde and boweth with all wynds. And wherof commeth such inconstancie? It is by cause they haue not the ryghtnesse that is spoken of heere wellrooted in their harts. Behold (I say) what is the cause why wee see so many wauering men, who are not sure of the truthe of the Gospell, inso much that they be but as wethercockes that turne with euery wynd, or as reeds that bow euery way. And why is that? Euen by cause they neuer knew the power of Gods woord and his truthe. For it is certaine that the truthe is so strong, as the diuell may well assayle vs, and woork vs all the trouble that he can deuise: but yet howsoeuer the world go, wee shall hold our owne, and wee shall abyde stedfast in our state. VVhat is to bee doone then? Let vs pray God to make vs feele the power of his word, wherof mention is made here, (that is to wit, how it is an inuincible fortresse) that wee may knowe the same by experience: and in very deede wee be too blame if wee doo it not. And let vs not say as manye ignorant persones say, I knowe not on what syde too turne mee, for I see contrarieties in mennes opinions, one sayes this, and another sayes that. True it is that there are dyuerse opinions: but so must our fayth bee tryed, and God sufficeth it, according also as Sainct Paule sayeth that there must be herefyes, too the intent that such as are of God, may be knowne by hauing this the constancie of cleauing continually vntoo Gods truthe, neuer to be turned from the same. Then if it be alledged that there are many incounters and disputations: it is true: but is that as much to say as our fayth must therefore bee shaken? for wherin shall the stedfastnesse of this ryghtnesse shew it self, that is too say, how shall a man knowe that the truthe is so strong, or where shall the power therof shewe it self, but in vs? Like as in very deede when it is sayd that Gods woord indureth for euer, it is not ment that it is alwayes but in heauen only: but that it is also in the harts of the faythfull, according as saynct Peter sheweth vs, that although wee bee tossed with many stormes and tempests in this world: yet shall our fayth neuer be shaken downe. So then it is certaine that Gods truthe is myghtie ynough too withstand all assaults, according as it is sayd, the victorie that ouercommeth the world is this, namely euen your fayth, as sainct Iohn sayes in his canonicall epistle. And so, are wee desyrous too profit well in the Gospell and in the schoole of God? Then let vs lerne, not only too take and too followe that which is good: but also too answer thervntoo in such wyse as wee may protest, I will doo such a thing, not only by cause I hope too bring it too passe: but also by cause God will giue mee strength too withstand the temptations which the diuell shall prepare against mee, so as I shall neuer fayle whatsoeuer betyde. And where as it is sayd, which is the faultfynder among you that can fynd fault with any thing? it is too shewe that the enemyes of God may well practyze, and well vse craftie conueyances and naughtinesse: but they shall neuer obteyne too suppress the truthe. Not that they shal not streyne themselues to doo it, or that they shal not deuise any thing that may serue to strengthen them withall: but yet (notwithstanding all this,) God will maynteyne the case of his seruants, and at length shewe that the truthe is certaine. I say the wicked shall do their indeuer, yea and somtymes they shall seeme too haue the vpper hand: but by that meanes God punisheth the vnthankfulnesse of the world. And this is it that sainct Paule meeneth by saying that the wicked and such as anoy the church shall go on and preuayle and increase. And how is that? Is it not for that God giueth Satan the brydle, and suffereth the diuels champions to aduance themselues in such wyse, as it seemeth that they ought to be lordes of all? But God suffreth it not without cause: for we see the vnthankfulnesse of the world. There are many that would willingly be deceyued, & which are greued when men teache thē in all purenesse: who could fynd in their hart that Gods word were so confuzed, yea euen in such sort as a man myght not knowe nor discerne aught, but that it had two faces [in one hooed] as they say. Other some, although they can abyde to heare one say the truthe, yet they haue no greate care too bee throughly rooted in it: all is one too them. Now foras much as God feeth in the one sort such a maliciousenesse, and in the other sort such a carelesnesse, that it turneth euen to an open rebelliousnesse, and many men quenche the lyght that God setteth before them: do we maruell if he slack the brydle too the wicked, and too those that turne the truthe intoo lying, and vtterly deface it? But yet in the meane while it is certayne, that God strengtheneth and mayn-

1.Co.11.d.19

1.Pet.1.b.7.

5.c.9.

1.Iob.5.a.4.

2.Tim.3.c.13

1.Cor.1.a.4.5.

10

20

30

40

50

60

mayn-

mainteyneth those to the end, whome he hath taught his truth. And so ye see wherefore it is said that the faultfinders may well streyne themselves: howbeit in the end they shall be vanquished, and God will shew himselfe to be on that side where good right is. And this is spoken, not only of the doctrine of the Gospell: but also of all that euer concerneth the life of the faithfull. True it is that the doctrine of Saluation is one of the preciouslest things that God hath. And therefore ye see also that he wil shew the power thereof in such wise, as he wil destroy the wicked by the breath of his mouth, and they shall feele that the said word which they haue despised, is a sword to slea them with, and to driue them into damnation. Then behoueth it God to vter his power in this behalfe about all. But yet in other doings, whensoever wee be wrongfully oppressed by men, and that whereas we ought to be susteyned, it shall seeme that all goeth cleane backward: yet let vs not cease to trust still in God. And why? For we may perhaps be little set by for a time, and we may be abhorred as if there were nothing but euill in vs: But let vs be contented to haue God and his Angells to be good witnesses of our soundnesse. Let vs tary till God chase away all droopie darknesse, and make our innocencie too shine out, that it may be seene as the breake of the daye. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this streyne. And by and by Job addeth, that his friends which came to him vnder pretence to comfort him, haue framed talke to confound his holy purpose (that is to say, to confound his right sayings) and haue let the wordes of the afflicted passe into the wind. Here Job accuseth those of extreme spitefulness, which proceede so egerly against him. And it behoueth vs to marke well this poynte. For no doubt but the holy Ghost sheweth vs here, what we haue to beware of, if we be loth to displease God and wold not make as it were open warre against him. Behold (I say) a vice that is hateful before God: whiche is, when we will be cunning to ouerthrowe a good matter: and specially when it happeneth that we aduance our selues against them that are afflicted to the worldward: and when there is suche presumptuousnesse in vs, as wee will prouoke them to cast themselves into despaire: and yet ther is no vice so ouerripe as this. And why so? Bycause no man thinketh of that which is told here: namely, that when men forge such inuentions, (that is to say, when they deuise things to ouerthrowe all equitie (as much as they can) and to make such krinks as the truth might not be knowne any more, nor take place any more: it is all one as if they came to iustle against God, and tooke him to be their aduersariē partie. Now then, if men would thinke themselves to say thus, howe nowe, wee bid battell vnto God: it is certaine they wold be so afraid as their heare wold stand vp vpon their head, so as it would be a bridle to them to hold them in, that they should not fling themselves out so at randon. But sith that we thinke so little of it: at leastwise let vs receiue that which God sheweth vs, seeing that he giueth vs warning in this streyne. Ye see then in effect what we haue to beare in mind: that is to wit, that when any man speaketh to vs, wee should delay our answer vntill wee know what the matter is. VVe see there is some communication ministred: what is to be done? Let vs herken, and marke whither it be godly and true or no: and let vs pray God to giue vs the spirite of discretion, that we may vnderstand what the truth is. And whē we haue found it, let vs not replie against it. For (as I haue said heretofore) most men ouerhoote themselves vnadvisedly, bycause they knowe not that it is God against whome they set themselves. By meanes whereof they cease not to proceede in it with an euill conscience. For although they be not directly minded to say, I wil go iustle against God: yet they see well ynough, that God giueth thē not leaue to aduance themselves after that sorte against goodnesse, to suppress a good cause: they see that well ynough. And therefore it is certaine, that all they whiche yield not simply to that which is good, cannot excuse themselves, but that they haue through a certayne maliciousnesse fought against God. But nowe, let triall be made, and it will be found, that all mē both great and small cease not to wage deadly warre continually against God, and to worke him spite. And for prooffe hereof, shall euer any case be oueruled by iustice, wherein there shall not be vsed a number of slights to turne the good into euill? And yet notwithstanding looke vpon the holiest and best priuiledged place that is: and the same is as shamefully defiled, as none is more: there is such stinking bestlinesse, as eue the bawds of brothelhoufes wold be ashamed of it. For mē disguise things, yea and corrupt them in such sort, as it may seeme that they haue conspired to shet all equitie and vprightnesse our of dores. And yet notwithstanding in the meane whilemen make countenance as though they sawe no such thing, and would fayne couer the leawdnesse which is too too apparant and notoriouse. It is euen like as if a man had cast vp a handful of ashes to darken the sunne, & should say that the day were at an end. The things are knowne as well as may be, and yet do mē still aske what is it? And which worse is (as I said) the same is seene euen in the seate of iustice. On the other side it is to be seene how the deuill possesseth all. The Temples of God which ought to be dedicated to the seruing and worshipping of God purely as he commandeth, are stuffed with ydolles, so as there is nothing but corruption and caneldirt wherewith to send silly soules to destruction. In effect we see that in all the life of man there is nothing but disguising of things, so as there is no more tidings to be heard of the said soundnesse and vprightnesse whercof we haue spoken. And herewithall we haue to marke this saying, That the words of an afflicted persone, (or of a despised person) passe away into the winde. For ye see howe the cause why men aduance themselves against God, is for that they set too much by themselves, and thinke there is no wisdom but in their owne brayne. Truly in all the affaires that men haue, euery man seekes his owne auayles. And therefore when a naughtipacke would eschue the punishment that he hath deserued: he wil by and by haue his faire flatteries and gloses at hand, to the intent it shuld not be knowne howe the case standeth, whither it bee a money matter or any other thing. Behold how men corrupt the truth and turne it into a lie, for their owne aduantage sake. But if the case concerne the doctrine of faith, and the Gospell: what else is the cause of so many counterfayings, and that we see so many Sophisters come now adayes to mock God flatly with their sophisticall fittleties, but the pride that is in those which thinke themselves to haue witte ynough to winne their spurres, and to reason Pro & con as they terme it [that is, to reason of and on, or too & fro on both sides.] No doubt but Gods spirite ment to taunt here this pride and presumptuousnesse, to the ende that if we purpose to keepe our selues from being enemies to God in fighting against his truth: we should shake off this ouerweening, and not despise our neighbours to tread them vnder feete, but rather be contented to be taught euen by a little childe if God shal haue opened more vnto him than vnto vs: according as Saint Paule sheweth, that such as haue the spirite of propheticie, although god haue giuen them the grace to teach others, must notwithstanding nor disdayne to giue place to any other vnto whome God shall haue giuen more knowledge than to them.* Ye see then what we haue too marke in this streyne. And finally Iob concludeth, that those which pretended to be his friends, do nothing else but dig a pit, for such a man to stumple into, as ought to be hild vp: and that they seeke nothing but to wind about the fatherlesse. Hee vseth this manner of similitude, by cause a fatherlesse childe hath no meane to defend himselfe, but is left as it wer to the spoile. So Iob (as on whom God scourgeth to the vttermost) sheweth vs that we shal not scape Gods hand and vengeance, except we labour to succoure such as are miserable: that is to say, suche as are worthy of pitie and compassion, as was sayd yesterday. Lo what we haue to marke in the first place. But in conclusion he exhortheth them, to turne agayne: and then (saith he) there shal be none iniquitie. Turne ye agayne (saith he once ageyne) And my righteousnesse shall appeare in this behalfe. Iob in exhorting the, sheweth well with what mind we must find fault with the euill and condemne it: that is to witte, to bring men backe agayne, if it be possible to atteyn to it. Therefore let vs thinke vpon it, to the intent that such as will take warning may not perishe in their sinnes: but rather that being sorte for them and ashamed that they haue offended God, they maye retourne vnto him with a greater affection. True it is that when we find that such as haue offended God are not touched with the feeling of his iustice, & of his vengeance, inso- much that if a man manace them, he shall win nothing at their hands: it behoueth them to bee touched too the quicke, to make them abashed, if he purpose to bring the to repentance. But howsoever the case stand, we must al- wayes shoote at this marke which is shewed vs here: that is to witte, to drawe them backe according to the maner that Iob vseth in this proceeding here. And as touching that he sayth, Turne ye agayne and there shal be none iniquitie: true it is, that a man may expound this streyn as if he sayd, There shall be no more iniquitie in you. But there is more reason to say, Retourne ye and there shal be no more iniquitie: Turne ye agayne and my righteousnesse shall be knowne heere, as if Iob should saye, what hath bin the cause that you haue hitherto condemned me as a man whome God had cast away, so as to your seeming I shuld be the worst man in the world? what is the cause why I haue cryed out in my selfe, and haue not bin herd at your hands? It is for that you haue turned your backs to al reason, and therefore turne ye agayne, and my righteousnesse will be apparant. This wil be the better vnderstood, when I shall haue applied it to our instruction. First and formost we be put in minde here, that whensoever wee condemne the good and allowe the euill: that commeth of our owne mere default, so as we cannot say, behold I haue bin deceyued, and I wist not what the matter ment. Let vs not alledge this nor that. For it is certayne that we shall alwayes be founde blameworthy if we condemne that which is good and allowe the euill: and God conuicteth vs inasmuch as he declareth that we haue not vout- saued to open our eyes, and to see what he sheweth vs. Do men then followe lies in sted of truth? Are they so blind that they know not what is good? It is bycause they haue turned their backs vpon God, and for that there is in them some maliciousnesse, some hypocrisie, or some carelesnesse. Then if God suffer vs to haue our eyes so seeled vp as we cannot discern betweene good and euill: it is bycause we haue not had so good regard vnto God as becommeth vs, when he was redy to teach vs familiarly ynough. Marke this for a speciall poynt. But whensoever we bee so caried away as we haue not the spirite of wisdom, but do euen allow of the euill, yea and cherish it: the remedy is for vs to retourne, and that we be not wilfully bent to continue in the false opinion that wee haue conceyued: except we will fall into the bottomlesse pit whereout of there is no escaping for such as are so bleared and cannot abide that God should enlighten them: for such maner of men must needes come to the top of all confusion. Then let vs bethinke vs to turne head asoone as we shall haue knowne our fault. For when God sheweth vs the fauoure to giue vs warning: if we giue eare to him to heare what he saith, he wil not suffer vs to bee led astray by euill continually, but he will bring vs backe agayne into the good way. Herewithall it behoueth vs to marke well how Iob addeth, Retourne ye yet agayne and my righteousnesse will appeere. Here he betokeneth two things. The one is, that it is not inough for vs to come to it ceremoniously, to say, It is true, there is a fault: according as we see that they which haue fowly offended God, and which haue bin the cause of some suche vnrecoverable inconuenience, the fore whereof required letting of blood, inso much that ther hath folowed some stumbling and confusion in the Church: euen they which haue bin gilty of such a trayterousnesse, shal do no more but come and say: It is true, I haue done amisse. All this is nothing else but a mockerie. It is well seene with what zeale and with what affection they proceede in that behalf: namely that they are not minded to retourne vnto God, verely not to retourne in such sort as it may be knowne that they repent them. And this is it that Iob ment to shewe, in that he contented not himselfe to haue sayde once, Turne ye agayne, but said Turne ye agayne the second time. The seconde poynte that we haue to marke here, is that when God shall haue discovered our iniquitie that wee haue conceyued some wicked imagination that hath turned vs away from the good: in the ende it behoueth vs to acknowledge our fault, that we may retourne vnto God. As how? I sayd that by applying this to our owne instruction, wee shoulde haue the easier vnderstanding of it. Some men are to be found, who for a time shall be estranged from Gods truth and from the right way. And why so? For they haue some scrupulousnesse, or some euill opinion, according as the deuill is neuer withoute thys slight, to trump one thing or other in our way, to the end that Gods word may haue no more fauoure in our tast, and specially that we may be weery of it. And verely whē such maner of folke retourne, there shall be no more iniquitie: that is to say, God is mercifull to them, so as he giueth them the grace to be no more glutted and wery of his word, as they were before. Ye see then after what sort iniquitie celseth when men retourne. Neuerthelesse, whē they be entred into the good waye, it behoueth them to go on yet further. And how? They must retourne yet once more, that is to witte, they must bethinke them, Alas, I had ben a poore forelorne creature had not God had pitie on me: and now that it hath pleased him to take mee to mercy, I referre my selfe wholly vnto him, beseeching him to gouerne me hencefoorth according to his good will. Now when suche men retourne double, then God maketh them to see that which they knew not at the first. And in respecte heereof, lette euery of vs beethinke himselfe, that wee maye haue oure recourse vnto God, praying him that after he hath once instructed vs in hys truth, he will confirme vs after such sorte in the same, as we may neuer step out of the right way, and as the deuill may neuer thrust vs aside.

And now let vs cast our selues downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them in such wise, as wee may walke according to his will, and alwayes be confirmed more and more in the same grace which he hath giuen vs

uen vs once already when he called vs to be of his household. And forasmuch as we are so greatly inclined to go astray: let vs pray him to beare with our infirmities, vntill he haue quite and cleane rid vs of them. And so let vs al say, Almighty God and heauenly Father, wee acknowledge our selues, &c.

The. xxvij. Sermon, which is the first vpon the seuenth Chapter.

1. IS there not a time appoynted to man whiche is vpon the earth, and are not his dayes as the dayes of an hyreling?
2. As a bondman logeth for the shadow, and as an hyreling longeth for the end of hys labour:
3. So haue I the vayne moneths, and paynefull nights are appoynted vnto me.
4. In laying me downe I say, when shall I rise: and being in my bed, I am cloyed with bitternesse euen vntill the euening.
5. My flesh is clothed with worms, & with dust of the earth: my skin is also brokē & corrupted.
6. My dayes glide avway like a vveauers shettle, and vvaft avway vwithout hope.

WE know well that as long as we liue in this world we must indure many miseries, but yet we could finde in our harts that God should handle vs after our owne measure. And we be so tender and nice, that so soone as he laieth his hand vpon vs, we think it to be very much: yea and euen the patientest of all are at that poynt. But when God proceedeth with afflicting of vs still, ye shall see our faintnesse bewray and discover it selfe more. And this is the thing that we haue to handle at this time. For Job complayning that his miserie indureth ouer long, saith that a man ought to haue had a time set him aforehand: as if he shoulde saye, God hath not set vs vpon the earth in such vnquietnesse as we be, but that there should be sometime to make an end of our miseries. But I am in such plight, as I haue no release nor rest night nor daye. It seemeth then that my cace is worse than all other mens, and that God is minded to afflict me beyond that which the state of mans life is able to beare. Lo what his purpose is. And we see how all this aunswereth vnto that whiche I haue touched: that is to witte, that at the first sight we can well confesse it to bee good reason that we shoulde be troubled, and that we should haue hartfores here in this world: but yet therewithall we wold fayne that God should spare vs, and as soone as he doth but touch vs with the tip of his finger, we wold haue him streightwayes withdrawe his hande and that our afflictions should not be of any long continuance. It standes vs in hand to marke well this sureyne. For in the person of Job, the holy Ghoste hath set oure frailtie before our eyes as it were in a glasse: I meane the frailtie of mind and not of body. It is certayne (as I haue sayd heretofore) that Job had suche a courage and constancie as is wonderfull among men: and yet a man may see in what taking he is. So the what shal become of those that haue nothing but infirmitie, & which haue scarcely receyued three droppes of couragiousnesse to susteyne themselues withall in the middes of their afflictions? Must not such me quayle out of hand when we see that Job was so beaten downe whome God had strengthened so mightily with his grace? But first of all let vs go forward with this lesson, to applie the same to our own vse: namely that a time is appoynted to man that is vppon the earth. For it is profitable for vs to comfort vs in our afflictions. And specially when it commeth to the seruing of God, and to walking in feare and awfulnesse: thys ought to come to our remembrance, according also as fercheth the bottome of mens harts and iudgeth without accepting of persons, and that we must one day render an account afore him, and that when we haue contented mortall men with some outward apparence, it is nothing worth, for he shall discover all our affections and thoughts: in good sooth it should seame to be a hard cace, that Gods children should be fayne to liue here as it were in feare and vnquietnesse. For saint Peter addeth It is (sayth he) during the pilgrimage of our life. VVe see how saint Peter foreseteth a time to the faithfull too walke after that sort: verely to the end to giue the some comforte, and that they should take some courage by hauing an eye to the euerlasting rest that is prepared for them in heauen. Then may we wel profite ourselues by this sentence, when it is said, that there is a time appoynted vnto man vpon earth. And what a matter were it if our life should be prolonged without ende, and we still continue in such cace: for there is no rest for men. True it is that those which shunne God and drag backe from him, hope well that they do themselues a good turne, yea so long as they may royst it out in their delights and pleasures: but yet in the meane while they must be faine to be inuironed with many miseries: we may haue faire wherwith to dispatch our selues, but yet doth God hold vs there as it were imprisoned. VVhat a matter were it then, if we should be in miserie without hope of anye deliuerance or setting free: It were ynough to set vs in a rage and to cast vs into despaire. As oft then as we thinke vpon the great number of greuances, wants, and afflictions that are in this world, let vs marke that God comforteth and releueth vs by saying thus: VWell, ye passe through this world, but your life is short, therefore indure ye patiently the afflictions that are so short and in the end ye shal come to the rest that I haue prepared for you. Ye see after what sorte we ought to mind this doctrine, if we intend to take profite by it. As much is to bee sayd of all the chastizemets that God sendeth vs. For that which I haue said hitherto, extendeth generally to oure whole life. But in particular, whensoever we shall indure any aduersitie, verely god wil send an end of it according as we see how he speaketh by his prophet Esay, when he commaundeth him to cōforte his people. Thine appointed time (sayth he) is at an end. He speaketh there of the captiuitie of Babylon. For his meaning is, that although he scourgeth his people for their sinnes, yet he intendeth not to consume them vtterly, but keepeth a measure in his correctiōs, that anone after they may haue some release, and know that God hath had pitie of them, & will not punish them to the vttermost, & therefore that they ought to be thāktul towards him for his goodnesse. VVe see then how that in all the whole course of oure life we must be fayne to suffer aduersities here: howbeit God will not prolong them beyond their appoynted time.

But

Phil. 2. b. 13.

1. Pet. 1. c. 17

we see the holy scripture speaketh. True it is that Job misapplieth this sentence: but yet of it selfe it is good and holy, and (as I haue sayd a'redy) it ought to serue vs for a very profitable instruction. As doubtlesse when saint Peter telleth vs that we must walke in feare, because God

But soothly it shoulde seeme that this is a common thing though God spake not of it: and euen the heathen men (I meene euen the most brutishe of them) haue alwayes had their recourse to that poynt. For in all the miseries that could befall them, they comforted themselues therewith, saying: well, there is no miserie so great, but it hath an end. See I pray you how they measured their passions. It seemeth then to be a superfluous doctrine when God to comforte vs with, declareth that there is a tyme foreset to men, and that their dayes are as the dayes of an hireling. Howbeit we haue to marke, that whatsoeuer men conceiue in their imagination: yet when God preseth thē, they are abashed at it, and to their seeming they are in a bottomlesse gulfe whereout of they can neuer scape. So long as we be in rest we haue the skill to say, that when aduersities be great and sharpe, they are not of long continuance. But if God summon vs afore him, and make vs to feele our sinnes: his iustice is so dreadfull too vs, as behold, we are inclozed round about with a maze, whereout of we see no way to scape, so as it seemeth that he will make vs go euery day deeper into it than other. Ye see then how men are astonied when Gods iustice toucheth them in good earnest. And so much the more behoofes vs is this doctrine, when God telleth vs that forasmuch as we must passe through many miseries while we liue in this world, we ought to consider that our life is transitorie: and so shall it not grieue vs to be vnder such a state, seeing that the end of it is appoynted aforehand. And afterward if God chastize vs, if he send vs any afflictions: well, he presseth vs now, but it will not last so for euer. It is certaine that we be not able to hold out ouerlong: and therefore he keepeth measure, for he knoweth what is conuenient for vs. So then let vs abide patiently till he deliuer vs, and we shall not be disappointed of such hope. Verely if euery of vs haue an eye to himselfe, we shall find our selues to haue very greete neede to be put in mind of this gere. For although wee know it: yet we forget it and wote not what it meeneth whē we come to the putting of it in vre. And for prooffe hereof, there is not any of vs that sayth not, will this geare neuer be done? If we haue any affliction, so as one bee sicke, another pinched with pouertie, and the thirde tormētēd with some hartgrief that troubleth him without ceasing: we aske, shall we alwayes be newe to begin agayne? will there neuer be end of it. Seeing that our flesh and our nature is so inclined to storme and repyne, let vs assure our selues how it is not without cause that God forseth the determinate time whereof mention is made here. And herewithall let vs marke, that (whereas it is said, is there not a time appoynted for men?) it belongeth only to God to forset vs the time. And this may do vs much seruice. VVherefore? For if God knew not what we bee, and what is good and conuenient for vs: we might well be sorie to heare that the time of our miserie is in his hand, and at his appointment. But forsomuch as he knoweth what we be able to beare, and perceyeth that if we should be charged ouer sore, we should sinke vnder the burthen, yea and be vtterly crushed and broken: forsomuch (I say) as God knoweth this, and therevpon declareth vnto vs, that he holdeth vs vp according as he seeth our feeblenesse doth require, and that if hee vphild vs not continually with his hand we should be in daunger to be broken all to peeces, but he knoweth well how to moderate the weight of the afflictions that hee sendeth vs: now seeing we haue suche promises, haue we not good cause to be glad of this forsetting of the time? And further let vs marke well, that inasmuch as we haue our time determinate here bylowe: we must thereafter make the comparison with Saint Paule, betwene the miseries that last but the twincling of an eye: and the [endlesse] glory of heauen. For the shortnesse of the afflictions of this worlde (sayeth he) must make vs to thinke them light. For when we haue an eye to the euerlasting and endlesse kingdome of heauen: it ought to outway in the balance all the worldly miserie that is possible to be deuifed. Seing then that the case standeth so, as oft as we be tempted to ouerforwing, impacience, or despaire: let vs haue recourse to that which is said here: which is, that the time thereof is foreappoynted, and let vs vnderstand that God hath foreseene what is good for vs to indure, and that our afflictions befall vs not without his good pleasure. Furthermore also let vs vnderstande that hee handleth vs not only with vprightnesse and reason: but also with a fatherly louing kindnesse. Lo what we haue to marke. And this doctrine extendeth very farre, howbeit it consisteth more in experience than in talking vpon it. For we may reason of it long ynough [to no purpose] but the chiefe poynt is that euery of vs regard to profite himself by it at his neede: as how? Surely our life wold seeme very short vnto vs, if it were not subiect to so many wants: so long as we haue our owne with and are at rest, euery of vs can confesse that our life is nothing, and that it is as short as any thing can be. But whē we thinke vpon the infinite miseries wherewith it is full fraughte, and that assoone as we be passed out of one miserie we must enter streightwayes into another and begin continually new agayne: this long lingering makes vs starke weery. And therefore let vs haue recourse to that which is sayde here: namely that God hath appoynted the time, and that it is in him to dispose of vs [as he listeth.] Thē must we contente our selues with the measure that hee hath giue vs, knowing well that he woteth what is meete and expedient for our feeblenesse. And yet notwithstanding, it is not for euer that we shall be fayne to languishe here: there will be an end, at what time God shall take vs out of this earthly pilgrimage, yea euen to call vs to his euerlasting rest, and there shall be none end, there shall be no time set. Furthermore when God visiteth vs, and euery of vs in himselfe indureth some necessitie, or some chastizements: let vs acknowledge thus: VVell, it is true that if this geere shuld last euer, we should needs quaille. But God knoweth the ende whiche he mindeth to giue vs: hee hath promised that we shall not continue ouerwhelmed vnder the burthen: let vs tarie till he reach vs his hande in our aduersities, and let vs assure oure selues that hee will prouide for vs in due time. Lo howe wee ought to applie this lesson to our owne vse. But in the meane while wee see that Iob hath ill profited by it: and therefore must we be so much the warer, that we abuse not a sentence when God putteth it into our mind, too instruct vs, by applying of it to the cleane contrary. And yet is it an ordinarie matter with vs so to do. VVhen we reade the holy scripture, if any comfort be giuen vs ther, or if it serue to asswage our grieffe, what do we? O ye see here is a comfort that God giueth to his children: but I am vtterly bereft of it: it seemeth that God wold cheere vp his faithfull ones, to the end to cast me into despaire: seeing the case standeth so, what can I thinke but that I am vtterly barred from all hope of his grace? Thus ye see how we deale commonly in that behalfe. VVheras God allureth vs as gently as can be, and whereas hee sweeteneth all our miseries and sorrowes: we thrust it all from vs, and seeke nothing else but to nourish the malladie within vs, and to barre our selues quite from Gods fauoure, and to cast it a great way off. VVe see that this befell to Iob: and therefore let vs not thinke it straunge if we be

2. Cor. 4. d.

17

we be subiect to such like temptation. But what we must remedie it, and praye God to giue vs the spirite of wisdom, that we may know how to applie to our own vse and welfare, all the warnings that he giueth vs. And now let vs come to treat of that which is said here. Iob alledgeth, How now? is there not a time appoynted for man that is vpon earth? True it is that heere beneath, mē are poore and wretched creatures: but yet may they after some sort be glad, seeing that God hath not set them heere to continue so for euer. Lo heere a thing whiche for the most part is able to assuage all the griefes that we indure vpon earth. But now (saith he) God maketh none end of my torments. Behold how Iob complayneth that his state is worse than all other mens: as if he should say, God scourgeth me out of measure, for hee sheweth not that hee is minded to ridde me out of the miseries that presse mee. And this is it that I haue touched heretofore: namelye, that generally wee can confesse well ynough howe it is good reason that wee should indure manye aduersities while we be in this world: And euery manne can say, yea we be borne vnder the same condition and to the same end: and we must not thinke otherwise but that man euen from his birth bringeth with him so many miseries, and so many wants, as it is a pitie to see. I say we can well acknowledge this, in general termes: but so soone as God smiteth vs, we thinke he hath no measure with him. And thus ye see at what poynt Iob is. Also ye see why I saide that the appointing of the time must be referred to Gods discretion, and not to our lust. Had Iob (without being caried away by his owne passions) considered well what he said: it is certaine that he had not spokē amisse. VWhy? mans time is forefet. But Iobs misdealing is that he himselfe wold be the iudge, and by that meane he plucketh away the authoritie that belongeth vnto God. And heere we see what we our selues do in the same case. True it is that our intent shall not be to bereeue God of his power, nor to vsurpe the right and authoritie which he hath ouer vs, we will not say so. But yet in the meane while it is as good as if we did it, if we be not patient and that we hold not our affections in awe when we be afflicted, so as we can say, VVell! Lord, we are in thy hande, it is not for vs to stint thee, nor to taske thee to the present time, too saye thou shalt do this or that: but inasmuch as thou hast told vs that thou canst ende oure miseries, yea and bring them to a happie and desirable end: Lorde we will patiently waite for that whiche thou hast promised vs. Now then if we haue our minds thus disposed, then shal God be honored as he deserueth. But if we be hasty, if we be fummish, if we cast foorth our complaints at randon to say, VVhat shall become of it? It seemeth that God will neuer make any end of our miseries: I say that if we do so, it is all one as if we would pluck God out of hys seate, and not suffer him to haue any more authoritie ouer vs. Lo how Iob dealeth in this case. True it is that he is patient howsoeuer the world go: but yet is that no let but that there is some faultinesse mingled therewith: for the pacience of the faithfull sort is not alwayes so perfect as were requisite. Seeing that Iob hath missed in this behalfe, ought not we too bethinke our selues well who are fully as brittle or more? So then let vs marke well that as oftē as God shal scourge vs, although the miserie indure and be prolonged, and although we see not that he intendeth to deliuer vs out of hand: yet notwithstanding wee must not go after the manner of Iob and saye, VVhat? God leaueth me here in continual torment, and he seeth that my miserie hath none ende. But let vs feede oure selues with hope, and (as I said) let vs call to minde that the determining of the time must not be by our lust, but that it is God that must order it according as hee knoweth it to be good. And if we perceiue not the end of our miseries at the first, but that it seeme we must indure yet more: let vs not cease to tast of the goodnesse which hee hath promised vs. For Gods promises will leade vs to the darknesse of death, and there giue vs light to the intente to put vs alwayes in some hope that we shall one day be deliuered from oure aduersities. And heere ye see why Saint Paule saith, that although we be haried heere and there, yea and that we be made as if we were the ofskourings of all things: yet shall wee not continue in that case, but God will gather vs vp to himselfe to ioine vs with him, and to liue for euer. Behold how we ought to profite our selues by al the promises that God maketh vnto vs, that we maye tast of them in the middes of all our miseries. But now let vs come to that which Iob addeth. He vseth similitudes to expresse what he ment by the appoynting of the time whereof he hath made mention. For (saith hee) looke me vpon a poore bondman or slaue (for hee speket not of seruants, hinds, or seruing men as they be in these dayes: but of such as were slaues: and afterwarde he addeth couenant seruants (that are hired for wages,) looke me then vpo a slaue how he longeth for the shadowe: that is to say, for the rest of the night, bycause hee neuer ceaseth labouring all day long: very well then, such a one desireth the shadowe. Agayne, he that is at wages, longeth to haue his dayes worke at an end: and if he haue a moone or more or lesse to serue, he hath an eye to the end of his terme, that he may haue some rest. But as for me (saith he) I haue nother rest nor release. VVhen I lay mee downe, I say, how shall I come to the morning? And when shall I rise agayne? VVhen I am vp in the morning, the day seemeth to me to be a whole yere long. Then seeing I am in this plight. It is well seene, that God is not contented to plague me after the ordinarie manner of men: but that he meaneth to thunder downe vpon me, that I may not know what to do nor what to say. This is the complaint that Iob maketh, saying that his miserie is excessive, and not common miserie, so as here is no cause why any man should saye to him, Thou seeest that so long as men are in this world, they haue many miseries to indure, thou hast experience of it, and thou knowest after what manner God is wonte to deale in that behalfe: but God (saith he) vttereth al his force against me, so as it seemeth he will ouerwhelme me altogether: and when I compare nay selfe with others whome he correcteth, I see my selfe to be in the bottome of hell, and them to haue yet some hope of helpe, that they shall be deliuered of their miseries. And heere wee haue too marke that whiche hath bin touched alreadye heerebefore: that is to witte, that Iob was not pressed wyth bodily aduersitie only, but that hys chiefe griefe was to feele that GOD was agaynste hym. And therefore addeth hee thys that infeweth immediatlye. Beholde (saith hee) my fleshe is as it were clinged to my bones, and my skynne is also broken and as it were rotten: I am in that behalfe as a poore forlorne kaytif, and yet notwithstanding my life passeth and glideth awaye euen as a weauers shettle, whiche runneth so swiftly as a man perceyueth it not. neyther can hee measure the nimblenesse of it. Euen so is it wyth my life (saith he) when I rise, I am vterlie abashed so as I haue nother ease nor rest day nor night. But although Iob were smitten in hys bodye: yet the temptation of feeling GOD to bee as hys iudge and to holde hym (as yee would say) vpon the racke, was farre more grieuous to him, than all the martirdomes that he felt in hys body. And heere ye see also why he tormented himselfe so farre: and it is a thing that wee ought too marke well.

For very fewe folke haue bin exercized in these spirituall battels: and therefore they wote not what it meeneth: it is an vnknowne language to them: and when God visiteth them after that manner, ye shall see them vtterly dismayd, bycause they haue not tasted this doctrine in time and place. Then let vs bethinke vs of it, and let vs marke that if all the aduersities which befall vs are sharpe and tedious to vs: yet it behoueth vs to knowe, that they are nothing in comparison of the anguish that they indure which are pressed with Gods iudgement when hee sheweth himselfe boytous towards them, and giueth the some token of his wrath and vengeance: by reason whereof ye shall see them so astonished, as there is no comfort that can cheere them vp, vniesse God worke with an extraordinary operation in that behalfe. And why so? For in all our miseries, if God giue vs leaue to returne vnto him, so as we may call vpon him with hope that he will pitie vs in the end: it is certaine that we can cast all oure cares & troubles vpon him as the scripture saith. So the, our afflictions will be sweete and amiable to vs when we can go after that sort vnto God. But if we conceiue a mistrust once, which shutteth vp the gate, and that we imagin God to be our enemie, and that he persecuteth vs, so as it is but lost time and a vaine thing to call vpon him: it is euen as much as if we were alredie in the bottomlesse gulfe of hell. And to this pointe was Iob come in parte, but not altogether, howbeit that he had experience of it. VVhen we see this, let vs assure our selues that God can well send yet more thā he hath done: and that if he spare vs, it is bycause he knoweth our weakenesse. For it was his will to trie Iob to the vttermost. If he vse not so rigorous trial towards vs, it is of his owne infinite goodnesse. Neuerthelesse in the meane while let euery man prepare himselfe aforehand: that he may be able to withstande such temptation whensoever he shall come vnto it. And though we be tossed as it were with waues: let vs not lose our courage in the midds of such tempests, seeing that God hath susteyned his seruauent Iob, yea and plucked him backe againe euen when he seemed to haue bin vtterlie drowned, and as it were swallowed vp into the bottomlesse pit. Therefore let vs vnderstand that whensoever wee shall enter into such gulfes, we shall be drawen out againe in the end, so we be hild vp by the hand of God. Thus ye see how it behoueth vs to be prepared to battell, that we be not out of hart when such temptations come vpon vs: and that although it seeme we shuld be beaten downe at euery stroke, yet notwithstanding we may hope that God will aide vs: which thing he will do in convenient time, as he hath done to his seruauent Iob. Furthermore although we haue bin afflicted a good while together, and yet God suffereth the afflictions to continue still, and specially if when we haue imagined that we should haue some end of them, things shal come to such a passe as they shall seeme to be cleane contrarie, and that we shal neuer be deliuered from them: yet notwithstanding let vs resist such temptation as shall be cast before our eyes, assuring our selues that God knoweth well how to dispose the times and seasons, and that it belongeth to him to do it, and [therefore] that all thinges must be put into his hand and to his good will. Beholde (saith Iob) I looked if there were any end of my miseries. VVell, we also may well looke for the same. For God is not so rigorous towards vs, but that he beareth with vs so far as we may lawfully say, vntil when, (or how long) shall this hold: according as we see that Dauid speaketh so a good sort of times. But when we haue looked whether there shall be any ende of our miseries, let vs learne also to beware we be not to hastie. For else we shall bee confounded. VVhat is to be done then? Let vs shet oure eyes at presente things, and let vs praye God to make vs behold the end which is hidden from flesh and from our owne opinion, I say let vs pray him to make vs beholde that: and let vs frame our selues wholly to his good wil. For this is the only remedy to nourish both hope and patience. Or if we see our miseries to indure long, and that God sheweth vs not after what sort he will make vs way out: let vs shut our eyes and say, well Lord, true it is that thou wite hold me like a poore blind soule in darknesse. Yea: but where is my comfort in the meane while? My comfort is to pray God to giue me eyes, not onely to beholde presente thinges, but also to know those things by faith which are hidden from me as now. Beholde (say I) how we must deale: not to say as Iob doth, I see there is no remedy left for me: for the man that speaketh so, is after a sort in despaire. For we must not limit Gods power, though a thing seeme impossible to our selues. He sayth, VVhen I lay me downe, I aske when shall I rise agayne? And in the morning I say, when will it be night? Let vs note that this is set downe to shewe that a conscience which is pressed with Gods iudgement, is alwayes troubled and in an agonie. Behold after what sort Moyses speaketh in treating of Gods dreadfull vengeance vpon such as shall continue wilfully in disobeying of Gods lawe. Thy life (saith he) shall hang before thee as vpon a threede. In the morning thou shalt say, who shall make me to liue til the euening? But Iob speaketh here of the tēptation that hee himselfe feeleth that is to wit, that he thought the nights too long, and the dayes too weerisome, according as hee said. One day is longer to me than a whole yeere, yea thā a mans whole life, I do nothing but pine away, not onely in some ordinarie miseries, but also in so horrible torments, that I faint vnder Gods hand. Now when we see that this temptatiō is come vpon Iob: let vs haue recourse to the remedie which I haue touched: that is to witte, to call to mind that it is Gods peculiar charge to dispose of vs and of all our miseries. And therefore, doth the time seeme long to vs? Let vs praye God to make vs thinke well of all that he doth. For otherwise what else shall we do but only prouoke God as Iob doth? Not that hee is willing to do so: but yet in the meane season he ceaseth not to be blameworthy for the words that haue escaped him so vnaduisedly, which he hath cast soorth agaynst God in such wise as if he ment to spite him. Therefore let vs turne backe ageine and say, how now? Is it in thee to appointe times? Is not that in the hande of thy God? wilt thou take his office from him? what intendest thou to do wretched creature? VVhither goest thou whē thou takest vpon thee after that sort? Is it not euen to breake thy necke, when thou wilt stie thus aboute the skies without wings? So then let vs learne to walke in humblenesse and pray God that we may take all for good which hee disposeth of vs, and that we may yeld therevnto, and say, Lord thou arte righteous and wise in all thy doings. And therefore graunt vs the grace not to cease to prayse thee, and to giue thee this glory, namely to take in good worth whatsoever thou sendest, and to frame our selues to the same, notwithstanding that to the flesh it be hard and bitter to indure. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this text. Furthermore when he saith, That his dayes are passed more swiftly than a weeners sbettle: here seemeth to bee some contrarietie. For he sayth that his life is ouerlong: and yet neuerthelesse he addeth, that his dayes slippe away as swiftly as anie thing. If anie man say that Iob was caried awaie with his overtheadie passions: verie well, that is somewhat. But there is no cōtrarietie if we marke well how that according to the similitude which is put heere,

Ps. l. 13. a. 2. & 77. b. 5.

Deut. 28. 2. 66. 6.

here, the same is also well placed in the song of king Ezechias in Esay: and it serueth to shewe that when a man is pressed with the hande of God, hee woteth no more where he is. For although we endure many aduersities, yet notwithstanding we count still vpon our life. But if God pursue vs ouerhastily, then we become as it were dulheaded, we bee not after the manner that wee were wont to liue, we be vtterly dismayd saying: How now? could this time be passed so soone? Ye see then what this similitude importeth and what Iob ment as now by saying, that his life passed swiftly away like a weauers shetle. And why so? For he felte Gods hand presse him so sore, as hee could not but sigh and lament and saye: VVhat? will there be no end? Ye see then how Iob ment and yet in the meane season hee ceaseth not too bee attached with such feare and anguish, that he was as it were plunged ouer head and eares, bycause God hilde him as it were vpon the rack, and seemed too keepe no measure in chastizing him. Lo how we ought to applie this similitude. And heereby we bee warned to pray vnto God in our affliction, that howsoeuer he keepe vs in them, we may haue some rest to thinke vpon our selues and vpon him, I say, to thinke vpon our selues, to the intente we may know our sinnes, and consider how much tyme we haue lost in our life, to the end that we may not thinke it straunge thoughte God scourge vs and vexe vs. For wee passe the moste parte of oure life in pampering of our selues, yea euen to auance our selues against God. And therefore we haue great neede to pray him to waken vs, and to giue vs respite to examine well our faults. And moreouer lette vs also thinke vpon him. But that cannot bee done, but wee must haue some rest and be somewhat cheered. For so long as wee bee in such hartburning as to chawe vpon our bridle: it is vnpossible for vs to come vnto God to comfort our selues in his goodnesse, which he is ready to make vs to feele. Therefore we must pray him to hold vs in awe, if we wil haue oure minds to abide quiet and peasable in the midds of the troubles that may befall vs. And this also cannot be done except Iesus Christ be at hand with vs, that we may haue some solace in him, according as he himselfe sayth, come vnto me all ye that laboure and are ouerladen, and I will refresh you, and you shall finde rest for your soules. As oft then as God scourgeth vs, let vs determine to pray vnto him, that we may turne our heart and mind to our Lorde Iesus Christe, so as we maye in him haue the rest whereof hee speaketh: and that when we haue founde the same, we may be hild in such wise by it, as we maye receiue Gods chastizements and corrections, to humble vs before him, that we may leane vnto his good will, so as we may not doubt but that in the end he wil be helpful to vs, and shew himselfe fauourable towards vs. Behold I say after what sorte it behoueth vs to be comforted in the midds of the miseries and afflictions which we haue to endure in this worlde, wayting to enioy the blisfed comforte which God offereth vs now by his worde, and which we shall one day enioy in full perfection when he shall haue taken vs hence to himselfe.

And now let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God with acknowledgment of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue earst done: yea euen in suche sorte as we may be ashamed of them presently, and come vnto him touched with suche a zeale, as feeling him to be our father and sauour, we maye yelde oure selues wholly to his goodnesse, and hee strengthen vs more and more in the trust that we haue in him, vntill such time as he haue deliuered vs, not only from the miseries of the world, but also from the slaue-rie of sinne, and called vs into his heauenly glorie, which we possesse not now but in hope. That it may please him to graunte this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and nacions of, &c.

The. xxviij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the seuenth Chapter.

7. Remember that my life is but vwind, and that mine eye shall see no more good.
8. The eye of the seer shall see me no more, thine eyes are vpon me, and I shall be no longer.
9. Like as a cloude passeth and vanisheth away: So also he that goth dovvne into the graue shall not come vp agayne.
10. He shall no more returne to his house, his place shall knowe him no more.
11. Therefore I vvill not spare my mouth, that I should not speake of mine anguish, and talke of my miserie.
12. Am I a Sea, or am I a vvholefish that thou keepest me so in vvayde?
13. VVhen I saye, my bed shall ease me, and my couch shall comfort me: vvhen I speake in my selfe,
14. Then thou frayest me vvith dreames and visions.
15. Beholde my soule hath chosen the halter and death, rather than my bones.

He holy scripture telleth vs oftentimes that god pitieeth vs in respect of oure frailtie: for wee must not thinke that he is moued with any worthinesse that is in vs: there is no such thing. Then if God spare vs and vse mercie towards vs, it is more in respecte of the needinesse that hee knoweth too be in vs, than otherwise: according also as it is said, he considereth that men are but as grasse which fadeth out of hand and withereth away. Men are but flesh, (that is too say, corruption) and breth, that is to say a wind that passeth away and vanisheth without retourning any more. Now seing that the holy scripture witnesseth this vnto vs: we also ought to set it before vs in our prayers, for to that intent doth the holy Ghost speake it. Then let vs beare in mind, that if we will moue god to pitie, we must not alledge that we haue deserued aught at his hande, or that there is any excellencie in our persons or in our nature. All this geere must be laid vnder foote, and there is none other way for vs to deale, but to acknowledge, Alas Lord, what am I but rottenesse? I fleete away incontinently, there is no strength in me, my life is but a shadowe. VVhen we speake after this manner: it is a following of the warning that the holye Ghost giueth vs. But we must aduise oure selues well, after what sorte and too what purpose we vse suche manner of speech: that is too witte, that all shoulde redownde too

Gods

Gods glory, and to worship him by humbling our selues vnto him. For there are that can skill to say, Alas, I am but a worme, there is nothing in me but vanitie, my life is but a smoke that vanisheth away: and yet in the meane while they haue nother humilitie nor obedience, to abace themselves before God, and to acknowledge how it is he too whome they are beholding for all things: but cleane contrariwise, the same shall tend rather to make such complaint as this: How now? Seing that God hath authoritie ouer all his creatures, were it not meete that he should giue vs that which he taketh from vs? were it not meete that we should haue this or that? Then let vs marke, that when the scripture telleth vs that God pitieth vs in consideration that we be so fraile, and that our life is lesse than nothing: it is not done to giue vs occasion to murmur and fret in our selues bycause our state is so despicable, and nothing is in vs whereof we may vaunt oure selues, but rather all confusion: but it is done to the ende we should knowe howe we bring not any thing to God why he should shew vs fauoure, and that in the meane season if he seeke for any thing (I wote not what) that might prouoke him to loue vs: he shall not find aught at all, and so he shall shake vs off. VVhat must we do then? Forasmuch as God seeth that we be more than wretched, he must haue pitie vpon our state, considering that there is nothing in our life but a shadow that slideth away, nothing in all our wisdom but only mere follie, and nothing in all our vertues, but only leasing and wickednesse. Seing then that we knowe that God bereeueth vs of all our glory: let vs be sure he will not haue vs presume to challenge any thing to our selues, that we should bring any worthinesse into his presence to say, yea Lord, why shouldst not thou shewe me fauoure? For I haue done this and that, and there is such a thing in me. But let vs haue our mouthes shut as in respect of al our worthinesse, and assure our selues that we must drawe licour from out of the only free mercy of God. Thus ye see with what an intent we must cal our miseries to remembrance: that is to witte, not to complaine, or murmur against God: but to humble our selues, and to abace our selues vtterlie, that God alone may be honored, and that it may be knowne that when he doth vs good, it is not for that we bring him on to do it, nor for that he findeth aught in vs wherefore he should be bound to it: but it is bycause he hath compassion of vs for that he seeth vs to be so fraile, and that all our life is but a thing of nothing. But nowe let vs come to that whiche is contained here. Remember that my life is nothing. This request is good, when Iob saith vnto God, Lord, I am tormented here, O that it might please thee to giue me comfort. And why? for thou knowest what I am, and of what nature I am. VVhen Iob protesteth this, it is a good and holy request: yea verely so the affection be right. Certaine it is that he had a right intent: but yet therewithall it could not be said but that he ouershot himselfe in going too farre, as we shall see better by the sequelle. And therefore let vs marke, that in alledging our frailtie before God, it is not ynough to humble our selues, and to confesse that we haue nothing wherein we may auance our selues: but we must haue the modestie to confesse that God is righteous, in making vs to be in such state, yea though wee perceiue nor the cause of it: and that although he haue hid these secrets from vs, yet must not we pleade agaynst him, nor haue any hartburning in vs, as if we were ouerpressed: but must bridle our selues with this, that God hath had iust cause to set vs in suche state, as wee might be hedged in with all manner of miseries and afflictions. VVhy so? To the ende to hold vs in awe and subiection vnto hym, and that wee mighte not haue the sayde presumption and puffednesse of pride. And here vnto Iob addeth, That his lyfe is nothing, and that he shall not retourne agayne to see good, that is to say, to take pleasure of the things that God giueth men in this presente life. The eye (saith he) of the seer shall see me no more: that is to say, I shall be no longer heere. And in the end he liketh man to a cloude. Ye see how a cloude vanisheth away, and a man cannot tell where it becommeth, and it returneth no more into his former state: And euen so bee that goeth downe into the graue shall come no more vp agayne. Iob speaketh heere of the frailtie of mans life. And it is to the end that God should not handle him with such rigoure, according as he will say anon in another streyne, what am I that thou shouldst stretch out thine arme against me: as if he should say, Lord wilt thou fight against a shadowe?

But a manne maye thynke it straunge, that Iob speaking of death, leaueth no more hope nother for him selfe nor for all mankind, as who should say that in dying we do perishe, and are vtterlic dispatched for a doo, and shall neuer be restored agayne. For he saith that the man which is once layde in his graue, abideth there and neuer retourneth any more. It seemeth heere that Iob speaketh like an vnbeleeuer, that hath nother knowne nor tasted aught at all of the true religion. But we must consider that in this place hee speaketh of the death of me as it is in itself, like as the holy scripture also vseth the same maner of inditing very oftentimes elsewhere. And we must not thinke it straunge, that Iob hath spoken according to the same maner that we be taught by the holy Ghost. The things that wee haue in these dayes were not yet written in the time of Iob: but yet had God ingrauen all those things in the harts of his faithfull ones, which are now written. Yea and God euen yet still at this day maketh vs to feele the same in our harts, and engraueth the same still with his finger, that is to say with the holy Ghost. So let vs come backe agayne to the article that I haue touched, which is, that the scripture speaketh of the battells which we haue in oure owne nature, without taking hold of Gods goodnes which is from aboue. As how? VVe haue alreedy alledged some records where it is said, That a man is but a breath, or a winde that passeth away and returneth no more. It should seeme that man is likened to the brute beasts. Yea and he should beo like them in verie deede, if God did not put to his hand. For whence commeth the immortalitie of our soules, but of a speciall fauour that God beareth vs? Saint Paule saith that only God is immortall. VVe then are transitorie, we do nothing else but fade away, and what are oure soules? Euen the very Angels of heauen should also be mortall: howbeit forsomuch as God hath breathed hys owne power into them, they must needes continue in him. It is he from whence proceedeth the immortalitie (I say euen) of the Angells: and it behoueth vs also on our parte to drawe out of the same well, according as it is sayde in the Psalme, Lord in thee is the fountayne of life, and in thy light shall wee be enlightened.

VVe see now howe men beeing considered in themselves, haue nothing in them but deadlinesse, according as it is saide in another sentence of the hundred and fourth Psalme. Lorde, draw thou awaye thy spirite, and all things shall decay and come too nothing. Nowe when the holy Scripture speaketh after thys manner, it is not too take from vs the hope of the Resurrection: nother is it to make vs thynke that wee be not immortall: but wee muste alwayes beginne at this poynte, namelye too knowe what oure owne weakenesse is, and

Iob. 7. d. 20.

1. Timo. 6. d. 16.

Psalm. 36. e. 10.

Psalm 104. d. 29. 30.

and afterwarde mount vp by degrees to know what God hath put into vs. What are men then? A wind: a smoke. Howebeit forasmuch as God hath breathed a continuing power into vs: therefore wee bee immortall. Furthermore it behoueth God to stablish that thing which he hath once put into vs: for if hee mainteyned it not by his grace, all would go too decay. And specially we must come to the Highest poynt, that is to witte, too the Resurrection which is promised vs. And where shall we finde that? Not in our owne nature. But wee muste stie vp 10 about the worlde, and wee must vnderstande that there is none but onely Iesus Christ, whiche is the true mirror wherein to see that thing. There wee see that God will rayse vs vp agayne to glorie, that hee will plucke vs out of the corruption and rottenesse wherein we nowe walke, and wherein wee shoulde abide [for euer,] were it not for this extraordinarie remedie whereby hee helpeth the matter. Ye see then howe wee must bee fayne too come too Iesus Christ, to knowe whereat it behoueth vs to looke, when we hope to be raysed vp agayne at the last day. Verely Sainct Paule vseth certaine similitudes which hee taketh of the common order of nature, too shewe the resurrection: as when he sayth, ye see how the graines of corne and other seedes are cast into the ground, and there rotting do grow vp agayne. Nowe (sayth hee) in that men sowe the bare corne, and afterward the same groweth vp agayne out of the rottenesse whercintoo it behoued it to bee first turned: ye haue a figure and image of the Resurrection. But yet is not this as much too say, as that we see our Resurrection there: It serueth onely 30 to shewe, that the saythlesse are vnthankfull and ouerlewde to Godwarde when they dispute how it is possible that our bodies should rise agayne after they be so rotted and turned into dust. If such as will be so wise in their owne conceyte, doo shoote out their suttile deuises, and therevpon conclude that it is vnpossible for God to raise vs vp agayne: Sainct Paule sheweth that such folke are malicious, and that it is nothing else but their owne vnthankfulness that turneth them away from the receyuing of this power of God, whereby hee promiseth too set vs in perfitte state agayne. And why so? For hee giueth vs certaine familiar likelihodes in the order of nature, too assure vs of his good purpose. So then, when S. Paule vseth the foresayd maner of reasoning: it is not ment that our resurrection shall bee as a naturall thing: but it is too make vs vnderstande the infinite power of God, and too honour him, and to yeelde him the praise that belongeth vntoo him: and therewithall too looke vpon the promise which hee hath made vs: whiche is, that although it farre surmount all oure vnderstanding, and bee a verie straunge thing, that GOD shoulde make vs newe agayne when wee bee turned intoo dust: yet notwithstanding hee will restore vs, euen when wee shall haue bene turned too nothing. Although (I say) that this be hard to be beleueed, yet must wee trust that God is neuerthelesse able to doo it, by his power, wherethrough hee is able too doo all things, according as it is sayde in another place too the Philippians. Nowe therefore let mennes wittes discourse what they can, let them raunge euen too the diuels in hell: 40 and yet it is certayne that they shall not bee able too diminish Gods power. Neuerthelesse when they encounter the sayde promise that is made vs of the Resurrection, which is the thing that surmounteth all our capacitie, they go about too diminish, yea and (as muche as in them lyeth) vterly too abolishe Gods woonderfull power, whereby he is able to do all things. Nowe let vs come agayne to that which is sayde heere: Alas Lorde,

I shall see no more good, The eye of the Seer shall see me no more, I shall no more returne oute of my graue. Why speaketh Iob thus? Is he as a man in dispayre that casteth away all the taste which he had earst felt of Gods goodnesse touching the resurrection? No: but he setteth out man alone by himselfe from the graces wherof God hath made him partaker by his owne meere goodnesse. And euen so ought we to do likewise. Yea and it is a speciall poynt well woorthie too bee marked: for most men abuse themselues, and haue not the discretion too say: Beholde, our God hath done vs exceeding much good, but wee must consider that we bee beholding too him for all that euer we haue. And it is a right necessarie lesson for vs now a dayes. For how shali men be able to humble themselues, except they set before them, on the one side Gods gracious goodnesse, too say: This is not mine owne, I haue not this of my selfe, my possessing of it is but because he lendeth it me, therefore I must do him homage for it, and therewithall consider howe favourable my God is too mee, and howe bountifull hee sheweth himselfe towarde me: Thus ye see that the meaning of Iobs wordes, is to expresse what man is, if God leaue him vp to himselfe. And therefore hee concludeth, I shall see no more good. The eye of the Seer shall see me no more: I must be fayne to continue in my graue. But now let vs learne to consider of our life howe slightfull and frayle it is, and likewise too examin all the infirmities that are in oure mindes, so as we may conclude that we be worse than nothing, except god vphold vs by his goodnesse. Neuerthelesse it must not hinder vs from the magnifying of Gods gracious goodnesse, although wee knowe our state too bee vile and abiect. Howebeit wee must beginne at the poynt which I haue spoken of already. Furthermore (as I haue touched) wee must alwayes beare in minde, that although Iob were not so alienated from God, as too bee out of all hope, comfort and patience: yet notwithstanding hee ceassed not too exceed measure. And hereby we bee warned too looke well to our selues, that we be not so swallowed vp of sorrow, as too bee cast into dispayre, by considering too much our owne fraytie. And it is a verie profitable lesson: for there is nothing that we ought to desyre so much as too humble our selues. And why so? For it is the onely wicket that wee haue too receyue all Gods graces in at. So long as men are forepossessed with pride, so as they weene themselues worth any thing, yee shall see them so locked vp as the grace of God can neuer enter intoo them. Then muste humilitie go before: and the cheefe of our studeys ought too bee too bethinke oure selues well what wee bee, too the ende wee maye haue no truste nor selfelyking in our selues. For beholde the craftynesse of Satan: the thing that is most profitable and auaylable for mennes saluation, hee taketh and maketh it a rancke poyson agaynst them. For hee findeth a way too make men as it were brutish, by knowledge of their miseries, insomuch as they become so woode that they cast themselues intoo dispayre. True it is that the Diuell (if hee could) woulde continually sotte vs wyth the follie of Ouerweening, hee woulde make vs too beleue woonders [of our selues:] hee will neuer suffer men too humble and abace themselues: he will hinder them from that as much as hee can. But when hee seeth that hee cannot hinder men from being abashed in themselues by knowing their owne state: then he goeth to the other shift. And here I see yee are ouermaytred: for hee will set his feete vpon mens bellies, (as they say) yea and vpon their throtes, and holde them still at that poynt, euen till hee haue forced them to dispayre. For this cause when wee enter intoo

the consideration of our owne wants, let vs see well admitted, that after we haue bethought vs of them, wee bee not vterly overwhelmed so as wee shoulde not in the meane while alwayes acknowledge the good things that God hath done for vs and put into vs, and which he bestoweth vpon vs continually, together with the remedies which hee hath giuen vs to releue those wants wherein we shoulde haue rotted, had not Gods extraordinarie goodnesse beene. Then let vs learne to know this, to the ende we may take our breath. Thus ye see what we haue 10 to marke in this streyne.

And it insueth, Seeing it is so (sayth Iob) I will not spare my mouth, I must needs speake, I must needs make my moane, I must needs talke of my sorrowe and anguill. Heerein we see that which I haue touched already: that although Iobs consideration was good, and although the thing that hee alledged here be both holy and agreeable to the doctrine of the holy ghost: yet he ceaseth not to haue some temptation of excessse. For he sayth, Beholde I must needs speake, seeing I haue not past a moment to liue: for I am 20 ouerpressed with the hand of God: and therefore I must reuenge my selfe by speaking in my sorrowes, for I cannot holde my selfe. True it is that God giueth vs leaue to speake in making our moane. Howbeit, not in such wise as there should be any choler in it, or that it shoulde be to encrease our sorrowes, whereas we thinke to ease the by that meanes. What then? It is permitted, to the intēt we should returne vnto him, to vnburthen our selues by it. Sometime they that speake not at all cease not to displease God more greuously through their impaciencie, 30 than they that blasphemee with full mouth. Doubtlesse it is a verie heynous crime when men dare open their mouthes to blaspheme God. But yet there are many also that will not vtter one worde, and yet are they full of rancor agaynst God, yea they bee much fuller of pride and bitterness than those that speake. Ye shall see some man that will chafe vpon the bridle like a Mule, and yet not speake one word. But if ye examin his hart, ye shall finde him redie to burst for spite, & that there is as it were a fry rage in him: and if it were possible that hee might fight 40 with God, he would do it. Another vnlodeth himselfe at the first dash, and many wicked wordes slip from him: but yet he hath not so much bitterness in his hart. But howfoeuer the world go, both of the be naught. What is too be done then? If our sorrowes oppresse vs too fore, let vs settle oure selues to pray vntoo God, that it may please him too ayde vs in the middes of them, so as wee may not conceyue any moodinesse agaynst him, at leastwise which shoulde hinder the honouring of him. And heerewithall wee muste also labour and fight: for 50 whereas as men are wont to harden themselues when they haue once conceiued any wilfulnesse & stomaking, and too nourishe themselues therein: it behoueth vs to knowe that we must withstand it. Then let vs restrayne our afflictions, and let them bee tied vp like wilde beasts. And when we haue so done our indeuer to repressse oure passions and to holde them in awe: then let vs assure our selues that wee can also discerne and say: Howe nowe? Shall a mortall man haue leaue to giue himselfe the bridle, so as hee shall stand in contention with God, as if he 60 would picke a quarrell too him? Then let vs keepe vs from such lycenciousnesse of murmuring agaynst God, as too haue our tongue vnbridled too say, how now? Is this of Gods dooing? Wherefore handleth hee mee after this maner? No: [let vs not doo so.] But let vs make our moane in suche sort as God may alwayes bee honoured at oure handes, and let vs confesse that hee is righteous and vnpartiall howfoeuer hee deale with vs. Marke heere a speciall poynt. And moreouer therewithall let all our complayntes bee made vntoo him. For ye see wherein men ouershoote themselues ostentymes: that is, in shrinking awaye from God as much as they can when they woulde make their complaynts, or else in discoursing with their neighbours. And howe? I haue a misfortune (say they) and there is no man that indureth so muche as I: it shoulde seeme that God mindeth to torment me without ende or ceasing. Lo howe men doo alwayes grunt. And although they vtter not suche murmurings with their mouth: yet is it sure that they keepe euer some store of such stuffe behind in their harts, and lay it not opē before God as hee requireth. Ye see then what we haue to consider when Iob sayth, that hee will speake in his bitterness, and that hee will talke of it: that is to witte, that this is not the measure which hee ought too keepe, and that he taketh too much libertie. Now if this happened too the man that was as a mirrour of pacience: what shall betyde vs? So then let vs beare in minde the warnings that I haue giuen already: that is too wit, that when wee haue any bitterness in oure hartes, wee come vntoo God too pray him too asswage the disease: and that when wee come too speaking, wee vse not our tounge too babbling, but that they maye bee refrayned to gloritie God withall, and that wee make all oure complayntes vntoo him, and go not murmuring heere and there with wayling and babling: but that God may bee the witnessse of all oure sighes and grones, and wee resort right forth vntoo him for comfort. And after Iob hath sayde so, hee addeth: Am I a Sea, or an IuVVhale, that thou shouldest sette (as it were) suche barres agaynst mee, and that I shoulde bee sayne too haue so greate lettes too steppe mee? Iob protesteth heere before God, that there was no neede why hee shoulde be stopped with so great violence. And why so? I am not like a Sea (sayth hee) whiche hath neede of Rampyres and lettes. If a Sea haue broken ouer his bankes, a thousande or two thousand men muste bee sent agaynst it: there muste bee bringing of timber, of earth, and of stonestoo make vp so great a breach. Also a VVhale will not suffer himselfe to bee caught without great ado: but great force muste bee vsed too holde so strong and mightie a beast. But Iob sayeth, I am no Sea, nor VVhale: Howe is it then that God proceedeth with so great violence agaynst mee? Heereby hee meeneth that the miserie which hee indureth is ouer greate, and that God hath no neede too punishe him so. And heerein hee sheweth that hee had not suche stay of himselfe as hee ought too haue had. True it is (as I haue sayde afore) that hee ceased not too bee patient: howbeit his pacience was not continually perfect: but it had alwayes some storminesse mingled with it. And so what haue we too gather vpon this sentence, but that by bewaying oure selues, wee shoulde knowe so muche the better what wee bee? True it is that forasmuche as wee bee frayle, wee may well say, I am no VVhale, no Lyon, no Beare, nor other wilde beast. VVell: But heerewithall, if wee looke vpon oure lustes, if wee looke vpon the rebelliousnesse that is in vs agaynst God, if wee looke vpon the number of vyces whiche wee haue whole: they bee lyke feedes of hell, not onely in bursting out of their boundes vntoo all euill vpon earth, but also in mounting well nere into heauen. VVhen we resist God through our lusts, I pray you do we not mount vp aloft as it were to make warte with God? And so there is neither VVhale, nor Lion, nor any other wilde beast vpon earth, that of his owne nature hath so great a violence, as haue 70 the the wicked affections of a man. Therefore if God vse violent remedies agaynst vs, and that he hamper vs more roughly than we would he shoulde, let vs not say as Iob sayeth, Am I a VVhale, or am I the Sea? wee be muche worse: God must be fayne to hold vs chayned by force, as if we were Lunatike, or more than Lunatike. Nowe when we shal haue knowne that there is such gainestriving in our wicked passions, then wee will confesse that if God afflicte vs and vse euen violent remedies agaynst vs: the same is not without cause: and therefore wee cannot accuse him that he is excessiue, but we must glorifie him, considering howe the case standeth. Nowe wee see that men ought too haue a double knowledge of themselues. For on the one side it behoueth them too knowe howe there is nothing but rottenesse and corruption in them, too the intent they may obteyne fauour of God, and moue him too vse mercie and pittie towards vs. And when we knowe this: let vs also consider that wee be but too strong vntoo euill: in case as when a madde man singeth and tormenteth himselfe, and yet for all that hath neuer awhitte of right strength. Euen so standes the case with vs. As in respect of good, wee are vtterly weake: but as touching euill, wee be like Gyants, there is too huge a force in vs. Then is it requisite that God shoulde stretche oute his arme, and smyte vs with greate strokes, yea and thunder more vpon vs than vpon the wylde beastes. For although the wylde beastes holde all of crueltie, and suffer not themselues too be easily maystred: yet notwithstanding if wee compare them with our selues: wee shall finde that men starte muche further oute of their boundes. And therefore whensoever God shall presse vs neuer so sore, let vs be sure hee hath good cause to doo it, and let vs not repyne at it. For when we haue pleaded our best, wee shall gayne nothing by it, there needeth but one worde too put vs too confusion. Thus much concerning this streyne. And hee addeth, If I say, my bed shall comfort mee, behold my couch burneth mee as I take too my selfe. Thou frayest mee with visions of the night, and thou frightest mee with dreames. True it is that this present saying is expounded diuersly, where it is sayde, that when Iob purposed too haue refreshment in hys bedde, hee founde a burning heate in his Couch. The Hebrew worde that is put here, betokeneth sometymes to burne, according as wee shall see it againe in another sentence: But moreouer it signifieth to withdrawe, or drawe backe, and by a similitude it signifyeth to leaue or forsake. Neuerthelesse the signification of turning agreeth verie well heere: and howsoever a man expounde the worde, the sentence and the doctrine remayne all one still: that is too wit, that Iob complayneth of being disappointed of his hope, in that hee looked too haue had some refreshment by hys bed, and yet founde more heate there, insomuch that it was as burning fire too him when hee talked too himselfe. Heere we see that which hath bene shewed already heerebefore: namely, that Iob was in horrible torments, and that hee was not pressed onely with bodily paine: but also that hee was in battels of the mynde, feeling God agaynst him as his iudge, and being payned in such sort as if he had bene in a burning laake as it were in the paynes of hell. And wee muste alwayes call the same too mynde: for (as I sayde) it is good for vs also to thinke oftentimes vpon it. True it is that wee ought too put oure selues in good readinesse too battell, sith that God afflicte vs, and that wee shall not feele any thing saue that wee indure too the worldewarde: but the cause is sith we knowe wee must come to a reck-

ning before God. For if hee make vs feele our finnes, by shewing himselfe a rigorous iudge: beholde, that is as it were the depth of hell, and the gulfes that are open too swallowe vs vp. VVee must haue bethought vs of these things before hande, that wee may knowe howe too humble oure selues, and that this conceit also doo not vtterly confounde vs. And heere yee see why Iob (who was a man of such vertue and excellencie) was notwithstanding so pressed. And wherefore? For by his example God ment too shewe howe it is no small matter too come before his Maiestie and before his iudgement seate too answere for our whole lyfe. Then let vs appie our selues to receyue the warnings which God giueth vs of our finnes, notwithstanding that wee haue verie roughe assaults. And let vs beseech God to holde vs vp, that putting our trust in the grace that is offered vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ, wee may not cease to continue and holde out to the ende, yea euen till hee haue humbled vs as hee knoweth too be needfull for vs. And specially let vs mark well this circumstance: VVhen I haue thought that my bed should giue me rest, I founde a burning fire in talking to my selfe. True it is that we may well hope that God will releue vs: but it is not for vs to appoint him either time or place: that must be put ouer wholly to his good will. Then must we not seke our rest, niether in our bed nor in any other thing: but let vs cast vp our sighes vnto God, that it may please him to refresh vs of our sorowes. But by the way (as I sayd) it is a straunge case that Iob shoulde feele himselfe so burned by talking to himselfe. I haue tolde you how this circumstance is well woorthie to be marked. For whereas men doo commonly babble so much in making their moane: their talking of this and that dooth but set them more on fire. VVhat is the cause that wee ouershoote our selues after such sort in our passions? It is bicause euerie of vs flingeth out at randon and deceyueth himselfe: But Iob sayeth heere, howe it was contrariwise with him: that is to say, that he spake in himselfe. Howe then? VVhen a man shrinketh intoo himselfe, and striueth too keepe himselfe from passing his boundes in woordes for feare of resisting God, and represseth his affections: is that an occasion too set him on fyre? Yea surely sometymes: according as it is sayde in the twoo and thirte Psalme, and in suche other texts. But yet notwithstanding it is not as muche too say on the contrarie part, that wee shoulde therefore bee lauisse of oure woordes and complayntes too euerie bodye too fynde ease of oure greefe, and too quenche the fyre whereof mention is made heere: but rather let vs enter into our selues. True it is that sometymes oure passions kindle by talking so too our selues: but yet notwithstanding God wil soone after doo his office in quenching the fire that shall be kindled by him. As for example: looke vpon a poore man whome God scourgeth. And why? the man ostentymes knoweth not why, and yet notwithstanding in the ende God will turne it too good. But if the poore man continue still in his anguise, what shall hee doo? Let him enter into himselfe. How? [Let him say,] hath thy God forsaken thee? Or else [let him say] looke well vpon thy selfe, poore creature, needes must thou haue offended God greuously, seeing he executeth such rigour vpon thee. But in the ende the holy Ghost will still make him too take holde, to taste, and to appie too his owne vse, that the holye Scripture in speaking of the roughest assaults, doth neuerthelesse set forth too vs the infinite goodnesse of our God, to the intent that in the mids of our greatest afflictions we should be assured that God will deliuer vs out of all our aduersities uerfities in tyme comenient. Ye fee then how Job hath beene exercized. But yet neuertheleffe he presently profeffeth, that he felt himfelfe in the greater heate when he had mourned and mized in himfelfe. And he ought too acknowledge, Very well my God, I haue not yet ynough: true it is that my miserie is verie great in refpect of my ablenesse to beare it: but it muft yet increafe more. Lo what Job ought too haue confidered, and it had beene a poynt of true wifedome. But feeing that hee did it not euen he which was of fuch a courage as a man may fee: 10 fo much the more behoueth it vs too ftande vpon oure garde, and too aduife our felues well that we pleade not, agaynft God when hee afflieteth vs, for feare leaft hee put vs to fuch reproch as we fhall not know where to become. And hee fayeth, that it is God that troubleth him in vifions by night, according as wee haue feene alreadie heertofore, that hee had not too doo with men too feele paine in his bodie onely: but that aboue all he was faine to abide temptations as if God were agaynft him. Herevpon he concludeth, that his foule had chofen the balter: 20 that is to fay, that hee wifhed the miserableft death that could bee, and that he had leuer to be hanged than to be in fuch cace. And howe fo? Those are the wordes of a man in difpayre. But let vs marke that Job in fpeaking fo, fayeth not that hee had hidde himfelfe there nor that hee had that purpose fettled in himfelfe: but he proteffeth onely that in making comparifon of hys life, with the worft death that coulde happen vnto him, he was fo difmayde with it for a tyme, as hee looked no further afore him, than too the feeling of the sorrowe 30 that pinched him. Heerevpon then let vs confider, that if God haue not fpared his feruant Job, it may fall oute that wee fhall bee tormented as hee was. True it is that God knowing what wee bee able too beare, will not fuffer the temptations too bee fo great, as they haue beene in man, who had receyued more ftrengh of the holy Ghofth than wee: but yet muft euery of vs bee vifited by the hande of God in fuch fort, that sometime oure lyfe fhall bee more miserable than the death of hym that is hanged. I faye wee muft bee fayne too come therevntoo, and therefore it ftandeth vs in hande to bee throughly in a readineffe. But let vs learne too fence oure felues with that whiche is fhewed vs in the holy fcripture: namely, that wee fhall haue matter of gladneffe ynough, when wee fhall haue increafed and profited in Iefus Chrift as well too death as to life. Are wee then ioyned to Iefus Chrift? Although our lyfe be more than miserable: yet fhall it turne to our profite, fo as if wee haue troubles in this world, the fame fhall be as many helpes to our faluation. Therefore whenfoeuer it fhall feeme that we be vtterly forlorne, let vs not therfore ceaffe to call vpon our God, hoping not only that he will in the ende turne all our troubles into ioy and glory: but alfo that he will continue his goodneffe towards vs vntill he make vs feele it in all perfectneffe.

But let vs caft oure felues downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgemēt of our faults, praying him to humble vs in fuch wife, that being afhamed in our felues, we may be fory and giue him the glory that is due vnto him: and yet notwithstanding, that in the meane while we may not ceafe to returne towards him feing he allureth vs fo familiarly, being fure that he will receyue vs at al times: & that we may know which is the way whereby he will lead vs thither, that is to fay, our Lorde Iefus Chrift, fo that after we haue once knowne howe there is nothing in vs but a bottomleffe gulfe of all confufion, we may neuertheleffe continue in ftedefaft trust that we fhall be acceptable to this our good God, feeing we be clothed with the righteoufneffe of his only fon, & that our finnes be blotted out by the merit of his death and paffion, and by the pureneffe of the obedience which he hath yellected vnto him. That it may pleafe him to graūt this grace, &c.

The xxix. Sermon, which is the third vpon the feauent h Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth the reft of the Exposition of the xv. verfe, and then as followeth.

16. I am vvery, I fhall not liue alwayes: take thy felfe avvay frō me, for my dayes are nothing.
17. VVhat is man that thou fo magnifiest him, and that thou haft care of him?
18. Thou vifiteft him in the morning, thou haft an eye vpon him euery minute.
19. Hovve long vvill it be ere thou let me alone? Thou vvilt giue me tyme to fvvallovve my fpittle.
20. I haue finned: vvhat fhall I doe to thee, O thou keeper of men? vvhy haft thou fet me ouer againft thee, to be a burthen to my felfe?
21. VVhy dofte thou not take avvay my fin, and vvhy dofte thou not pardon mine iniquities? for I fhall be layde in the duft, and if thou feekeme in the morning, I fhall be no more.

Eere Job goeth forwarde ftill with the matter I touched yefterday, that is to fay, with his lothing of his life: not that he fayeth hee refteth refolutely vpon that poynt, as though hee tafted not Gods goodneffe a-whit to comfort himfelfe withall, 60 but hee confidereth what this lyfe is fo long as God holdeth him in fuch rigour. And therevpon he concludeth that it were much better if God would kill him, yea after what fort fo euer it were, for I haue fayde alreadie that when men looke no further than too their prefent ftate, they may bee tempted to fuch a mil liking of it, as they fhall be vtterly difmayde by reafon of their exceeding miserie: and fpecially it feemeth that God is mynded too execute a finguler rigour towards his fathfull, and that he handleth them in fuch wife as they be more afflicted than the wicked. Then may wee bee caryed away with a hopelefneffe fo as wee fhall bee wearie of oure lyfe, and had leuer too bee deade. There is nothing that comforteth vs, but oure knowing that euen in the middes of our sorrowes wee bee ftill beloued of God, and that in the ende hee will haue pitie of vs, and giue vs faluation and life by meanes of our Lorde Iefus Chrift. VVithout this, it is certaine that oure life wyll bee weerifome and bring nothing but lothfomneffe, yea euen to repynning agaynft God. Let vs marke then that Job ment not heere to exprefse what affection hee had: but onely that God had hylde him vp. And that is the caufe why hee now addeth. That hee is weery, that hee fhall not liue euer, and that his dayes are but vanitie, and therefore hee woulde haue God to go away from him, as if he

he shoulde say, Alas Lorde, wherefore persecutest thou mee? Thou seest heere a poore soule that can indure no more, except thou haue consideration of him: and as for his lyfe it is nothing, it is but vanitie. VVherefore then doost thou not gette thee away from mee? This is according too that whiche wee haue seene already: that is too witte, that God ought not too vtter his full force agaynst mortall and transitorie men, bycause they be not rockes, nor yet so boystous bealts that he should bee fayne too inforce hymselfe so much agaynst them. 10 Iob therefore confirmeth still the same matter, as a man that is in anguise and cannot make an ende of his groanings. And hauing sayde so, hee addeth: VVhat is man that thou so magnifyest him? VVhat is hee that thou vifitest him a Mornings, that thou settest thy bart vpon him, and hast so great care of him? Some expounde this sentence, VVhat is man that thou makest so much of hym, as though hee ment heere as it were too rayle at God, that hee listeth vs vp as if wee were litte kinges, and that hee seemeth too haue a fatherly care of vs, and to 20 preferre vs aboute all creatures: and afterwarde throweth vs downe as men in the picture of the wheele of fortune. Thus ye see howe some take this streyne. Other some thinke that Iob ment too make comparison betweene himselfe and all mankinde: as if hee had sayde, Alas Lorde, Thou art so good vnto men, that thy mercie filleth the whole earth: there is not the man that feeleth not howe thou art his father, and that thou bestowest manye benefites vpon him: there is none but my selfe alone too whome thou art vnkynde. VVhat 30 meeneth this? VVhy shall not I bee in the same ranke that other men are? But when all things are well considered: Iobs plaine meening is too say, yea Lorde, why art thou so greued agaynst men? Thou settest verye great store by them. Then dooth hee not speake of Gods benefites: but rather meeneth that it is not a conuenient thing for God too bee greued at men. As for example, If a great Prince shoulde take pritch agaynst a poore Labourer, it were not for his honour: for men woulde say, why marcheth hee not himselfe wyth hys 40 equal? He doth himselfe great wrong in that he knoweth not who hee is. Yea and euen the proude sort of this worlde can well ynoughe saye, if suche a one were my matche, I woulde shewe him who I am. Ye see then after what sort men commonly vse to shewe token of disdeyne. If men (who are but woormes of the earth) can well skill to alledge, that it is not comely for them too beare malice to those that are farre then inferiors: there is farre greater reason too thinke that God seemeth too magnifie men ouer much, when hee matcheth himselfe 50 agaynst them. For who are they? VVhat is their state? God therefore ought too set light by them, [and to say:] Tush, well yee are but woormes, yee are but vermine: and shall I challenge you too go fight with you? That were greatly too the defacing of my glorie and Maiestie. Yee see then what Iobs cheefe meening is. Furthermore wee haue too marke, that this present sentence is not like that of the eight Psalme, where it is sayde: 60 Lorde what is man that thou makest so much of him. Yee see heere howe the woordes are set in their proper signification: but in Iobs saying, they bee taken cleane contrarie. For in the said text of the Psalme which I haue alledged, Dauid recounteth Gods infinite goodnesse, in that he thinketh so vpon his creatures, and that hee vouchsafeth to haue a care of them too guide them, and to gouerne them. If ye looke vpon man in himself, ye shall see so poore a creature, as it may well seeme that God ought not too haue respect of him, or too cast his eye vpon him. Nowe then when we see that God not onely vouchsafeth too gouerne men, but also maketh them Lordes of all his creatures: according as it is sayde there, that he hath made both the beastes of the feelde, and the byrdes of the ayre, and the fishes of the sea, too serue our turnes withall: seeing he hath so disposed all things to serue vs, and to succour our necessities: it seemeth that God beareth vs suche a loue, as hee putteth all that he hath vnder our hands, saying, I withhold nothing from you. Ye see then that the wretchednesse and poornesse of men, yeeldeth a greater beautie to Gods goodnesse and mercie, than if we had any thing of oure owne that coulde prouoke him to do vs good. Thus ye see Dauids plaine meering. And this thing is specially fulfilled in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ. For although he be the onely sonne of God: yet notwithstanding, so it is that in respect of his manhod he was the sonne of Abra- 15 ham, and was fully like vs in all poyntes, sinne onely excepted. And so when we see that God hath made much of him by giuing all things intoo his hande, too the ende that wee shoulde recouer that thing in him, which wee lost in Adam: therein God hath shewed the great and infinite treasures of his mercie. And verely Iesus Christ is the true looking glasse of Gods grace, which afterward is spred out vpon all his members. And so after the example of Dauid, wee haue good cause too exait the goodnesse of God, when wee see that hauing begonne first in Adam, and afterwarde in Iesus Christ, (by whom all is made whole againe that was beaten downe and defaced in Adam) hee continueth still at this day in doing vs good, and we bee made partakers of all his riches. Herein wee haue good cause too maruell and too saye, 20

 Alas Lorde, what are wee, that thou vifitest vs, that thou viftest vs so familiarly, that wee bee as thy children, that thou holdest vs as in thy lappe, and that thou shewest thy selfe so bountifull towards vs. Lo what wee ought too do. But in this place Iob taketh all too the flat contrarie. VVherein wee see that when mennes mouthes are out of taste, nothing can like them: in case as if a mannes stomacke were squeymishe by meanes of sicknesse, the best and the finest meates that coulde be brought vntoo him, should haue no sauour with him: but should lothe him, and prouoke him as it were too vomiting. So standeth the case with vs: when wee bee yll disposed, and haue not a right and well ruled iudgement, Gods graces shall haue no taste nor sauour with vs. Is there any thing that ought to prouoke vs more too loue God, than when wee knowe that hee commeth downe after that 30 sort vntoo vs, and that hee dooth (as ye woulde say) put the meate into our mouthes as a mother dooth too hir yong babes, and that hee hath his wings spred out too receiue vs [vnder them] as it is sayde in the song of 40
 Moyse? VVhen wee see God too haue so familiar a care of vs, is it not ynoughe too rauishe vs out of oure wittes? Ought not the consideration therof to suffize vs throughly? But as for them that are sorweeryed and full of anguise, they come so farre short of tasting this too their profite, that they coulde finde in theyr hartes that God were a great way off from them: according as wee see it is hapned vnto Iob, at leastwise in respect of hys fleshy affection. No doubt but he resisted it, and had patience, howbee it that the same were secrete and hidden within him: neuerthelesse it behoued the same passion to shewe it selfe whatsoever it were, and God ment too humble him thereby. VVee see then howe Iob turneth Gods prouidence quite vpside downe, and that in steade of coforting and cheering himself therewith, he would fayne that God were farre of. VVhat is man (sayth hee) 50
 I.iiij. that

Heb. 4. d. 15

Deu. 32. b. 11

Psal. 8. a. 5.

that thou makest so much of him? Yeaverely. But if God chastize vs whē we do amisse, must we therefore say he aduanceth vs to much, and that he doth vs wrong? It is not with him as it is with mortall men. For if a man bee offended with me, he wil holde some to match himselfe with his vnderling, but will bende himselfe agaynst his equall. And wherefore? For the matter standeth vpon reuenging. But if God chastize vs for the faultes that we haue committed, it is not too auenge himselfe of vs, hee passeth for no such thing. VVhat then? For two reasons. The one is that we muste bee sayne too take him for our iudge spyte of our teeth, when wee haue despyzed him [never so much.] And the other is, that he woulde not haue vs too perishe, and therefore he correcteth vs too the ende wee shoulde come backe againe too him, and he calleth vs by that meanes to repentance. VVe will not say they are vncomely things for God too punishe vs and too preace so vpon vs too the intent too plucke vs backe from our sinnes, and too shewe himselfe too bee our iudge, and that we should learne to bee subiect vnto him. VVe see then howe thankelesse men are, sith they turne the good turnes vpside down which God doth to them. And moreouer let vs vnderstand, that if it befell vnto Iob to be so tempted as he wished God away from him: the like temptation may well happen vnto vs, not onely to shake vs, but also to put vs to such a plunge, as wee shall bee quite ouerthrowne. Then must men be well aduised too fense themselues [aforhande] and (accordingly too that which I haue declared) wee must acknowledge that God bindeth exceedingly much vnto him, in that he vouchsafeth to visite vs, and (as it were) to keepe watch and ward ouer our life, and to haue a fatherly care of vs: as we can neuer magnifie his grace too much. Yea, and when hee punisheth vs for our sinnes, let vs assure our selues that his chastening of vs is not for that wee be worthie of it: there is no cause why hee shoulde once put to his hande, but that hee should let vs go for such as we are. Then, in sending vs punishments God sheweth both his goodnesse and iustice. And why so? For by this meanes he calleth men to repentance: and afterwarde he maketh them to feele him too bee their iudge, that they may humble themselues. He chastizeth them to their profite, if their vnthankfulnesse hinder not their profiting. Lo what we haue too remember in this streyne. Howsoeuer the worlde go, let vs keepe our selues from saying too God. And what is man that thou magnifiest him, so as thou visitest him a mornings? Let vs not be greued if God set sure watch vpon vs all: no, let vs not do so. For that is for those to do which woulde haue the bridle layd looce in their necke to runne at rouers, to the end that God should not chastize them at all. But if it were so: what should we gaine by it? Let vs put the case that God did shet his eyes, and that he did let vs runne at randon all the feeldes ouer, so as wee gaue oure selues to riot, and he passed not of it: what should become of vs? Beholde, the diuell woulde ceaze vpon vs, and we should be his pray, and he woulde carie vs euen into destruction. So then let vs know that there is nothing better for our welfare, than that God should haue his eyes open continually, that he should see all that we do, and specially that he should gage the bottome of our thoughts, and that we should not remoue one fingers bredth, nor step forth one pace, but he should note it and mark it, assuring our selues (I say) that it should not be for our profit, if he did otherwise. Thus ye see what we haue to gather vpon this text. And by and by Iob addeth, Howe long will it bee ere thou let me alone, and withdrawe thy selfe from mee till I baue swallowed in my spittle? Heere Iob declareth his passions wherewith he had bene tempted. By the way wee haue to beare in minde what hath bene sayd heretofore: that is to wit, that Iob felt alwayes some comfort, and that God forsooke him not for a full doo. Iob then sheweth heere after what sort he was affectioned as in respect of the flesh, to the intent his freendes might know, that hee made not so great complaint without cause. And the better too expresse the anguish wherin hee was, he turneth himselfe to God, because hee fees he shall gaine nothing at mens hands. But yet for all that, he ceaseth not to re- garde men, yea euen too much. For had hee bene well gathered into himselfe, and had hee made his prayer vnto God: it is certaine that he had behaued himselfe more quietly, and he had shewed a greater token of fayth and pacience. VVhat is the cause that Iob mattereth himselfe in such sort, as it may seeeme at the first blush, that hee is a desperate person? It is for that hee hath an eye too the reproches that are offered him, and hee is not able too beare them, too passe them ouer, and too haue an eye vnto God. And this is it that I sayde heretofore, namely that if men come too molest and too sting vs, wee muste not looke vpon that, wee must not cast our countenance thithe ward: but forasmuch as wee perceyue that Satan laboureth to bring vs by that meanes to confuzion: wee must come streyght vnto God, wee must mourne before him, and we must assure our selues that hee will cause vs too feele the auaylablenesse of his chastizements the better, and that wee cannot bee thruit out of the way, as when men were the marke that wee ame at. But yet neuerthelesse, Iobs purpose in thys streyne, was too expresse the vehemencie of his affection the better, by turning his talke vnto God, as if hee had sayde: VVell, yee vnderstande nothing at all, I see yee peceyue not the spirituall battell wherewith God hath put me, and therefore I must talke too him that is my iudge. To be short, it is all one as if Iob had sayde, This that I speake is no counterfeyte stuffe: but it is as if God himselfe were heere. And hee sayeth (as hee had touched afore) that his lyfe was nothing but vanitie, insomuche that God ought too take himselfe awaye from him, vntill hee had swallowed in his spittle, according as wee may saye too take his breath. Heereby Iob meaneth that God pursueth vpon him ouerroughly: and it seemeth that hee woulde pleade agaynst God as hee hath done heeretofore. But I haue tolde you already that hee dooth but expresse the passions of the fleshe. And truly whensoeuer God giueth men the grace too frame themselues vnto him, and too beare their crosse and afflictions paciently: it is not in suche wise as they should bee altogether without feeling, it is not that they should bee vnmouable and vnprofitable when men trouble them and torment them: But it is too the intent they should fully settle themselues too beare all this with pacience, and that they shoulde conclude: It is meete that my God should haue the maystrie, and that I should frame my selfe too his lure, and therefore yeeld my self ouer vnto his good pleasure. But howsoeuer the worlde go, none is able to do it without incountering. Iob then expresseth heere his owne passions in such sort as hee felt them, and in the meane while Gods grace is as it were buried for the time: not that it was vtterly quenched, for (as I haue sayde) God vphilde him. But it will come to passe that when the first passions assault the faythfull, they shall (as a man woulde saye) bee harried awaye in suche manner, as it maye seeme that God gouerneth them not any more, and that they play the horses that are broken looce. Nay but it is as if a man were vpon a horse: and very well, ye see the horse flingeth & kicketh

and

and doth all that hee can too escape and too runne ouer all the feelde: but anon the man that is handsome can tell well ynough howe too tame him, hee will reyne him vp with the bridle, and bring him too a good pace. Euen so is it with vs, that wee shall oftentimes bee carryed away headlong by our ouerheadie pafsions: but yet for all this, God will not let vs alone so, but wyll rather reyne vs vp and drawe vs too him, according as we shall see how he worketh towards Iob. But (as it hath bene declared heeretofore) it is true that we may well alledge vntoo God the frayltie of oure lyfe, when wee woulde obtaine some mercie and release at hys hande. But Iob speaketh here excessiue, as a man that is oute of hys wittes, and knoweth not to whom hee ought too direct hys woordes. Euerie faythfull bodye will lightly saye, Lorde my dayes are nothing but vanitie and smoke: therefore haue pittie vpon so miserable a creature. This request is good and holy, and God accepteth it in good woorth bycause wee be taught by his holy spirite too speake so. But Iob steppeth too him after another fashion, and wyth another maner of style. Howe? my dayes (sayeth he) are but vanitie, and comest thou heere too set thy selfe agaynst mee? VVilt thou not giue mee respite too swallow downe my spittle? VVhy doost thou not gette thee from mee? Hee is of opinion that if God woulde drawe away his hande from him, hee shoulde haue some ease. Yea, but what woulde become of vs if God should let vs alone? Should we haue power to swallowe downe our spittle? Howe coulde wee breathe, if the spirite that giueth liuelynesse too all things shoulde forsake vs? Do we not see that we shoulde needes decay? But (as I haue declared alreadie) Iob is an amazed man that hath no consideration but of his miserie. And this serueth vs for a good and profitable warning. For wee see what it is too bee ouerpressed with our owne pafsions: namely that wee forgo all wisdome and pacience, and become as dull as brute beastes. Verely it will not seeme so too vs. But if we marke mennes pafsions a farre off, what they bee: wee shall finde that they make vs altogether blockishe so as wee haue no knowledge at all. Againe wee haue not holde of our selues too be competent iudges, and it is too bee seene that all our wittes are confounded at our neede. Let euerie of vs marke men when they be cumbred with vehement pafsions, or else let vs consider howe wee oure selues fare if God pinche vs with any aduersitie that is ouerroughe for vs: we bee so daunted, as wee haue no hart too call vpon God, wee cannot bethinke vs of the promyses that are conteyned in holye writte, and then what remedie is there for our miseries? Nowe then (as I haue sayde) there is such a headinesse in oure pafsions, that if God shoulde not ouermayster them from aboue, yea euen by the wonderfull power of his holy spirite, in suche wise as wee might knowe his maiestie therein, and that there is more in it than man can skill off: it is certaine that it were ynough too mingle and confounde heauen and earth together at euerie blowe. But yet neuerthelesse (as I haue touched alreadie) Iob had a farre other consideration with him, in asmuch as Gods spirite was in him: but if God remedie it not by the grace of his holy spirite, there is no question but yee shall fynde man in his owne naturall kinde, and ye shall finde his pafsions such as they are according too the fleshe. Get thee from mee, sayeth Iob. And what shoulde become of vs if God shoulde let vs alone, so as wee shoulde abyde withoute his ayde and assitence? It is in him that we haue our beeing, our wee our selues doo see the experience. Can we swallowe downe our spittle, if God shoulde giue vs vp? That is much like: as who woulde say, there is more power in vs, than in the Angels of heauen. For if God should leaue them too themselues, what woulde become of them? Beholde they are immortal creatures, and are alreadie in the glorie of heauen, and beholde the maiestie of God: and yet neuerthelesse they shoulde vanishe away and bee brought to nothing if God shoulde withdrawe himselfe from them: and can we that are full of corruption haue more force? Therefore whye God giueth vs some leysure, let vs learne too thinke vpon our infirmitie which are so excessiue in vs, and to knowe that there is nothing better than that God should visit vs, looke to vs, and dispose of vs: for else wee shoulde decay euerie minute. Thus ye see what wee haue too marke vpon this streyne. And it is certeyne that in the persone of one faythfull and pacient man, God intended to giue vs a mirroure of oure inordinate affections, too the ende wee shoulde beware of them, and seeke too feele the succour and refreshment that are shewed vs heere. And howe shall wee feele it? There is no better way than too call vpon him that hath all power in himselfe, that he may restreine vs and not suffer vs too start asyde when wee bee chastized after that sorte by his hande. Nowe hee addeth immediately, I haue sinned, what shall I do to thee O thou the keeper of men? Some men expounde this, as though Iob disputed agaynst God, saying: I can do none other but sinne, wherefore hast thou made mee such a one? If thou bee the preseruer of men: why shouldst thou condemne mee so, seeing it lyeth in thee too saue mee? But a man may well see that this is not the naturall meening: and such as take it so, neuer knewe the intent of the holy Ghost as touching this streyne: & moreover they haue yll considered that which is witnessed too vs concerning Iob, how he was pacient howe soeuer the worlde went with him. VVhat is it then that Iob ment? It is as if he should say, well, I confesse my fault, & I cannot scape the iudgement of God. VVhy so? He is the Keeper of men. But this worde Keeper, hath bene misconstrued: for men haue taken it for a preseruer of mankinde, and for one that sheeldeth them vnder his protectiō. It is certeyne, that (as the Greeke translater also hath well marked, which thing hee is not commonly woont too doo) Iob ment too say, that God wayteth vpon vs, that hee watcheth vs, and that hee knoweth all, as if a man shoulde watche one too spie and marke all that euer hee doth and sayeth. Yee see then in what sense Iob applieth this tytle vnto God, That is the Keeper of men. True it is that God dooth well preferue vs, that hee hath vs in his hande, and that oure lyfe continueth by him. But yet isthys no let that hee shoulde not bee called oure Keeper, in respect that hee seeth and beholdeth all that wee doo, so as wee can not hyde oure selues from him: according as all the scripture sayth, that he sercheth men, examineth theyr thoughtes, discouereth all things, and nothing is hidden from him in all our life. And it appeareth that Iob ment so: for why and to what purpose saith he, What shall I do to thee? if it be not bicause he must be fayne to yeelde himselfe gilty? Lorde (sayth hee) I can gaine nothing at thy hand by starting asyde, I confesse my det, I haue sinned: but by the way what shall I do to thee? For I must be fayne to passe that way: and why letst thou me not alone? Although thou see heere a poore creature cast vnder foote, that hath neither strength nor power, yet neuerthelesse thou followest vpon him wyth thy rigour still. I acknowledge my selfe too bee indetted to thee: and yet thou holdest mee still vpon the racke, as if a iudge should holde a malefactor vpon the racke and say too him. Tell mee thy fault, and that the malefactor should answer, I will so, I haue committed such a murther, yea twoo or three, and suche and suche are accessaries. Too what purpose should the iudge holde him still vpon the racke after such confession? Beholde heere the like cace concerning Iob. Truth Lorde (sayeth hee) I haue sinned, thou needest too torment mee no more, nor too racke mee too make mee confesse my faultes. For sith I haue graunted thee thy det, wherefore doost thou persecute mee? Thou art the keeper of men, thou knowest all. If thou needed too make inquisition nowe of a thing that were lidden from thee: verye well: thou mightest say, I will holde thee heere tyll I haue gotten the knowledge of all thy faultes. But thou knowest them (sayeth Iob,) thou art the keeper of men: and admitte that men knewe not themselves: yet knowest thou what they bee. Then seeing the cace is so, why doost thou not drawe thy hande away from mee withoute presing mee after suche a sort? Thus yee see the naturall meaning of this sentence. And heere wee see howe men fare when they will measure Gods Justice by theyr owne witte and capacite: for it will seeme too them that God passeth measure at euerie blowe, and that hee vsleth ouer great rigour. Although our intent bee not too accuse God of crueltie with full mouth: yet wee ceasse not to frette and chafe agaynst him, like as Iob hath beene tempted too doo. What is too bee done then? Let vs consider that God is the keeper of men: that is too say, that wee are heere within his sight: wee maye well fynde fayre colours and lurkingholes before men, but all our hypocries cannot keepe God from seeing vs or from discerning all, euen too our verie thoughts. What got oure father Adam by couering hymselfe with leaues, when hee was summoned before God? Hee should haue appeared, and his sinne should haue beene layde afore him spyte of his teeth. So then let vs consider that Gods Registers are full of our woorkes, woordes, and thoughts. And although that as nowe we read not our Indytements as they bee framed: yet shall Daniels saying be fulfilled, which is, that when the iudgement is settled, then the bookes shall bee opened. Yee see then that the thing whiche wee haue too marke in the first place, is that God is mennes keeper: wee maye well icte heere bylowe, and take leaue to leape lyke frogges without order, and (as the Prouerbe sayeth) playe the Mece in the chaffe, (so as all things may bee confuzed too manwarde: but yet will God marke and beare away all. VVhen wee knowe this, let vs learne too walke in feare and carefulnesse: and seeing that our God looketh vpon vs, let vs walke as before him. And if wee haue this lesson well printed in our hartes: wee shall bee sure too haue one care more than wee had before. VVe shall be ashamed afore men, so as wee will not doo oure naughtinesse in the open day nor in the open streete. And why so? Bicause the eyes of men will let vs. Beholde also how God and his Angels are witnesses of our lyfe: ought not that too make vs walke in farre more awe a great deale? This knowledge then must holde vs in awe, too the ende wee thinke not that our sinnes shall scape vnpunished: but that forasmuche as God knoweth them, hee will also giue iudgement agaynst them. For hee gouerneth not after the common order of men: he hath other maner of eyes than wee haue: although wee haue confessed oure faultes, hee knoweth that which is hidden within and that which is vnkowne too our selues. VVhen an offender hath acknowledged his crimes and euill dooings before an earthly iudge, a man demaundeth no more at his hande: but God is a spirituall iudge, and will bring vs too the inwarde knowledge of our sinnes. Then is it not ynough for vs to say, I haue sinned: but wee must condemne the sinne in our selues, yea euen in such wyse, as euerie of vs may be his owne iudge, and learne to abhorre sinne: according also as yee see why GOD holdeth vs as it were so locked vp therein, that nowe and then wee pyne away lyke poore soules in dispayre. Ye see wherefore he trieth vs: namely too the intent that euerie of vs should knowe himselfe, not onely too say yea verely I perceyue well that I am a sinner: but also too haue a liuely feeling of our sinnes, that wee may bee vterly ashamed of them before him. And finally Iob sayeth, VVherefore hast thou set mee full ouer agaynst thee? VVherefore doost thou not take away my wickednesse? VVherefore doost thou not pardon my sinne? For I am in the dust, and if thou seeke mee, I shall bee no more. Heere Iob returneth too the matter whiche hee had glaunced at afore: that is too witte, that hee desyred but too haue some truce or release till he had swallowed hys spittle. Nowe therefore hee sayth, why hast thou set mee full oueragaynst thee, that is too say, as a white for a man too shoote at. For hee coulde well haue founde in his hart, that God should haue let him alone as hee was: as if hee should say, who am I? And at whom doost thou bende thy selfe? For I am a poore woorme of the earth, and thou settest mee as a whyte too shoote at: must thou needes trie thy strength vpon mee? as he will say too him anon. For Iob returneth oftentimes to that complaint, and reneweth the same oft. True it is that when God setteth vs full butte agaynst him, wee bee not able too abyde suche a force: but yet for all that wee muste not shrinke away from him: For it cannot bee but that wee must needes fayle as soone as God turneth his backe vpon vs. Then, are we desirous too stande out and too continue in good state? The meane thereof is not that God should turne his backe vpon vs, but that wee should bee as a marke in a Butte for him too shoote at, and that hee should beate vpon vs as muche as hee listeth: yea verely so hee asswage the greefe of the woundes that hee hath made, by causing vs too feele his goodnesse: so wee may knowe that in the midst of his anger hee forgetteth not his mercye, according as it is spoken in the song of Habacucke. Thus yee see whye thys persuation of Iobes is sette out vntoo vs: It is too the intent wee should learne not too desire God too let vs alone as wee bee, for then should wee bee drowned euen in damnation. But let vs praye God that when hee chastizeth vs, wee may not make outleapes in hope too scape his hande, but that wee may holde him our backes too receyue his strokes, so bee it that hee giue vs the powre too beare all his corrections patiently: and therevpon also that hee make vs to taste his mercie, that wee bee not destitute of comforte in the middes of oure aduersities. True it is that wee muste followe Iob heere in confessing that if God looke vpon vs from Euening tyll Morning, wee shall bee no more: no verely if hee leaue vs destitute of his grace, and forsake vs wyth his looking vpon vs. But if wee returne too him with a hartie affection, we shall feele him alwayes at hande wyth vs, and that hee will not fayle vs, but alsist vs continually, yea euen till he haue taken vs vp into his heavenly glorie to continue with him for cuer:

And now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him that wheras we prouoke his wrath so many wayes, he wil not suffer vs too continue stubborne in our vices, and plunged in our owne filthinesse, but that hee will drawe vs out and make vs cleane, yea and that in the meane while he will so moderate his rodde, as wee may not be vtrerly past hope, but may comfort our selues, in that he hath promised to be our God and to asist vs to the ende, and therevpon returne vnto him, knowing that it is his office to chaunge the worlde to better, and therefore pray vnto him to increace his graces in vs, that wee may alwayes fashion our selues more and more like vn-

to our Lorde Iesus Christe: and that in the meane time he will so gouerne vs by his holie spirite, as wee may no more prouoke his wrath against vs as we haue done hitherto: but rather that by his making of vs to feele his sweete and fatherly hand, we may euer haue so much the greater occasion to magnifie and glorifie him in all our life. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all Nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant foules from the miserable bondage of error and darkenesse to, &c.

The .xxx. Sermon, which is the first vpon the eight Chapter.

1. Baldad the Suite answered and sayde.
2. How long wilt thou holde such talke? the vwoordes of thy mouth are as a vehement vinde.
3. Will God peruert Iustice? will the almightie deface the right?
4. Thy Sonnes haue sinned, and he hath made them come to the place of their misdeedes.
5. But if thou returne to God betimes, and pray to the almightie:
6. If thou be pure and right, he will avwake vnto thee, and make the tent of thy rightuoufnesse peaccable.

He better to profite our selues by that which is conteyned in this present Chapter: wee muste beare in minde what wee haue declared afore: that is to wit, that Iobs friends vndertaking an euill case, haue notwithstanding good arguments and good reasons. True it is that they misapply them: neuerthelesse the doctrine is in it selfe both holy and profitable. So, if wee take the things generally that are spoken here: wee shall finde good sentences. And in very deede ye shall see that the principall matter that Baldad pretendeth, is to maynteyne that God is rightuous in punishing men, and that there is no cause to find fault with him. And without question, all this doctrine is not only good, but also one of the chiefe articles of our faith. There is none other fault in it, but that Baldad will needes apply it to the persone of Iob. For as wee haue seene heretofore, the intent of that holy man was not too blame God, nor too liste vp himselfe against him: but he maketh his moane that the miserie whiche he had indured was to grieuous and heauie for him considering his feeblenesse, & yet for all that he ceaseth not to glorifie God still. And so let vs marke that Baldad had an euill cace: but yet in the meane while, that which he setteth downe here is good and rightuous, and it behoueth vs to receyue it, bicause it is fitte for our edification: Like as when he sayeth, that such as pleade after that sorte against God, do turmoyle themselves like the vinde in the ayre. True it is that we must leaue the persone of Iob as I sayd afore, and take the thing generally that is contayned here. VVe heare how the wicked and vnbeleuers do spew out their blasphemies in rayling at Gods Iustice, and it seemeth that they should thunder and lighten. But what? All their woordes are but vinde, and they washe away, and they can not reache so high, with them as the maiestie of God sheweth it selfe therein. And so in this sentence we haue to marke, firste that when we heare these blasphemies against God, we must not be dismayed therefore, so as we should not alwayes glorifie God. For he cotinueth whole and sounde as he was, and men cannot abate his maiestie: though they rayle at it with full mouth, all is but vinde and vanitie. Thus much concerning the first point. As touching the second, let euery of vs learne to speake of God soberly, and with all reuerence and humblenesse, so as we cast not foorth suche a vinde as is mencioned here. For although we be not able to preiudice God by any maner of meanes: yet will not he fayle to take vengeance of them that indeuer to lift vp themselves after that sorte against him by casting forth proude and presumptuous woordes. VVhat is to be done then? If wee haue once settled that thing in our hartes which the holie Scripture teacheth vs: the same will hold vs in true steadfastnesse. And afterward when we speake after the measure of our sayth, wee shall not onely cast foorth goodly blastes, but God shall be exalted and magnified in all our talke. But now lette vs come to that which is set downe here for the principall. Will God peruert Iudgement and right? will the Almighty ouerthrowe Iustice? Here we be put in mind to yeelde God the honor of being the fountaine of all equitie and right, and that it is impossible that he shoulde doo any thing that is not good and rightfull. Some can well finde in their hartes to graunt that God is Almighty, but in the meane while they acknowledge him not to be rightuous as they ought to do. For the one of them must not be separated from the other. VVe muste not imagine that there are things in God which can be deuided one from another. True it is that it behoueth vs to put a difference betweene the wisdom, and the goodnesse, and the Iustice, and the almightinesse of God: but yet notwithstanding, in respect that he is God, all these things must needes be in him at once, and they must be as it were himselfe or his very being. Then let vs beware that wee furnyze not a lawlesse power in God, as if he gouerned the world like a tyrant, and vsed excesse or crueltie. But lette vs vnderstande whereas he hath all things in his hande, and is of endlesse power and doeth all things, yet notwithstanding he ceaseth not to be rightuous. It is true that this rightuoufnesse of Gods is partly hidde from vs, so as we comprehend it not: but yet neuerthelesse, it is of his mightinesse also: and for prooffe thereof, are we able to measure it by our wit and vnderstanding? It is certaine that wee cannot. And therefore when we heare speaking of Gods rightuoufnesse or Iustice: let vs marke, that although the same bee not fully knowne and manifest vnto vs: yet wee muste honor and reuerence it. It is sayde that his deuices are a bottomlesse pit, and that he dwelleth in vnapprochable light, so as we cannot reache so high as to know what is in him. But yet neuerthelesse, we must be fully perswaded in our selues, that

Psal. 36. b. 7.
Rom. 11. d. 33
1. Tim. 6. d.

that it is the proprietie and nature of God to do al things in perfect vprightnesse so as there is no faulte to bee founde. Now then wee see what opinion wee ought to conceyue of God. VVhen worldly folke speake of God, they can well say that he is the foueraine Creator of the world: but yet in the meane season they acknowledge not the thing that is propre vnto him, nor him in suche wise as it his will to manifest himselfe vnto vs: that is to wit in his Iustice, in his goodnesse, in his wisdom, and in all things whereby we may take taste to loue him, to honor him, and to serue him. And this is the principall poynnt that we must take heede vnto. For what shall we haue gayned by knowing curiously what the Being and what the glorious Maieftie of God is: if in the meane time wee vnderstande not that thing of him which wee ought to feele by experience, and which he declareth vnto vs? as when it is sayd that he dwelleth in vs, and that we liue in him & haue our mouing & being in him, that his mercie filleth all things, that wee be susteyned by his goodnesse, that we haue so much light as he giueth vs and no more, that it is in him to remedie all our corruptions, and that we cannot haue so much as one grayne or one drop of rightuoufnesse, except we drawe it out of him who is the wellspring thereof. Now if we know not these things, what shall it auayle vs to knowe that there is but onely one God, who contayneth all things, and to haue some feeling of his maieftie? VVherefore so much the more behoueth it vs to marke well what is sayde here: that is to wit, that we must take it for a grounded principle, that Gods nature is rightuous, and that it is no more possible for him to turne aside from right & equitie, than to say that he can forgo his being, and cease to be God. For it is no lesse absurditie too say, that God doeth any thing vnaduisedly, than to say that he is not at all, or to say that his Being is diminished. And here yee see also how sainct Paule reasoneth in the third to the Romanes, where he taketh away the flaunder that might be enforced against the doctrine that he brought: how men are alwayes full of venom to speake euill of Gods pure truth, and to stande checking and replying against it. Sainct Paule therefore sayeth, Is God vnrightuous? How should it be possible, that he to whom it belongeth to iudge the whole worlde, should not performe all right? He sheweth there by this woorde Iudge, how all of vs ought to bee fully perswaded, that God is so chare of right dealing, that all that he doeth and all that commeth from him is compassed aboute with that rule. VVe see then that the sayde sentence of Sainct Pauls agreeth with this of Baldads. For vnder this terme God, Baldad comprehendeth Iustice and right dealing, and so doth he afterwarde vnder the woorde Almightie. And it is as much as if he had sayd, Can we spoyle God of that thing which is so knitte into his being, as they cannot by any meanes bee put a funder. It were as much as to abace him vtterly, and to pull him out of his seate, and to bring him to nothing if a man woulde pleade against him as though he were not rightuous. In steade of setting downe the woorde God alone. or of ioyning the title of Almightie too it. Sainct Paule alledgeth the office of him: that is to wit, that God is the Iudge of the world. And he is not a Iudge after the maner of those that are brybed and corrupted, as wee see mortall men are, who being well aduanced to great estate and authoritie, do notwithstanding abuse the same full oft: But it is not so with God. And why? For, his being Iudge of the worlde, is not by good happe, or by election at auenture, or by fute, or by purchase: but it is incident to him by nature, he is no sooner God, but he is immediatly iudge therewithal. Seing the that the cace standeth so, let vs not cōceyue ought of him but al rightuoufnesse being well assured that his will is the foueraine rule thereof. Furthermore (as I haue sayde) this rightuoufnesse cannot be so knowne vnto vs as we should be able to decypher what is in it, that when soeuer God shall worke ought, wee shall see the reason why. And doubtlesse it is no reason that it should bee subiect to vs, or that wee should desire to haue it an vnderling too our capacitie. Then if wee finde not that thing to be good whiche he doeth, whither shall wee go? what a presumptuousnesse shall it be for mortall creatures, (I say) for poore wormes of the earth, to be desirous to compell God to make them to knowe what his workes are, and to giue their verdit of them? But cleane contrarie, although God conceale the reason of his doings from vs: and that wee thinke his workes straunge, so as it seemeth to our vnderstanding, that wee haue cause to pleade against him: Yet muste we honour his secrete and incomprehensible iudgements, and gather our wittes too vs in all humblenesse; too say, Beholde, it is true that as now this seemeth too vs to bee able to preuayle against God. And so without any further replying, we must holde it for a sure conclusion, that God is rightuous. For asmuche then as wee see nowe but in parte, yea euen as it were in a glasse and darkely: lette vs wayte for the day wherein we shall see Gods glorie face to face, and then shall wee comprehend the thing that is hidden from vs as now. Yee see then after what manner it is Gods will to exercise our faith: that is to wit, he will haue vs to confesse his rightuoufnesse to be such as no mans witte may finde fault with it or carpe against it. I say he will haue vs to confesse this, although wee perceyue it not, nor haue any full knowledge of it, and although euery man haue his reason to dispute with God why he doeth so. Albeit then that wee see not the things with our eye: yet must we haue the humblenesse to yeeld vnto God that which belongeth to him. And if wee do otherwise, it is all one as if wee would (so farre as in vs lieth) bring his euerlasting Being vtterly too nought. But if wee haue this well printed in our hartes: it will be a good beginning aforehand to submit our selues in such wise vnto God, as although he scourge vs and handle vs roughlier than wee would bee: yet notwithstanding wee shall be pacient in our aduersities. VVhy so? For he that fretteth at his aduersitie, muste needes bee made to know what it is to lift vp himselfe against God. And he cannot take pritch against God, but he must also set himselfe against all right and equitie. And what els shall bee the ende of such a cace, but confusion and decay? Beholde then a brydle to holde vs still in pacience: namely the knowledge which we ought to haue of Gods rightuoufnesse. For by standing so against all right and equitie, wee fight to our owne damnation. And when we chafe at our aduersities, wee wage battell against God, and would ouerthrow his Iustice and bring it to nothing, as neere as wee can. Yet notwithstanding it behoueth vs to go on further, if wee will bee rightly pacient. And why so? bycause wee shall bee neuerthelessse tempted to despayre though wee haue knowne the rightuoufnesse and Iustice of God. Looke vpon a poore sinner that feeleth himselfe pressed too the vttermoste: well he will confesse (yea euen vnfaignedly) that God is rightuous in punishing him: but yet it seemeth too him that he shall perish, and that there is no forgiuenesse to be looked for in his cace. Yee see then how he which is visited by the hande of God may fall into despayre, notwithstanding that he acknowledge God too bee rightuous. And in good fayth wee see what is happened vnto Iob. True it is that he was not vtterly destitute of pacience:

17. f.
28.

Psalm. 36.
c. 10.

Rom. 3. 4. 5.
6.

1. Cor. 13. c. 5
d. 12.

patience: but yet he ceased not to bee tormented with horrible passions, as we haue seene heretofore and shall see hereafter. And certainly, he doubted not at all that God was righteous: but he had an eye to his owne infirmite, [saying in himselfe:] Lorde I am frayle, and yet neuertheless, thou vtterest thy strength against me:
 and what am I? It seemeth that thou arte minded here too thunder against me sillie creature whiche am lesse than a worme. Yee see now wherewith Iob found himselfe grieved and vexed: namely, that he coule not (at the firste brunt) taste howe God succored him in the middes of his rigour: and afterwarde would giue him a happie ende of it, so he taried his leysure. Verily Iob had some feeling hereof: but yet he is so combered with heauinesse, as he coule not ridde and dispatch himselfe of it at the firste brunt. Yee see then that Iob is partly vnpacient: And notwithstanding that he bee set forth to vs as a mirroure of pacience: yet are his afflictions so vehement, that he quayleth. What is the reason? It is because he hath not suche a fauour of the fatherly care that God hath of him, as is requisite. For this cause I haue sayde, that to knowe Gods righteousnesse and to be fully persuaded of it, is a meane to bring vs too pa-cience: howbeit that wee must matche another article with it, that is to witte, wee muste alwayes thinke that God in afflictig vs doeth not cease to loue vs, yea and that he will procure our saluation what rigour soeuer he vse towardes vs, so as all our afflictions shall be assuaged through his grace, and he will giue them a glad some end.
 And after that Baldad hath spoken so, he addeth, Thy children haue sinned, and God hath sente them too the pl. ce of their iniquitie. But if thou returne to him betymes, he will make towards thee, or he will make prosperitie come againe. Hereby he meeneth that God hath set a fayre lookinglasse before Iobs eyes, to the intent he shoulde not aduance himselfe any more, nor play the horse that is broken looce, seing that they which are stubborne against God doo come to confusio, and must be pland-ged into perdition for euer. Secondly there is a promise, that God doth still wayte, and wou'd fayne drawe him backe to repentance, and therefore, that he ought to make haste whyle time serueth for it. Thus then yee see the two poyntes that are couched here by Baldad. But I haue tolde you before, howe he misapplieth it to the persone of Iob. Why so? It is an euill case well handled. Therefore let vs take the same for a generall lesson, to the ende that euery of vs may applie it to himselfe in his degree and according to his necessitie. It is sayde here, that God punisheth suche as are stubborne against him: and hereby his meening is too humble vs, that wee might not giue the brydle too the infirmite of our fleshe, as our maner is too bee too licentious. When wee come too taking a stomacke against God, wee make lesse dif-ficultie in it than if wee shoulde incounter with our in-ferieur or with our equall.

Behold (say I) the diuelish boldnesse that raigneth all the world through: which is, that the partie which will be afrayde of a mortall creature, and would bee loth to offende him, will anger God boldly and without remorse of conscience. And therefore lette vs remember well this lesson that is shewed vs here: that is too witte that when soeuer and as oft as God punisheth the wicked, or executeth any horrible vengeance, it is to the intent that wee should stoop with our heades, that bothe great and small should haue their mouthes shet, and that wee shoulde no more presume to come pleade against God, but assure our selues that it shall happen vnto vs as it did vnto those whom we see to perishe after that sort, if wee follow them. And here yee see why it is sayde in the holie Scripture, that God teacheth men righteous-nesse by executing his iudgements. Hertzby the Prophet Esay sheweth that so long as sinnes abide vnpuni-shed, men do harden, themselves and make a sport at it:

 they thinke they bee scaped out of the iudges hande: to be shorte there is nother feare nor modestie in them.
 But so soone as God sets himselfe downe in his iudge-ment seate, and sheweth examples of his iustice, wee be out of conceyte, and wee conceyue suche a fearfulnessse, as wee sinke downe vnder it, and that serueth too bring vs backe agayne. Lo howe the iudgements which God executeth vpon the wicked ought to serue for our instruction, too the intent that euery of vs yeelde himselfe vnder his hande. And this is it that is sayde likewise in this texte. Truly wee ought not too determine whether Iobs childre were reprobates or no: and it is a more likelihood that God sente them onely a temporall punishment, too saue their soules for euer. For wee haue seene heretofore the concorde that was betwixt them:
 and the Scripture speaketh not of them as it doth of the sonnes of Elie. On the other side we see that Iob made solemne Sacrifyzes when the course of their feasting was come out: and there is no doubt (as it hath bene declared) but they were counselled too aske forgiveness at Gods hand, and doubtlesse they wou'd haue ioyned with their father in so doing. So then wee cannot determinately say of Iobs children, that they were reprobates, and wee knowe that oftentimes God taketh euen the cheefe of those out of this worlde by violent meanes, whom he hath chozen and ordeyned to saluatiō, howbeit that he hadlerh them after such a fashio, as the castifement which he sendeth them turneth to their welfare.
 Also mennes bodies muste perishe for a time, that their soules may bee saued for euer. Therefore it may be that the like befell to Iobs children. But (as I haue sayde alreadie) wee must not haue an eye to persones here: wee must not onely receyue the doctrine: which is, that as oft as God stretcheth out his arme too punish the sinnes of the worlde, there is none of vs all but he ought to tremble. And whensoeuer we shall haue misbehaued our selues vnto God, knowing that he chastizeth vs by other mens harmes, and there beholde and after a sorte feele how terrible his wrath is vpon all such as auance themselues too resist him. And here yee see why Sainct Paule turning his speach too the faythfull, sayeth: Bee yee not deceyued by wayne wordes: for by reason of these things is Gods wrath wonte too come vpon the vnbeleeuers.
 True it is that men flatter themselves by discountenan-cing of their sinnes, according as we see how these diuelish skoffers and Iesters do cloke them at this day, so that now a dayes if a man speake of Lecherie, it shall be made but a trick of youth. O, it is of nature: and if a man speake of drunkennesse, [answere shall bee made,] God giueth wyne, and will he not haue vs too bee merrie with it? Yee see then after what maner men become brutishe and spewe out their blasphemies against God, and how they seeke nothing else but shistes to flatter theselues in their owne faults and euill doings. And for this cause Sainct Paule sayeth, My friends lette not men de-ceuyue you with suche Heathenish talke. He sayeth not, for the wrath of God shall come vpon you, you shall bee ouerwhelmed by it: but he sayeth, learne to knowe that which God sheweth, ye haue very fayre mirroures. As oft as God chastizeth the whomongers, the vnbeleeuers, the disobedient, the stubborne, and all such kind of folke:
 he meeneth to shewe you that no euill escapeth vnpunished. So then preuent ye his vengeance, and tarie not till

Eph. 2. 6.

1. Sam. 2. 6.

Eph. 5. 6. 6.

will he fall vpon you, but profite your selues by the instructions that he giueth you a farre of. Thus much concerning this sentence, wherein the correction that God sendeth is set afore vs, to the ende we might know that God sendeth all Rebelles to the place of their iniquitie. And true it is that some are to be founde so foolish and madbraynd, as they could finde in their hartes to mayntayne the cace of the wicked against God. But so soone as God shall lay his hand vpon his creatures, let vs learne to con-fesse that he is righteous, notwithstanding that we know not wherefore he doeth it. And this is according to that we haue declared more at large already, namely that if any notorious finnes be punished before our eyes, wee must vnderstand that God warneth vs, and setteth them before vs as liuely pictures, according as Sainct Paule speaketh in the tenth Chapter of the firste Epistle to the Corinthians: so as if we see a man that is full of blasphemies, and a despyzer of God, that wil by no meanes abide nother yoke nor discipline, but is altogether awelesse: if we see a worldling, a lechour, a riotter, or a persone of lewde and loce life: if we see a drunkard: or if we see a naughtie packe that seeketh nothing but to deceyue one and to spoyle another of his goodes: & if God performe and execute [vpon such a one] the vengeance that he declareth in his lawe: let vs assure ourselues that it is a good warrant that wee muite not dally with him, nor surmise that the things which he hath vttered with his owne mouth are but scarebugges for little babes, seing that the effect of them is marched with them. And if we see not an apparant and visible cause, let vs neuerthelesse vnder-stand that if God vse neuer so great rigour, yet must not we therefore be inquisitiue and say, why doth he so? wee know not, nother must we presume to know, so long as we be in this world. Ye see then what we haue to marke and to beare in minde: that is to witte, that when we see the calamities and afflictions which God sendeth in this world, wee must looke if there be any euident signes, to the ende we may learne to yeelede our selues conformable vnto God, and too submit our selues vnto him, yea and that euery of vs may examine himselfe, that he bee not wrapped in the like condemnation. Now let vs come to the second poynt: which is, that if God visit vs in this worlde, and make vs to pine away: although wee be oppressed so mightily that our life shal be more tedious and bitter to vs than a thousand deaths: yet notwithstanding he still giueth vs time of repentance, and if wee returne vnto him out of hande wee shall finde him throughly re-die to receiue vs, and that he will make the dwelling place of our righteousnesse possible: yea verily if we come vnto him with prayer, and bring a pure, and rightmeening hart with vs. Beholde a very good and profitable lesson. For thereby men are put in minde to acknowledge the gracious goodnesse that God doth to them and the fauour that he sheweth them in that he suffereth them not to be quite cut away at the first blowe: but letteth them alone still in this life. True it is that such a languishing as Iob was in, will be far harder and griuouoser than death: and we see also that when Iob looketh no further but to his owne state, he could finde in his harte to be hanged (for ye see he hath so spoken:) but in the meane season if wee cast our eye vpon the ende that God ameth at, and vpon the marke that he setteth before vs also: then shall wee finde that all our sorrowes are assuaged. And why? wee shall feele that he hath yet still pitie vpon vs. Put the cace that a man feele here as it were his hell, and that in steade of being comforted, he haue the horrible terrour of feeling God to be against him and to be his mortall enimie, and that herevpon he haue as it were a fyre burning in

Iob. 7. c. 15.

his minde: well, when a poore man feeleth such anguish, and therewithall do in his persone suffer on the one side flander, and on the other side so greate paynes and as-faults as shall bee intollerable: true it is that this sayde poore man may at the first brunt wishe and desire death, in somuch that he would require no better than to passe through fire, water, and swoorde: according as wee see how our Lorde Iesus Christe sayeth, that such as are ou-uertaken with this dread of God, would haue the mou-taines to fall vpon them, and that the worlde should bee turned vpside downe to ouerwhelme them. But what for that? If we enter into consideration to say, I perceiue that my God doth here offer me his mercie, and that his meening is that I should drawe nie vnto him: that as oft as we bee scourged at his hand, he calleth vs to him with sweete and amyable voice, incorageing vs to come to him, with assured promise that he wil shewe himselfe gracious and pitifull towards vs: that is a sufficient thing to assuage all our heauinesse. Then seing the cace standeth so, that in our griefes wee haue still some hope left vs:
 ought we not in such wise to accept the good that God doth vs, as we may feele some ease of the burthen of our miseries, though it bee neuer so excessiue, and that it seeme that our shoulders are no more able too beare it?
 VVee see now howe profitable this lesson is to vs, when wee haue the witte to make it our owne: that is to wit, that in the ende wee know that God doth still leaue vs a remedie to serue our turne with, so as our diseases shall not be incurable, at leastwise if wee haue recourse vnto
 him. Herevpon wee muste gather a generall sentence:
 That is to witte, that God doth still pitie men when he chastizeth them for their finnes, and that he neuer useth so great rigour, but that his mercie is continually minggled therewith. And why so? for they be as it were summonings to make vs appeere before him, too the intent that in feeling him to bee our iudge, we should flee too his infinite grace and mercie, not doubting but that he will shewe himselfe a father to all such as shall haue their recourse vnto him. And hereby a man may see the vn-thankfulnessse of the world. For the afflictions are vni-uersall, and there is not the man that hath not his portion in them after his rate: wee passe not through this present life, but that God chastizeth vs many wayes:
 I say, euery of vs seuerally and ali in general: we see how God visiteth vs: And yet in the meane whyle who is he that thinketh vpon his returning vnto God? The number of them is very small and thinne sowed. Then know wee how vnthankfull we bee, that although God call vs to him and be loth that we should perish: yet wee be so stiffnecked, as we shake off all the warnings that he giueth vs. But this doctrine must also profit vs further to make vs trust in God, that although we be persecuted in this worlde, yet notwithstanding he leaueth vs not here bylowe, without calling of vs continually vnto him. And he will not haue vs to be disappoynted when we shall be come to that poynt, so our comming thither be to haue al our recourse vnto him. So then let vs hardily trust that our God will be mercifull to vs, and lette vs thanke him that he hath not taken vs out of this present lyfe at the first blowe, but hath giuen vs leysure to berinke vs of our finnes that we may be forie for them and returne vnto him. But now let vs come too the comfort that is set downe here. If thou come to him betymes, and seeke him with prayer, if thou be right and pure: he will awake to thee.
 This is added purposely bicause men cōtinue stubborne, and although God prouoke them to returne into the way of saluation, yet they passe not for it. Lo why it is purposely sayde that wee muste not kicke so against the pricke,

Luke. 23. c.
30.

pricke, as wee shoulde play the restie iades or become blockishe. To bee shorte wee must haue the forwardnesse which God commaundeth, according as it is sayde that wee must come to him betymes: that is to say we must make no delay by driuing off the time, as wee see these vnthriftes doo, which mocke at God. O (say they) there needes but one good fighe. As who should say they had their lyfe in their sleue, and that they were warranted a certayne time too liue in the worlde, and moreouer, as though repentance were in mans power and that hee could turne againe at his owne pleasure when he listeth, and that the same were not the speciall gifte of God. But [in deede] it is so holie and precious a thing, as it behooueth vs not too let it go so good cheape. Then let vs consider that the worlde goes alwayes backe, and would play the euill detters, who when they haue gotten any long daye of payment, sleepe without care till the terme bee come. Euen so (I say) play the worldlings: when God lengtheneth their liues, wayting that they shoulde repent: they will neuer thinke vpon it till the houre come that they perishe with shame. To the ende then that wee may not doo so: it is sayde that wee must returne vnto God betymes. To be short, here are three things whiche wee muste marke well. One is, that so soone as God visiteth vs, wee muste returne to him out of hande, and not tarry from too day till too morowe. Marke this for one speciall poynt. The seconde is, that wee muste come too him with prayer, condemning our selues in our offences, that wee may obtayne forgiuenesse and mercie at his hande. The third is, that our prayers muste not bee made in hypocrisie, but that wee must bring a pure and rightmeening harte. Thus ye see the three things that are propounded too vs here. True it is that wee cannot dispatche them all three as nowe: howbeit too the intent we may haue an abridgement of the whole doctrine that I haue declared, it behoueth vs too haue these sayde three poynts well imprinted in our minde. To be short, let vs learne to humble our selues vnder the mightie hande of God, as the Apostle exhorteth vs. And herevpon lette vs consider that he is righteous, yea euen in suche sorte, as when he shall execute the roughest of his iudgements vpon vs, wee may not cease to confesse that he doeth all things rightfully and vnpartially, so as wee may haue our mouth shet, and not alledge any thing against him. And not onely let vs acknowledge this rightuoufnesse or iustice too be in God: but also [let vs so doo it] as wee may take profite by it: that is too witte, when he punisheth the rebelles, and the despyzers of his Maiestie, and suche as are vtterly paste mendment: Lette vs assure our selues that he calleth vs home vnto him. Therefore it behoueth vs not too tarie till he smyle vpon vs. But lette vs take this for our learning and let it teache vs rightuoufnesse, according to that which I haue alledged out of the Prophet Esay. And specially when it shall please God to stretch out his hande vpon vs and too smyte vs, let vs not be wearie of his correction, as the Apostle sayeth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. But aboute all sith wee know that God calleth vs, lette vs come vnto him yea euen bytimes, and therewithall let vs bring vnto him a pure and rightmeening hart, beseeching him to forgiue all our faultes: and after the example of Dauid, let vs desire him too clenze vs from all our spottes, according as it behoueth vs too be washed by him that we may present our selues before his face in such purenesse as he commaundeth.

And nowe lette vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of the innumerable offences which wee ceasse not to commit dayly against him, praying him too make vs feele them better than wee haue done, that wee may bee sorie for them, and that in returning vnto him, we may giue him the glorie that belongeth too him, so as wee may bee confirmed more and more in his holie grace, and in the obedience of his law. And so let vs say: Almighty God, &c.

The .xxxj. Sermon, which is the second vpon the eight Chapter.

This Sermon contayneth the rest of the exposition of the fifth and sixth verses, and then as foloweth.

7. Although thy beginning vvere small, thy last state shall bee greatly increased.
8. Inquire (I pray thee) of the former age, and dispose thy selfe too bee taught of the fathers.
9. For vvee are but of yesterday, vvee bee ignorant, bicause our dayes are but a shadowe vpon earth.
10. Shall not they teach thee playnly, and vtter vvordes out of their hart?
11. VVill a rush grovve but in moyste grounde? or can the grasse of a marsh grovve vvithout vvater?
12. Although it bee in his freshnesse and vncutdovvne: yet shall it vvither before any other hearbe.
13. Euen so is it vvith all such as forget God, and the hope of the hypocrite shall perish.

Ifst wee haue to gather the summe of that whiche hath bene expounded alreadie: whiche is, that when wee haue done amisse, and God chastizeth vs therefore: he will alwayes bee ready to shewe vs mercie, if wee call vnto him. And it is expressly sayde, that wee muste make haste too come too him, least wee abuse his patience, as wee see these mockers doo. And afterwarde there is added that wee must Sue vnto him with a right meening and in purenesse. This Suing importeth that we must confesse our sinnes: and the woorde purenesse betokeneth that it muste bee done vnfaynedly. Now then we see, that by this promise God allureth vs to himselfe, and is desirous too drawe vs too him, as if he should say, will men needes perish wilfully when as I am ready to receyue them to mercie, notwithstanding that they bee in the high brode way to damnation? Therefore let vs marke well that sith God openeth the gate so vnto vs, we be double worthie of damnation, if we come not vnto him. VVee know well inough that despayre is the cause of the hardening of the most parte of such as giue themselues too vnthriftinesse, and makes them too play double or quit (as men say:) but when as

God

God sheweth vs that his mercie shall alwayes be readie for vs, ought not that to moue vs? Then lette vs marke well the promisse that is contayned here, and therewithal make hast, feing it is Gods will that we should not driue of, nor delay our cōming vnto him. VVhen God prouoketh vs to thinke vpon our sinnes, let vs not delay our repentance till to morrow. And aboue al, when this voice of God (Comē) soundeth from heauē: let vs not harden our hearts, as it is sayd in the Psalme: but rather let vs do as is sayd in the Prophet Esay, Seeke the Lord while he may be found, cal vpon him while he is nere you, and let the wicked man leaue his owne wayes. For as it is sayd againe in another text, Behold [now is] the fit time, these are the dayes of sauing, when God exhorteth vs to repentance. If we forslow: the occasion will slip away, and it shal abash vs when the gate shal be shet against vs. Ye see then how it behoueth vs to put this Hasting in vre. And lette vs marke well that in our cōming vnto God, we shall gayne nothing by bringing our excuses. For if we haue but one woorde to lay for our selues, God (as we shall see hereafter) shal haue a hundred, yea a thousand articles against vs to cōdemne vs. Then let vs come to God with prayer, as it is sayd here that we must sue vnto him. And this importeth a playne and pure confesing of our sinnes: that is to say, that with our cōfession (when we shall haue sayd I haue sinned,) there muste also follow repentance. For we shall see many that will neuer sticke to say that God hath done rightly in punishing them, and that their faults are as grieuous and grosse as any mens: but yet they will fall to their old byasse againe strayt wayes. If God holde their nozes to the gryndstone by some sicknesse or by some other crosse: then they make fayre promises. But as soone as Gods hande is withdrawn from them: they shewe playnly how there was nothing but dissimulation in them. Therefore whereas wee are here commaunded to confesse our faults: let vs marke well, that wee must haue the sayd purenesse and vprightnesse, which is to cōdemne the euill, in reconcyling our selues vnto God. And here is shewed the fruite [that insueth] when wee shall haue obtayned grace: which is, that God will make the dwelling place of our rightuousnesse too prosper: as if Baldad shoulde say, that when God is at one with men & receyueth them to mercie, he leaueth them not there: but maketh them to feele the effectualnesse of his mercy and loue. God pardoneth not after the maner of such as protest that they forgiue the faultes that men haue committed against them, and yet in the meane while (if they be able to reuendge) sticke not to cracke their credite, when they spy occasions: saying, Hath such a one too doo with mee? and he shall finde that he hath done mee displeasure. Here yee see an euill maner of forgiuing. God deales not so. But when he tellet vs that our sinnes are forgiuen: immediatly he addeth the effect of his forgiuing, by making vs too feele his goodnesse in blissing and prospering vs. And here is expresse mention made of the habitation of our rightuousnesse, for two causes. The first is that Gods grace may be the better vttered, so as it shall shewe it selfe not onely towards our persones, but also towards all our house. If God hauing pitie of a man, doo cause him to feele it bothe in bodie and minde: it is very much alreadie. But if God extende his goodnesse yet further, so as a man is blissed in his children, in his cattell, and in ali his household: doo yee not perceyue yet a larger prooffe of his goodnesse? Yee see then howe it is sayd here, that God maketh that mannes dwelling to prosper, which returneth speedely vnto him. And this dwelling is called the tent of Rightuousnesse, to the intent to put vs continually in remembrance, that when we come vnto God, it muste be with the sayd rightmeening and purcnesse whereof mention hath bene made erewhile. And on the cōtrarie part, when we see that God persecuteth vs: let vs know, that we haue the wood within vs to kindle the fire withall, and that we (I say) haue heaped vp the matter of it within vs by our sinnes. And why so? For if rightuousnesse were dwelling in our houses (that is to say, if bothe wee and our houses were well ordered:) it is certayne that Gods grace would preuent vs, so as wee should feele nothing but all goodnesse and rest. Therefore if God scourge vs and sende vs afflictions: we must blame our sinnes for it. Thus ye see in effect, what wee haue to marke here. And moreouer, that which he addeth, serueth yet further to confirme this present matter: that is to witte, That if our beginnings bee small, God will increace them more and more. This is added for the nonce, that men should not measure Gods grace by that which they perceyue. For here ye see what the cause is that maketh vs fainthearted, and to haue a slender hope: namely bicause wee haue an eye to the worldly meanes, and therevpon make our conclusion what shall become of vs.

Beholde, if a thing bee in suche state or suche: such a thing or such a thing shal be the meane of it, & we consider not that it is easie for him to helpe vs, we are of opinion that the thing is vnpossible. Now then wee see how the holie Ghost ment to correct the froward iudgement that is in vs, in that we imagine of Gods grace after our owne capacite, and by that which we are able to see. Contrarywise it is sayd, that God hath wōderfull meanes & incōprehensible to vs, to augment that which seemeth to be very small: and notwithstanding that wee were as good as at deathes doore, so as it might seeme we should neuer bee plucked out of our miseries: yet shall God well finde some good way out of them. This cannot be perceyued at the first: his intent is also too bring vs low, too the ende wee may learne too flee too him for refuge. For what would become of vs, if that were not? How shoulde our fayth bee exercyzed? If wee make our reckening too say that God will worke according too that which wee conceyue by the inferiour causes of this worlde: wherein shall Gods power be knowen? wherein shoulde his sayde grace bee so wonderfull, as to make vs amazed at it? As in deede it is sayde in the Psalme, that when God guydeth his in sauing them, it is as it were in a dreame: and the matter is so strange, that eueryman is astonied when he beholdeth that which was not looked for. So then lette vs marke well, that when our sinnes shall haue sente vs downe to the bottomlesse pitte, so as wee may thinke our selues vtterly shet vp in despayre: wee must fight against our owne vnderstanding, and conclude that God can well skil to increace the things that are small. For (as the Scripture sayeth,) it is his office and peculiar propertie to call that which is not, as though it were, to the ende too giue vs a newe being which wee haue not. Lo what wee haue to gather of this streyne. Now to giue authoritie to his talke, Baldad sayeth, Aske the yeeves of olde tyme, and dispose thy selfe too inquire, of the fathers. VVhereby he doeth vs too vnderstande, that the thing which he hath spoken, is knowne to be true by al experience of long time. Inquire (sayeth he) not onely of them that liue at this day: but of those that are departed long ago. Search from age too age, and thou shalt finde, that God neuer reiected such as come vnto him: & that their expectatiō was neuer superfluous nor vnauailable, verely if they sought him without dissimulation. And afterward he addeth, VVe are but of yesterday, we are vnskillfull, for our dayes are but a shadow.

But

But the fathers will answer thee, and speake in the strength of their beart, that is too say, in such wise as thou shalt haue a full resolution, and a stedfast grounde and reason which shall not come from the tip of the toung, but from a wel foreconsidered vnderstanding. VVhen Baldad speakeh here of the fathers: no doubt but he meneth the former experience of all times, as we haue touched already: and he speakeh not only of the old men that liued at that time, but also of such as were already dead. A man will perchance demaund how [ it should be done? ] w as it possible for Iob too go to bee instructed at their handes? The answer is easie: namely, that it is not ment of the men, but of the things that had bene done in the time of them, accordingly as their stories doo witness vnto vs. Beholde, Baldad ment to say thus: I bring thee not an vnknown doctrine, for when thou shalt haue made a long backsearch, euen from the creation of the worlde, thou shalt find that God hath alwayes wrought after the same maner: that is to wit, that so soone as men haue returned from their iniquities, God hath reached them his hande, and the gate of saluation hath bene opened vnto them: this (sayth he) shalt thou vnderstande. Also this instruction is verie profitable for vs: namely, that we must not shette our eyes agaynst that which God sheweth vs, and hath shewed vs in all times of the worlde: but rather we must consider the things that haue bene done in former times, that wee may applie them too our owne vse. True it is that as men giue themselues to vanitie, they cannot gather their wites, vnto them, to applie them to such a studie, except God compell them therevnto. And heere ye see the cause why Dauid protesteth, that when he was afflicted, hee called too remembrance the former years of olde time, and bethought himself of them. And therefore we must lay this for a grounde: namely, that we bebinke vs well of Gods workes, and not onely of those which we haue seene in our owne time, but also of that which hath bene reported to vs of olde. It hath alwayes bene gods wil, that there should be stories to the ende that the remembrance of things might be preserved by: that meanes. And notwithstanding that men take pleasure in reading of stories: yet is it but a vaine sporting of themselues, bicause they applie not the matters of all former tymes too their instruction, which are a true schoole to teach vs to rule our life. For there we beholde Gods iudgements: there we beholde howe hee hath assisted such as fled to him for succour: and specially how he hath confirmed his gracious goodnesse, insomuch that although all men were saythlesse, yet hee reserved some men to the knowledge of his truth, howbeit that the full time was not yet then come. To be short, if our eies were cleare & cleane, and not so dimmed as they be: we should see that Gods workes are a deepe sea and bottomlesse pit of wisdom. Then if we minde to bee well settled in good doctrine: let vs learne, not only to looke a foote or twain before our nozes (as men say): but also to stretch out our wits to that which happened before we were borne. And about all things, we ought to bee moued so to do, forasmuch as we se it hath pleased God, that there should be as it were a glasse, wherein wee might beholde, after what maner he hath in all times preserved and mainteyned his Church since the worlde was made, by strengthening the good men to fight agaynst all assaults: and finally how he hath chastized his owne children, yea and double corrected them when they became hard harted: insomuch that when he hath admonished them by his prophets, & they haue continued in stubbornesse: they haue bene faine to feele a greater and more excessiue rigor. Insomuch then as we see these things, and that God hath so provided by his providence in this behalfe, that the thing which might haue bene buried, is now laid afore vs for our instruction: I pray you ought not we to exercise our selues therein the more earnestly? Then let vs beare in mind, how it is said here, that we must aske of them that haue liued afore vs: howbeit not of their persons, for we haue no access to the dead, neither is it lawfull for vs to seke to them for counsell: God hath not ordeyned them to be prophets, further forth than by the seruice which they did in their owne time. S. Peter, S. Paule and the rest of the Apostles, & the Prophets speake vnto vs at this day: but that is by theyr writings which are immortall. As for their persons, God hath withdrawne them from our companie. Yet must we aske of the time wherein they liued, and we must also follow the records which they haue yeilded of gods works, and thereby learne to be stablished in his feare. But the reason that must moue vs most of all herevnto, is added when Baldad sayth, That we be but of yesterday, and are ignorant, bicause our life is but a shadow. True it is that this present text may be expounded twoo wayes. There are which think that Baldad ment to say, O I know thou wilt not esteeme that which I can bring of mine owne: thou wilt say I am not so old, that me should giue ear to me as to a wise man. VVell, put the case that my saying be nought worth, bicause my person is not agreeable therevnto: yet shalt thou finde, that the olde men will tell thee as much. And I set downe this interpretation, bicause it may go for good. Howbeit if all things be necerly looked to, it will appeere that the plaine meaning of this text is, That Baldads mouing of Iob to inquire of the time past, was bicause that if we looke no further than before vs, it shall be to small purpose. True it is that the verie same which God sheweth vs from day to day, is ynough for our instruction: so as there shall neede no other processe too make vs vnexcusable, than that which we shall haue perceyued in one yeare or in twoo, yea or euen in one day. God sheweth vs so many things, as there remaines no more excuse for vs, neither can we alledge, I neuer wist of this, God neuer gaue me knowledge of this. I say we see ynough before our eyes for our instruction. But such is our slothfulnesse, as God had neede to chawe our morsels to vs aforehand, and yet shall we haue much adoo to swallowe them downe when they bee so chawed, as the proverbe sayeth. Lo heere wherefore hee giueth vs knowledge of the tyme past. As for example. If wee dispise all that is come to passe before our birth, and say, O I shal be wise ynough by considering the things that we see of our owne life: was it Gods wil that the presidents which hee giueth vs of the time so far past, should be to no purpose? VVhen the scripture telleth vs, that euer since the creating of the world, God hath gouerned me, chastized them for their offences, pitied the, & with his goodnesse continually surmounted the naughtinesse of those that had don amisse: and that about all things he had defended those that were his, & succored the in their afflictions: seing that God from age to age discovereth things so greatly for our behoofe: wil we haue eueriwhit of it despised, & thrust vnder foot? do ye not see to vilaynous an vnthankfulnesse, when we thrust farre from vs, the thing that is more than profitable for vs? Let vs mark then that this is the very thing wherunto he that speakeh (namely Baldad) hath pretended to bring Iob. And therefore shall it grieue vs to inquire of the things that are for our welfare? Let vs consider a little of our owne age. VVhat are wee? VVee are of yesterday. VVhen men haue cast vp their account throughly: they are but as snayles, which vanish away out of hande. True it is that a man may liue fiftie or threescore yeares, but yet must we come backe to that which is sayd in the song of

Exod. 20. 4.
 Moyses, namely that before God, a thousand yeeres are but as one day, and therefore that a mans lyfe is but as a dreame that is past already. If wee considered well the shortnesse of our lyfe, how it glideth away as a shadow: it is certayne that wee would be so much the more diligent to inquire after things past. And why? For we are ignorant if we looke no further than to the sayde shortnesse of life. But Gods will is that the things which have bene done before we were borne, shoulde be as it were present with vs by stories, and by that which is left vs in them. Ye see then how gracious God hath shewed himselfe towards vs, in that he hath gathered all times together, and brought to passe, that a man whiche liueth but fiftie yeeres in this worlde, may be able to comprehend fife thousand yeeres that were before him, and to dispose them, put them in order, and knowe them. Yee see howe long time slipped away afore the fludde. Very well: howe went things then? how hath God wrought since the fludde? when it liked him too prepare himselfe a Church, after what maner did he gouerne it? How did the faithfull behaue themselves which were persecuted for witnesssing the truthe? Afterward, when faultes were crept in, howe did God redresse them? Againe, howe did the Church continue in his state, after it was set a flote? I say wee may see all these things as it were before our eyes, and yet notwithstanding there are aboute fife thousand yeeres passed. It is true. But (as I haue sayde) it is a grace of God whiche cannot be pryzed sufficiently. And surely this ought to spurre vs well forward, not onely to looke before our feete: but also to cast our eyes further of, knowing that God hath set vs as vpon a stage, where he will haue vs to discover the time, not onely of an hundred yeeres or more, but also euer since the beginning of the world. Now wee see what was Baldads intent, and also in what wise wee ought to apply this sentence to our owne vse: that is to wit, that seeing we are but of yesterday, and that our life is but a shadowe, (that is to say, that wee abide not so long time in this worlde, that the things which wee see here may suffyze vs:) it is good to looke further of, accordingly as God giueth vs meanes to inquire of the time past. And so (in effect) we be warned, to consider well all that euer God sheweth vs of his workes past, and not to wey them as things that belong not to vs, but as things that are brought to our remembrance, to teache vs. So then, let vs apply all the stories of former times to our instruction, that they may leade vs to put our whole trust in God, to call vpon him in our necessities, and to feare him and honour him as requireth. Lo what we haue to beare away in this streyne. Now it followeth that as Rushes grow not but in moyst places, and also that as the grasse in moorish grounds cannot cherish it selfe without water: in so muche that when such herbes flourish, they wither away of themselves without cutting vp: Euen so the hope of the hypocryte shall perish, and likewise the hope of all sub as forget God. This is cleane contrarie to that which we saw afore. This sentence was alleaged already at the beginning of the Chapter. But Baldad had added, that God will be mercifull to suche as returne too him, notwithstanding that they had runne royt for a time. And now he returneth to that which he sayde afore: namely that God will roote out the hypocrites and wicked doers. He vseth a very fitte similitude, saying: Can the weedes of marish-grounds (as rushes and suche other like hearbes) growe but in a moyst ground? There are many hearbes that will grow well inough without water vpon mountaynes, yea euen where there shall not be a whit of earth, but bare rockes, and yet neuertheless we shall see some hearbes to growe there: but they haue that propertie by nature. The rushe and such other hearbes cannot grow but in a marish. For their nourishment is of water: the ground must be alwayes moyste, or else will this geere wither by and by. Then like as a rushe or other moorish hearbe, cannot growe but in a moyst place: euen so the man that hath not his sap of God, muste needs perishe with all his fayre shewes, and quite wither away. This similitude is not set downe in this texte onely: but it is also very rife in the reste of the holy Scripture, as wee knowe. It is sayde in the firste Psalm, That the man which setteth himselfe wholly too the minding of Gods lawe, is like a tree planted by a riuers side: and that because his roote is continually soked, the tree doth neuer wither nor die away, but continueth still in his freshnesse. And why? It is too shewe that God neuer suffereth good menne too perishe. For his grace floweth alwayes vpon them, too maynteyne them too the ende, yea and too maynteyne them without ende. For we be watred, not onely too be maynteyned here for a certaine time: but for too come too euerlasting life. Yee see then that suche as yeelde themselves wholly vnto God, are as a tree planted by a riuers side, so as they flourish for euer. But this is yet better expressed in the seuenth of Ieremie: because the Prophet compryzeth bothe the partes there. Cursed (sayeth he) is the man that trusteth in man, and setteth fleshe too be his hope or strength. He shall be as grasse or as the heath that shooteth vp a little among the sande in the wilderness. Well, it is true that there shall be some freshnesse in it, howbeit the same shall be scorched incontinent by meanes of heate, in so muche that suche a shrubbe shall be burnt vp by and by of the Sunne. Euen so standeth the case with all suche as are freshe and greene, and put not their trust in God, but eyther trust in themselves, or els haue their eyes vpon creatures. But happie is the man that trusteth in God: for what soeuer heate of the Sunne he haue, though he seeme too be burnt vp: yet shall he be so watred, and God will giue him suche nourishment, as he shall not decay. And although that the Prophete Ieremie, by setting downe these two comparisons too giue light the one to the other, doo sufficiently expresse that whiche is sayde here: yet notwithstanding there is yet more in this texte. For here Baldad hath chozen a kinde of hearbe that cannot be nourished without water. In the Psalm it is sayde, that the wicked shall be like the grasse that groweth vpon the house toppe. We see that some weedes growe well vpon house toppes: But the good hearbes shall be trampled vnder foote. Men will walke vpon a medowground: neuertheless when the time of the yeere commeth, yee see that the hearbes of the meddowes doo growe and flourish. And although the medowe be mowen, yet doeth the grasse spring, and become freshe againe. But what commeth of the weedes vpon a house toppe? can they stande a man in any steade? No: but it is sayde in the sayde texte, that a man may well fill his armes full of them, but hee shall finde no foyzon, he shall finde no fruite in them. And verely when a man sees the house toppe ouergrown with weedes, hee sayeth not, God blisseth these hearbes: but contrarywise it were a good turne that they were plucked vp, and the Sunne also burneth them vp before they be ripe, so as they come not too any perfection. Yee see then that although the wicked be exalted, and be had in more estimation than those that are blisset of God: yet neuertheless they dry away after such a sorte, as they bring forth no frute: how fayre shew soeuer they make, there is no substantialnesse

Psalm. 3.
 Ieremy. 17.
 b. 6.
 Psalm. 129.
 b. 6.

in them. And thus ye see what is ment here by speaking of rushes and moorish weedes. To be shorte, let vs note, that if we will profite well, we must draw our sap from God, and we must bee neere vnto him, and he must not cease to water vs, but must bee as continuall water too quicken vs and to giue vs lustinesse, without which it is impossible that wee shoulde indure one minute of an houre. Ye see in effect what is conteyned here. Nowe, were we throughly settled in beleefe of this doctrine: it is certayne that wee shoulde seeke God with another manner of affection than we do. But what? Every man holdes him selfe too that which he hathe, and yet wee consider not from whence the good is giuen vs. By means wherof euerie man feedeth him selfe with winde as it is spokē in the prophet Osee: that is to say, men beguile them selues wittingly and willingly. It seemeth to them that they be rich and want nothing: and yet all is but wind, that is to say, nothing but foolish ouerweening. As to outward appearance we may well be freshe and flourish, and men may commend that which is in vs: but when all comes to all, it is stark nothing. Neuertheless we be so dazed [in our owne conceit,] that euerie of vs weeneth him selfe too bee better than God, when there is any goodly shewe in vs, so as wee neede none other folks too deceiue vs: for euerie of vs beguileth him selfe through his owne fond folies. But by the way let vs marke well, how God plucketh vs backe too him selfe, shewing vs how we be too too much blinded in trusting to our selues, or to that which is not. Let vs marke well then that God procureth our welfare by this means when he saith, I am the fountaine of liuely water, I am the true riuer, it standeth you on hand to be watted continually with my grace, or else there wyl be nothing but drinesse in you: and although ye loke green yet is it nothing, ye must wither away. And this is it that Baldad meeneth heere. Although (saith he) that men cut not vp those herbes, yet will they drie away if they haue no moysture. Yea it shall vtterly amaze men to see howe they shall be quite withered euen in the middes of their greatest pride. Euen so is it with the hope of hypocrites. Heereby we be done to vnderstand, that although men put not to their hand, God will consume vs by a secrete and vnknowne working, so as we must be faine to come to naught, except it so be that we haue trusted in hym, and haue taken deepe and liuelie roote in him. True it is that sometimes God rooteth vp the wicked in punishing them by mans hand: yea and hee matcheth them one against another in such sort, as they deface and destroy them selues. And oftentimes we see with our eyes, that God vndermineth those that haue presumed so much, and taken vpon them so maruellously. VVe see (I saye) that God consumeth them, no man knowes how: and they melt away as snow against the sunne. Men thinke it strange [saying] howe is it possible that this shoulde come to passe? how happeneth that this man is in suche plight? But we consider not of what force Gods curse is. Then let vs marke well, that God without seruing of his turne by men, can make, not only men to fade away, but also their greate castles with them, and whatsoever other possessions, Lordships and riches they haue. All must needes perish when God bloweth vpon them, according to that which is precisely expressed heere, namelye that although suche weedes be not cut vp, yet they shall not fayle too wither, bycause they haue not moysture to ripen them withall.

But we must also consider well how it is said, that the hope of hypocrites shall perish. And this bringeth vs agayne to that which I haue touched already: that is too witte, that suche as haue nothing else but smoke and vntuth in them, cease not to be freshe and greene, yea to theyr owne seeming, and after the opinion of men. And so ye see heere what it is that deceiueth vs. For we be naked of all goodnesse, and yet we be so brutish, as we weene our selues to be very rich, and therefore God is nobody with vs. Lo why Baldad hath spoken heere precisely of the hope of hypocrites: as if he had said, True it is that hypocrites will make faire shewes, and not onely they will like well of them selues for this goodly outward countenance of vertue: but also it seemeth that God dandleth them in his lappe, and fauoreth them in all poyntes. But yet shall they wither and drie away, so as it shall be a wonder to see how they be vndermined and vtterly ouerthrowne. So then let vs not wilfully beguile our selues: that is to say, although we haue some worldly prosperitie for a time: yet let vs not sleepe vpon it, nother let vs be tied to the riches and pleasures of this world, which hinder vs in looking vnto God: but let vs rest our selues wholly vpon him, according as he is the wellspring of all our welfare and prosperitie. Ye see the what is imported in this word Hope, whereof mention is made in this place. Finally we haue also to marke, that Baldad describeth the hypocrites, saying that they haue forgotten God. Yea doubtlesse. For although hypocrites prate neuer so much of God: yet for all that, they haue quite forgotten him. But the true remembring of God is, to feele that all our welfare lieth in him, that we must not seeke for saluation otherwhere than at him alone, and that withoute his goodnesse and mercy wee muste needes go to destruction. Ye see then what is meant by forgetting God: namely, when men haue a selfeliking of their owne vertues, insomuch as they thinke the selues able to aduaunce and maintaine them selues, and in the meane while come not to God to seeke remedie of their miseries at his hand, whereas we ought to haue recourse vnto him, not only for one time, but as often as we shall haue neede of helpe. Then do we not forget God, when we acknowledge that we must receiue al goodnes at his hand, bycause we be vtterlie void of it as in respect of our selues. But they that trust in their owne vertues, they that imagine to purchace estimation by their owne policie, they that presume vpon them selues in what wise soeuer it be: those are the men that forget God. And why so? for they haue pluckt his office from hym, and vsurped it to themselues. Also, do not they forget God, which are giuen too their wicked affections and fleshy lusts? VVe see that such as liue at their owne ease cannot be tamed by any manner of means: there is no talking with them of making them to walke in the feare of God. As for him that hath this worlds goodes, if a mā tell him he must humble himselfe: he shall neuer bring it about. And why? His riches haue made him hornes too dosse with against God. A whorehunter that is plunged in his villanie, if a man go about too drawe hym backe by counsell and correction, amendeth not, but rather appayreth. Then all suche as are so caried away by their owne affections, are as wilde beastes, and cast them selues wilfully into destruction, and a man cannot bring them backe agayne to the righte waye. And why? They haue forgotten G O D, and consider not, that to walke aright, it behoueth vs to haue God continually before our eyes.

And in very deede heere ye see the title which the holy scripture giueth too the faithfull, namely that lyke as it is saide that the hypocrites forget God: so on the contrarie parte when God intēdeth to marke out those that are his, and too shewe which is the chiefe poynte

that he requireth at their hand: it is said, beholde, suche a one is as it were in Gods presence: he walketh as before God. So then let vs learne too exercise our selues heerein, and to acknowledge Gods benefites throughly, to the end we may thanke him, and call vpon him too succoure vs in our necessities: assuring oure selues, that if we come to beg of him, he will so moysten vs with his grace, that although we feele greate heates, (that is too say, although wee haue sore afflictions in this worlde) yet shall we neuer drie away. And why? Bycause that when we haue once taken sure rooting in God, he wil not suffer vs to quayle, but will mainteine vs continually, vntill he haue taken vs vp to him selfe to make vs partakers of the heauenly life: yea and he will water vs with his grace in this present world, and make vs feele the same so farforth as shall be needefull for vs.

Now let vs fall flat before the face of our good God, with acknowledgment of oure faultes, praying him not too looke vpon our offences, to punish them as they deserue: but that wee may learne too be our owne iudges in condemning our selues, and that we may come vnto hym, as to the phisicion of all oure diseases, and that hee will so heale vs of them, that beeing at one wyth hym, wee may walke in all vprightnesse: that by that meanes we maye bee partakers of that which he hathe promised to his faythfull ones: and that in thys worlde wee enioying the recorde that hee gyueth vs of his fatherlye loue, maye growe more and more in the affection whyche hee gyueth vs too loue and honoure hym, vntill such tyme as hee haue brought vs into the glory that he tarieth for vs in heauen, and which we possesse alreadye by hope. That it may please him to graunte this grace, not only vnto vs, but also vnto all people and nations of the earth. &c.

The xxxij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the eight Chapter.

13. Such are the vvayes of the hypocrite, and of al those that forget God.
14. Their hope is cut off, their expectation is a spiders vweb.
15. He shall leane vpon his house, and it shall not hold: he vvould hold hym by it, and it shall not stand.
16. If a tree be planted in the sunne, his braunches vvill spread ouer the garden.
17. It shall reach about the fountaine, and it shall spread out it selfe to the house of stone.
18. It is plucked vp from his place, so as a man may say to it, I know thee not.
19. His ioy shall be to be planted agayne in another place.
20. Euen so God vvill not cast away the sound man, nother vvill hee reache his hande too the vvicked.
21. Vntill he haue filled thy mouth vvith laughter, and thy lippes vvith gladnesse.
22. That thine enemies be confounded, and the dvvelling place of the vvicked shall not stand.

Have declared heeretofore what ment by forgetting God: which thing it standeth vs in hande too marke well. For vnder that worde is comprised mens hipocrisie, that is to say their vanitie. VVill wee then haue such a holynesse as shall be acceptable and a loved afore God? Let vs looke that we walke as before him, euen as though hee were present with vs: and in all our wayes let vs assure our selues that we are in his custodie, and that it belongeth vnto hym to guide vs and to order vs. Therefore when wee haue such a remembraunce of God: we shall no more be giuen to suche manner of vanitie, as the holy Ghost tearemeth heere by the name of hipocrisie. And too expresse this the better, he saith: that the trust of sub, is like the cobweb which the spiders weaue. I know that the spider weaves a web, but there is no strength in it. Euen so is it with them that build vpon vayne hopes. They beare them selues in hande, that it shoulde continue to the [worlde]s ende: but God auengeth him selfe of suche presumption.

Heere we see cleerely what it is to forget G O D. If wee considered well howe God referueth too himselfe the honoure of maintening vs and of blissing vs al our life long: it is certayne that we should not be so foolish nor so farre overseene, as to beare our selues in hand with this or that. For we know that mens abusing of the selues with vaine hopes, commeth of nothing else, but bycause they yeld not God the honoure which he requireth, and which is also due vnto him of right. Let vs marke well then, that there is but one onely meane and remedie to drawe vs from all our vanities, and to make vs walke in a good way: that is to witte, to knowe what Gods office is. Eut what? There are very fewe that gyue their minds that way, for it is to be seene, that the worlde is full of the said hipocrisie. But so much the more behoueth it vs to marke well this streyne, to the end that if our wittes haue erst bin so dulle as we knew not God: or if they haue bin rouing heere and there: when as wee haue gone astray after that manner, we must at leastwise bethinke our selues when God calleth vs agayne to him, and sheweth vs that he will not haue vs to abide in our foolish trusts, but will haue vs to haue some certayne resting poynt, that we may not builde as the spiders do, but haue stayednesse in him. For certainly heere is a comparison betwene the resting wherewith we oughte to rest vpon all Gods promises: and the trust wherewith we pretend to rest vpon creatures. Then do ye see heere, how the holy Ghost condemneth all the trust that wee haue in creatures. And why so? For can we find any steadfastnesse out of God? It is certayne we shall finde none. And therefore all suche as giue ouer them selues vnto creatures and hang vpon them, meene to shut God out of dores, and to driue him a great way off. Thinke we that hee will suffer suche dealing, and that hee will not curse all these vaine hopes? This sentence hath more neede to be well minded, than to bee well expounded in woordes. VVe see that the whole matter consisteth in the practize, and in the well knowing of it: for it is certayne that men beare them selues in hande, that if they finde worldlye and inferioure meanes, the same wyll serue theyr turne wellynough. But what? in doing so, men yeeld not God his due honoure, but rather wrest it from him: howbeit, God will auenge him selfe of it. So then, if we will not haue God to be our enimie, and to ouer-

to ouerthrowe all that we labour to builde vp: we must rest whollie vpon his goodnesse, power, and grace. And then shall we haue no spiderswebbes, but an abiding stedfastnesse. On the contrarie parte, if we glorifie not God as becommeth vs: it is certaine that the things which we see with our eyes to fall vpon the hypocrites, may well be all fulfilled in vs, forasmuch as we profite not our selues by such examples. But now let vs come to the similitude that is added heere. Mention hath bin made heretofore of a rush that is in a drie place. VVe knowe that the nature of it is too growe in a moorish ground. Then if a rush, or such other like herbes growe in a drie and moysturelesse place: it must needs be seared vp before his time. And though no man put hand to it too plucke it vp, nor eyther cut it vp or mowe it: yet must it go to destruction. But contrariwise it is said, that the tree which hath taken deepe and liuelie roote, and is planted by a fountayne: shall spred out his braunches and boughes, yea euen too a house, or else it shall bee as strong as a house of stone. Agayne ye see some tree that is well planted, and yet notwithstanding the master of the garden will take it vp, not of purpose to destroy it altogether, for the tree is good of it selfe, and well rooted: but bycause it is not in conuenient place, and therefore the master takes it vp to plant it agayne elswhere. Now if a man set it in a larger place, where it shall haue no impeachment, and where it may finde good bathing and moysture: ought the tree to complaine of it? Is the state of it impaired? No: but it is rather a cheering of it. Not that trees haue any vnderstanding to be glad of it: but because the case is heere, to shewe that the tree is not appayred at all, when it is so remoued from one place to another. But this similitude must bee applied too those whome God plucketh not vp for a doo. He taketh them vp for a time, but he preferueth their roote, to the intent that being new planted agayne, they may spring a newe and bring forth frute. This is done dayly at such times as God chastizeth vs, yea euen with such roughnesse, as it may well seeme at the first, that he will vtterlie ouerwhelme vs, so as there is no more hope for vs: but anone after, he giueth vs the grace to returne vnto him. This is as if a rich man that hath greate possessions, should dig vp a tree in his garden, and set it in a field where it might burnish better. The Sunne cherisheth it, and the ground where it is planted is fitter for it to take deeper roote, so as the tree waxeth big, and is able too gather greater strength. After the same sort worketh God with those that are hys. And therefore if wee bee scourged by hys hand, yea euen so hardlie, as it seemeth to be as it were a kind of death: yett must we not be quite out of hart for it, bycause wee knowe that God can well set vs in good state agayne, so as we shall flourish, and he will set vs in prosperitie as before. Ye see what is declared heere in effect. And for a conclusion Baldad addeth, That God wil not take a wicked man by the hand to fauoure him, nor forsake the good menne, but will rather fill their mouthe with laughter. True it is that heere he speaketh of Iob. And in his person he meeneth to do vs to witte, that all such as returne vnto God, shall finde him gracious and fauorable towards them. In fine he saith, The tent of the wicked shall not be able to stand: but God will put all good mens enimies to shame. And he will not only shewe him selfe fauorable too their persons: but if they bee troubled or greeued, hee will put himselfe betwixte them, and shewe that he hath them vnder his defence and protection.

And heere we see a sentence that is well worthe too be noted: that is too witte, that we be like trees that are taken vp out of some one place to be planted agayne in another. I speake of the children of God. For the wicked may well bee taken vp by the rootes also: but that shall bee too continue without hope too bee planted agayne, as wee heare the threatenng that is made by oure Lorde Iesus Christ when he saith, that euery tree which bringeth not forth the frute shall bee hewen done and made firewood. Lo heere what horrible blowes God giueth to the wicked. And why? for he seeth them too be vtterlie reprobate and giuen vp to damnation: and therefore he must stub them vp for euer. Also he saith likewise, that euery tree whiche is not planted by the heauenly father, shall be plucked vp by the roote. But we shall see many, who for a time will make faire countenance, and it will seeme that they be euen of those trees which God hath set in his garden, and in his owne possession: for there are hypocrites mingled with the faithful. They wold fayne be of that sort that is most aduanced in the Church. But what for that? They be not planted to haue any good and sure roote: and therefore in the end God must stub them vp. As much is to be saide of the vine, namely that oure Lorde Iesus Christ is the stocke of the vine, and we the braunches that were grafted therein. If we bring forth good frute: the father manureth vs, and we feele that hee hath his had always vpon vs, too make his graces available, and too multiplie them. But if we beare euill frute, or if we be altogether frutelesse, so as God may make this complaint which he maketh by his prophet, (My vine, what haue I done to thee that thou bearest me nothing but bitternesse: I haue looked for some sweetnesse at thy hand, and it seemeth that thou woldest choke thy master: VVhat shall I then do, but plucke thee vp? this oughte too make oure hearts stand vp vpon our heads, for (as I saide) we are as good as quite stubbed vp. And in deede all the afflictions that light vpon the despisers of God, and vpon suche as are past mending, are as many stubbings vp. True it is that they wither not at the first blowe: for if God punishe a wicked man hee will yet giue him leysure to bethinke himselfe and too come home agayne: neuerthelessse, the enimies of God cannot feele any one chastizement in the world, but God beginneth already to stub them vp, and the same tendeth too their finall destruction. And wherefore? [Bycause] they be so farre off from amending at Gods scourging, that they rather appaire and sharpen the nselues agaynst him. And heere in it is to be seene, that their naughtinesse is vnreouerable. And so let vs marke, that as ofte as God listeth vp his hande agaynst the wicked, it is already as it were a stubbing of them vp. But as for vs that are adopted too be his children, (yea verely if we haue receyued that grace without dissimulation) let vs marke that if God scourge vs in thys worlde, it is not to make our state the worse. Therefore it doth no harme, but rather we be renewed [by it] and we feele what a care God hath of vs. Thus ye see an inestimable comfort to the children of God. And therewithall we see also what neede we haue to flee therevnto for succoure. VVhy? It is pitie to see, to how many calamities our life is subiecte.

Dayly it seemeth that GOD would plucke vs vp, and that we should perish. Thys is generall to all men, but yet the faithfull are more afflicted than the other. And heere ye see why Saint Paule sayth, that if our hope be but only in this world, so as it resteth heere beneath: then are wee the wretchedest creatures, and the vnbeleeuers haue a better time than we, and their state is farre happier.

Forasmuch then as it seemeth that wee shoulde bee plucked vp euery day, and that we should be so muche

Mat. 7. c. 19.
Iob. 15. a. 2. 6

Mat. 15. b. 13.

Iob. 15. a. 1. 5.

Esay. 5. a. 4.

1. Cor. 15. c. 19.

afflicted: what shoulde become of vs, if we had not the comfort that is set downe heere? But in very deede (too speake properly) we be not plucked vp, when God beateh vs with his rodde too humble vs: but it seemeth so too oure vnderstanding, specially when we be pressed with miseries. For if God send vs any meane affliction, such as maye happen vnto vs euery day, as some sicknesse, or some wrong, or some losse of goodes, or some other affliction: thys is no plucking of vs vp, I meane as oure affections take it too bee: but it is as if a man shoulde shred off dyuers of the boughes of a tree, when he sees there is too manye of them. And well maye a man cut off the one halie of a tree, and yet shall it continue still howsoeuer the world go, and afterwarde sproute out new branches. Euen so is it with vs, when God vseth some meane corrections, and falleth not too extreame rigoure. But if God list to trie vs to the vttermost, (as it maye come too passe that wee shall be brought euen to the graue, and too oure seeming there shall not bee leste one onely sparke of life more,) so that the faithfull are in a pecke of troubles when the hand of God listeth vp it selfe agaynst them: and they looke about them heere and there, and finde no way too get out of their afflictions: but the mischiefe pursueth them, and it seemeth that God is full bent neuer to gyue them any release more: when the afflictions are so great and excessiue, (ye see what is meant by plucking vp or by stopping vp) what is to be done then? As ofte as God chastizeth vs, after what manner so euer it be, let vs not be astonied though the correction seeme greuous too vs in respect of our owne nature. And why so? For our desire is to continue still, and that our state shoulde not be diminished. Thus ye see what we couet. But if God cut off any branche from vs, there must needes be some gainestriving and some gaine saying: yea verely in oure naturall vnderstanding. But yet neuerthelesse, let vs loke that we take hart when the affliction greueth vs, and let vs enter into the account that is set downe heere. Yee see it is true that if a man cut off any parte of a tree, he abateth the beautie of it for one yere after: but yet it is certayne that when a good labourer, that will further hys owne profite, and playe the good husbnde, shreddeh a tree, he meaneth not to make it to impaire, but that the tree should thriue the better. Then sith the cace standeth so: let vs put our selues into Gods hande, and pray hym too dispose of vs: for hee knoweth howe he may make vs to beare frute. Therefore let vs suffer hym to cut and shred off some boughes from vs, and let vs fight agaynst this natie grieffe, and against their sorrowfulness that we conceiue at the firste brunt. Let vs fight (I say) against it, yea euen in suche wise as we bee subdued to say, very well, seeing it pleaseth God to shred off some parte of vs, hee knoweth wherefore he doth it.

But we must passe yet further. For it is not ynough for vs to shewe our selues pacient in some small or common aduersitie. But if God bring vs too deathes dore, that is to saye, if he vse suche extremitie in chastizing of vs, as it may well seeme he intendeth to destroy vs, and that when we shall haue debated the matter off and on, we cannot but condemne our selues and be vtterlie abashed: yet notwithstanding we must still continue steadfast, as shall be said heereafter: so that although God kill vs, yet must we trust still in him. For he is the phisicion that can heale, not only our woonds, but also death it self. And therefore it is sayde in the Psalme, Although I shoulde walke in the shadowe of death, so long as I see the sheepe hooke of my God, (that is too saye, so long as hee sheweth him selfe to be my shepherde) I shall comfort my selfe therewith. Then let vs learne to fighte agaynst this temptation which prouoketh vs to despaire when God (to our seeming) presseth vs out of measure, and when we are able to abide no more, yet let vs stande vp and say, are we plucked vp? And will not God plante vs agayne? If a husbandman may remoue a tree from one place too another, shall not God haue more power? Then let vs trust in him, and let vs not doubt but that whē it pleaseth him to haue pitie vpon vs, we shall be restored to better state than we were in afore. Yea verely, but the meanes thereof shall not bee after mans fancie.

Also it becommeth vs not to measure Gods grace and power after our reason: let vs not do him that wrōg: but let vs assure our selues, that for all the power which he hath giuen to mortall men, there is no whit abated from him selfe: but he hath much more and withoute comparison, so as he cannot be letted to ayde vs in our greatest aduersities. VVhen oure calamities shall bee vtterlie deadlye, then will hee restore vs agayne in such wise, as we shall haue whereof to reioyce in hym. But now remayneth that this be applied to our owne vse. As I haue touched afore, we see what the state of this present life is. Euery man ought to looke to him selfe, there is not that man which cannot skill to complayne, and which maketh not his moanes, or at leastwise which though he vtter it not with his mouth, doth not keepe it locked vp in sorrowe, [as as hee saith in him selfe,] Alas, suche an inconuenience is befallne me, I am the worse for that God hath diminished me so much. VVee can skill well ynough to bethinke vs of all these things, and the deuill also will not misse to put them in oure heads, that wee mighte be greued and tormented, yea euen to fret and fume against God. VVhat is too bee done then? Behold heere the meane too beate backe suche temptations: that is to witte, too consider that if God wotke after such a manner towardes his: all shall turne to their welfare, they shall make their profite euen with aduantage, of that which seemed to tend too their destruction.

And heere ye see euen that kind of temptation is set before vs, which at the firste blush seemed most strange and grisly: that is, when mention is made of plucking vp by the roote. For then ye see the tree is dead, it is quite and cleane dispatched. For wherein consisteth the life of the tree? In the roote. Then after that the earth is taken away from it, there is no more life in it. So is it with vs: for if God take from vs that which belongeth to the present life: ye see we bee plucked vp by the roote, there is no more hope of vs. And why? For we imagin that our life consisteth in the hauing of goodes, and in the hauing wherewith to sustaine and cherish our selues. And yet we do not as the trees. For a tree is contented with the hauing of so much roome as his roote is able to occupie. But a man hath an insatiable lust: we bee gulfs, in somuch that we thinke the whole world is not ynough too finde vs. For suche as haue both fieldes, and houses, and vineyards, and other heritages, are afrayde still that they shoulde wante earth. They that haue money in their purse, are afrayde and in doubt, yea and are continuallye martyred with feare, least God should disapoynt them of their pray, and abate their portion. Seeing then that our desires are reached out so farre off: we are not only as the roote of a tree, but also without stint or measure. And for prooffe hereof, are we so sobre as too hold our selues ther wher the holy ghost calleth vs? It were greatiye too oure behoofe. So then lette vs marke well, that although it seeme that oure life

Io. 13. b. 15.

Isa. 23. b. 4.

life cannot continue without the ordinarie meanes which God hath allotted to it: yet notwithstanding he is able to send vs meanes wherethrough we shall escape, and hee can giue vs them to day or to morrowe. True it is that a thing shall not seeme easie vnto vs: neuerthelesse it is ynough that God can prouide for it, yea and that he will set it in such order as we shall haue cause to magnifie his infinite power and wisdom, for working in such maner as is to vs incomprehensible. Ye see (I say) how it standeth vs in hand to practise this sentence: that euery of vs, whē he findeth him selfe in such perplexities, may saye, Alas what must become of me? I see my goodes are minished, I see I am shut out from such meanes as I had. And how? my trade is diminished of this or that. VVell, God hath cut it off: but yet must I needes say, that that whiche hee hath cut off, was superfluous to me, it behoueth me too profite my selfe thereby, I sawe not that it behoued me to pray vnto God, and now he sheweth me that it is so. For wee must alwayes conclude, that it is not withoute cause, that he so cutteth off the things which he knoweth to be superfluous in vs. But in the meane while, let vs prepare our selues to be plucked vp, for that is the chiefe poynt. There are many that can away with meane afflictions: and if God diminish them, they shew themselues constante, insomuche as a manne shall see there was no outrageouse vaine glorie in them, they had no ouernruly couetousnesse in them, they take that which is leste, and holde themselues contented with it, thanking God and keeping them selues quiet. But if they be pinched somewhat more neere the quicke, specially so as it seeme that God is minded to make cleane riddance of them: then shall ye find them vtterlie out of their wittes. And why? By cause they are not prepared as they ought to be, to indure the battell that is spoken of heere: that is too witte, to be vtterlie plucked vp. Then is it not ynough for vs to suffer God to cut off the boughes and to shred off the branches and twiggs which he knoweth to be superfluous in vs: but also to plucke vs vp by the rootes. For hee hath that authoritie ouer vs, and we shall gayne nothing by resisting him. But yet neuerthelesse it is too our great profite, that wee should hope that he will plant vs agayne. And why? For by that meane we giue roome to his mercie. And on the contrary, we withstande Gods grace so as he vntasfeth not to set vs vp agayne, when he sees that his scourging of vs makes vs to thinke oure selues vtterlie forlorne, and past recouerie of any freshnesse agayne. It is all one as if we should cut of Goddes hand, to say that he planteth vs not agayne. True it is that his power shall not be lessened through our vnbeleefe: but we be not worthy to feele and to enioy so great a benefite. Ye see then whereto we must come: that is too witte, euery of vs must dispose him selfe to be plucked vp by the roote: that is to say, if God smite vs in parte, and afterward it please him to smite vs in the whole, both in our persons, and in our wiues, and in our children, and in our honoure, and in all that euer we haue, in such wise as we become (as ye wold say) wretched darknesse, so as we haue not so much as one sparke of life: Yet neuerthelesse wee must abide it quietly. Beholde a thing that surmounteth all worldly power. I confesse, and there is no doubt, but menne inforce themselues therevnto of their owne accorde. But we must desire God to worke in vs, to the intent hee may in such wise dispose of oure life, as we may be redy both to liue and dye at hys pleasure. Therefore wee must pray hym too giue vs suche manner of strength: and then no doubt but the thyng that is written heere shall bee fulfilled. For God meante not to disappoynte vs of our hope, when he likened vs too trees that are planted, and afterwarde taken vp, and in the ende planted agayne in a better place. Howbeit it is true that wee shall not alwayes bee planted agayne, as in respecte of thys worlde. It maye well bee that wee shall continue plucked vp, yea and that it shall seeme, that God hath euen cast vs away. And if we will iudge by oure state, wee maye saye, farewell my good dayes, for if God were minded to haue pitie vpon me, hee woulde not haue lingered and driuen off so long time: for somuche as I see hee lettereth me rotte heere in my miserie, it is a token that hee wyll neuer set me vp agayne. Lo what wee maye saye. Neuerthelesse, let vs call too minde, that God meeneth too trie oure faythe by holding vs in the hope of the heauenly life, whiche is hydden from vs as nowe. For although God blisse hys seruautes, and giue them some prosperitie in thys worlde: it is not too bee sayde that their last state is not better for them, for his planting of vs in his Church, is too the intente wee should liue in hys kingdome euerlastingly without end.

Now then, what is our true resurrection and renewment? Euen that God shoulde referue vs and set vs in hys kingdome: that when hee hath made vs to wayfare through thys worlde, and to passe through fire and water and all other afflictions: we maye in the ende be exempted from all the miseries of thys world, and be made partakers of hys lyfe and glorie. And so let vs beare in mynde howe sainte Paule sayth vnto vs, that our life is hydden in Iesus Christe, and that wee shall not see the true and perfect manifestation of it, vntill our Lord Iesus come from heauen. To be short, let vs marke one other similitude which we ought to bee well acquainted with. Truly in winter time the trees seeme to be dead, we see how the raine doth as it were rotte them, they are so swolne that they bee readie to burst, and thus ye see well one kynde of rottennesse: Afterwarde commeth the frost, as it were to seare them, and to drie them vp. VVe see all these thynges, and wee see not so muche as one floure: and thys is a cutting vs off. Beholde heere a kynde of death, whiche lasteth not for a daye or twayne, but for foure or fiue moneths. Neuerthelesse although the life of the trees be vntene: yet is their sap in their roote, and in the hart of the wood. Euen so is it with vs, that our life also is hidden, howbeit not in our selues. For that were a poore kinde of hiding. There should neede no great frost to sterue it vp, nor greate wet to marre it. For we carrie fire and frost ynough in our selues to consume it. But our life is hidden in God, he is the keeper of it and wee knowe that Iesus Christ is the partie from out of whome we drawe all our life. So then let vs content our selues with the saide hedlinesse. True it is that if a man take vp a tree and purpose to set it agayne, hee had neede to make hast. For if a tree tarrie anie long time aboute the ground, it will neuer take roote anie more, though it bee planted new agayne. But GOD hath another manner of power, than the labourers of the earth haue. Neuerthelesse we see sometimes that men are cunning, and can well keepe a tree alieue for a time. They will laie it in a shadie place where nother winde nor sunne shall come at it to drie it, so as the sap shall alwayes bee kepte close in it: men will finde some meanes or other, and although they cannot saue the lyues of trees for euer, yet will they helpe them in some sorte. And let not vs thinke that when GOD listeth too keepe vs vnplanted a long tyme, hee cannot for all that preferue vs, yea euen in such wise as it shall not bee harde for him too make vs rake roote newe agayne whensoever it pleaseth hym. Ye see then what is haue too beare in mynde. And it is the thyng wherein euery oue of vs must exercise hym selfe, and gyue hys whole mynde too it, that wee maye profite oure selues by the similitude that is spoken of heere.

And for too conclude with, and too confirme thys matter, it behoueth vs too marke well what is sayde heere: namelye, That God will neuer lend his bande to the wicked, but contrariwise, will put the enemies of good men too shame, and haue pitie of the good men continuallye.
Verelye if we shoul'd put God too hys stint, to saye that (in respecte of thys presente lyfe) hee shoulde behaue hym selfe in suche forte towards vs, as wee shoulde alwayes be bliffed at his hande, and continue alwayes in prosperitie: this doctrine were false.

And also wee haue recordes ynowe in the Scripture, that God will not holde anye suche rule heere, as that they whose father and sauoure hee is, shoulde liue at their ease and rest: and in verry deede, it were not expediente for vs. As for example, if in these dayes the good menne were handled gentlie at Gods hande, and had all thynges at their wishe and desire, and that the wicked were punished roughlye: where were the hoping for the latter daye? we shoulde fall so foundasleep in that case, as nothing shoulde bee more neede-full, than that oure Lorde Iesus Christ shoulde appeare too iudge the worlde. And why so? Gods iudgementes shoulde bee altogether apparaunte, and there shoulde bee none other hope of saluation.

Col. 3. 4. 4. VVe see then that although God suffer thynges too bee confuzed in this worlde, so as good folke are tormented to the vttermost, and wicked folke aduanced in triumph: yet wee bee so drouzie and so dulheaded, as wee cannot be moued to come vnto God, and to consider what he saith to vs: namely that oure life is hidden as yet, and that wee must tarrye till it bee reueled by the comming of Iesus Christ. VVe cannot atayne too thys consideration by no meanes, no not although God prouoke vs and drawe vs to it as it were by force.
VWhat woulde wee do then, if God disposed mans life in such wyfe as all were well ordered there, and no man indured any aduersitie, but that men might say, Beholde how God aydeth the good, therewithall shewing himselfe an enemie to the bad, and that he cannot beare wyth them nor suffer them. It is certayne that we woul'd make our heauen heere, and we wold conclude, that it were a fondnesse to waite for the comming of Christ, and that it were not to be looked for. So then we see it is not for our profite, that God should as now vphold vs after an ordinarie and vnpartiall manner, too shewe hym selfe fauorable too the faithfull, and to punish the naught-packs: but rather that he should seeme to dissemble for a tyme, when the wicked ouer shoote themselues, working him displeasure, and nothing else but mocking hym. VVell: it seemeth that God is asleepe, or rather that hee is not able too repress them: the wicked must ruffe it out, and haue the better hande for the tyme.
And on the contrarie, when the good are troubled and tormented, God must not succoure them: they must figh after him, and criue vpon hym: and all this seemes too be in vayne: for if they were heard, the effect woul'd shewe it. It is good therefore that things shoulde go so.
And why? If there were none other reason than I haue alleged already, were it not ynough? And heere we must also reherce other texts of Scripture: as when it is sayde
1. Pet. 1. b. 7. that oure fayth is muche more precious than corruptible metalls: so that if golde and siluer must passe through the fire too bee fined from their drossie: oure fayth must also bee tryed so much the more thorrowlie, as it is more precious before God. And howe shall this be done? by afflictions. Marke then what wee haue to note, that we may fare the better for this text: whiche is that God lendeth his hande to the wicked, fauoring them and shewing hym selfe too bee their friende: and that on the contrarie, hee will not shewe hys loue towards the faithfull, at the first, but suffereth them to languish in suche wise, as they be trampled vnder foote, and there is no likelyhoode that euer they shoulde be set vp agayne. God then may well do all these thynges:

and yet in the meane whyle he ceaseth not to fulfill that whiche is conteyned heere, that is to witte, that he reacheth not hys hand vnto the wicked. And why? For all the goodes whiche they haue, and all that euer they de-lighte in, or glory of, must euery whit of it turne to their confusion. But we perceiue not this, excepte wee giue eare to that whyche is spoken too vs in the holy Scripture. VVhen we shall haue herked to heare what God vttereth: then will he giue vs eyes to behold that which is hidden from vs. How is that? Behold, our sauoure Ie-sus Christ crieth, wo bee to you that laugh nowe, for ye shall weepe. VVo bee to them that ruffe it out, for they must likewise be tormented: so that they shall pay verry deere for all their ioyes. Lo how the Scripture augucheth it: and it behoueth vs to receiue that which is spoken there, and to be thoroughly resolued of it. And when we haue done God the honoure to giue credite to his worde: then will he make vs to vnderstande that which other men perceiue not: namely that in the mid-des of their greateft aduersitie and heatinesse that can betide vs, we haue still cause to laugh: that is to say, too comfort and cheere our selues, bycause we haue an eye to the happie ende which God promieth, notwithstanding that the same cannot be perceyued by our earthlye eyes and vnderstanding. Neuerthelesse it is certaine that God fauoreth not the wicked. And why? Bycause that although they haue neuer so much prosperitie, and although they flourish neuer so much to outward appeerance: yet is all of it turned to their ruine and confusion.
And contrariwise, though the faithfull be scourged and tormented many wayes: yet notwithstanding forasmuch as they be vphild by the hand of God, they neuer miscarie, and all turneth to their welfare and profite. And heerein wee see that thyng accomplished, which is con-teyned heere. To bee short, we see what wee haue too marke vpon this text. So then let vs learne, not to put our trust in thys world, nor in any of the inferioure meanes heere belowe. But let vs leane vnto God, seeing that hee hath gyuen vs oure Lorde Iesus Christ, too
the ende that beeing grafted in hym, wee maye drayne
50 the ende that beeing grafted in hym, wee maye drayne
suche strength and sap from hym, that although oure lyfe bee hydden, so as wee bee euen as it were in death:
wee maye not cease to continue still, and too bee maintained in good and sure state, waiting tyll thys good GOD haue deliuered vs out of all worldlie miseries, and out of all the troubles whyche wee bee fayne too suffer heere, vntill hee call vs and bring vs into the kingdome of heauen, and into the glorie which he hath pur-chaced by the precieuse blood of our Lord Iesus Christ.
60 And now let vs fall flat before the presence of oure good God, with acknowledgme of our faultes, praying him to make vs perceiue them better than we haue done, and that therewithall we may haue our recourse vnto him, knowing how it is he only that can amend vs and all our euill affections: and therefore that it maye please him too drawe vs backe in suche wise, that forsaling our selues and all that is in this worlde, we maye laboure for the heauenly life, vntill such time as hauing overcom

Luk. 6. d. 25

ouercome all the aduersities of this present life, and being come too the end of all the battels wherewith we are assayed: we may fully enjoy all the victories whiche

he giueth vs now by the grace of his holy spirite. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and nations. &c.

The xxxij. Sermon, which is the first vpon the ninth Chapter.

Job answered and sayde.

2. Ofa truth I know that man shall not bee iustified to Godward.
3. If he vvould dispute vvith him, he should not answer him one poynt of a thousand.
4. He is vvise of hart, and mightie in strength. And vvho is he that shall set him selfe agaynst him and haue peace?
5. Hee remoueth the mountaynes, and they feele not vvhen hee ouerthroweth them in hys vvraath.
6. He remoueth the earth out of hir place, and the pillers thereof do quake.

Although men be enforced to confesse that God is righteous, and that there is no fault to be founde in hym: Yet notwithstanding, their passions are so outrageous, that if any of them be afflicted, a manne shall heare those that are so smitten, not only grudge agaynst God, but also blaspheme him with full mouth. And yet for all that, their torment is neuer the lesse: but it seemeth to them that they reuenge themselues after a sort when they can so rayle agaynst him with whome they haue to do. So much the more therefore behoueth it vs to bethinke vs of Gods righteousnesse a great while aforehand, to the ende that when he scourgeth vs, we may alwayes abide in the lowlinesse to know him as he is, that is to witte, that hee is righteous and vnblamable. Neuerthelesse the whole matter consisteth not onely in confessing generally that God is righteous: for we haue seene heretofore, how Baldad mainteyning the said cace that God is righteous, wrested it after an euill fashion, in staying vpon this poynte, namely that God punisheth men according to their desert. But (as we haue seene already) that rule holdeth not continually alike. God doth sometimes spare the wicked, and beare with them: and sometimes hee chastizeth those whome hee loueth, and handleth them much more rigorously than those that are vtterly past amendment. Then, if we will deeme that God chastizeth euery man according to hys desert: what shall become of it: when men couet to mainteyne his righteousnesse by that meanes, they take a wrong way. Ye see then heere is a fault: for when men will take vpon them to measure Gods iustice, and to say, hee punisheth no man but for his sinnes, yea and looke in what manner and quantitie euery one hath offended, thereafter must God pay hym home in this world: then do they not take Gods iustice as they ought to do. In this respecte, Job treateth now much better of the manner of Gods iustice and how it is to be knowne, than Baldad hath done: That is to witte, without hauing respect to one sinne or other, but onely taking menne as they be from their moothers wombe, yet notwithstanding the whole world must needs be condemned afore God: and it is apparant that although the afflictions seeme rough, yet notwithstanding God cannot be reprobued. Then let vs marke well, that they be two diuerse maners of speech to say, God is righteous, for hee punisheth men according to their desert, and too say, God is righteous, for howsoeuer hee handle men, yet must wee alwayes keepe our mouthes shet and not grudge agaynst hym by cause we cannot gayne any thing thereby. If wee see a wicked manne punished at Gods hande, (as I haue touched afore:) then is it Gods meaning that menne shoulde knowe the particular iudgement whiche hee executeth, too the ende that menne shoulde be warned by it. And the holy Scripture speaketh after the same manner. VVee see that God punisheth whoredomes, cruelties, periuries, blasphemies, and suche other lyke thynges: Yea verilie, eyther vpon mens persons, or else vpon countries, or vpon some place that shall haue bin giuen to some crime. VVhen God layeth his hande vpon suche, therein hee sheweth a mirroure to instruct vs, according as Saint Paule speaketh 1. Cor. 10. b. when he sayth, that God punisheth the sinners too the intent that euerye manne shoulde beware. For when hee punisheth rebellions agaynst hys woorde: it is too make vs walke in feare. VVhen hee punisheth wicked lusts, it is to hold vs in awe. VVhen hee punisheth whoredomes, it is too the ende that wee shoulde walke in all cleanness both of bodye and soule.

Thus yee see then howe it is Gods will, that menne shoulde beholde and consider hys iudgements, specially, when they bee manifest. A man may well saye sometimes that God is righteous. And why? for he hath punished such a one, yea euen by cause hee was a man of a wicked and dissolute life. Hee hath executed hys vengeance vpon suche a countrie. And why? for it was full of all filthynesse and vncleannesse. VVee maye well speake after this manner, and so oughte wee too do: howbeit not alwayes. For (as I haue sayde already) hee holdeth not on all by one rule. VVhat is to be done then? VVe must come vp higher, [and saye] that God is alwayes righteous howsoeuer he handle men. And this is a poynte well woorthie to be noted: for in these days wee shall see some beastes, who notwithstanding wyll weene them selues too be clearkly fellows, when they shall haue mainteyned Gods iustice by their owne reason and phantasticall witte. They woulde that God shoulde be esteemed righteous. And why? for handling euery man according too their desertes, as I touched afore. And too bring this to passe, they are fayne to grant me a free will, and Gods election must be overthrowne and broughte to naughte. For to say that God choseth whome he listeth, and calleth them to saluation through hys owne free goodnesse, and that he forsaketh the residue: they thynke it very straunge too be spoken, by cause they cannot comprehend the reason of it.

And heere yee see why these rogues that counterfayte too be greate clearkes, ouerturne the foundations of oure fayth too prooue Gods righteousnesse euen after theyre owne fancie. And whye is that?

K.iiij.

By cause

Bycause they cannot mount so high as to know that god is righteouse in comparison of men, whatsoeuer they be. True it is that it standeth vs in hande to beware of another extremitie which is faultie. For we shall see some of as slaunderous conuersation as may be: who if they perceyue their leudenesse to be discovered [fall by and by to saying] As for me, I am an honest man, (yea too the worldward) I confesse euerie man is a sinner to godward: and so will hee shrowde him selfe vnder the common cloake. Looke vpon a whorehunter that hath haunted the stewes halfe a score yeares: Looke vpon a blasphemmer that ceaseth not to raile at God and to spite hym: Looke vpon a villaine that despiseth God and all religion. Looke vpon an vnthrift or an vnconscionable person that seeketh nought else but to be catching withoute faithfulnessse or honest dealing: and such doggs will saye it is true that they be sinners before God, for no manne is righteouse. They go no further with their faults but so, which are so hideous as may be, but shrowde themselves vnder the cloake of naturall infirmitie, saying that there is no manne that can bee equall with God. They thinke they haue doone very muche in yelding suche a confession.

But I haue shewed alreedy that it behoueth vs to haue both these two poynts. The one is, that we must acknowledge God too bee righteouse in respecte of the whole worlde, and that men must not pleade nor dispute wyth him, whosoever they be or whatsoeuer they be able too alledge: but must be abashed both greate and small. Lo here one speciall poynt. The other is, that ech mā should haue an eye particularly to himselfe, and that euery man should be sorie for his faults, and abhorre them, and condemne them: and that herevpon we should also consider the vengeance and punishmentes whiche God sendeth vpon sinnes, to the end we should learne to fare the better thereby. If we be beaten with his roddes, let euery of vs say, it is good right, I haue well deserued it. If God teach vs at another mans cost, so as hee chastizeth other men before our eyes: let the same touch vs, and let vs applie such examples to our owne instruction, to the intent to preuent the matter, that God be not compelled to fall vpon vs bycause we haue not profited by the chastizementes whiche hee hathe shewed vs in the person of others.

Thus ye see the two points which we haue to mark & to put in vre. Now let vs come to the laying foorth of that which is said here by Iob. I know for a truth (saith he) that man shall not be iustified with God. So it is set downe: but this word with importeth as much as to Godward. And it is a doctrine of great weight if a man know it wel. What is the cause that men iustifie themselves so boldlie, that is to say, that they presume so much of them selues, that they set so much store by themselves, and that they be so full of pride? What else is the cause of it, but only their staying here bylow, that euery man compareth himselfe with his neighbour? Ye see then wherevnto we runne. And ye see also why Saint Paule sendeth vs to the great iudge, saying that euerie man shall beare his owne burthen. As if he had saide, my friends, men beguile themselves when they make suche comparisons as these: What? I see other men liue no better than my selfe, and if I haue faults in me, so haue other men in them too. Ye see then what is the cause that men condemne not themselves as they ought to do, but rather sooth themselves in iustifying theyr owne cace. But heere it is expresly sayde that man shall not be iustified with God. What must wee then do? As ofte as any man speaketh to vs of our sinnes and laieth them afore vs, let vs learne to know that we must not hold our eyes here belowe, but looke vp to the iudgement seat of our Lord Iesus Christ, where we haue oure accounte to make: wee must know the incomprehensible maiestie of God. Therefore let euery man thinke thereof, and then shall all of vs be wakened, to withdrawe our selues out of our follies, and wee shall haue no mo of these vaine imaginacions and dotages that haue bin wont to rocke sinners asleepe. Had this bin obserued: there shoulde be none of the debates that are nowe adayes in christendome about the righteoufnesse of faith. The Papists cannot bee perswaded of this that we say, namely that wee become righteouse through the meere fauoure of God in our Lord Iesus Christe. And why? what shall become of the merits (saye they) and of the good workes wherein the saluation of men consisteth? And why do the Papistes stand so vpon their merites, and why are they so besotted with them, but bycause they looke not vp to God? They dispute in theyr schooles, whether good works deserue recompence and wages, as well as euill works deserue punishmente: for they be things flat contrarie. If mens sinnes deserue to be punished, then must there also be some reward for vertues: for otherwise Gods iustice shoulde not bee indifferent: yea to our seeming, and so might men dispute vpon a shadowe. But ye see that the Papists fall asleepe vpon this disputation, and yet in the meane while God ceaseth not on his behalfe, to play the iudge, not in iudging according to their lawes, but in behauing himselfe according to his owne maiestie: that is to witte, in fine ding out that thing in men whiche we cannot perceyue. But if oure vertues were godly in deede, that is too saye such as mighte go for paymente before God: that were somewhat. Bnt what: when we shall haue prised them to the vttermost, they shall be but smoke: If they come before God, all this must be layde downe. Then let vs remember well how it is said heere, that man shall not bee found righteous to Godward. And to the intente wee may take warning heereby: as ofte as any man speakes to vs of our sinnes, we must not rest here bylowe, but rather euery one of vs must summon himselfe before God, that we may knowe what manner of iudge he is. For so soone as we take vpon vs to pleade against him, we must needes be confounded, and as it were ouerwhelmed. And Iob addeth immediatly, That if a man would dispute with God, he should not answeere to one poynt of a thousande. True it is that thys maye well bee verified of G O D: for wee maye pleade fayre, and tell a long tale, whereas there shall bee a thousande poyntes that God will not once voutsafe too open hys lippes to replie vnto. And that is verry true: For all the coloure that wee shall pretende to iustifie oure selues, maye well beare some countenance afore menne, bycause they see not so cleerely as were requisite: but when wee come vnto God, all of it vanisheth awaye to nothing. Let vs not thinke then that God is amazed at our long and greate babbling: for when wee shall haue cast oure skum, and when it shall come to the poynte of excusing our selues, and to giue credite to our vertues: peraduenture it wyll seeme that G O D oughte too yeelde vnto vs. Yea: but in the meane whyle hee dooth nothing but laughe and mocke at all the vayne brags that menne can alledge: For all is nothing woorth.

Thus ye see a good and holye sentence: whiche is, that if wee alledge a thousande articles, G O D wyll not aunswere so much as one of them. What is the reason? It is bycause it is nother here nor there in hys sighte. It may well be made accounte of before men: But what for that? God will not be moued with it whit.

Neuer-

Neuerthelesse the naturall meening of his place is, that when we be come vnto God (that is to wit in way of incountering against him) we shall be so combered, as we shall not be able to answer one only article of a thousand that he shall alledge against vs. Surely we be so hastie, that we will needs fight with God, before we can drawe our sword as they say. And we see it is so. I pray you will we not more streyne curtsie too aduenture vpon a mortall man or vpon a creature that is nothing, than vpon the liuing God? If we intend to make defiance to any man, we will forecast thus: Is he able to make his parte good? how may we compass our intent? This may turne vs to trouble or displeasure. VVhen we shall enter into dealings against men, we will make many discourses: but if we be mynded to rush against God, wee will step too it bluntly. VVe see then hereby what rage, (yea euen diuelish rage) there is in men too match themselues so against God. But whē we come the to push, we shall fynd by experience what it is to iustle against him, and that it is no dalying with such a Prince. Thus ye see what Iob sheweth here. For first he setteth downe mennes boldnesse as it may be percuyed: and afterward on the contrarie part, he setteth downe the comberace wherein they be when God maketh them to feele that he is ryghtuous and confoundeth them. Then let vs mark well that men are desyrouse to pleade and dispute with God as we see, and yet notwithstanding, that when they be once entered into the chalenge, they must needs be ouerthrowē, and God will make them feele that they must be confounded spyte of their teethe. This is a verye needfull thing. For I haue shewed alreedy, that the foolish ouerweening wherewith men deceyue themselues, procedeth of this, namely that they regard not God, but make their discourses thus: yea verely, I am no woorse than other men, and besids that, if I haue vyces, I haue vertues also to recompence them withall. The cause then why men do so ouersleepe themselues, is for that they knowe not what Gods Maiesie is, nor haue any liuely feeling of it, to submit themselues therevnto. Sith the cace standeth so: let vs mark well how it is sayd here, that men are desyrouse too stand pleading and disputing against God. And why is that? For we be so blind, as we cannot see to our selues to say, Hownow? Behold, God is able to ouerwhelme vs, and to thrust vs downe to the bottomlesse pit of hell, and yet shall we go set ourselues against him? But we neuer think of that: and therefore it is no maruell though we be so blynd. Howbeeit let euery man bethink himself well, and he shall fynd that that is the reason. If any man speake to vs of pleading against God: nature it self teacheth vs that wee ought to abhorre it: I say euen the wickeddest of vs. VVe see of these Scoffers that haue nother conscience nor feare of God, and yet notwithstanding there remayneth some kynd of feeling ingrauen in them by nature, so as they bee abasshed and ashamed when it is sayd to them, wilt thou pleade against God? Neuerthelesse euen they also that seeme to be good and discreete men, will sometyme fall intoo such maner of talk, so as there is not that man which playeth not the horse that is broken looce, in making protestation against God. VVe see that euen the prophets haue ben assayled with such temptations. True it is that they haue resisted, as it behoued. But this kind of conceyt hath somewhat combered them, so as they haue ben sorie now and then to see Gods iudgements so straunge to them, and that their owne reason hath as good as caryed them away. Seing then that wee bee so inclyned too pleade against God, so much the better ought this doctrine too bee printed in our remembrance that wee may bee restreyned at such tymes as wee be tempted in that wyse too reason against God, assuring our selues, that wee can gayne nothing by ought that wee can doo. And if we be warned hereof, we shall not be so greatly offended, though we see many leape after that sort out of their bounds. For this stumblingblocke troubleth the weake. VVe would fayne that euery man confessed God to bee ryghtuouse, and that his mercie filleth the whole world, and that we ought to glorifie him for the same. But whē it happeneth that wicked men rayle at God, and other some blasphem him: and men dare not open their mouth to reprove and rebuke them, insomuch that they haue full scope, and triumph too the worldward: when this is seene, the weake are greeued, and it seemeth too them that the myghty power and ryghtuoufenesse of God are defaced thereby, and so they cannot yeeld him the glorie that belongeth to him. But we see how it is as it were a naturall thing in man too pleade after that maner against God: and although it be a monstrous thing & such a one as we ought to abhorre exceedingly: yet is it an ordinarie vice. Sith the cace standeth so: let vs not be ouermuch disquieted, when it happeneth. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in mynd. And it behoueth vs too mark well what is added here for the second poynt: that is to wit, that if God charge vs with a thousand articles, we be not able scarsly to answer one. Here we be admonished, that when wee haue serched out our vyces to the vttermost, that wee shal not come too the knowledge of the hundreth part, no nor to so much as one of euery thousand. True it is that if men examine themselues well without hypocrisie: they must needs find themselues wrapped in so many euills, as they may bee ashamed of themselues, and vtterly dismayed, specially wee. For though a man picke out them that bee the holiest, yet must they raunge themselues in one rank with Dauid, who hath confessed that no man can ateyne to the true knowledge of his sinnes. Now if the holiest and such as seeme Angells, are altogether confounded in their sinnes, bycause the number of them is infinite: I pray you what is to be sayd of the common sort? For wee must neuer take ourselues to haue profited so much, but that we bee still farre behynd them that I speake of. So then, if men examine their lyues throughly, they shall find such a bottomlesse gulf of sinnes, as they shall be vtterly dismayed. But is this all? we ateyne not yet the knowledge of the hundreth part, in such sort as were requisite. And whyso? Ye see that Dauid, who entred his faults, cryed out, who is he that knoweth his owne sinnes? He confesseth then that he knew exceeding much: and afterward he addeth, Lord clenze mee from my secret sinnes. And why sayeth he so? How calleth he them secret sinnes? for it behoueth vs to knowe our sinnes, or else we cannot confesse them to be sinnes. The answer is, that Dauid wist well that God seeth more cleerly than we do. And so seing oure owne cōscience vpbraydeth vs, what shall we say to the iudgemēt of God? Ye see then the order that we haue to keepe: that is too wit, that euery of vs enter into himself, and serche out his owne vyces throughly, so farre as he can come to the knowledge of them. And haue we sifted the out? well, behold, our conscience is our iudge: and what maner iudge is it? Truly it is a iudge that is greatly to be feared, but dooth not God see farre more cleerly than a mortall man? My conscience accuseth mee of a thousand sinnes: and if God enter into reckening with mee, shall he not find manye mo? So then it standeth vs in hand to wey well what is sayd here: that is too wit, that of a thousand points wee can hard and scarsly answer vnto one: and that when wee shall haue espyed one fault by our selues, God passeth farre further, for he seeth the sins that we be not priuie to. Now then following that which is sayd here, let vs lerne to bethink vs of our faults in such wyse, as we may be fully resolued in ourselues, that God contenteth not himself with that which commeth to our owne knowledge, but will iudge according to that which he himself seeth and knoweth, and not according to that which we can find, for we will leape ouer the quicke coles as it is sayd in the prouerb: but God plundgeth vs in them ouer head and eares. It is he to whom it belongeth to serche the heart, as the scripture attributeth vnto him. And besides this, wee discern not so well betweene vices and vertues as wee ought to do. That poynt therefore must be reserued vnto him. And wherfore discern wee them not? If wee will iudge wel and rightly of all our works, it standeth vs in hand to know what perfection is. For without perfectnesse there is nothing good before God: that is to say, all is but filthinesse [where there wats perfection.] And who is he that deserueth to be allowed of God, if this perfection shewe not it selfe in him? But now how shall we know what perfection is, considering that our eyesight is so dim, and that we see but as it were in the twilight? Although God inlighten vs, yet haue not we so pure and cleane a sight, as can vse the brightnesse which hee sheweth vs. True it is that the worde of God entrencheth into the bottome of oure heartes, and perceth through our bones and the marie, and all that is in them. True it is, that it is a burning cresset, true it is that Iesus Christ is called the day sunne, and that he shineth ouer all: but yet for all that, our eyesight ceaseth not to be dim still. Therefore it standeth vs greatly in hand to know what perfection is. And heereby we be put in mind, that when foener we take thyngs to be good, and perceyue not any faulte in them, yet are they not therefore withoute faulte, for we knowe not the perfection that God requirerh. To be shorte, there is none but only God that knoweth what perfection and soundnesse is. And why? It is in him, he knoweth it, and we be too feeble to attayne vnto it. That is the cause why it is sayde that wee may well set a fayre face vpon the matter, but we shall not be able to aunswere one poore poynte of a thousand that shall be alledged and layde afore vs. And I haue told you already, that men are warned, that if they will pleade with God, they shall alwayes find themselves confounded to theyr damnation. Howbeit all to late. And this warning is verie profitable for vs, what is the reason? To the intente that before the blowe come, euery man should hold himselfe within the bounds of sobernesse and modestie to say, Alas, what a thing is it for vs to go to law with our God? Thinke we to get the vpper hande of hym? nay, cleane contrarywise God shall ouerwhelme vs. And behold, the only way to be acquit at his hand, is for euery man to cōdemne him selfe. But if we fall to sturdinesse, God will punish vs for such pride. It maye be that at the first push he will not shewe vs our confusion, but at the length we shall be so snarled in it, as we shall not winde our selues out agayne. Ye see then into what a maze God casteth all the presumptuous fort which vndertake to stand against him, and enterprise the combate that is spoken of heere. True it is, that God is so gracious to some, as that hee daunteth them, and they at length do fal in aray: but that must not bee taken holde on, to say that he worketh continually all after one fashion. We shall see some that are full of pride, whiche trust in their owne righteousnesse and would bind God vnto them: well, God ouermastreth them, and tameth them, he casteth them into vtter confusior, and afterwarde plucketh them out agayne. VVe see that God worketh not alwayes after one rate. Neuerhelesse it behoueth vs alwayes to vnderstande what the scripture telleth vs: namely that God will stretch out his hand agaynst the proude, too destroy them. And beholde how he proceedeth therein. I say the hypocrits are so puffed vp with pride and presumptuousnesse, as they thinke verely that their vertues deserue to be receyued, yea and to haue reward and recompence. VVell, they stande in their owne conceite for a time, and God letteth them alone there. On the other side Sathan eggeth and inticeth them and maketh them to set much more by themselves. They gaze at their owne gay fethers like Peacocks, saying, I haue done this and that, and they beare themselves in hand that God ought to hold himselfe cōtēted with it. But anon after whē they haue takē pleasure in themselves, and in al their vertues: if God cal thē to account, and proue to their faces, that al that which they esteemed as vertue was nothing but vice, yea & stark filthinesse & abhominacion before him: then are their combes cut, and good right they shuld be so: inso much that whē they haue beguiled not only the worlde, but also themselves, by trusting in things that haue a gay shew & countenance outwardly: the thing must alwayes bee manifested which is spokē in S. Luke, namely that the thing which is excellēt & highly esteemed amōg mē, is abhominable before God. Then let vs beware that we presume not so farre as to fighte agaynst God, and to go too lawe with him to iustifie oure selues. For else will oure God confound vs, and so rushe agaynst vs, as we shall be oppressed and ouerwhelmed of a thousand crimes, and we shall not be able to aunswere any one of them, and when we be accused of a thousand deadly finnes, (that is to say of an infinite number) if wee intende to cleere our selues but of some one only poynt, we shall be cast in our owne turne. I say let vs beware we come not to that poynt. Now to the end we may be touched the better, it is sayde, That God is wise of bearte and mightie of strength. This poynt of doctrine hath bin touched already heretofore. Neuerthelesse it is not for nought that it is spoken of heere new agayne. For it is a lesson whiche we ought to mind day by day. I haue tolde you already that mē beguile themselves and wanze away in their owne fonde imaginations, bycause they thinke not vpon God, but rest vpon themselves. Beholde heere one inconuenience. But let vs on further. If men thought vpon God, should they not be touched liuely, to acknowledge him according as he declareth himselfe vnto them? should they not be moued to such a feare and reuerence as they would glorify him as he is worthy? But they do it not at all, what is the reason? It is bycause they conceiue not God to be such a one as he is. VVell, we can skill to say God, God, that word runnes roundly vpō our tungs end, & yet in the meane while, his infinite maiestie is not perceiued awhit. Al that is in God to our respecte, is as a dead thing. And in very deede it is wel scene by mennes blasphemies, perjuries and suche other like things. If men had any feeling of Gods maiestie, shuld we heare so holly and sacred a thing so rent and torne in peeces? If mē be in a chafe, God must be faine to abie for it, as if he were their Iacke. Like as whē a master is angrie, (if he be a fummish & hasty mā) he wil giue his seruāt a buffet with his fist, so wil a testy mā do to his wife, or elle to his horse if he displease him. Euē so play we with god. Now whē we see mē cast vp their choler at God as if he were their vnderling, may it not be wel said that we be toto dulheaded? yea & they come to that point without being chafed. For wee see these doggs make no bones at all in tearing the name of God. And although ther be no cause to prouoke thē therinto, yet ceasse they not to sweare blasphemously at euery word, whiche is a monstrous thing and agaynst nature.

Heb. 4. c. 12.
Psa. 119. Num.
Malac. 4. a. 2

Lu. 19. d. 15.

nature. Therefore it is a good token that we knowe not the maiestie of God, though the word fly neuer so roundly out of our mouthe. Also there are store of forswearings. It is a horrible cace now a dayes, that a man cannot wring out one woord of truth, and let there be neuer so much solemnitie vsed to bring on those that are called to witness, yet is it seene that they be all forsworne, inso-much that of the whole number of such as are deposed, a man shall hardly find one among half a score that will say the truth. And in deede it is a common bywoord among 10 them, that the cace goes wholly with them when there are no witnesses: which is as much to say, as there is not one that will speake the truth. And thus ye see how they spyte God. Also I pray you what talk will men hold when communication is ministred about the holie scripture, about the whole religion, and about so holie things as we haue at this day? It were meete that men should hold themselves in awe in such caces, according as it is sayd that the true mark of Gods childre is to tremble at his word. But we see that men will boldly reason of God: there is discourting, and prating of him and of all the secrets of his maiestie, euen as it were in sport: and are not these substantiall proofs that we knowe not what God is though his name be ryse in euery mannes mouthe? Then let vs mark well that the thing which is added here, (namely that God is wyse of hart and myghtie of strenght) is no more than needeth. And it is true that these woords seeme not too bee so pithily spoken as they myght haue bin: but if they be well weyed, there will be found a sufficient force to make vs shrink in our hornes. For when it is sayd that God is wyse of hart: it is not ment of worldly wisdom, nor of such wisdom as our wit is able to comprehend. And whē it is sayd that he is strong: it is not that he is strōg as if he were a Gyant or a Mountayne: but we must glorifie him in such wise as wee must assure our selues, that there is no might, no strength, no power like his in all the creatures that we see: but that all is nothing which we cā see here beneath, and that we must seeke all strength & power in God alone. Lo what this speeche importeth. Verely this thing cannot be so well gone through with, at 40

this present as it ought to be: but yet it was requisite that we should touche it, too the end we might see the maner of Iobs proceeding, or rather of the holy Ghosts proceeding who speaketh by Iobs mouthe, too shewe vs what maner of rightuousnesse Gods is. Will we then vnderstand well what we be? wee must take this for a generall conclusiō, that when there shall no open crymes be found in vs, so as we liue not loocely, but walk honestly and vnblamably to the worldward: all this is nothing. Why? Of what sort soeuer the creatures be, God can condemne them and continue ryghtuous himself. And if we attempt to reply against him, it is true that in our owne opinion we may well find what to say for a tyme, and God will wink at it, and not withstand it at the first brunt. But in the end we must be fayre to stoupe too receyue the sentence of damnation: and when men shall haue clapped their hāds at vs, yea and quit vs cleere, we shal not fayle to be condemned for all that, and to be confounded when we shall come before the greate iudge. For he sees more cleerly and sharply than all the men in the world. And so let vs assure ourselues that, there is none other meate to obteyne fauour before God and to haue our sinnes couered, (no not euen after we haue frankly confessed that there is nothing but sith and infection in vs) but by fleeing for refuge to our Lord Iesus Christ. For there shal the full and perfect ryghtuousnesse be founde, by the vertew whereof we shall be acceptable to God, and find him mercifull to vs.

But now let vs cast our selues downie before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him too wpe them out in such wise, as we may come to him looking him in the face, yea howbeeit not presuming of aught that is in ourselues, but vpon his gracious fauour which he hath shewed vs in our Lord Iesus Christe, and wherof it hath ben his will to make vs partakers. And that moreouer he will clenze vs frō day to day, and so purge vs of all the corruptiōs that are in our flesh, as we may be ryghtly sanctified to appeere blamelesse before him at the latter day. And so let vs all say, Almyghtie God our heauenly father &c.

The xxxiiij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the ninth Chapter.

This Sermon containeth the rest of the exposition of the fourth, fifth and sixth verses, and then as foloweth.

7. It is he that commaundeth the Sunne that he shayne not, and the Starres are shut vp by him as vvith a Seale.
8. It is only he that spreadeth out the heauens, and vvalketh aloft vpon the Sea.
9. He made [the starres] Arcturus, & Orion, and the Pleiades, and the chambers of the midday.
10. He doeth maruelous and incomprehensible vvorks, & vvonderfull things vvithout end.
11. Behold, he goeth before mee and I see him not: he passeth to & fro and I perceyue him not.
12. If he catch and snatch, vvho is he that shall plucke it out of his hand? vvho is he that vvill say vnto him, vvhat doost thou?
13. God vvill not vvithdrawe his vvyrath, and the mightiest helpe shall stoupe vnto him.
14. VVhat can I do If I enter into talk, and make choyce of vvordes vvith hem?
15. Although I vvere rightuouse, yet could I not ansvver him, but I should humble myself to my iudge.

If we had the wit to know God accordingly as he vtereth himself, there should nede no lōg proceffe to be vsed: for euery of vs should be able to discern the things that are set afore oureyes. But forasmuch as we be so vntoward in that behalf, God had neede to vpbraid vs vvith our vvithakfulness by telling vs of his woorks. And to this purpose maketh that which is said here: namely that whē God lieth the skie shal be couered with great & thicke clouds, so as the Sun shal not be scene: & cōtrariwise that whē it pleaseth him to send light, the cope of the skyes appereth, & that faire pavillion which is the heaue of his maiestie sheweth it self: he walketh aloft vpon the sea, that is to say, his power sheweth it self throughly there also: & he setteth the stars of the skye in order order, according as they be certain in number. This (I say) is reherfed to vs, to the end we should knowe our duetie the better, and apply our mynds to the considering of Gods woorks, that we may honour him as he deserueth. And although that God hauing cast vs in the teeth with this vyce whiche is in vs, myghte leaue vs there for such as we are: yet notwithstanding his intent is too instruct vs to our welfare. And the twoo points that wee haue too mark in this streyne for our owne profit, are these. The first is, that we should vnderstand how there is not any of vs that thinketh vpon Gods wisdom and power in such forte as he ought to do. In deede we can confesse ynough with our mouthe, but the same entreteth not into our hart, which thing we shewe by our contēptuousnesse. For (as it was touched yesterday) if we were thoroughly perswaded that all the wisdom of manne is but vanitie, and that all the strength which we see in creatures is nothing: God should hold vs in such awe as wee should be (as ye would say) reyned vp hard too it with a short brydle, and none of vs all should once be so hardie as to think, speake, or do any thing that were not according to Gods good pleasure. Seeing then that wee bee so negligent, and that euery of vs beareth with himself, and that we giue brydle to our wicked thoughts, and nourish them without any remorse of conscience, insomuch that they burst out euē into outward deeds: thereby we shewe that we neuer knew Gods maiestie aright, or rather that we neuer tasted aught of it to anye purpose, or else that the taste thereof was so vnfaurye, that it dyed out of hand. Doo we then heare what is said of Gods wisdom and myghtinesse here? Beit knowne that this is spoken after that sort vnto vs, by cause wee bee so vntowarde in applying our mynds to that which is moſte for our profit. And in good sooth, is it not a greate shame for vs that whereas wee liue here in this world as in a goodly large lists where God giueth vs the syght of all his creatures: the same crosseth afore our eyes, and yet we forget him that is the founder of them, euen him whose will is that heauen and earth and all that in them is, should be as mirrors of his glorie, according as it is sayd that by the visible things we may see the things that are inuisible: now then, seing he hath put vs into this world, and we make none account of all this geere, must it not needs bee sayd that we haue a verye naughtic mynd? Verely we be stark blynd: and whensoever God is too be delt with all, wee conceyue nothing of him except he giue it vs. He must be fayne to inlighten vs, or else there shall bee nothing but darknesse in our witts. Howsoever the case stand, we cannot excuse our selues by ignorance, when there shall haue ben anye wilfulnesse ioyned with it: but we shall be conuicted that we haue not regarded God, yea and that it hath greued vs, to think of him, as if it had ben some matter of heauinesse. Yee see then that (first of all) our lord accuseth vs in this streyne. Howbeit, there is an instruction ioyned with it, wherein we perceyue his inestimable goodnesse. He myght condemne vs, and leaue vs there, as I haue sayd alreedy. True it is that hee condemneth vs: howbeit, that is to make vs feeble our sin, that it may be corrected in vs. And herevpon he dooth the office of a good schoolemaister, to the end we should lerne the thing that wee knew not before. Therefore let vs take good heede to that which shall be shewed vs here. I cōfesse that the text speaketh not any thing which euery of vs knoweth not: the things will seeme too bee common and familiar to vs, and therefore it wil bee sayd that it is but superfluous talke. Some (I say) will peradventure surmyze so. But forso much as we referre not things to their ryght mark: must not God be fayne to play the schoolemaister, in repeating our lesson too vs oftentimes? Ought not wee to seeke our owne profit by that which God dooth so lay afore vs? It is no verye dark matter, that God maketh the sunne to shyne when it pleaseth him, and that therewithall the whole cope of heauen should appeere like a greate pauilion, too the intent that we myght knowe what oddes there is betwyxt the maiestie of God, and the pomp of earthly Princes. VVhé earthly Princes indeuer to aduance themselves, what doo they with all their policies and councelles? Much a doo haue they to set vp one Pauillion of thirtie foote hyghe, yea and though it were two myle long, yet what were that in comparison? Ye see the sky is endlesse, God hathe streyned the same out, and the earth is but his footestoole. Therefore when we see such things, although we knoweledge them to be so, yet is it nothingwoorth if we go no further in that consideratiō. Alwayes we must come backe to this point, namely, that when we see the heauen, we must the better bethinke vs of Gods maiestie which is incomprehensible, so as wee may be moued to honour him, and to submit our selues vnto him as we ought to doe. Nowe then we perceyue it is no superfluous matter when it is sayde here, that the Lorde commaundeth the sunne that it shall not shyne out, and the sunne shall be hidden in the cloudes, in such wise, as it may seeme that God draweth a Curtaine afore it, and that afterward hee vnfoldeth the heauen as he listeth. As much is ment by that he sayeth, That he walketh vpon the waters of the Sea. Surely we see him not walke vpon it: but were it possible for the sea to continue in such state as it dooth, if it were not restreyned by a woonderfull power? we knowe that it is the nature of water to sheade abroad. And yet we see that the Sea which swelleth vp in likenesse of mountaynes, is besette with bounds (as we shall see in the eyghtandtuentith chapter) in so much as if that were not, the earth should needs be covered ouer out of hand. VVheras wee haue drye ground to dwell vpon, let vs not think that that happeneth through anye other cause, than for that it is Gods will to lodge vs here. During which tyme he holdeth the sea within barres and bounds, not of stone or timber, but of his owne only power. Although the sea haue so greate a violence, as it may seeme that nothing is able to holde it backe: yet notwithstanding God holdeth it backe still euen vnto this day, by the only woord that he spake, which is, that there should be some drye ground for men to harbor in. Then ought wee too bend all our witts that way, but we do not. And therefore let vs mark that it is not a superfluous or needlesse doctrine when it is sayd that God walketh so vpon the Sea. Afterward here is mention made of the starres. True it is that the number of them is infinite, according as it is sayd in another Psalm, that is to wit, that there is so greate a number of starres, as would requyre a long discourse. But vnder these fewe names here, Iob ment to put vs in mynd of all the whole beautifull hoste of heauen. Befydes the Planets, we see the starres that are in the firmament, and wee see they serue all of them to mark out something, that wee myght the better consider the woonderfull woorkmanship that is in the mouing of the skyes. VVe see well that the Sunne keepeth one circuit euery day, that after hee is risen he goeth downe againe, and that he turneth about the earth as well beneath as about. Men see this. Also we see how the Sunne hath another cleane contrarie course. How? whereof commeth winter, whereof commeth Sommer, but of the Sunnes approaching too vs, or of his retyring away from vs, and of his keeping of a hygher or lower gate in respect of vs? For according as he goeth

Rom. 1.6.27

he goeth further from vs draweth neerer to vs : thereafter maketh he the diuersitie of seasons. VVe see this,
 I say euen the rudest and most ignorant of vs all. True it is that they perceyue not how the Sunne walketh a cleane contrarie course to that which he maketh in keeping his dayly course : but the experience thereof is knowen by the effect. For we haue nother winter nor sommer but by the Sunne. But although wee knowe this:
 yet doo wee not sufficiently conceyue after what sort God ordeyneth this walk of the Sunne. On the other syde there are the starres that Iob nameth to vs heere, which informe vs of other things. Like as wee see the wheelles of a charyot turne about hycause there is an Extree ouerthwart, wherby are the twoo naues by mea-nes wherof the wheelles go: Euen so God hath set these twoo Starres to be as naues in the wheele of a Charyot, about the which the Sunne is seene to turne. VVe see then that by the knowledge of these things, Gods inestimable wisdome may the better be perceyued, or at leastwyse men shall haue some taste of it whereby they shall bee prouoked to magnifie him, saying, Lord how excellent is this thy woorkmanship? Verely, the thing that Iob touched here cannot be fully vnderstood, except a man haue ben conuerfant in lerning. For here he toucheth Astrologie: he is not contented to speake of that which the rudest idiots do see, he passeth on further, and roucheth cunningly certaine particulars, to the intent that we should knowe the woorkmanship of the skyes. How-beeit, although that all men be not Astronomers, yet is there not any man that can excuse himself that God giueth him not sufficient knowledge of those things, if we shet not our eyes when the Sunne shyneth. The shepherds of the countrie can well skill to speake of the Star-res, yea and they giue them names. Howbeeit in naming them, it is certayne that they darken the glorie of God: and whereof commeth that? must not the euill be imputed to men? There are twoo Starres that are named here: And the Poets haue feyned many fables and fond things of them. VVhereof commeth such vnreasonableness? Of the vaynesse and naughtinesse of men.
 They haue sayd that such a Starre was the crowner or Garland of a woman, or else the woman herself. Lo here a cow, [lo there an ox,] Lo here this, and lo there that: to be short, Lo a sort of dotages. Neuerthelesse we haue to mark that these dotages are sprung out of Satans furttest wylineesse. For his desyre was (so farre as was possible for him) to deface this fayre lookingglasse wher-in Gods will was to bee seene and knowen. It is sayd by Moyses, that God garnished the heauen with all the hosts thereof. Moyses termeth the Starres (as well the Planets as the residue) the Hoste of heauen. And why-so? for they be the furniture of the heauen: the skyes should bee without beautie or fashyon, if it were not garnished with starres: and this was performed in the creation of the world, as Moyses declareth it. But see how the diuell beguyleth men to make them forget the record that God hath giuen them by his woorks, and too make them beleue that the Starres are come from this place and from that. Yea and men haue intermingled them with villanies and filthinesse: there was nothing else with them but the whoredomes of their Idolls when they spake of the Starres of heauen. And like as the Pope canonizeth sayncts whom hee listeth: So the Idolaters canonized the Lemans of their Idolls, and would sayne haue had heauen infected with their filthinesse as well as the earth. Yee see then how Satan hath sent his illusions into the world to abolish the knowledge of God (if it were possible for him) and too darken it in such wyse,

as men myght wander after their owne follyes, and haue
 no feeling at all of the pure truth, as were requisite.
 VVhat is to be done then? Let vs mark well that Iobs intent here is to teache vs to be Astronomers, so farre as our capacitie will beare, that we may referre all to the glorifying of God, so goodly order in the heauen as wee see.
 As touching the first point. I sayd that God intendeth to make vs Astronomers, yea so farre soorth as eche manes capacitie will beare it. For to decypher particularly how manie Starres there are, and therewithall to tell of the other Skylyghts which men call planets, to wit, what distance there is in hyghnesse and lownesse, how long and large they be, and what respects they haue one too another: in good sooth we cannot all comprehend that geere, were it not that wee see by experience that the Sunne is hygher than the moone. And how is that? It is bycause that whē the moone cometh full betweene our sight and the Sūne, behold there is made an Eclipse: wher-by (I say) we perceyue that the Moone is the lower. Thē may we well perceyue such things. But yet notwithstanding in the meane whyle we knowe not the space nor the reason how it cometh to passe that the Moone passeth so betweene the Sunne and vs. Therefore euery man cannot knowe this. Howbeeit we haue some kynd of con-ceyuings of it, which ought to be ynough to humble vs, that we may cōsider the works of God. And in the meane whyle, our Lord would that the grosser sort, (I meene those that haue not the meane to follow lerning) should haue sufficient occasion and be wise ynough to glorifie him, in that it is sayd by Moyses, that there are twoo greate lyghts, the one to rule the day and the other to rule the nyght. Not that the Moone is bigger than the other Starres or Planets, for it is certayne that there are Starres in the skye which are bigger thā the Moone. And why cannot we see them so greate? Bycause of their farre distance from vs. For they are exceeding hygh in respect of vs, infomuch that they seeme not so greate as they be,
 by reason of the greate distance that is betweene the skyes and vs. And God speaketh vnto vs of these things, according to our perceyuing of them, and not according as they be. VVhyso? It is as if he should say. True it is that all men atteyne not to so sharp vnderstanding as too knowe how big the planets are, what is the proportion of the Starres, and how they be diuided: euery man (I say) knowes not this: but open you your eyes and looke vp, and ye shall see the Sunne which is a lanterne of light, yea and the greate light that lighteneth the whole world, and ye shall see the shyning of the Moone. Then if men had no more but this: it is ynough to make them glorifie the infinite wisdome of God. According also as it is sayd, that God hath cut off all excuse, to the intent they should not raunge at alauenture. Bycause they bee no greate clerks, he sayeth no more but open your eyes without hauing any further skill, and ye shall be constreyned too honour mee, and to woonder at my wisdome and power, and at the goodnesse also that I vse towards you, in im-ploying such creatures to your seruice. And al the matter lies in our referring of these things to their right end:
 wherin we see the foundnesse of mannes wit. The Philosophers displayed the greate Treasures of Gods wis-dome, as in respect of Astrologie, for it is a thing that surmounteth all opinion of man, to see how they could spye out that thing that was so hidden. True it is that such as shall reade Astrologie, may well comprehend and knowe any thing that is spoken thereof in books. But the woo-derousnesse is of them that did first wryte them. I speake of the ryght Astrologie, and not of the bastardastronomie which the soothfayers and forcerers vse in telling men their

Gen. 1. 6. 16.

Rom. 1. 20.

Gen. 2. 4. 1.

their good fortunes and such like things. I speake of the learning of that science wherby men knowe the order of the skyes and this goodly furniture which men see. And certesse a man shall see woonderful things, so as he shall be abashed to heare the Astronomers speake. True it is that they imagin things that are not in the skyes: but they imagin them not without reason: for they doo it to shewe by certayne degrees and measures, the things that myght be to hygh and to deepe to comprehend. VVell, and haue the Philosophers disputed much of this matter: Hathe God giuen them a greater grace than can be beleued, to note and marke out Gods secrets that are on hygh: yet haue they missed of the principall poynt. For they haue not knowne God, ye see how they be wanzed away in their owne thoughts. But euill haue they profited to whom God hath ben so gracious as too lift them aboute the skyes, in such wise as they haue measured them as a man myght measure a plat of land, or a house, to say, it is so many paces or so manie foote. Then like as a man myght measure some place here by lowe, so haue the Philosophers measured all the spaces that are betweene the Planets, and also the Starres themselves. To be short it is a thing that hath alwayes ben attained vnto. And yet in the meane whyle, how haue they knowne God who sheweth himself opely in all his creatures? So little hath their knowledge led the to the glorifying of him, that haue rather darkened his maiestie by it. VVe see then that it standeth vs in hand too take another way: and wheras here is speaking of the Sunne, and of the Planets, and of the Starres: it is not to the end that we should only knowe these naturall reasons too rest there: but to the end wee should bee guyled vnto God to honour him and to doo him homage when wee behold the glorie that hee sheweth and vttereth vnto vs in his visible creatures. Thus ye see what wee haue too mark in this streyne. But what? VVe see that now a dayes mens witts wader and become fond as at all tymes heretofore. And that is not only in the thing that is shewed vs here. For although we speake not of the Starres: yet we neede to go farre to perceyue what God is. Let vs abyde still in ourselues as saynt Paule sayeth in the feuententh of the Acts: let vs but looke eury man into himself: and [we shall find that] we haue not any mouing, nor any power in vs, but only by Gods dwelling in vs. And yet for all that, we comprehend him not. If wee say, O I haue no eyes, wee neede but too grope (sayeth saint Paule, for he vseth the same word) as a blind man that goeth groping in the dark: though we ca but grope with our eyes shet, yet will God (spyght of our teethe) make vs feele what his power, his wisdom, his goodnesse and his ryghtuousnesse are. But what? we continue blockish and beastly and vtterly witlesse. True it is that we be sharpwitted ynough in vayne and tryfling things: but in the cace of our saluation, there we fayle: there wee be woorse than the brute beafts that haue not one drop of good wit. So much the more therefore behoueth it vs to mark wel these sentences, wherein our Lord sheweth vs, that if we looke vp to heauenward, we ought to bethink vs thus, behold it is God that hath giuen vs eyes to perceyue this goodly order. And if we looke downward, [we ought to thinke] what is it that sheweth it self euery where? let vs assure ourselues, that it is God, which sheweth himself opely, to the intent that we should think vpon him. Thus yee see how wee may profit our selues by this text. To bee short, let vs bee well aduyfed to occupie our selues in this studie, vntil wee haue comprehended the power and wisdom of God, that wee may be put in mynd to honour him. I say to honour him as he is woorthie. For men acquit themselves lyghtly, and when they haue doone some ceremonie vnto God, they think he ought to hold himself contented with it. But the honour that he requyret and which is due vnto him, is that we should quake vnder him, as oft as we heare him spoken of: and that we should acknowledge him to be our iudge and be abashed, assuring ourselues that he is able too sink vs which one only loke, and that he is able too make the mountaynes too melt away as wax doeth against the Sunne. Then what shall become of vs that are so frayle? First let vs be abashed at the maiestie of God, and afterward let vs also take hold of hir ryghtuousnesse as it behoueth, saying that nothing hath any being but of him, for he is the fountayne of all benefitis: when wee feele after this sort what God is, fearing him earnestly and trembling at his maiestie. It is the profit that we must make of it. Howbeit forasmuch as wee bee yet very farre from that point: let euery one of vs lerne to recorde this lesson. And thus ye see what we haue to beare in mynd concerning this text. Furthermore, it is not requisite to go seeke the stories, whither any mountaynes haue ben sunken into the deepe or no. But when it is sayd heere, that God remoueth the mountaynes and they feele it not at all: it serueth too shewe that like as hee hath once settled the earth and buided it as it were vpon very deepe foundations: If it please him he can change all in such wyse, as the mountaynes shall be turned into valleyes. Job then recyteth not a thing already come to passe, in some certayne tyme or place: but sheweth how it is a thing that God can doo, according as it is sayd in another text, when it pleaseth him, the mountaynes: melt away before him as wax doeth at the heate of the Sunne. And so this serueth to do vs to vnderstand that he can doo it so often as he listeth. Ye see then what we haue to mark cheefly. This doone, wee must compare them with our owne fraynesse. For what are wee in comparison of a mountayne? how greate firmnesse is in it? All the artillerie in the world can doo nothing to it: and as for vs, there needeth but one little finger to ouerthrowe vs. Now if Gods looke bee so terrible and dreadfull, that heauen and earth shake at it, (as the scripture sayeth): shall a mortall man be able to stande before him? VVhen wee shall haue knowne our owne frayltie, and throughly digested Gods myghtie power, we shall haue doone very much. Howbeit forasmuch as we think very seeldome of it, let vs hardely lerne all our lyfe long, and let vs study this lesson, and let vs alwayes bee scholars. Now after that Job hath spoken so, he addeth that God passeth before him, and he seeth him not: and that he goeth to and fro, and he perceyuet him not: wherein he doeth vs too wit, that although God vtter himself vnto vs, yet shall he be inuisible. How is it that God vttereth or sheweth himself vnto vs? By his works, and not in his substance: for in his substance wee shall neuer see him. Neuerthelesse we knowe him after such a sorte, as we be constreynd to see that his hand hath passed that way. Thus ye see the recorde which he yeeldeth vs of his presence. God then passeth before vs, that is to say, he maketh vs to perceyue his power which spreddeh it self in such wyse through all the whole world, as it is hard at hand with vs: and yet notwithstanding he is inuisible, that is too say, although the sayd vttering and shewing of himself be according to nature: yet haue not we the full knowledge thereof, nother are we able too comprehend it by reason of the small capacitie of our wit: but wee stand astonied at it. As for example: If I see the ground bring foorth frute: behold, I am put in mynd of the goodnesse and power of our God. In the

Att. 17. f. 27.

Ps. 97. 4. 5.

spring-

springtyme when we see the earth open hir bowels and vtter hir ryches: behold, God sheweth himself and passeth by vs. Againe, when one whyle the sunne shyneth and another whyle it rayneth: Then doeth God passe by, on eyther side of vs: he maketh his walke to and fro according too the varietie that he sheweth, and it is as much as if he went from one place to another, to the intent that men should vew him the better. For were he settied in some one place to abyde there, as it were in a chayre without remouing: we should not perceyue him so well. But now he walketh vp and downe, verely too the intent to gather vs the better to himself. VVell then, is God shewed vnto vs so: that is to wit, if we conceyue the sayd power or vertue that sheweth it self in trees, in corne, in Herbes, in Vynes, and in all things: no: we may well haue some vnderstanding, and wee may well perceyue some thing: how be it that is but in part. Sothen God shall neuerthelesse passe to and fro, and yet we shall not see him. Now if in these things which are so base and which seeme to be of no greate vaue, God walk before vs and we perceyue him not as he is, but only very little: what shall we do when we come too his hygher woorks that are more secret, and when God intendeth to woork after an extraordinarie maner: like as sometymes he executeth his iustice, yea euē in such wise as we are astonied at it, and cannot perceyue how it commeth to passe. Now if we be astonied at the things that God sheweth dayly, and which may be comprehended by the order of nature: must we not needs fayle and be vtterly at our witts end, when we shall come to those woorks of his that are farre greater? It is certaine that we needs must. I therefore let vs mark well how it is sayd here, that when God passeth by vs, we shall not perceyue him. Hereby we be warned, not to stand in contention with God, too say, how shall this be doone? or how shall that come to passe? For his power is infinite. Yea and although it shewe it self euē in the smallest things, yet can it not be comprehended by reason: although it be there, yet do not we perceyue it but in part. I haue told you alre dye that this must not be expounded of the substance of God, but only of his woork, wherby he vttereth himself vnto vs: and yet whē he sheweth himself there, and is come neere vs so familiarly, if we se him not then: how shall we do in comparison when we purpose to come vnto himself and to enter talk with him to surmount him? Shall we be myghtie ynough to do it? Sothen we see what the ouerweening of men is, when they mynd too match themselves so with God, as they weene themselves able to stye about the clouds. Alas: we see what folly, or rather what madnesse is in them. I then let vs mark well to what purpose this sentence is placed here as I haue layd it foorth. After this, Iob treateth of Gods power and strength, saying that God casteth, and who is he that wil plucke it out of his fist? who is he that daie say vnto him, why doest thou so? Verely it seemeth that Iob graunteth heere an absolute power to God, and such a one as hath nother ryght nor reason in it. But let vs mark that he pursueth still the same poynt that was declared yesterday: that is too wit, that Gods iustice consisteth not only in punishing of transgressors, when their crymes be noteriouse. VVherin then? Euen in that when God woorketh so straungely, as he seemeth vntoo vs to haue no reason in his dooings, but to doo vs wrong, so as euen the very vnbelieuers take occasion too grudge against him: euen therein specially wee must acknowledge his ryghtuoufnesse. But in this streyne it is sayd, that God will snatch. And doeth he snatch? No: but hereby it is ment that if God vse anye terrible power that maketh vs afrayd, as if he were a Lyon (as oftentimes he likeneth himself too the wyld beafts) in such wyse as he ouerwelmeth all, and turneth the earth vpsyde downe (as they say): when God thundereth after such a sort, so as we be amazed at it: yet may no man say vnto him, wherefore doest thou so? and much lesse may he plucke the pray out of his fist. That is to say, it is not for men to plead with God, for they shall but lose tyme. True it is that men think they haue a good cause too make complaints: yea and they are so senselisse in that behalf, that when they haue spewed vp their blasphemies, they think they haue gotten the victorie of God. But in the end they must be condemned whensoever God listeth too reply against them, and to make them feele his power and myght: not a tyrannouse power, as they haue imagined, but yet an infinite power which sheweth not it self to our vnderstanding, to say whither God be ryghtuouse or no, according to that which wee perceyue of him. No, no: But God is ryghtuouse euē then when wee would condemne him: accordingly as it is sayd in the oncandāstith Psalm, Thou shalt be found ryghtuouse, euen when thou haste condemned men. I then may men well stryue against God: but yet in the end all mouthes shall bee stopped, and God shall bee found ryghtuouse. And why doeth the prophet Dauid vse that maner of specche there, but bycause men are so presumptuouse as to make God to stoupe to their lure, and make no bones in condemning of him, to iustifie themselves?

Ye see then after what maner this sentence of Iobs must be expounded. And now we see in effect how he hath confirmed the matter that we delt with yesterday: that is too wit, concerning the power and strength of God. Are we desyrous to knowe the power and strength of God? Then let vs settle our witts to the consideration of the order of nature as we see it in heauen and earth, that the same may serue to bring vs vnto God, yea and that we may so conceyue of him, as we may humble our selues before him to yeeld him all honour. Is not this ynough for vs yet? I then let vs go on further. Surely it is ouergreate brutishnesse in vs, that heauen and earth and all the whole order of nature suffizeth vs not to shewe vs what God is. For ye see the booke is written in letters big ynough, and therewithall there is so greate store of diuers instructions, that when we shall haue profited in a thousand, there shall be a hundred thousand others wherat we ought to lerne somewhat more: But if we be so dull, as that nother heauen nor earth can profit vs: let vs come to our selues. Let vs bethink vs, well then, doth God come so familiarly vnto vs, as well in his woorks, as in all things that we see in our selues? I though we cannot knowe him as he is, yet at least wyse let vs perceyue him whē he worketh so familiarly in vs. But it is certaine that we fayle in that behalf: and therefore we must conclude that we haue no wit to know God. Now then when we shall haue inquired of Gods presence and power, let vs lerne to humble ourselues according as Iob addeth here for a conclusion. Behold (sayeth he) whensoever I shall come to answer before him, I wil neuer attempt to iustifie myself, but I wil submit myself to my iudge to intreate him. Now we see wher vnto ail leanceth that Iob hath spoken, although his talke be disordered. Verely we may gather a good lesson of it, though we haue no more but the generalitie that hath be declared heretofore. But now when Iob sheweth vs the mark that he shooteth at: it is certaine that that will profit vs double. So then let vs mark well this woord, how that after that Iob hath spoken of Gods power and wisdom, and giuen here some mirours & presidets of it: he sayeth, what is to be done then my freends? Ye see God is our iudge. VVhen euery of vs hath looked into himself, put the cace that we be no euill doers that haue led altogether a wicked lyfe: put the cace we haue ben no whoremongers, no murderers, nor Theeues: put the cace that God be not able too charge vs that wee haue liued naughtily and wantonly: yet not withstanding who is he that dares be so bold as to open his mouth too say, I am ryghtuouse and I deserue well that thou shouldest receyue mee to mercie: where is he that dares presume to be so bold: what is too bee doone then? VVee must come before our iudge to intreate him by fayre meanes. And this woord Intreate importeth that we must pleade guilty: that is too say, that wee must knowe how there is nothing but matter of death and damnation in vs: that there is nothing but sin and wickednesse in vs: and that wee haue none other refuge but only too his mere mercye. Thus ye see what the woord Intreate importeth. And so as oft as there is any speaking of presenting our selues before Gods maiestie, let vs mark well that he cannot be glorified at our hands as he ought to be, except wee bee brought vnder foote, so as all mouthes be stopped and the whole world confesse themselves indetted vnto God, as saynct Paule speaketh in the third to the Romanes. Therefore when we come to make intreatance before our iudge, let it not be with a mynd to iustifie our selues, for we shall get no good by so dooing. Also let vs not imagin that the honour which God requireth of vs, consisteth in ceremonies nor in braueries, nor in any other like things: let vs not stand vpon apish toys, as the Papiſts doo, and vpon I wote not what other gewgawes that men haue brought in of themselves. I say let vs not think that God will be serued and honored at our hands with such geere. But let vs bend our witts to dedicate our selues wholly vnto him, framing our selues after the rule that he hath giuen vs in his woord, assuring ourselves that if wee doo so, hee will dayly increace his graciously gifts more and more in vs, vntill he haue brought vs too saluation, notwithstanding that wee be vnworthy of it.

what

Rom. 3.c.19.

And now let vs fall flat before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of the innumerable faults which we commit dayly against him: beseeching him to make vs knowe them better than wee haue doone, that we may be touched with true repentance, and desyre him to guyde vs in all our wayes, leading vs by his holy spirit, and receyuing vs as his children whom he hath adopted in the persone of his only Sonne: and that he will make the preciousse blood auaylable which he hath shed for our redemption: to the end that being confounded in our owne sinnes, and in the offences that we haue committed against him, we may flee to his mercie for refuge: and that in the meane whyle it may please him too susteyne vs in our infirmities, and not suffer vs to be giuen ouer to worldly vanities, but that we may couet the heavenly things, and apply all our witts therevnto. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs but also &c.

The xxxv. Sermon, which is the third vpon the ninth Chapter.

This Sermon containeth still the exposition of the xiiij. xiiij. and xv. verses, and then the text that is set downe here.

16. If I call vpon him and he ansvver mee, yet vwould I not think thah he hatt heard mee.
17. He hath smittē mee dovvne vvith a vvhirle vvynd, and he hath vvoided me vvithout cause.
18. He giueth mee no leyturē to take breathe, but he filleth mee vvith bitternesse.
19. If man go to strength, behold he is strong: and if a man deale [vvith him] by Iustice, vvho is he that may cope vvith him?
20. If I iustifie my self, myne ovvne mouth condemneeth mee: If I alledge myne vpryghtnesse, he shall esteeme mee frovvard.
21. If I say I am found, yet knowve I not I my soule, and my life my sliketh mee.
22. Behold one point vvhercin I am resolued: that is to vvit, that God destroyeth the ryghtuous and the vvnyghtuoule alyke.

Yesterday: we treated of this poynt, namely that although wee knowe not our sinnes sufficiently: yet notwithstanding it behoueth vs too come vnto God with intreatance. That is to say, euery of vs must acknowledge himself a wretched sinner, and assure ourselves that all of vs haue neede of the mercie of him that can condemne vs with good ryght, according as Paule sayeth that all of vs are runne in arrearses him. And why so? by cause (sayeth he) we be destitute of Gods glorie. As to menward we may well glorifie ourselves, and it may seeme vnto vs that wee haue good cause so to doo: But come we once to the greate iudgementseate, there we must all of vs stand confounded. And here ye see why it is sayd, that if God withdrawe not his wrath, all strong helpe shall be beaten downe by him: and when we shall haue gathered together all that may ayde vs, God shall ouerturne it every whit, except he be pacified: that is to say, except that he of his goodnesse re-

Rom. 3.c.19.
20.

ceyue vs to mercie. For there is no hope at all that wee should preuayle against him. Therefore it behoueth vs too fall to some agreement. And how may God be set at one with mee? Is it by making payement of theselues? or is it by shewing themselves to be ryghtuouse when he maketh inquisition? No, but by making intreatance according to that which I haue sayd alreddie. Then let vs mark how it is in vaine too seeke meanes heere and there too withstand Gods wrath, or to stop it that wee should not be consumed by it. It behoueth vs to keepe the way that is shewed vs here: that is to wit, the wrath of God must be pacified. Thus much concerning that point. Now Iob addeth that it were but lost tyme to make choise of wordes vvith God. VVhereby he doeth vs to wit, that men may like well to vse rectorik, according as there are many that besotte themselves with their owne words, and like well of them, and are of opinion that like as they bleare the eyes of them that are not veye clerfyghted: so God shall be beguyled with the also. But Iob sayeth here, that when we shall haue chozen our words, and told a goodly payn-painte tale that might amaze our hearers, God will not passe a whit for it. Then must all babling and all retorique cease when we come before the heauenly throne. For

Dan. 7. s. 10. runces are not heard there: Mens thoughts muste come
Apo. 20. c. to light there: these bookes must be opened there. God
 12. will make none other inquisition, than the bringing forth
Rom. 2. c. 15 of our owne cōsciences, which may as now hide and excuse themselues in many startingholes: but as then they must lay themselues open, so as all must be knowne and apparant. So then let no man beguyle himselfe with that which he can alledge afore men. For all that geere must be ouerthrowen, when God summoneth vs before him. And hereby Iob meeneth in effect, that wee muste not measure Gods rightuoufnesse by the rightuoufnesse of men. And why? If wee pleade after the maner of men, then no doubt but that our case will go on our side: yea as wee suppose. But when the whole worlde shall haue quitte vs and iustified vs, yea and clapped their hands at vs, and that wee on our side shall haue liued in such sorte as no fault may be found in vs: yet shall wee stop short when wee come vnto God: the chaunce shall be quite changed. Lette vs learne then, that all the aduantage that wee can haue now to the worldwarde, shall be nothing but vanitie. And so, will wee stande before God? wee must first marke well what he is:
 wee muste call to minde his mightie power, whereof mention hath bene made heretofore: and then shall we be bereft of all glorie according to Sainct Paules saying: In steade of imaginig our selues to haue any power to cleere our selues, wee shall finde that there is not so much as one silie drop of goodnesse in vs that deserueth too bee made account of.
 When men are so condemned, they will flee for refuge to the mercie of God. And that is the very poynt that the holy ghost intendeth too bring vs vnto. Now it foloweth, when I shall haue called vpon him, and he haue answered mee, yet shall not I thinke that he hath bearded my voyce, nor that he hath berkened too it. Behold: here a strange saying. For although God heare vs not to outward apparance: yet doth he make vs to feele his goodnesse in such sorte as wee bee not vtterly destitute of his helpe. But Iob sayeth, that when he shall haue obtayned his requestes, so as God hath had pitie of him and answered him: yet will he looke to be condemned at his hand, that his prayers haue profited nothing at all. How shall we take this? There is no doubt but that Iob expresseth what the temptations of men are, so long as God sheweth himselfe against them, according as wee haue seene how he followeth the like phraze of speache heretofore. True it is that Iob rested not there: but yet was he touched with suche a passion: and there is no man but he findeth himselfe in the same plight when God commeth to call him, and make him to feele his iustice after such a sorte, as he is vtterly dismayde. VVe come not so lowe at the first brunt, it is true: but if God come to fight against vs in suche wise as wee see him like an enimie or aduersary partie against vs, it is certayne that we shall be frighted with suche a feare, as nothing may assuage the anguish wherewith wee shall be ouertaken and incombered: and although God haue answered vs, yet we beleue not so: but rather we thinke that he persecuteth vs, and that in whatsoeuer hope he haue put vs, yet notwithstanding he will not cease to increace till his stripes. Ye see then in what discomfort they be which haue once taken a conceyte that God is against them. And for as much as this present passion is dreadfull: wee haue good cause to fence our selues aforehand that wee may withstand it. And how will that bee? First and foremost lette vs vnderstande, what it is to bee in like case as Iob was.

There are very fewe that thinke of that. For according to our owne sensualitye, it seemeth too vs that there is none other miserie nor aduersitie, than that whiche wee feele in our bodies and in this present lyfe. And so wee come not to these spirituall battels whereby God trieth vs by holding our consciences so locked vp, as wee wote not what to say but that he is ryfen vp against vs, that he thundreth downe vpon vs, and that he hath set vs full afore him as a whyte too shoote at. Although God examine vs not so neere the quicke at the first: yet must euerie of vs haue an eye therevnto, and thinke with our selues: Alas if God sende vs but onely some sicknesse, or if he smite vs after some other maner as in respect of our bodie, it is a small thing in comparison of the torments that he maketh folkes feele when he setteth nothing afore them but his wrath and vengeance, and when he maketh as though he would damne them and drowne them vtterly. Seing the case standeth so, lette vs pray our God that when it shall please him to bring vs too that poynt: he will then giue vs power and strength too stande out. And howe? Euen by calling his promises to remembrance. True it is that Gods wrath is a consuming fyre: And truly so soone as he giueth vs any inckling of it, wee muste needes bee vtterly dismayde. And vndoubtedly it is not for men to seeke strength in themselues to withstand such incounters, but they must be faine to borrowe it at Gods hand. According then as God dismayeth vs when he sheweth vs any signe of his vengeance: so on the contrarie part, he rayseth vs out of our graues, yea euen from the bottome of hell, and finally liteth vs vp aboue the cloudes of the ayre, when he maketh vs taste of his goodnesse euen by meanes of his promises. Lo how wee borrowe strength of God to fight against our temptations. But yet neuertheless, Iob sheweth vs here, that the faithfullest, the pacientest, and those to whom God giueth more of his spirit than he doth to other men, shall not for all that be exempted from this present temptation: that is to wit, that they shall not know where to become in the middes of their distresses, when God preseth vpon them. If he heare them, they will thinke they be stil shaken off and that God is not minded to pitee them. If these temptations should last still, it is certayne that wee should not misse but blaspheme God. When faith were once quēched, we should needes go astray:
 & we should be harried away with a helish rage. Howbeit when God woundeth the faythfull after that sort, he by and by abateth the smart of the stripes, & healeth them. And (which more is) wee should be ouerthrowen and flung downe to hell with the turning of a hand, if God gaue vs not some taste of his goodnesse in such distresses. Had Iob hild himself fast to this cōclusion, that God intended not to heare him: he had bene vndone, and there had bene no more remedie with him. Let vs marke then, that he was not possessed nor oppressed with such a despayre as he vttereth here, but that God made him to feele his godnesse in some sort. VVe see this yet much better in the persone of our Lord Iesus Christ. He sayeth, VVhy hast thou forsaken me? And in deede he is there in extremitie, as the partie that beareth the burthen of all the sinnes of the world. Therefore it was requisite that for a while Iesus Christ should feele himselfe as it were forsaken of God his father. But yet neuertheless he had a cōfort to the contrary as he shewed by saying, My God my God. So long as we call vpon God, assuring our selues that he is our sauour, & that we may preace vnto him: so long doth faith beare sway, and thereby wee be perswaded that God hath not forsaken vs. But yet in the meane while, we cease not to haue this ouerheady passion, wherein our flesh findeth it selfe

Mat. 27. c.
46.

self as it were in a gulfe, so as it hath no light in respect of naturall vnderstanding, nor in respect of aught that wee can see: in so much that when we haue debated the matter throughly, wee can conclude none otherwise but that God is against vs, that God is our enimie, or at the least that God hath set vs in that plight as a praygiuen vp vnto Satan, so as there is no more hope nor meane of recouerie. Yee see then to what plundge God put-teth vs, howbeit but only in respect of our fleshly vnder-standing, according to our owne reason, & for aught that wee can see by nature. But God giueth vs as it were a sparke of brightnesse, and he giueth vs some feeling of faith, howbeit that we nother know it nor can discern
 it. And here ye see why S. Paule sayeth, that the sighes and gronings which God stirreth vp in vs too make vs pray vnto him, are vnutterable: that is to say, they canot be expressed. Beholde a faithfull man that prayeth vnto God, he sigheth and groneth, and after what maner? Behold (sayeth S. Paule) when the faithfull persone maketh supplication vnto God, he knoweth not what he doeth:
 it is a thing that outreacheth his mind & all his thoughts,
 not that wee become like brute beastes in praying vnto
 God: not that we be voyde of vnderstanding: S. Paule meeneth not so: but his intent is to say, that God worketh after a straunge fashion when wee be so ouercom-bered with our owne passions, as we note not what too say, nor see nor any likelyhood that he wil be fauorable and merciful to vs. Now then when we be in such a pecke of troubles, although our insight be so dimme as we cannot perceyue that God will supply our infirmities: yet neuerthelesse let vs tarie his leysure till he worke in vs, yea euen by some meane that is vnknown too vs and to high for vs to atteyne vnto. Lo how Iob pretendeth that he beleueed not that God had regarded him, nor heard him, although he answered him. To bee shorte, he doeth vs to vnderstand, that this present téptation was so vnruely and excessiue, as he forwent the whole taste of Gods goodnesse, yea and that his faith was as good as quenched as in respect of his owne naturall reason. Not that it was vtterly perished: but bicause it was as a little fire vnder the Ashes, it was as good as choked. If Iob were ouerwhelmed with his téptation: alas, what shall become of vs? If he whom the holy Ghost hath set before vs for a mirroure of pacience was brought so lowe, as to be falne into so deepe a pit of dreadfulness: I pray you, if God touch vs to the quicke, must not we needes be more swallowed vp to that whirlpoole? So much the more neede then haue we to pray God, to strengthen vs. And though we light now and then into such temptations: let vs not be out of hart, it is no token that God hath cast vs away, nor that we be destitute of his holy spirite. And why so?
 For he useth a wonderful fashion in gouerning & rescuing those that are his, notwithstanding that in respect of their owne nature they haue conceyts and imaginacions which dismay them and plundge them ouer head & eares yea euen downe into hell, so as there remayneth nothing for them to say, but that the Diuell holdeth them as his slaues. But what? They haue their eyes so troubled for a time, as they are not able to loke at him, but they are as it were dazeled at it: neuer thelater he leaueth them some feeling of his maicltie to holde them alwayes backe, that they should not vtterly despayre. Thus ye see how the effect that we haue to marke, is that in the middes of these great temptations, where the Diuell shall haue wonne so much at our hands as that it shall seeme vnto vs that wee must be vtterly ouerwhelmed, and that there is no shift to get out of it: we must continue in calling vpon our God, yea eue till such time as he haue giuen vs the light againe which was as it were ouercovered in vs for a time. Not that it was quite quèched, as I haue sayd: for what should haue become of vs if God should haue left vs vp for altogether: but God suffereth the sayd brightnesse of faith and of his holy spirit which he hath put into vs, to be as it were stifled, after the same maner that I haue already declared by cōparison of a litle fire ouercovered with ashes, in which case the fire may neuerthelesse be kindied againe in time. Eue so is faith smouldred after such a sort, as it sheweth not one sparke, vntill God kindie vs againe, & chase away the darknesse wherewith we were possessed and ouerwhelmed. And after that Iob hath uttered this sentence, he addeth: Behold he hath smitten me downe with a whirlwind, and wounded me without cause. VVhen Iob sayeth that God had strickē him down with a whirlwind, it is to signifie that it is no wōder though he imagin that God is so sore against him that he canot by his natural reason hope for any fauour at his hād. Do ye thinke it straunge (sayeth he) that I should say, I canot suppose that God doth heare me, whē he shal haue answered me? for I haue an eye to this present affliction, wherewith I am so wholly possessed, as nothing may assuage my grief. This is it that I haue touched already, namely that the woundes which God maketh, when he sheweth himself as our enimie, & when he cyteth vs to iudgemēt & we see nothing but an angrie cōtenāce: are very sensible. Therefore when we come to that poynt, it is certaine that we be so ouerwhelmed with sorrow, as nothing may cōfort vs nor giue vs paciētnesse. Now we see what Iobs meening is: that is to wit, that for that present time, Gods wrath & the feeling that he had therof bereft him of al meane of cōforting himselfe, & of all herkening to the declaration that could be made to him to comfort him withal. But we must alwayes beare in mind what hath ben declared heretofore, that is to wit, that God neuer sheweth himselfe so angrie towards his owne, but that he maketh them to feele his goodnesse in some wise or other, howbeit not so as they alwayes perceyue it. And it is a thing not easie to comprehend, that this should be so. Neuerthelesse it behoueth vs to wayte for it, if we wil be Gods childre: but yet we shal haue much ado to perceyue it but by praetise. Some poore mā being assaulted with these téptations [shal perchance say,] how is it? doth God regard me? No: for behold I pine away, & I cal vpon him, and yet I find no cōfort, and therefore it is a signe that he hath shaken me off. Afterward his sinnes come to his remēbrance, and the Diuell stirreth vp store of such stuffe as are horrible. Thus ye see a poore creature that is vtterly ouerwhelmed. VVhen this is past, then cōmeth God to make al whole againe, the cōscience that was so tormēted afore, becōmeth quiet: looke where was nothing but darkenesse before, there doth he nowe shine, there sheweth he a sweete & amiable cōtenāce after the maner of fayre weather. That is to wit, though the partie were in such temptations for a time, did God suffer his fayth to perish and to be vtterly disfeated? No, it is impossible. For faith is an vncorruptible seede in our soules. Howbeit (as I haue sayd already) as in respect of mans whole naturall wit & reason, we must needes be as blind, vntill God shew vs his fauor. And it behoueth vs to mark wel these wordes when Iob sayeth, that God smiteth him with a whirlwind: for his intent is to vtter an extraor-dinarie maner of dealing. It is not as though God layd vpon mee with a cudgell, or as though he had giuen me a stripe with a sword: But he hath affrighted me (sayeth

 he) as if he had caste downe some thunderbolte or some whirlwinde vpon mee. The blowes that wee receyue here bylowe, are not alwayes so deadly: but if thunder light vpon vs from heauen, wee bee but dead men.

Iob therefore meeneth, that the wounds which he hath receiued are as if he were sunken into the bottōlesse deeps. And why? For (sayeth he) lightning and whirlwinds are false vpon me frō heauen. And this is worth the noting. For it is one of Satans policie to driue vs to despayre, by bearing vs in hand that God hadleth vs with vnaccustomed rigour: for Satan will tell vs in our eare, what meenest thou? It is true that God chaſtyzeth sinners, and afterwarde pitieth them: God visiteth his owne whom he loueth: but that is after a fatherly maner, and he alwayes moderateth his rigour. But as for thee, doth he hadle thee so? He thundreth against thee, and how canst thou persuade thy selfe then, that he will shewe thee mercie? It is impossible. Now then when the Diuell beares vs in hand that God visiteth an accustomed rigour against vs: he maketh vs to conclude, that wee shall thenceforth haue no more recourse vnto him, nor muste not trust any more that euer he will receyue vs to fauour. So much the more then behoueth it vs to marke this text wherein Iob sayeth that he was smitten with a whirlwind. Nowe if he haue passed that way, and yet for all that we see that God did succour him neuerthelesse: Let vs wayte for the like in our sekies. And furthermore let vs marke well how Iob speaketh here according to his affliction: he was not senselesse. God then not onely thundred vpon him, but also gaue him the knowledge to feele that God thundred. It had bene ynough to haue ouerwhelmed him: but in the meane season he had a secreete remedie, as I haue sayd. Therefore let vs hope for the lyke. As concerning that he addeth that God hath giuen him many wounds without cause: it seemeth very rude geere. For that God should torment men after a sort without cause, it is not only simple vniustice, but such a crueltie as he were not to be taken any more for iudge of the worlde, but rather for a tyrant. It seemeth that Iob blasphemeth God here in saying that he was smitten and wounded without cause. But if we remember what hath bene sayd: we shal know his meening and what he speaketh. For the holy Ghost hath guydeth and gouerned him in his tung, to the intēt that wee should haue an instruction that might be much to our profite. Iob then first sayeth here (according to his naturall vnderstanding) that God smiteth him without cause. And afterwarde moreouer let vs marke that these wordes without cause haue respect to the apparant & open knowledge of men. I haue told you heretofore, that Gods Iustice is knowne two wayes. For sometimes God punisheth the sinnes that are notorious to the worldward. Ye see that God chaſtizeth such a one. And why? for men haue knowne him a shameful whoremaster full of filthinesse & dishonestie: men haue knowne him to be a blasphemer and swearer: men haue knowne him for a drunkard & ryotter: men haue knowne him to be giuē to raking, to extortion, and to al vnfaithfulnesse. VVell, when God executeth his Iustice vpon such a one: there is no man but he seeth it, behold, God is a iudge when he suffereth not crimes to scape vnpunished. Also Gods iustice is knowne in his secret iudgements, when wee see God smite and torment such folke as had no notable faults in them, but rather they had some vertues in them. Ye shal see sometimes that a whole Citie or a whole Countrie is put to hauocke: yee see all is put to the fire and sword, yea euen the little babes in whom was nothing to be seene but innocencie. VVell, yee see things that to our seeming are straunge. In this case we must glorifie God, yea euen though the reason thereof be not open vnto vs. God will not shewe vs at the first day, why he suffereth and ordeyneth such things. May wee dispute with him, and aske why he doth it, or demand the reason of it? Yee see then what Iob ment by these wordes without cause: his meening was not that God as in respect of him selfe doth punish men without cause. For (as I haue sayd afore) that were an vniuste Tyrannie. But he taketh these wordes [without cause] in respect of that which we perceyue. And herein it is included that we must reuerence Gods Iustice. Although it be hidden, and ouercast with darke and thicke cloudes: yet must we belceue that there is nothing but right and indifferencie in it. And although that to the seeming of our naturall reason wee finde no Iustice in God, but rather that his Iustice is as it were transformed into vrightuousnesse: yet must we glorifie him neuerthelesse. Thus yee see what Iob ment by saying that he was wounded without cause: that is to witte, as if a man shoulde haue demanded of him, knowest thou any euident cause in thy selfe why God punisheth thee? I see none. For Iob was handled after a very straunge fashion. VVee haue seene how he was as it were a mirrour of a castaway, and how it might seeme that God was minded too, vter all his anger and wrath against him. Iob therefore sawe not to what ende God did it: there was no reason in it, as to his knowledge. That is true: for he speaketh not in hypocrisie. And in deede God did it not in that respect, he punished not Iob as who shoulde say he was a wicked mā, and therefore ought to be punished more than other men. VVherfore did he it then? It is bycause the Diuel accuseth him, that he had nother vprightnesse nor soundnesse in him, and God ment that he should come to the triall and that men should knowe what a one he is. Gods intent then was not to punish Iobs sinnes in lyke measure as he had offended. For in the meane whyle he spared many wicked men and dealt not so roughly with them. And so we see now that Iob blasphemeth not at all when he sayeth, that God woundeth him without cause, for asmuch as that woorde is ment simply as he speaketh it: that is to wit, that he knewe not any speciall cause why God punished him so, according as of truth he knew none. But out of all doubt, if God shoulde vse all the rigour that were possible, against a man that were like the Angels of heauen, and walked in all soundnesse and perfection: [I say] if God shoulde vter all his rigour against him: yet should he be iust and rightuous still. Yea verily: and yet were that without cause. True it is that if we take counsell of our owne brayne, if we discuss the case as it commeth too our owne fleshy vnderstanding, wee shal say, it is without cause. But without any inquisition, or without running a head, it behoueth vs to conclude, that for asmuch as God is rightuous, he knoweth why he doth it. VVe see no cause: but yet must we glorifie him. Lo in what plight Iob was. And he addeth, that God giueth him not respite to take breath, but feedeth him with bitternesse. Here Iob sheweth that besides that his miserie is greate and excelsiue, it doth also holde on still, and the chiefe piece of his temptatiō is that God feederh him with bitternesse, that is to say, that he filleth him in such wise with anguish, as he cannot finde so much as one little scrappe of his goodnesse to refreshe him with, that he may take courage. And here yee see yet better, how God doeth now and then cast his seruants euen to the bottome of their graue. And it is a thing that we ought to marke well. For there is not that man of vs, whiche shall not finde himselfe sore combered when God turneth his backe vpon vs, or if wee perceyue him to haue a terrible countenance so as he shewe himselfe to be as it were angrie with vs. For then alas, euen the boldest and most aduenterous are so quayled, as they see nothing but death before their eyes. Howe shall wee doo then who are yet so weake and feeble? So muche the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to marke wel these textes: that is to wit, that when God not onely hath giuen poore creatures some signe of his anger, but also holdeth them locked vp there, so that when they would take winde and draw their breth, in hope to haue some litle smacke of his fauour to alay their griefes withal, God cometh on stil to increace the miserie. Seing that Iob hath bene in such extremitie, why should not we be so too? Therefore when so euer wee be in any meane aduersitie, let vs prepare our selues to receyue grieuoufer when it pleaseth God to send them, vntill that he haue remedied all our miseries. Thus ye see what we haue to marke vpon this text. But Iob bewrayeth himself more opely anon after, in saying: If yee speake of strength, who is like vnto God? If the matter must come to Iustice, who is he that can summon him? Or who can finde any matter that we hold plea with him as if we stode vpon euen ground with him? There is none at all. I conclude then (sayeth he) that God consumeth the righteous and the vnrighteous all togither. There are two 20 ways for vs to recouer our right, when men shall haue taken ought from vs that is ours: for we go about it eyther by force or by way of Iustice. Princes maynteyne their quarells with bloudshed: and priuate persones would do as much, if they might be suffered. Alwayes they would begin by way of deedes, and hardly can they withhold themselves from it, what punishment so euer be prepared for them. And there is also the ordinarie meanes of Iustice, Iob taketh both these things here, as if he should say, True it is that I find my self tormeted with 30 extremitie, and yet notwithstanding, howe shall I withstand my God? For if I fall to violence, what shall I gaine by it? I am no egall match for him. If I go to it by way of Iustice, will he receyue me? who shall take vpon him as Iudge or vmpire betwixt vs? whereat shall I beginne my plea? To be short, I see that God consumeth both the righteous and the wicked. This talke seemeth yet more straunge than that which we haue set downe: howbeit if we looke well into it, we may after a sorte make them both one: which thing will be very good, and very fit to 40 serue our turne. VVhereas Iob sayeth there is none that can match God in strength nor that can holde plea with him in law, bicause he wil not be so much at comaundement: he meeneth not hereby to impute vnto God such a lawlesse power as to do what he listeth and to deale vniustly. True it is that we ought to aske none other reason at Gods had, than his own good wil: but yet therewithall we must hold it for a certaintie that Gods will cannot be otherwise than iust & rightfull: no though we see it not to be so, but rather the flat contrarye. Here then Iob taketh 50 his ground vpon that which I haue discourfed afore: that is to wit, That Gods iustice consisteth not in the knowledge that wee haue of it, or that can enter into mans brayne. VVherein then? It consisteth in it selfe, so as wee must say, hath God done this or that? It is well done. Hath God willed this? his will is right and rightfull, there is no faulte to be founde in it, And how may that be? If we examine Gods doings, wee shall finde there is no reason in them, and that they be cleane awke to that they should be: and shall wee therevpon acknowledge him too bee 60 righteous? Howe is that possible? This is it that I touched afore, namely that Gods rightuoufnesse or iustnesse consisteth in it selfe, so as it needeth not to borrow allowance. And lette vs not thinke it straunge that God requireth this confession at our handes, that wee should all of vs assure our selues that he is righteous how vnindifferent so euer he seeme to be in his dealings. And why so? I pray you what is our wit? Shall mortall men dare say that they are able too comprehend the measure of Gods rightuoufnesse? what a folly were that? But for asmuch as our eyesight is dimme, and that we haue much a do to discern one foote length afore vs, as yee would say: let vs acknowledge our owne measure and what we are able to beare. True it is that our eyesight is hild within boundes and can see no further than this worlde: but there are imaginacions and fancies in vs, which are more nimble to runne euerywhere. Neuerthelesse, when wee shall haue stied aboute the heauens, yet shall we neuer attayne so high, as to the maiestie that is in God. And certesse seing we cannot abide the brightnesse of the sunne, without dazeling of our eyes: Alas, how shall we attayne so highe as to reache the heigth of Gods rightuoufnesse, so as nothing might be hidde from vs that shoulde not passe through our examinacion? Then let vs mark well, that Iob hath not spoken here of Gods strength and rightuoufnesse after the maner and meening aforesayd, howbeit that he vse an excessiue forme of speach. VVho is he that shall go to lawe with God? For God will giue no eare to him. It insueth then, that God will bee of ful and sufficient credite, and will haue men tied vnto him, and too that which he shall speake in his owne case. But lette vs come backe againe too this conclusion, that it were a fonde and vnreasonable matter, yea and euen againt kinde, that God shoulde as it were be raunged in the ranke among men, and that he should not be righteous furtherforth than he maketh vs priuie to it. For then should he abace himself to be our fellow, he should forget himselfe, and he should strip himselfe out of his owne Godhead. So then it is good reason, that Gods rightuoufnesse shoulde haue this preheminance, that whereas he will not come to account before vs, whereas he will not yeelde vs a reason of his doings, yea and euen when he doeth all things contrarie to our vnderstanding and reason: yet notwithstanding wee must assure our selues that his rightuoufnesse continueth whole and sounde. And why? Bicause (as I haue sayd) it consisteth in it selfe. And herevpon Iob concludeth, that then God consumeth both the righteous and the vnrighteous. Howe 40 now (sayeth he) is it meete that for asmuch as Gods rightuoufnesse surmounteth all capacite of man, therefore he should mingle the good and bad so togither as it were in one vessell? doth not goodnesse proceede of him? VVhy then doth he not know it? why doth he not auow it? why is he not fauorable to it? now if God do so consume the good and badde alike, it shoulde seeme that he hath no more rightuoufnesse in him. And in deede, yee see also howe Abraham reasoneth with him in the eightenth of 50 Genesis. Lorde (sayeth he) it is not seemely that thou shouldest destroy the righteous with the vnrighteous: that is impossible. How is it then that Iob speaketh so? VVe must alwayes holde this grounde, that Iob doth not here take the righteous and vnrighteous, as they be founde to be before God. For where is the righteous when wee come there? But he taketh righteous and vnrighteous according to our perceyuing. Yee see then that a man shall bee righteous, that is too say, he shall leade a good and honest lyfe, he shall walke in the feare of God, and in all purenesse and soundnesse with his neyghbours: and yet when he commeth before the heauenly Throne, the thing that we see not must needes bee discourfed there. Thus to our vnderstanding we see both the righteous and the vnrighteous to perish, & that God striketh as wel the one as the other, & that their plagies are indifferent, as it is sayd in Salomon. But shall we therefore blaspheme God? No: but we must alwayes beare in minde, that if Gods iustice bee apparant vnto vs, that 60 is to

Gen. 18. c.
23. 25.

is to say, if he shewe it openly by punishing the wicked and deliuering the good and suche as haue serued him faithfully: it is well, wee haue too glorifie him in that behalfe. But if Gods Iustice bee not knowne too vs, so as it seemeth that he confoundeth all together, and that according to our imaginacion he punisheth the righteous and vrightuous together: yet let not vs therefore cease to acknowledge and confesse that he is righteous in himselfe, and that it becommeth vs to glorifie him in all cases and in all respects. VVhen wee take this way: although things seeme vterly confuzed vnto vs: yet will God giue vs such a wisdom, as wee shall acknowledge that there is nothing done without reason: yea and the thing which seemeth presently too be against vs, shall be turned too our welfare. Lo what the exercyses of Christians are: herevnto must we apply our indeuer vntill God haue called vs home from all warres. But the chiefest assault wherewith he will exercise vs, is that wee may giue him glorie, notwithstanding that it seeme he is minded to thunder downe vpon vs.

And nowe lette vs fall flat before the presence of our good God with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him to make vs so too enter in the examination of our sinnes, as when we shal haue knowne them thoroughly, wee may not doubt but that he hath vs at a great aduantage, and therevpon humble our selues both great and small, and all of vs confesse our selues to bee indented too that greate iudge. And if that during this mortall lyfe, he handle vs more roughly than wee would, and sende vs afflictions that are ouerfore and contrarie to the fleshe: lette vs beseeche him too asswage them, and that although he abate them not at the firste dashe, yet neuerthelesse he will alwayes holde vs vp with a strong hand, and not suffer Satan too inuegle vs too blasphemie, but that wee may acknowledge his rightuousnesse and honour it, vntill he make vs feele his goodnesse in giuing vs full fruition of our saluation: too the ende wee may not onely sende vp our sighes to him whyle wee be here beneath, but also crie out vnto him with open mouth as to our father. That it may please him too graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The xxxvj. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the ninth Chapter.

23. If the scourge kill out of hande, shall he laugh at the temptation of innocents?
24. The earth is giuen into the hande of the vicked, he couereth the faces of the iudges. If not: vvhere is he, or vvho is he?
25. My dayes are passed more svviftly than a Poste, in so much that I haue seene no good at all.
26. They be slipt avvay sooner than a svvift ship, or than a flying Eagle.
27. If I say in my selte, I vvill forget my complaynt, I vvill appease my vvyrath, I vvill comfort mee.
28. I am afrayde of my miseries. For I knowv thou vvilt not iudge me innocent.

That wee may fare the better by this doctrine, wee muste call to remembrance what hath bene sayde heretofore: namely how Iobs intent was too shewe that Gods Iustice appeereth not alwayes vnto men, nor is so knowne, as it can be layde, that men may touche it with their finger: but rather that God worketh after suche a straunge fashion, as it seemeth vnto vs that there is nother reason nor indifferencie in him, and that he maketh a hotchpotch of all things. But I haue tolde you afore, that Gods Iustice doth sometimes shew it selfe, and that there are certaine markes for vs too discern it by. If God punish a wicked man, there is none of vs, but he thinketh vs all too haue warning by such example, and wee bee compelled to glorifie him, according as it is sayde in the hundred and seuenth Psalme. If God deliuer any one that calleth vpon him, and hath walked in his feare: we will say, God is righteous. But he keepeth not all one rate too doo continually so. For he hath his secreete iudgements, whiche are incomprehensible to vs, in so much that wee cannot but be abashed and amazed when God shall doo things that seeme too bee quite against reason. Yee see then howe Iobs meening is, that he findeth himselfe as it were amazed, bycause God ruleth him not after his owne minde and fancie, but hath another maner of doing of his workes, which is vterly vnkowne vnto vs. And here yee see why he sayeth, If the whip smyte to kill, how shall God laugh at the temptation of good men? Bycause this sentence is darke, and shorte (whiche causeth darkentesse:) it hath bene expounded diuers wayes. But when all is throughly considered the very right meening is this: namely that if God ryse vp agaynst the wicked, howe doeth he laugh at the trouble of the good? for he that spake afore, (that is to witte Baldad) pretended that God vtereth out his chastizements openly, so as when soeuer men haue deserued it, and whensoever they haue done amisse, God punisheth them for it. To be shorte, he seemed (by his saying) that men were already come too the latter day, and that iudgement and Iustice were set in full perfection. Howbeit, God reseruech many things: And so yee see why God seemeth to gouerne things confuzedly to this day. For if he shoud punish all the sinnes of men, we would thinke the end to be come already, & we would no more hope that our Lord Iesus Christ should gather vs vp to himselfe. So then it is needefull for vs, that God shoud leaue many faultes unpunished, & also it is needefull that the good shuld be afflicted, and seeme to haue lost their labour in seruing God. But now let vs come to Iobs wordes. If the scourge (sayeth he) doo slea immediatly: that is to say, if God make no delay of his corrections, but lift vp his hande to smyte men as soone as they haue sinned, and do vnto euery man according to his woorthinesse and deseruings: why should he then laugh at the affliction of good men? for we know that Iustice and vprightness consist of two partes: wherof the one is the punishing of euill folke, and the other is the relieuing of good folke and the mayntayning of them in their righteous and sounde conuersation. Therefore if God punish the wicked: he muste also on the contrarie part maintayne the good, so as he keepe them vnder his tuicion, and suffer them not to be troubled or tormeted, but that they may feele his succour so soone as they crie vnto him. Howbeit (as we see) the good are punished, not for a day or twoo, but with lingering paynes all their life long, so that instead of shewing any signe that he is minded to help them, it seemeth that God taketh vengeance of them and is purposed to plunge them into the bottō-lesse pit. Then let vs conclude, that he is not hastie to punish the wicked out of hād, nor bringeth them at the first brunt to the poynt that men may say, Such a one hath done amisse, and therefore he muste be punished. For it were conuenient that both these two things were ioyned together. And the reason that Iob vseth here is good. For it is the same that S. Paule also setteth out in his seconde Epistle to the Thessalonians, saying that it belongeth to Gods rightuoufnesse too punish those that trouble the good and to giue reliefe & rest to such as shall haue bene oppressed wrongfully for a time. The one of these points (say I) cannot be separated from the other: that is to wit, that if God be righteous and minde to shew it perfectly in this world: on the one side he must haue his eye vpon all such as do amisse, & not suffer them to scape his hand, but make thē come to a reckning: and on the other side when good men are disquieted or haue any wrōg or violence offered them, he must pittie them and shew how he hath them in his hand. Ye see (I say) how these two things ought to match togither: otherwise there should be but the one part of iustice in God, and his iustice should not be whole and perfect. VVe see then that Iob hath good reason to speake so. And yet for all that, it is not to be said that he lifted vp himselfe maliciously agaynst God. As I haue declared heretofore, his intent is to shew, that Gods rightuoufnesse is not alwayes apparāt, and that we must not take it for a generall rule, that as soone as men haue sinned, God hath his hand bent to punish them, & on the contrarie part he wil at the first brunt shew himselfe a preseruer of the good, by ridding them out of all their miseries: we must not come to that point. And why? Bicause it is not Gods wil that his rightuoufnesse should alwayes be knowne vnto vs, but rather to shew how it is not for vs to enter at any time into his iudgemēt, but that it behoueth vs to hūble our selues whensoever he vseth any manner of dealings that shal be quite contrarie to our fantasies: & we must not presume to murmur agaynst him for it, but we must reuerence these great secretes which are far aboue our capacitie, vntill such time as we may comprehend that which is hidden frō vs as now. Ye see then what Iobs meening is. True it is: that he ceased not to be tormented with an excessiue passion. Therefore let vs learne hereby, that it behoueth vs to hūble our selues before God, & that although he deale after such a straunge fashiō with vs, as we perceiue nother equitie nor vprightnesse in it: yet notwithstanding we must cast downe our eyes. But if we haue any inclination to murmur agaynst God, when he doth things that we comprehend not by our own reason: the same wil then specially shew it self, when he scourgeth vs: then are we spurred to repine agaynst him: saying, what meeneth this? where am I? why doth not God pittie me? Lo how men waxe wood when God handleth them otherwise than they like of. But yet so it is, that Iob fought agaynst such temptations. Let vs marke then that Iob knew how God is rightuous, & was fully perswaded therof in generall. But when he came to the incounter, & that the mischief pressed him: then was he driuen backe and inforced to chafe agaynst God. Furthermore there is this restingpoynt wherof I haue spokē, that such as wil cōfort themselves in their afflictions, must alwayes haue an eye to the rule that Iob taketh here: which is, I am not scourged at Gods hād bicause I am an euill doer: for God punisheth not mē according to their deserts. It becōmeth vs not to taske him so to our ordinarie manner of proceeding, for he hath iudgements that are incōprehensible to vs. Ye see then how Iob speaketh. And to cōfirme his matter, he sayeth: we see the good pine away & God helpeth thē not: he suffereth thē to continue in anguish a yeere or two, yea or all the time of their life: he maketh no cōutenance of cōming towards them, they be as poore forlorne folke. Now if God leaue good folke after that maner in their necessities: why should it be sayd that the whip striketh out of hād, that is to say, that God is hastie in punishing mens offences and finnes? VVe see the cleane cōtrarie. And here vpo we gather, that we must not thinke our selues to be scaped frō Gods hand, when (hauing done our neighbours a shrewd turne,) wee be at our ease for a time. Let vs beware we flatter not our selues when God beareth with vs, but let vs vnderstand that by that meanes he meeneth to draw vs to repētaunce. Abusest thou Gods pacience, sayeth S. Paule speaking to such as were wilful in their naughtinesse: True it is that God wil haue pittie vpon such as returne vnto him and aske him forgieuenesse of their faultes: but yet doth it not therefore followe, that he will cast away all those whom he scourgeth in this worlde. Let vs marke then that God punisheth not men as soone as they haue done amisse: and yet it followeth not that they are therefore acquit, and shall neuer be called to account. Nay rather, it is bicause God giueth vs respite here to returne to his mercie, and to beseech him to receiue vs to mercie. Therefore if we see the wicked triumph, and scoffe at God, and yet that they are not pressed by his hand: let vs not bee misgriued thereat, as though God had giuen vp his office and were no longer the iudge of the worlde: but let vs wayte till the time be come. Our Lorde may well delay the corrections that he intendeth to sende, and on the other side the time may seeme long vnto vs: but yet must we restreine our mindes, and holde them short, knowing that God wil not punish all the finnes of the worlde presently, and he knoweth why: there is reason good ynough why he should do so, as I haue sayd already. For his meening is to holde vs alwayes in suspence, that wee might worship him and call vpon him, vntill all things be set in order and good state. Thus yee see why there is so greate store of minglings so long as the world indureth. It is bicause God intendeth to exercyze vs in faith and hope, to the ende we should wayte for the comming of our Lord Iesus Christe, at which time he shall set vp all things full and perfectly which are now so intermedied. As touching that Iob addeeth, that God laugheth at the temptation of innocents: he speaketh after the vnderstanding of man. For we must not imagine that God sporteth himselfe in the affliction of good men. VVe know what loue he beareth vs: he cannot expresse sufficiently how tender the same is, but in saying that we be vnto him as the apple of his eye. Then let vs not thinke that God is so cruell towards vs as to laugh at our torments, howbeit that we can imagine none otherwise after the flesh. Yea [we thinke thus with our selues:] Lord, thou knowst the miserie wherin I am, I cal vpō thee, I sigh to thee, I feele how frayle I am: & yet thou lettest me alone stil, and I perceiue not that thou intēdest to he'p me by any meanes. These things cōsidered, we cōclude in our selues, that God doth nothing but laugh at vs in heauē. But it behoueth vs to vnderstand by faith, that whē God doth so discoūtenance the matter, he ceaseth not to haue pittie vpon vs. True it is that he sheweth it not out of hād: neuert. elsse it ought to suffyze vs, that being a father to vs he loneth vs as much as wee can wishe. For (as Iesus Christ sheweth) if our fleshly fathers who are euill by nature, do loue their children: what shal God doo who is the fountayne of all goodnesse? Then lette vs not thinke that God laugheth at vs: but lette

Rom. 2. 4.4

Deut. 32. b.

10.

Zach. 2. c. 8.

Mat. 7. 6.

11.

vs rather too consider that his discountenancing of the matter is for nothing els but to exercise vs, and that he in the meane time ceaseth not to watch ouer vs to succour vs after such a maner as we knowe not of. Thus much concerning this sentence. And Iob addeth, That the earth is deliuered into the bande of the wicked, and that the eyes of the Iudges are turned aside: that is too say, that suche as ought to redresse the troubles, offences, and misorders that are committed, are guiltie of all. If not, (sayeth he) where is he and who is he? In effect Iob sheweth here, that during this present life, things shall be so mingled together, that men shall not (as they say) know white from blacke. The Earth then shall be deliuered into the hands of the wicked, that is to say, men shall see the wicked haue their full skope here, that such as are moſte vnruely, moſt looce of lyfe, fighters, ſeditious, and full of all vngraciuſneſſe, ſo as there is nother vprightneſſe nor humanitie in them, ſhall haue all things at their will. Therefore when wee ſee God giue bridle to the wicked after ſuche ſorte, what is to be ſayde? There is but one onely remedie, which is, that thoſe which beare the warder of Iuſtice ſhould repreſſe ſuch as vexe good men after that faſhion. But contrariwyſe, it is to be ſeene that they be giuen to themſelues, that they ~~let~~ <sup>let</sup> all go too hauocke. VVhat is to be ſayd, but that the magiſtrats which ought to yeeld eury man his right, ſuffer the wicked to do the worſt they can? A man ſhal finde no reliefe at their hãds, but when he ſhal haue wayted to haue them do their dutie, it is to no purpoſe they are but Idols. And what is the cauſe of all this? And who is to blame for this (ſayeth Iob) but God? For is not God the gouerner of the earth? Then ought not all the wicked to bee rooted out of it? Or els if he beare with them, and lay the raynes of the brydle in their necke to vexe & trouble good men, without ſtopping them of their purpoſe: may it not be ſayde that God doth all this geere? On the other ſide is it not ſayd that it is Gods office too gouerne ſuch by his holy ſpirite as walke in his feare and in modeſtie? Moreouer he telleth vs how he hath ſtabliſhed the Ciuill ſtate of the world, and that iudges can haue nother wiſdome nor diſcretiõ, but at his hand. Seing then that God leaueſt magiſtrats ſo blind, that they be as Idols, and ſo lazie as they haue nother courage nor inclination in them to mayntayne good and to puniſh euill: no bodie is to be blamed but God as it is ſayd here by Iob. True it is that this ſentence may be expounded otherwyſe. But wee muſte not ſtand here vpon diuerſitie of expoſitions: we muſt haue an eye onely to the naturall meening. Thus ye ſee in effect what Iob ment to ſay here. Vpon this verſe we haue a good leſſon to gather: which is, firſt that when we ſee things ſo diſordered, that the wicked triũph, weltring in their pleaſures, inioying abũdãce of goodes, no man gainſaying them, & working their exceſſes and outrages without touche of breſt: we muſte conſider how it is no new thing, that we ſhould be greatly aſtoniſhed at ſuch a temptation. For it is good, yea and needefull for vs to be armed againſt ſuch imaginacions. VVee ſee how our owne minde driueſt vs therevnto, ſo as if things fall not out according to our fanciẽ, it ſeemeth to vs that all things are turned by fortune, and that God regardeth no more the worlde, or rather that he forſloweth his ductie, or that he is as it were aſleepe, or els that he regardeth neyther good nor euill. Lo what fancies runne in our heads, if we be not reſtreyned, according as the Scripture telleth vs that wee ought not to thinke it ſtraunge though the earth be deliuered after that ſorte into the bande of the wicked. And why? For our ſinnes deſerue that the wicked ſhould haue full power ouer vs. If we obeyed God as becommeth vs: it is certaine that things ſhould be ruled here after ſuch faſhion, as wee ſhould be contented. But for aſmuch as we be ſtubborne againſt our God, and play the horſes that are broken looce: it is good reaſon that he alſo ſhould giue the wicked ſcope, to the end that we might be chaſtized by the hãd of them. And why ſo? for our vnthankfuineſſe deſerueth well that God ſhould bring forth his roddes and make vs feele them with al rigour. Therefore when this is knowne to vs, wee thinke it no ſtraunge ſight to ſee things ſo cõfounded here bylow, as we may ſay that the earth is deliuered into the handes of the wicked, or that wee ſhould ſight at the comming thereof to paſſe, bicauſe that God giueſt vs warning of our ſinnes. And verely we haue good cauſe to ſigh, ſeeing that the wicked and the deſpyzers of God, muſt not onely deſile the earth, but alſo haue their full ſcope. God hath created men after his owne image, and put all things into their hande, to the intent they ſhould be as his lieuetenants here. But behold, the wicked and ſuch as ſeeke nothing butto offende God and to deſace his maieſtie and glorie, diſplace his childrẽ whom he hath appoynted here to be his owne heritage. VVhen wee ſee all things thus turned topſitoruic, muſt we not needes grone? and muſt not this prouoke vs to pray God to vouchſafe to ſet all things againe in their right ſtate? Furthermore when it is ſayde that God is he that ſhutteth the eyes of the iudges, let vs marke how it is as much to ſay, as that they which haue the adminiſtration of Iuſtice committed vnto them, cannot haue the minde to do it, except it be giuen them from aboue? For a man is not able to gouerne himſelf: and how ſhal he then gouerne a whole realme? Furthermore it is a matter of greate preeminence to execute Gods office in this worlde: and therefore God muſt be fayne to worke in thoſe, whom he hath ſette in high eſtate and authoritie. And as for the parties themſelues that are in it, they muſte be ſo much the earneſter in calling vpon God, that it may pleaſe him to guide the and helpe them. For if a man thinke himſelf to be of ſufficient abilitie when he is ſet in the ſiege of iuſtice, & truſt in his own wiſdome and power: God will laugh him to ſcorne, and make him a very blockehead. They therefore whom God choozeth muſt humble themſelues ſo much the more, and not preſume vpon any thing that is in theſelues, but muſt craue the ſpirite of wiſdome, the ſpirit of ſtoutneſſe, & the ſpirit of vprightneſſe, that God may giue them the power and abilitie to diſcharge their duties faithfully. Thus ye ſee howe Magiſtrats ought to betake themſelues vnto God in all care and feare. And we alſo that are vnder them, muſte all of vs on our parte doo the like. For if there bee no Iuſtice among vs: behold, the curſe of God is vpon vs, and the Lande muſte bee deſiled ſo farre till God poure out his vttermoſte wrath vpon vs: and in the meane whyle wee our ſelues muſt bothe ſuffer and ſee good men ſuffer, and none of both to be maynteyned as they ought to be. Seing then that it is for the welfare of a whole Realme, when God giueſt his ſpirite to Princes and Magiſtrats and men of Law: it is for vs to call vpon him, that he ſuffer them not to be blinded and vnable to diſcerne aught, and blockiſh as though they ſaw not the euil doings that are cõmitted. And like as we muſt ſewe for the grace and goodneſſe of our God, that it may pleaſe him to graunt his ſpirite vnto Magiſtrats: ſo muſte wee alſo pray him to giue vs ſuch ſtrength and ſtoutneſſe, as wee may not bee out of hart when wee ſee things go amiſſe (as wee ſee them go too much) yea and from euill to worſe, ſo as the Magiſtrats in ſteade of ryſing vp when they ſee neede, and of being readie at hand to maynteyne the right, knowing theſelues

to be ordeyned of God for the same purpose: do fauour and maynteyne the euill. Let vs assure our selues that God hath forsaken them, and thereby sheweth that he hath withdrawen himselfe from vs, bicause wee be not woorthie to haue him sit among vs as he hath promised to do among all such as are conformable vnto him. Thus yee see the fruite of our disobedience and of all our sinnes, which is, that God shall suffer all ciuill order to be ouerthrowne among vs, that all things may be confounded as wee haue well deserued. And so when wee see such trouble and confuzion among vs, lette vs assure our selues that God punisheth vs: and that when he taketh away all discretion and vnderstanding from iudges after that sorte, it is bicause he hath striken them with the spirite of giddinesse as it is sayde in the Scripture. But yet must wee not murmur against God, assuring our selues that he doeth not any thing without cause although wee cannot perceyue it. And this is it that Iob meeneth by saying: If not, where is he? and who is he? It is to shewe that when wee haue sought all the reasons why there is so much euill done in the worlde: wee must euer more come vnto God. For when the Scripture sayeth that God doth bothe good and euill: it meeneth that all things proceede from him, whither it be prosperitie or aduersitie, lyfe or death, light or darkenesse as it is sayde in the Prophete Esay: in somuch that whatsoever the Diuell doeth (as I haue sayde afore) or whatsoever the wicked sorte doo attempt, wee muste take the same as at the hande of God. For vnlesse he gaue them the brydle, they coulde not attempt any thing: and whatsoever they deuised, they coulde neuer bring it to passe. So then it were a fayre martyring of a mans selfe to leaue God and to seeke the inferiour meanes. For it belongeth to God to gouerne, and if he had not soueraine dominion ouer all creatures, all would go too wrecke. And although men seeke nothing but too rebell against him: yet doth he serue his owne turne with them spyte of their teeth. This is it that Iob ment too vtter in saying, If not: where is he, and who is it? VVhen there happeneth any mischiese, let men searche it out, saying: who hath done this? True it is that when any euill happeneth, we can well skill to make our discourfes, and to seeke some ground of it here beneath. If wee bee in a Countrie where a King or Prince reigneth tyrannically, men will say, behold, the King fleeceth and deuoueth his people, and moreover maketh none accout of ministring iustice: he hath officers like himselfe, who seeke but to intrap men: all is ouerturned and out of order: it is to be seene that there is none other shift but the realme must come too vtter decay: and who is to bee blamed for all this? what complaints shall be heard herevpon? It is not marked that men are all together frowarde and naughtie, nor that they haue prouoked Gods wrath against them, and that they be folke giuen to all lewdnesse, despyzers of God, and looce of lyfe in all poynts and respectes, so as it should seeme they are desirous to kindle the fire of Gods wrath to burne vp all. Men then may well alledge the lewdnesse of gouerners, when a Nacion is so misordered after that maner: but yet muste they mount vp hygher. For let vs not thinke that God is asleepe in heauen, and hath forgotten the worlde: but rather let vs assure our selues, that he worketh with his owne hande, and that the sinnes of the people are the cause why the officers and men of law are wicked, and that for the same cause God also is fayne too shake them off, and to make them as it were mirrours of his wrath and vengeance. So then let vs so consider the inferiour causes and meanes, as wee may neuerthelessse perceyue in our reason and vnder-

standing, that God abideth continually all the while in his souerayne dominiō, & as we may know that all things come of him. But yet notwithstanding, wee shall not alwayes knowe the cause why God worketh so. VVhen wee shall haue searched to the vttermost, and made great circuites and discourfes: in the ende wee shall be dazeled and not see any reason why God doth this or that.

VVhat is to bee done then? wee muste honour this Iustice of God which is vnknowne to vs. True it is that sometimes God worketh in suche wise, as his Iustice is fully apparant: and men may see it with their eyes: and sometimes also it is hidden. And in this case wee haue no more to do but to honour it, and to say: Alas Lorde, thy iudgements are a bottomlesse pit wherevnto wee bee not able too atteyne: but yet will wee not cease to confesse that thou art righteous, although we perceyue not the reason why. Howbeit wee muste not furnyze as men do that are not well practized in the Scriptures, that things are done here bylowe by Gods sufferance without caring for them or meddling with them. For that were as much as to cut off his power, and it were all one as if he were asleepe in heauen, and leste the ruling of the worlde here beneath, eyther to Satan, or too men. It were (I say) an vtter defacing of Gods maiestie. For it is meete that he should order all that he hath made, and that the same should proceede of his will and good disposition. True it is (as hath bene sayde) that wee see not alwayes how God is righteous: but yet muste wee acknowledge him too bee so, and wee muste walke in all sobernesse and modestie, and then in the ende God will make vs to know that which is hidden from vs as nowe. Lette vs come to that which Iob addeth: he sayeth, that his dayes are gone away more swiftly than a poste or a shippe vnder sayle. There is also Flying: And this woorde is set downe too expresse the better, that Iob speaketh not of some great ship that is full fraughted: but of some litle pinnesse that may serue to make sport and pastime vpon the water, which turneth nimble here and there and goeth away apace. Therefore he likeneth his life to a litle pinnesse that is light and glydeth swiftly vpon the water: and therewithall he compareth it also to a Poste: and finally too an Ægle that soareth in the ayre too seeke hir prey. Here Iob sheweth howe sore he was caryed away in all his passions. And it pleased the holy Ghost that this president should be giuen vs, to the intent that eue-ry of vs shoulde in the persone of Iob beholde what may happen too himselfe. Then howe fare wee when God scourgeth vs? Lo here a temptation to driue vs too despayre: which is, when wee forget all the gracious goodnesse that God hath done for vs. If wee could bethinke vs of the benefites that we haue receyued at Gods hand, as wee haue seene Iob say heretofore: it is certayne that the same woulde make vs to forgette all our sorrowes. VVell then God doth nowe smyte mee: but what for that? I haue receyued as much good at his hande, and he hath shewed himselfe bountifull towards mee: was it not to the ende I should alwayes taste of his mercie, and that I should trust to it, and flee therevnto for refuge? we cannot eat one bit of bread, but the same is a witnesse vnto vs of Gods goodnesse, and that he will alwayes bee our father and Sauour. Beholde here an inestimable remedie too sweeten all our sorrowes when soeuer wee bee afflicted: whiche is by calling too minde the benefites and gracious giftes that wee haue receyued at Gods hande. But Satan who seeth well this, vseth a cleane contrarie policie: whiche is, too make vs forgette the good that God hath done vs and bestowed vpon vs, too the ende wee might haue nothing in vs but anguish

Esay. 19. c.
14.

Esay. 15. a. 7.
Amos. 3. b. 6

Psal. 36. b. 7

anguish to set vs in a fretting, and that there might be nothing but bitterneſſe, nor nothing that might cheere vs or comforte vs in oure troubles. This is it that Iob ſheweth vs nowe. My dayes (ſayeth hee) are ſlipt away, like a little Pinniffe that will go ſwiftly vpon the water, or elſe as an Eagle ſlying in the ayre, or as a Lackey that goeth poſte. Heereby hee dooth vs too witte, that hee remembreth no more how God cauſed him to be borne intoo the worlde, nor that hee had giuen him ſo manie tokens of hys fatherly loue, as he might well haue wherewith too comfort himſelfe: yea, if hee had had ſuche regarde and conſideration as were requiſite. True it is that Iob kept alwayes ſtill ſome taſt of Gods goodneſſe, ſo as hee was neuer in diſpayre. And verely althoughe he were tormented and toſſed too and fro, yet had he alwayes ſuch vnderſtanding, and was ſtill hulde in ſuche awe, as hee knewe God to bee rightuous, and alſo wayted too be deliuered of his miſeries. Nowe when we ſee ſuche temptations in him, it behoueth euerie of vs to haue an eye too himſelfe, and too beholde himſelfe heere. And indeede although God ſhewe vs the fauor to make vs taſte continually of his goodneſſe: yet notwithstanding we know not ſufficiently fully how well he loueth vs: but rather if hee trouble vs, wee quite forget the good that he hath done vs, and too our ſeeming we neuer receyued any benefite at his hande. Nowe then ſith wee ſee that ſuch a temptation befell vntoo Iob, ſo much the more behoueth it vs too be fenced before the blowe come: Let vs take warning (I ſay) as oft as God ſhall ſende vs any trouble: and let vs thinke thus: Yea, but did God neuer doo mee any good? Is the good loſt that hee beſtowed vpon mee? If I beare it not in minde: too what purpoſe ſhall all this ſerue mee, but too procure double puniſhments for myne vnthankfulneſſe? Lo what wee haue to marke. And further forasmuch as our lyfe is ouerbricke: let euerie of vs inforce himſelfe the more to thinke vpon the gracious goodneſſe and benefites of God. If wee fall into any aduerſitie, we muſt by and by runne too the remedie: which is to pray vnto God too ſtrengthen vs, and to withhold vs from murmuring agaynſt him, yea whatſoever tribulations wee bee dryuen too indure, fully aſſuring our ſelues that if wee bee of his Church, and of the bodie of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, we muſt bee made like vnto his Image, and that the glorie which is prepared for vs aboue in heauen, is ynough too recompence all the tribulations that wee can indure in this worlde: and this bethinking of things will ſerue well too aſſwage all oure ſorrowes. Finally Iob concludeth, that if hee ſay hee will forget his complaints, and reſreſh himſelfe of his ſayde greefe and torment: hee cannot. VV by ſo? For (ſayeth hee) I am aſſayde becauſe I know thou wilt not leaue me unpuniſhed; or that thou wilt not holde mee giltye. In effect, Iobs meening in this ſentence, is that forasmuch as hee hath to do with God, he can finde no releefe for his aduerſitie and heauineſſe: and that although hee purpoſe ſo to doo, yea and inforce himſelfe too bring it to paſſe: yet dooth God holde him ſhet vp ſo as he cannot haue any reſt in himſelfe. It is a verie notable ſentence. For (as we haue earſt ſene heretofore) if we haue to do with men, we may ſtill haue ſome

ſtaringholes, and we may ſlink aſide intoo couert, to ſay, I will finde ſome meane or other too ſhift my ſelfe out of ſuch a mans hands: although he be a Lion and gape with open mouth to deuour me: yet for al that I may ſtill ſcape from him. So then if we haue to deale but with men, we may ſtill finde ſome ſcapingplace: but if God ſhew him to bee our aduerſarie, and that he holde vs at the ſtaues ende, and make vs to ſay, no, beholde it is God that puniſheth me, beholde, it is God that troubleth mee: wee may peraduenture wrythe our ſelues hither and thither, and make all the fetches in the worlde: and yet when we haue ſtyed aboue the cloudes with our ſkill, God is ſtill higher and higher aboue vs: and if wee go downe to the bottome of the decpes, his hand can well reach thither to vs: and if we paſſe ouer the Sea, his hand ſhall ſtretch yet farre further. Therefore let vs learne to knowe that wee muſt ſeek no ſtaringholes when we haue to doo with God, but muſt appeare before him when he cyteth vs, and we ſhall gaine nothing by delaying. Alſo let vs learne not to flatter our ſelues as we are woont to do. For behold the vſe whereto this doctrine ought to ſerue vs: is that when wee ſee the hypocriſie that is in men, wee ſhoulde come right forth afore God without diſſimulation, too diſcouer our hearts there. For it is meete that hee ſhoulde ſearch vs too the quicke, and wee cannot hide any thing for ought that we can doo. Therefore if wee will bee at peace with our God: let vs beware that we vſe none of the fonde toyes wherewith wee are woont to beguile our ſelues. But let vs walke in feare and carefullneſſe before him, & let vs pray him that if it pleaſe him to ſcourge vs, it may be with ſuch meaſure, that when he maketh vs to feele his diſpleaſure, we may not ceaſſe for all that too taſte of his goodneſſe, that the ſame maye ſerue vs too aſſwage our ſorrowes, ſo as we may not doubt but that he is at hande with vs, to deliuer vs, when he ſhall perceyue it to be for our welfare & profit. yea euē becauſe we haue called vpon him. Thus ye ſee after what ſort wee ought to put this leſſon in vre. The reſidue (God willing) ſhall bee diſcourſed to morrow.

And now let vs caſt our ſelues downe before the Maieſtic of our good God with acknowledgement of oure faults, praying him to make vs feele them in ſuch a wiſe as we may be inſtructed to lowlineſſe, yea euen too gloriſie him in all our tribulations, beeing well aſſured that wee haue deſerued a hundred thouſande tymes mo miſeries than he ſendeth vs. And ſpecially that we may know that hee holdeth vs vp and ſpareth vs continually, euen by his fatherly goodneſſe. To the intent therefore that this may leade vs to gloriſie and magniſie him, and too walke in the feare of him, vntill ſuche time as hauing withdrawne vs quite from all the troubles and hinderances that holde vs backe as now: hee make vs attaine to the knowledge of the things which are to depe for vs as yet: let vs pray him to guyde vs in ſuch wiſe by his holy ſpिरite, as we may honour his ſecretes till he giue vs the full ſight of them, and make vs feele by experience, that he hath beene our father and Sauour, when wee ſhall haue obeyed him as true children. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth. &c.

Rom. 8. f. 28.
 & d. 17. 18.
 2. Cor. 4. d.
 17. 1

... L. v. ... The

The xxxvij. Sermon, which is the fift vpon the ninth Chapter.

This sermon treateth still vpon the xxvij. and xxviij. verses, and then vpon those that followe.

29. If I bee vicked, vwhy labour I in vaine ?
 30. If I vvashe my selfe in cleare vvater, and make my handes pure and cleane,
 31. Thou vvilt plundge mee in the myre, and mine ovvne clothes shall defile mee.
 32. For hee is not a man as I am, that I might bee bolde to ansvvere him, and that vvee might go too lavve together.
 33. VVho is the vmpere that vvill put his hande betvvixt vs ?
 34. Let him take his rod avvay from mee, and let him not fray me any more.
 35. And then vvill I speake, and not be afrayd : but I holde me still bicause he is not so.

Have begonne alreadie to expound this sentence where Job sayeth that hee hath no rest bicause it is God that pursueth him, by reason wherof hee is the more dismayde in his adversities. For if we suffer any trouble at mens hands, wee may finde some meanes too resist them. But if we knowe that God is agaynst vs, ye shall see vs so incombred, as wee may well seeke heere and there for remedie, but wee shall finde none til God bee at one with vs. And bicause it had beene layde too Iobs charge, that he ment to iustifie himselfe before God, and it had beene tolde him that he should gaine nothing by so doing: hee addeth: VVell then, I am wicked, & why then do I trouble my selfe in vaine? Heere Job pleadeth guiltie, howbeit not in such wise as his freendes had tolde him of, who spake as then in effect as enemies. VVhy so? They intended to haue hild him as a condemned caytife, as a despizer of God, and as a castaway. Howbeit Job graunteth not that, but hee sayeth hee is an offender if it were ment that Gods secrete judgement shoulde bee entered into, as if he should say: I haue a fayre pleading of my case: for when I shall haue iustified my life afore men, yet shall I alwayes be condemned afore God, if hee list to enter into his rigour agaynst mee. For wee must alwayes turne backe againe too this grounde whiche wee haue spoken of heeretofore: that is too wit, that God may well allowe of vs, as of them that shall haue serued and honoured him: and yet notwithstanding, that when he shall bring vs to his secrete iustice, which is the rule of that rightuoufnesse which he standeth too and accepteth: wee shall bee nothing, and all that euere is in vs must needes be vtterly defaced. This requireth a larger declaration, for otherwise it will not bee vnderstoode. Truly according to the rule which God hath giuen vs in his lawe, there is not any mortall wight that can bee founde rightuous: for where is the perfect loue that is required there? I say wee loue not God with all our hart, and our neighbour as our selues. For so much then as we fayle both in loue towards God, and in charitie towards our neighbour: we be condemned by Gods lawe. And heere we see why Saint Paule alledging this text, Cursed is he that perfourmeth not all the things that are conteyned in the law: concludeth therevpon, that there is no more any rightuoufnesse among men, nor any hope of their saluation, if they rest vpon their owne woorkes. VVhy so? Doth it followe that bicause the transgressors of the lawe, are cursed, therefore all men shoulde bee so? Yea verely: for are there any too bee found, which haue walked according to Gods lawe? No: I meane in full perfection. For if we haue missed in any one poynt we bee guiltie in all: bicause that (as Saint Iames sayeth) He that hath forbid-

Deut. 27. d.

26.

Gal. 3. b. 10.

Lomes. 2. b.

10. 11.

den to murder, hath also forbidden to steale. VVhen we shall haue offended Gods Maiestie, and haue wrought agaynst his rightuoufnesse: must wee not needes come shorte of rightuoufnesse? Marke then a speciall poynt: which is, that if God enter intoo account with vs according to the rule that is conteyned in his lawe: hee shall not finde so muche as one rightuous man in the whole worlde. Yet notwithstanding in the meane while there are that walke in the feare of God, howbeit not through their owne nature. For howe fayre shewe soeuer wee make: it is certaine that til God gouerne vs with his spirite, all the holynesse that men perceyue in vs, is but hypocrisie and vntuth. But if God touch our hartes, and write his lawe within the same: then shall we obey him: howbeit not throughly, nor with such perfect soundnesse as we may come boldly before God to bee acquit. Neuerthelisse there is great diuersitie betweene the despizers of God, and the saythfull. For although the saythfull man haue many inimities in him, and cannot walk so right as hee sayne woulde: yet notwithstanding hee hath a desire to serue God, hee letoureth in it, and hee inforceth himselfe too it: whereas the saythlesse taketh scorne of al goodnesse, casting God off, and making none account of him, but is giuen to his owne sensualitie. So then we see, that some may be called rightuous, who deserue not to be accepted so before God. There is no finding of any perfect rightuoufnesse heere in men, neyther is it to be sayde, that God is beholding to them, and that they may go to law with him, or that they haue deserued well at his hand, and that he cannot find any fault in them or in their lyfe. No: but wee speake of another rightuoufnesse whiche God accepteth of his owne free goodnesse: and we speake of a rightuoufnesse that is but halfe a one: which may be rightly condemned, howbeit it is not condemned, bicause God imputeth not the faultes and imperfections that are in his saythfull ones. And Job doth not heere tearme himselfe a wicked man, after the maner of a lawlesse and awlesse person. Ye shall see a whoremonger that shall bee giuen too all filthinesse, and mocke at God to the full: yee shall see a cruell man giuen too extorcion: yee shall see a blasphemor or swearer: and these maner of men are wicked in their conuersation. For their naughtinesse is so farre oute of square, as we ought of good right too holde them accursed. Job graunteth not himselfe too bee such a one: for then had hee lyed, as wee shall see hereafter, where hee protesteth himselfe too haue beene the fosterer of the fatherlesse, the succourer of the widowes, the eye of the blinde, and the bearer vp of the feeble and weake. To bee short, he had in him an angelicall soundnesse, if it be compared with other men. Howe then, and in what sense doth hee condemne himself for a wicked man in this sentece? For he doth it not of hypocrisie.

As

As I sayde afore, it is bicause that if he enter into the secret iustice of God, there he must needs be cast: and he shall doo well to alledge, Lorde, it is at thy hande that I haue receyued this grace of yeelding my selfe to thy seruice: & although I haue not walked so perfectly as I ought to do: yet notwithstanding, it was the marke that I aimed at, & I haue applied mine indeuer that way, so as my mind was none other, but to haue giuen my selfe wholly therunto. True it is that I am blame worthe in many things: howbeit I haue not shrinke away from thee at any time. 10
 Job might well haue protested all this. But what for that? In the sayd rigorous iustice he must needs haue had his mouth shut. For although men may well shewe themselves to haue had some desire to do well: yet is all that nothing worth. Thus ye see what Job ment by this sentence. And therefore let vs marke well, that whensoever wee shall haue any fayre shewe (I meane not before men, but euen before the Angels of heauen) although we haue labored to serue God without dissimulation: yet is not that ynough to iustifie vs. Why so? For if we enter intoo 20 accounte with God, all the rightuoufnesse that wee can haue, muste needes washe away and come too naught. Sainct Paule speaking of his charge onely, and not of his whole life, sayeth, that hee had not ought wher at his conscience may repine, or for the which he might bee blamed iustly, and yet notwithstanding that hee woulde not iustifie himselfe. In that place he speaketh but of one thing: namely that he had preached the Gospell with a good zeale, and yet for all that he confesseth, that he shall not bee iustified for it. And why? For 30 God can fynde faultes ynowe in him, which he himselfe wist not of. Nowe if Sainct Paule speaking of the office of Apostleship, stode vpon that poynnt bicause he knew well that God could condemne him in many things that were vnknowne too himselfe: howe shall wee do when we come to the examination of our whole lyfe? Howe shall wee doo when God shall enter action agaynst vs, not for some one matter, but for all matters, yea euen for oure woordes and thoughtes, and not alonely for oure woorkes? Neuerthelesse we must alwayes come backe 40 too this poynnt, namely, that Job speaketh not alonely of the rigour of the lawe, which is vnable too bee borne, and serueth to ouerwhelme vs euerie whit of vs: but also mounteth yet higher too the sayde iustice which is vnknowne vntoo vs. Notwithstanding, when hee addeth, Why labour I in vayne? Thereby he sheweth himselfe too haue an excessiue passion. Not that hee yeeldeth wholly vntoo it (for it is certaine that hee hath resisted it:) but hee speaketh of the affection that was in him after the fleshe. His saying then is, verie well I 50 yeelde my selfe gilty, I confesse I am a sinner, I confesse I am wicked: But why take I this paine too no purpose? For God persecutes mee heere: and though I condemne my selfe, yet am I neuer the more eased: Is it meete that God shoulde ouerwhelme mee at the first blowe? Why am I not wiped out of the worlde? why dooth God take pleasure to holde mee so in long pynning? Seeing I acknowledge my selfe woorthie too bee condemned, what woulde he haue more? Lo how Job speaketh heere as a man in a rage. But (as I haue 60 tolde you heere too afore) although the faythful, do fight agaynst their temptations: yet my selfe they not too bee shaken, and too feele such assaults as they wote not where they bee. And that is the thing which Job confesseth and verely hee is the more prouoked hereunto, by the temptations of those that galied him, as though hee had gone about to make his part good agaynst god. And that which he addeth immediately after, conteyneth a more certaine declaration of it. For he sayeth, If I washe my selfe in water, so as I make my selfe thoroughly cleane, God shall cast mee into the myre, I shall be plunged in filthinesse, in so much that mine owne apparell shall defile me. That is too say, when I shall haue clenfed my selfe well, the same cleannesse of mine which at this present beareth a goodly shewe, shall bee but dung and filth afore God. Heere Job continueth still in his matter, to shewe that when wee haue well examined our lyfe, it shall bee founde that our feating of God and our obeying of him proceeded [wholly] of the grace that hee gaue vs, and yet that the same dooing of ours, is nothing. For we must alwayes beare in mynde, that Gods Maiestie is hidden from vs, and that in the same Maiestie there is a certaine rightuoufnesse which we comprehend not. True it is that God hath well giuen vs a patterne and image of rightuoufnesse in his lawe, howbeit, that is but according too our capacitie. But it behoueth vs too knowe, that oure reason is so grosse, as it can not mounte so high, as to conceyue perfectly what is in God. So then the verie rightuoufnesse 20 which is conteyned in Goddes lawe, is a rightuoufnesse that is bounded within the measure of mans capacitie. VVee doo rightly call it perfect rightuoufnesse, and so maye wee name it: yea and the Scripture tearmeth it perfect rightuoufnesse: howbeit but in respect of vs, that is too saye in respect of creatures. I meene not in respect of vs as wee bee sinners, and as we bee all cursed in Adam: but in respect of vs as wee bee Gods creatures: yea and (too take away all difficultie) euen in respect of the Angelles. This rightuoufnesse then is suche a rightuoufnesse, as Angelles and men ought too yeelde vntoo God, by obeying him and pleasing him, yea euen in as muche as they bee his creatures. But yet for all this, there is another higher rightuoufnesse in God: that is too saye a perfect rightuoufnesse, wherevntoo wee bee not able too attayne, neyther can wee bee able too come any whitte neere it, vntill wee bee made like vntoo him, and haue the function 1. Cor. 13. d.

 of the glorie that is hid from vs as yet, and which we see 12.
 not but as it were in a glasse and darkely. For then shall wee bee a farre other thing, than wee bee nowe. Thus yee see why Job telleth vs heere, that though hee wash himselfe, yet shall hee bee founde vncleane neuerthelesse.

And although he speake here of Water, and of Snowe: yet notwithstanding, by a resemblance hee meeneth all the cleannesse that is in men, according as is sayd, I will washe my hands in innocencie. VVhen David spake so, 2. Sa. 26. b. 5 he had an eye too the Ceremonie of the lawe, for so muche as it was Gods will that men shoulde make themselves cleane when they came intoo the Temple too pray. And what was the reason? By cause wee bee fullyed and full of all fylthe: therefore it behoueth vs too bee made cleane when wee present our selues before God. And howe maye that bee done? Can water bee a spirituall washing for oure soules? No. Then muste wee take the Ceremonie of the lawe, as a figure of the thing that muste bee in our selues: that is too witte, that wee must renounce all lewde affections, and haue a pure and cleane harte: wee muste renounce all wicked woorkes, and dedicate all our members too serue GOD perfectly: and that is the washing whereof Job speaketh heere. To bee short, his saying is, that if hee shoulde inforce himselfe to serue God, yea euen in such wise as hee shoulde become as whyte as Snowe: yet shoulde God fynde somewhat woerthie of blame in hym. And why? Hee will plunge mee (sayeth hee:) the olde heere a strange maner of speaking, that God shoulde 1. Cor. 13. d.
 plunge

plunge him in the myre. And howe is that? For it is not the propertie of God to put any foyle into vs: we knowe hee is the fountain of all holynesse: yea and when wee be full of filthinesse, wee flee too him for helpe too bee purged and made cleane by him. Wherefore is it then that Iob sayeth, that God will plunge him in the myre? His meening is, that God will discover an uncleannesse in him which was not perceyued afore. And howe will hee discover it? Not onely after the lawe. True it is that the onely lawe of God is ynough too condemne men, as I haue sayde afore. And heere yee see why the lawe is called the message of death: namely because that if we haue no more but the doctrine that is conteyned in the lawe, we shall be vtterly ouerwhelmed afore God, and wee shall bee cast away without any remedie. Then if God indite vs but according to the forme of the lawe, he shall discover filthinesse ynough in vs. But Iob steppeth yet further: that is to wit, that although we had the sayde purenesse according to the lawe, that is to say, although we had performed all that euer God commaundeth there, which is impossible for men to do: yet can we not stand before him. But let vs put the case, that Iob were as an Angell, and that he were able too go through to Godwarde according too the righteousnesse of the lawe: yet shoulde he alwayes finde himselfe behinde hande in respect of the secrete rightfulnessse that is in God. For it is sayde that the verie Angels are not able too stande afore him, if he listeth to enter into reckoning with them. Iob therefore in this sentence meeneth, that euen when he shall bee as pure as pure may bee, (I meene according too the righteousnesse of the lawe) all shall be but dung and filth when it commeth afore God. And beholde heere a lesson which ought to make al flesh to stoupe, when we shall haue weyed well the things that are conteyned therein. True it is that the ordinarie doctrine of the holye scripture is, that when men looke vpon themselues too see whether they haue fulfilled Gods lawe or no: there they shall finde themselves all condemned. Beholde (I say) wherevnto the holy scripture bringeth vs backe. And wherefore? For we knowe what pride and hypocrisie are in vs. Wee bee so proude that we will not stoupe to God, except we be compelled. Then if oure Lorde presse vs with his secrete rightfulnessse whereof mention is made heere, what a thing will that bee? But we play the horses that are broken looce, and wee set vp our horns too dosse agaynst God as wee see the vnbeleueers doo, who blaspheme him with full mouth: and although they bee conuicted, so as theyr owne conscience reprobeth them, and they knowe not what to say for themselues: yet notwithstanding, their mouth is still open too rayle at God, too grudge agaynst him, and to spyre him at their pleasure. And therefore it is requisite that God shoulde haue a way to condemne vs peculiar to our nature, to abate the pride and hypocrisie that are in vs. Heere ye see why God bringeth vs to the lawe, and telleth vs that we be vtterly forlorne: as if hee shoulde say, well, I see that euery of you footheth himselfe, and standeth too much in his owne conceyt: yee cannot be brought to any reason nor made to submit your selues. I will not see agaynst you my selfe, but I giue you a looking glasse in my lawe, and I would haue eueryone of you to beholde himselfe there: looke there whether ye be fayre or no. Come we once too the lawe of God, there euery man sees his owne filthinesse: and whereas erit there was (to our seeming) nothing but life and welfare, and woonderfull stufte in vs: nowe we be starke deade as Saint Paule speaketh. Yea verely if wee vnderstande Gods lawe as wee ought too do. For there

2. Cor. 4. b.
7. 8.

Rom. 7. b.
9. 10.

are many that haue the vayne still before their eyes, who beare themselves in hande that they haue serued God well: and so long as the lawe is layde asyde from them, they thinke themselves to haue performed it to the full, and yet they neuer came nere it. Such folke haue a scaffe before their eyes. But if we consider what Gods lawe is, wee shall finde that there is nothing but filthinesse and iniquitie in vs. Yee see then wherefore God toucheth vs after such a maner. But beholde there is yet a higher meening in this sentence, (according also as Iob speaketh it for the perfecter sort:) that is to wit, that neuer any righteousness of the law shall be able to stand afore God, if hee list too deale rigorously with vs. And heere a man might cast a doubt, and say: will God condemne men when they shall haue performed all that he commaundeth and appoynteth them? No, the matter is not what God will do, but what he may do. For surely hee will not doo it. Then let it suffice vs, that when wee haue ruled our life well according to Gods lawe, we shall bee accepted for righteous before him. This is certaine. For it is sayde, hee that dooth these things shall liue in them. The promise is not to deceyue vs with vntruth. But howe soeuer the case stande, this is alwayes a sure grounde, that when wee shall haue obeyed Goddes lawe too the full, and attained the sayde purenesse so great as is required, (whiche is an impossible thing for mortall men to doo:) yet notwithstanding, God needeth not to content himselfe with it, except he list: that is to say, hee can finde such a perfectnesse in himselfe, as all that we bring to him, shall be nothing to it: but yet hee doth not so, as I sayd afore. And this is it that Iob ment by saying that God will plunge him in the myre when he shall haue washed himselfe: that is too say, God will finde meanes to shake me off as a wretched and vnperfite creature: and although I haue giuen my minde too al purenesse, that my life might bee ruled by his lawe and by his ordinance, and that my woorkes might bee good and holy: yet notwithstanding, all the sayde purenesse shall be but filth, if Gods rightfulnessse passe vpon it. And I haue sayde alreadye that this present lesson ought well to astonishe vs. For though wee were as pure as the Angels: yet were we not able to stande, but by the grace of God, and so farre forth as hee vpholdeth vs as his creatures, without vsing his rigour agaynt vs. For if he listeth to handle vs as we deserue: howe should we do? Now then if god may ouerwhelme vs though we were like the Angels: alas is there any cause why we shoulde auance our selues, seeing we drinke sinne as a fish sucketh in water (according as it is sayde in this selfe same booke) seeing we cease not to go agaynst the rule that he hath giuen vs, and seeing we perceyue, not some one condemnation but a hundred thousand, yea and an infinite number of condemnations before vs? Alas, what shall become of mans pride? Hereby we see what rage or rather furie hath bene and still is in the Popedom, in all dging their owne merits. For the wretched folke are so puffed vp with pryde, as they weene themselves able to purchase Paradise. And if they do anishe in any poynt, they haue meares of their owne too recompence God, they haue their satisfactions, and they haue their woorkes of ouerplusse or supererogation as they terme them: and all these are payments to discharge themselves with agaynst God. The deuil muste needs haue bewitched men, when they coulde so beare themselves in hande, that they were able to binde God to them by their woorkes. And so let vs wey well this doctrine: but by the way let vs repress our affections and holde them short, that we come not to the same poynt that Iob was at. Not that he rested

Lit. 13. 4. 5

Iob. 16. b.
15. 16.

rested vpon that poynt (for that had bene a blasphemie : ) but hee confesseth himselfe to haue bene tempted , and too haue bene prouoked too say, Go too, if God were a man as I am, that I might bee bolde to answere him, that we might go to law together, and that some body might take vpon him to bee vmpier betwixt vs : then would I speake freely, and not bee afrayde. If God would giue me leaue to holde plea with him, and suffer a iudge to be set ouer vs both : then could I talke boldly agaynst him. Beholde here a right daungerous temptation : And (as I sayde afore) if Iob had concluded therevpon in himselfe : it had bene a cursed blasphemie. Therefore he sheweth that he was tossed with that temptation, howbeit that he withstood it all the while. And it may happen that we also shall be in such troubles at times. For vnto mans vnderstanding it is a verie straunge thing, that when wee shall haue kept Gods lawe, (that is to say, if it were possible to bee done ) yet wee shall not bee discharged before him. Men haue alwayes somewhat to replie in this case : and at least they will lament their state and make their moane, saying : is it possible that God should deale so rygorously with vs, as that our fulfilling of his lawe should bee nothing woorth ? Men then haue a case which they themselues shall thinke too bee verie worthie of fauour, and so shall it seeme too bee to the worldwarde. But when we be egged after that sort, we must holde our selues in awe, and learne to knowe that Gods rightfulnessse (the which wee cannot comprehend as nowe) is hidden from vs, to the intent we should honor it. For wee haue two wayes to magnifie God. The one is according to the maner of his manifesting of himselfe vnto vs. Yee see howe God doth in his lawe shewe himselfe a iudge too condemne vs : and in his Gospell he sheweth himselfe a father to acquit vs. That is to say, whē he commaundeth vs to do the thing that is good and rightuous, and therewithall threatmeth vs that if we haue sayled in any thing, wee must be accursed : when God sheweth himselfe after that maner : we haue wherefore to glorifie him, and to acknowledge that hee is rightuous howsoever the case stande. For if wee perishe, yet haue we no cause to grudge at it. Againe, if God call vs to himselfe, offering vs his grace in our Lorde Iesus Christ, and shewing that he desyreth nothing but to be at one with vs : ye see yet a greater cause too glorifie him in his rightuousnesse, forasmuch as hee hath pulled vs oute of hell, and reached vs his hande. Yee see then by this, how we must glorifie God in double wise, when hee vtereth himselfe vnto vs by his woorde. As muche is too be sayde of his woorkes. VVhen God beareth with vs by his mercie, let vs vnderstande that he could thunder downe vpon vs, and that it is of his speciall fauour that he doth it not. Againe when hee chastizeth vs for our offences, of purpose to drawe vs to repentance : see ye not howe he ministrereth as many causes to sing his prayes vnto him ? Yes verely. And so inasmuche as God sheweth himselfe to bee both good, and rightuous, and wise, as well by his woorde as by his woorkes : we haue wherefore to glorifie him. But haue we done so ? we must mount yet higher : that is to wit, we must glorifie God though hee hide himselfe from vs, and shewe not himselfe too vs, neyther by his rightuousnesse, nor by his goodnesse, nor by any other thing which might cause vs too say that the sayde glorie were due vnto him As for example. VVhen the scripture speaketh too vs of his election, that hee choozeth whome hee lyketh, and casteth away the residue : and that hee disposeth of mankinde at his owne pleasure : and likewise when hee scourgeth the good, and leaueth them oppressed, and wee see that all things are confounded in this worlde : in these cases God hydeth himselfe, that is to say, he sheweth not himselfe to vs after such a fashion, as our reason may be able to take hold of his rightfulnessse, goodnesse, power, and wisdom, and yet must we yeeld him his due glorie. Thus yee see what we haue too marke vpon this streyne. And in so doing wee may well correct and beate backe the temptation whereof Iob speaketh heere. Hee sayeth, Let God go to lawe with mee, and giue me leaue to plead agaynst him : and I will do it boldly. Alas, and how shall we bee able to bring our matters to passe ? As I haue touched afore, Iob ment to expresse heere, that he was tempted to repine agaynst God in that wise : but he resisted that incounter. And euen so must we do. How is that ? Because that (as I haue sayde already) although God should giue vs the sayd libertie of pleading agaynst him : yet should we bee confounded : but Iob did yll remember that : and that was because his mynde was bewrapped in suche anguise as hee wist not what hee sayde. Nowe if so perfect a man as he, (who is set fourth to vs as a mirrour of pacience) was so incomed : what will become of vs ? So muche more then behoueth it vs too marke well what is sayde heere : that is too witte, that if God vter himselfe to vs, we must glorifie him for so doing : and if he hyde himselfe, we must reuerence his secretes, which are incomprehensible too vs : and so wee must euery way haue our mouth shet, and not say, If I might reason the matter, I should preuayle in the case. But wee shall somtimes see in the scripture, how God sayth, Come on, let vs pleade together, according as it is sayde in the Prophete Esay : Beholde, I am contented that there bee a iudge betwixt vs, too see whither of our cases is best. To what ende sayth God so ? It is to stoppe the mouthes of wicked folke, who were full of of rancour agaynst him, and thought themselues to haue gotten the gale, if men had allowed them. Yea (sayth the Lorde) to the ende yee alledge that I vse a tyrannicall power agaynst you, and that ye bee oppressed without cause or reason : Come on your wayes, I am contented to be mustered in the rank among men, and to bee taken as a creature : I will forgo mine owne right, and the souereine dominion and Maieitic that are in mee. I am contented that for this present case, yee shall haue no regarde too none of all that geere : and yet for all this, yee shall bee condemned neuerthelesse. Yee see howe God is well contented too enter intoo accounte with vs : but when hee speaketh so, it is agaynst the dispyzers which spite him, and are vterly rebellious agaynst him. And as for those, hee shall finde ynough in them too condemne them. Among whiche sort dooth Iob put himselfe ? Among them that haue bene desirous too serue GOD, and haue walked vnder the obedience of his lawe. Yea verely : howebeit hee deceyueh himselfe very muche. For there is no man so perfect in whome God findeth not muche faultinesse, euen by the selfe same rule that he giueth vs in his lawe. But by the way, we haue another poynt too marke : whiche is, that Iob sheweth vs, howe the sinnes which hee had committed, were not the cause that God handled him so roughly : and this is a true poynt. For Iob was not so grosse headed, but hee knewe well ynough hee should bee found faultie before God, if his lyfe were examined by the lawe. Iob might know that well ynough. True it is that in his greefe hee was caried away, and became as good as blinde : but howsoever the world went, yet knewe he well, that God shall euermore finde giltinesse in all men. VVhy then doth he say that he wil speake boldly ? He turneth his talke to those that had accused him, and this present discourse is rather

Esay. 5. 1. 3.
6. 41. 1. 1.

rather agaynst the men, than agaynst the matter. If Iob had spoken without an aduersarie: he would haue sayd, Alas, I confesse my self indetted vnto God: and although it were possible that I might be quite and clere out of his dette according to the law: that is to say, although I were able to discharge my ductie too the full: yet shoulde I bee fayne too make my recourse too his meere goodnesse. Lo howe Iob would haue spoken. But forasmuch as it was layde too his charge, that hee was so punished for his offences sake, as it hee had bene a dispyzer of God: hee sayeth, no, no: I durst bee bolde too pleade in that respect. And in saying I durst be bolde too pleade, it is true (as I haue sayde) that he was caried away by his passions: howbeit forasmuch as he hath an eye to his aduersarie parties, hee meeneth none otherwise than we haue declared already. Thus much for the meening of this streyne. Nowe let vs consider how we may profite oure selues by it. I haue tolde you heerebefore, that when we haue done all that euer God commaundeth vs, (whiche is impossible for man too doo: ) yet is the case too suche, as hee can still finde some meane or other too condemne vs, yea and yet shall hee himselfe continue righteous all the while. VVhat haue wee then to do, but onely too humble our selues? And furthermore let vs learne too knowe, that God vseth a double goodnesse towards vs, when he both giueth vs his lawe, and also plucketh vs out of the damnation wherinto the same casteth vs. Yee see (I say) one poynt of Gods goodnesse when hee speaketh so familiarly vntoo men as too say: Go too, I owe you nothing, and you bee indetted and bounde vnto me as much as you are woorth: I can 20 deale with you as I thinke good, and yet in the meane while it shall not be for you to say vnto me, pay vs: for in asmuch as yee bee mine, it is good reason that all that euer you haue should be dedicated to mee. Neuerthelesse, I will beare with you so farre as too bee contented, that if you fulfill my lawe, I will giue you euerlasting life in rewarde, notwithstanding that I mighte require it at youre hande withoute recompence. Seeing then that God speaketh thus in his lawe: doo yee nor see his great 40 goodnesse already? For this righteousnesse which hee requireth at our handes, is such as is too bee required of pure creatures, suche as the Angelles of heauen are. For there is no respect too bee had too our owne nature as it is nowe sinfull and corrupted: wee muste alwayes beare that well in mynde. But seeing that God had spoken so: wee shoulde all of vs be confounded and damned, were it not that hee goeth on further, and setteth his mercie before vs. Otherwyse wee shoulde all abyde accursed, notwythstanding that wee had performed all 50 the things that are conteyned in his lawe. Howebeit, forasmuch as oure good God holdeth vs vp, notwithstanding that we haue both the wayes done amisse: that is the thing which draweth vs out of the curse of the lawe. So then let vs remember, that God dooth well giue vs cause too come vntoo him: not too pleade with him, nor too iustifie our case: (for all mouthes must be stopped:) but too acknowledge oure selues by all meanes indetted vntoo him. And verely euen oure owne mother witte dooth vs to vnderstande, that we must needes 60

bee condemned: yea and thoughte hee speake not one worde, yet is it ynough that we haue the sayd iudgement ingrauen within vs, so as there is not any of vs that cannot or at leastwise ought not too bee his owne iudge, if our owne hypocrisie letteth vs not too knowe it: for our owne conscience must spyte of our teeth reprove vs. Lo heere a ipeeciall poynt. And furthermore, in steede of vmpers too heare oure matter debated: let vs seeke too Iesus Christ that hee may bee our vmpere to take vp the matter. Let vs not desire too haue a iudge too lay hande both vpon him and vs: but let vs beseech him, that there maye bee some meanes of atonement betweene vs and his Maestie. Yee see howe God is eitraunged and separated from vs, and what is the cause of it? Our sinnes, sayeth the Prophete Esay. For God dwelleth in vs by his power. Howe haue wee our beeing, our moouing, and our lyfe? Howe haue wee any continuance at all, but by reason that his power is spredde out through all things? And yet for all that we ceasse not to bee separated from him through our sinnes and iniquities. VVhat must we do then? VVhat remayneth more? That Iesus Christ put himselfe betwixt vs: Iesus Christ muste bee fayne too bee our dayesman, not too passe in iudgement vpon the Maestie of God, nor too set God at the barre with vs: but too bee the meane too reconcytle vs vntoo God, and too drawe vs after him as oure heade, too knit vs in suche wyse vntoo God, as wee may bee all one in him, as the Scripture speaketh. And heere- 10 vpon let vs learne too humble our selues and say, Lorde wee come vntoo thee, not too pleade, nor too presume vpon anye thing that is in vs or in our owne persons: but bicause thou art fauourable too vs, and bicause thou art willing too receyue vs for thy sonne Iesus Christes sake. That is the thing whereof wee vaunte our selues. Not that wee muste not continue confounded as in respect of oure selues: but that forasmuche as it pleaseth thee too make vs feele thine infinite goodnesse which thou hast set forth in thine onely sonne our Lorde Iesus Christ, whome thou gauest too death for our sakes: wee will not nowe doubt but thou wilt receyue vs, notwith- 15 standing that we be too vnworthie of it.

But nowe let vs fall downe before the Maestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of the innumerable sinnes which we ceasse not to commit dayly against him, beseeching him that forasmuch as wee bee full of filthinesse and infection, it may please him to purge vs, and to rid vs from all our spottes, and specially to correct this hypocrisie of ours wherunto we be much giuen, to the ende that we misliking the faults and offences which we haue committed heerebefore, maye desire nothing so much as too returne vntoo him with true repentance, assuring our selues that we shall not fayle to get pardon at his hande, at leastwise so we come to him in true soundnesse of heart, praying him morcouer to gouerne vs in such wyse by his holy spirite: that although wee bee full of many infirmities, and bee so many wayes defiled: yet it may please him to receyue vs, and not to vse rigour and extremitie towards vs. That it maye please him too graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also too all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The xxxviij. Sermon, which is the first vpon the tenth Chapter.

MY Soule is cut off in my lyfe: I vwill leaue my complaynt vpon my selfe, I vwill speake in my bitternesse.

2. I vvyll saye too God, condemne mee not: shevve mee why thou pleadest agaynst mee.

3. Is it good for thee too do me vvrong, or to cast avvay the vvorke of thine ovyne handes, and to cleere the deuice of the vviked?
4. Hast thou eyes of flesh? lookest thou after the maner of men?
5. Are thy dayes as the dayes of men? are thy yeares as the yeares of a mortall man?
6. That thou shouldest ferche out mine iniquitie, and make inquirie of my sinne?

He things that are spoken heere by Iob, may well bee spoken by euery of vs so farre forth as they be good and holy prayers made vnto God, and as he will allow them. And first of all, if wee bee pressed with anguish, wee may well say that wee shall get no good by aduancing ourselues agaynst God in going too lawe with him. Secondly, wee may desyre him too make vs feele our sinnes. For the cheefe condemnation that hee shall pronounce vpon vs, shall boote no whitte to our saluation, except we bee touched to be ouerthrowne in our selues. For a man must become his owne iudge and condemne himselfe, if hee will bee quit at Gods hande. Also we may well make all the shewes that are added immediately, that is to witte, that it is no reason that God shoulde giue the wicked short occasion too lyke of their blasphemies and lewde dealings: and that on the other syde hee is no earthly creature that hee shoulde bee desirous too reuenge himselfe: and finally that wee bee the worke of his handes. Lastly [wee may well say] that hee neede not to put men to the racke too houlte oute their misdeedes, for all is knowne vnto him. So then wee may well vse the wordes that are reported heere, in good fort. But wee see how Iob vtereth his pafsions wherewith hee was caryed away: not that hee resisted them not (as I haue declared afore:) and yet for all that it is not too bee gathered but that in the meane while he was combred with them at the first brunt. And hee confesseth heere, that hee was in suche bitternesse, that although hee shoulde gayne nothing by it, yet coulde hee not but strengthen himselfe in hys complayntes, or rather giue them their full scope. For the Hebrew woorde that is put there, signifyeth both to leaue or let looce, and also to fortifie or strengthen. Therefore let vs marke well that Iob speaketh heere as a man ouerfull of pafsions. Neuerthelesse hee knoweth what the nature of God is, and restrayneth himselfe, neyther laboureth hee to make his owne cace good by accusing God. But contrariwise hee confesseth that hee is amazed, and as it were out of his witte, as men say. And therefore hee resorteth too praying vnto God, that (before he condemne him) hee shoulde shewe him wherefore he goeth to lawe with him, and that before hee bring him downe to that poynt, he should make him perceyue the reaso why he indureth it. And now let vs go through with these matters from woorde too woorde. He sayeth, My soule is cut off in my life. The Hebrew word signifieth oftentimes too mislyke, as if hee shoulde say, my soule is wearie of my life, or I am lothe too liue anye longer. But the truer meening is too saye, My soule is cut off in my lyfe. And why so? For although hee were allyue: yet notwithstanding hee confesseth that his state was suche as hee was euen as good as deade. Beholde (sayeth hee) my lyfe is no lyfe. For I liue in death. And thus yee see that hys meening was so. And heereby hee confesseth himselfe too bee as it were past hope: yea verely as in respect of Gods handling of him. Hee had still a hope in God: howebeit, too truste therevntoo, it behoued hym too go oute of his owne person. And this is a poynt whiche wee ought too marke throughly. For if wee looke but vpon oure presente state, what can wee doo that wee shoulde not bee vterly ouerthrowne by it? And for prooffe hereof, although a man bee at his ease, yet hath hee no continuance too beare out the inconueniences of this lyfe: and if hee looke vpon his owne fraytie, hee is beseeged with a hundred deathes, and hee hath but a shadowe of lyfe. But specially when God scourgeth vs, and sheweth himselfe as our aduersarie, so as it should seeme hee will thunder vpon vs, so as on the one side we consider oure sinnes, and on the other syde haue an eye too this so perfect and highe rightuousnesse which is in God: it is certaine that wee cannot conceyue anye hope of saluation in our selues. Notwithstanding, they that suffer themselues too bee overcome by such temptations, doo well shewe themselues too be ouerdull, that is too say, that they haue not anye suche feeling of Gods iudgement as they ought too haue. For whosoever is touched rightly and too the quicke, shall feele himselfe as it were in hell when hee bethinketh him of his sinnes, and specially if God sommon him before his seate, and make him feele howe gyltie hee is. It is not for nought then that I tolde you that Iob confesseth himselfe too bee as it were past hope, yea verely as in respect of himselfe. Neuerthelater, so it is that hee tasted Gods mercie and fatherly loue wherewith hee alwayes had hys recourse. That was the thing whereby hee was susteyned, and ouercame so great a temptation. And it is for vs also to do the like. For after we haue considered our sinnes and bee sorie for them: wee must harken too this sweete and amyable voyce, whereby God calleth vs too himselfe, for hee promisseth not saluation and life too the Angelsonly and to such as are able too shewe themselues rightuous: for if it were so, there were not that man in the worlde which should not bee shet out from life and saluation. But God declareth that hee will be fauorable to sinners, which are vterly cast downe in themselues, so as they knowe not where to become. Ye see then how it is not in our selues, but out of our selues that we must seke comfort whē we haue sorowed at the sight of our sinnes. And when wee feele suche troubles as wee see nothing but hell open before vs too swallowe vs vp: then muste wee lift vp our eyes aloft, too looke vpon the inestimable goodnesse of our God, whereby he is willing to call vs too saluation, notwithstanding that we bee as good as damned alreadye. Thus yee see what wee haue too note vpon this first place. Now whereas Iob sayeth, that seeing it is so, He will take leaue to talke agaynst himselfe or vpon himselfe: therein hee declareth that hee meeneth to bewray the pafsions wherewith hee was turmoyled, which of themselues were euill and damnable. Neuerthelesse Iob intended to lay them forth, to the end men might know that hee was oppressed with heauinesse, yea cuē with such heauinesse as he saw no remedie, but was faine to make his moane so, beeing a frayle man. But the hollye Ghost had yet a further foresight. For he ment that Iob should bee a Prophete and teacher vntoo vs, too giue vs warning what our affections bee. For it behoueth men to knowethemselues, and to be warned of their infirmities, that they may take heede to themselues and brydle themselues, forsomuch as if they let theselues at libertie, they they shall keepe neyther meane nor measure. Lo howe we ought to applie this lesson to our instruction. Neuerthelesse it behoueth vs too marke well this speeche where Iob sayeth that he will take libertie to make complaynts agaynst himselfe. As if hee shoulde say, I knowe I shall gayne nothing by standing in contention with God. Yee see then that the Preface whiche he vseth, importeth a verie profitable lesson. For men are of opinion that they shall discharge themselues well ynough, if they maye frette and grudge agaynst God. 10 And heere yee see wherein the wicked comfort themselues: For beholde, it will seeme too them that they are well eased of their burthen, when they haue spewed oute some blasphemies and vttered theyr impaciencie: and yet for all that, it booteth them nothing at all, they make their case muche worse than it was. If wee haue any thing that ouerlodeth vs, well, if wee can cast it too the grounde, we bee vnburthened: it is true: but If I haue a great burthen vpon my shoulders or betwixt mine armes, and I woulde cast it vpon myne heade, 20 and make a great struing too doo it: that were the next way too breake my necke. And what haue I gayned by that? Euen so is it with vs, when wee will pleade with God: it is all one as if wee woulde huyse vp a burthen vpon our heade, and it must needs fall vpon it for anie thing that wee can doo, for which way soeuer wee flie it shall light vpon vs. VVee see then that men doo nought but destroy themselues when they vomitte and spewe vp their murmurings and blasphemies after that fashion agaynst God. And thus ye perceyue why I sayde 30 that this lesson is greatly for our profite. True it is that God woulde haue vs vse this homeliuesse of vnburthening our selues intoo his lappe. But the maner of proceeding therein is verie diuerse, as it is sayde in the Psalmes, and in many other places of the holy scripture: the maner is, that wee shoulde consider that God will prouide for all, and that forasmuch as it is his office too gouerne the worlde, he can well remedie all our needes, and will giue vs releefe when wee bee ouerfore oppressed. Lo howe wee may say all our cares and griefes 40 in Gods lappe, and he will take charge of them, whereby wee shall bee eased of them, yea, if wee come too him with prayer and supplication. If wee haue any heauinesse or greefe that nipeth vs, [let vs say,] well Lord, it is in thee to succour thy faythfull seruants when they pyne in payne. I come hither not knowing what shall become of mee, if thou pitie mee not. Nowe therefore when wee shall haue requested God after that sort, and hee shall haue yeilded vs recorde that hee hath not beene deafe to our desires, but that wee are sure hee hath 50 heard them: that is a good discharge: for God cometh still before vs, and receyueth our burthen whiche we deliuer vnto him. But as for those that harden themselues in their pryde, and are puffed vp with it and caried away by impaciencie: what do they? They bend themselues agaynst God, as if a man woulde shoote an arrow at heauen: and the same must needs fall backe vpon their owne heade: or as if a man shoulde cast vp a stone, and the same should light vpon his owne pate also. Therefore when we make our complayntes, let vs be well aduised that the same be done with all lowlinesse, yea, and that we rest wholly vpon Gods prouidence, grounding our selues vpon the goodnesse & fatherly loue which he hath shewed vs, and going vnto him with praier and supplication. If we do so: then shall we be vnburthened and God will prouide for all. But if wee thinke to amende our case by grudging and by casting foorth some bitter talke, it is certaine that thereby we shall bring our selues

Psa. 62. b. 9.

in worse plight than wee were afore. Yee see then what we haue to consider vpon this text, where Iob confesseth that if he giue his excessiue passions head, the same must needs rebounde backe vpon himselfe or agaynst himselfe. But in the meane season hee declarerh, that hys intent was not too lift vp himselfe agaynst God, but to acknowledge that all the complayntes that hee shoulde make, came of the greefe that hee indured by hys aduersitie. Therefore let vs acknowledge our faults: but yet when we haue acknowledged them, wee muste also seeke the remedie of them. Do wee perceyue that our fleshe is vnable too beare the afflictions which God sendeth vs? Let vs runne vnto him that hath the spirit of strength, yea not for himselfe, but too deale it abroad to suche as haue neede of it. Nowe when men knowe their infirmities: what haue they too doo? Behold God telleth them that hee is able too helpe them, and strengthen them. Seeing then that wee are warned so of our diseases: why go wee not to the Phisition? But what? 20 It seemeth too mooste men that it is a sufficient discharge for them too say, it is true that I haue sinned, but I am a man of fleshe and bloude, I am neyther of yron nor steele, if any misfortune happen vnto me, I must needs feele it. All this is true. But in the meane while wher too serue all the warninges that are giuen vs in the holy scripture? Serue they not both too shewe t<sup>r</sup> at when God warneth vs of our finnes hee woulde haue vs to bee sorie for them, and that euerie of vs should hate himselfe seeing himselfe to be such a one? Againe, wherto serue the promises also which he adderh, but too ma<sup>e</sup> vs too come stryete vnto him, praying him to performe them in vs, and that wee may not doubt, but th<sup>t</sup> at he is ready too succour vs whensoever hee seeth vs dryuen too necessitie? Yee see then that the thing which we haue too doo, is not onely too acknowledge our faultes, but also too come vnto God that he may amende them by his goodnesse and by the grace of his holy spirite. And Iob saith, that hee will crie vnto God, saying: Condemne mee not, but shewe mee wherefore thou pleadest. Here Iob speaketh 40 still as a man troubled in his wittes. For he is verie loth that God should proceede with him by the sayde secrete and hidden rightfulnessse whereof I treated yesterday: but he woulde haue God to examine him after his ordinarie maner. I sayde afore, that God hath giuen vs a sure rule in his lawe: and that if we be i<sup>n</sup> treated according to our offences, we beholde Gods rightuousnesse which is set forth there, and our inditement is giuen vs and layde afore vs in writing, insomuch that we see there the Articies that are proued agaynst vs, yea and so well proued, as they suffize to cast vs. Therefore when men are scourged at Gods hande for their finnes: then see they in the law, not onely their sentence of condemnation, but also all their whole inditement. There the matters are so layde foorth from poynt to poynt, as they be faine to cast their heades intoo their bosomes. Howbeit forsomuch as God scourgeth not Iob after the ordinarie maner, but had graunted Satan leaue too trouble him: Therefore Iob sayth, Condemne me not till thou hast first commended thyne action agaynst me. And this is sayde, because Gods secrete iustice is very strauge for vs to know: for our wits cannot attaine thervnto. And why so? For we are alwayes desirous to knowe the reason why God worketh so: wee would haue him accoutable to vs. And when God scourgeth vs, and lea<sup>t</sup>eth vs not know wherefore: thervpon we are amazed, and we are angrie at it. How so? Is not God rightuous? Then must not all that he doth needes be ruled by reason and vprightnesse? Yes. but I see it not to be so, but rather the flat contrarie. See how men are puffed vp to pleade against God, They make discourses within themselves, yea euen discourses of hartburning and fummishnesse. Thus yee see what Iob seeketh in this sentence. But yet for all that, God was able to shewe him playnly, yea say I, and to make him perceyue that how ryghtuous so euer he had ben, it was good reason that he should bee chastized for his sinnes. And wherefore doeth he then make such protestation? for he seemeth to beare men in hand that his case is good, if God would chastize him by the rule of the lawe. No no: But he rather hath respect to the purpose of God: which is that he should confesse himself vnfaignedly to bee a sinner, and that although God had good reason to punish him so greuously: yet notwithstanding he did not punish for his sinnes sake. And for proof thereof, he sawe many wicked folk in the world, who were spared whylest he was punished: and as for his owne parr, he had alwayes indeuered to serue God too the vtermost of his power. Wherefore the was he so scourged, but bycause God had some other special consideration? yee see then when Iob pretendeth heere: that is to witte, to obteyne that God should handle him after an ordinarie manner, to the end to make him perceiue his sinnes. And heere withall wee haue to apply this present lesson to our owne instructiō, and it will stand vs in great stead. The applying of it is, to pray God to shew vs wherefore he entreteth processe against vs, and why he calleth vs to iudgemēt. For without that, all the chastizements that wee can endure, are to no purpose: according as we see that the greater part of the world do harden them selues against God. VVe see how Gods scourges do beate both gret and smal: and in deede, euery man crieth, Alas that the wretched world is no better now adayes: but in the meane season where is the repentance? what auaille al these chastizements? It seemeth that men haue conspired to withstand God, and to beate backe his blowes: insomuch that if God giue them neuer so great strokes with a hammer, we see their harts are as stythes: and so farre off are they from softning, that they rather harden at it. Whereof commeth this, but bycause wee want the wisdom and discretion to knowe, why God pleadeth against vs? So then it is a very profitable petition for vs when we desire God that he shoulde not simply condemne vs, but rather make vs to vnderstand wherein we be guiltie. and enlighten vs by his holy spirite, that we may enter into the examining of our own consciences, and when wee haue well considered our sinnes, we may mourne for them, and not haue any other intent than to returne vnto him, and to yeeld our selues confounded in them, that he may haue pitie vpon vs. Lo heere a speciall poynt. And besides this, there is yet another second request: which is, that Gods punishing of vs may not be to oppresse vs vtterly: but that he will deale with vs after suche a sort, as we may haue leysure to be-thinke vs of our sinnes. And this present request differeth from the other. Why so? If God should come with so great and headie violence at the first brunt, as we might be vtterly dismaide at it: what wold become of it? VVe shuld not haue the stomacke to acknowledge, Alas, God is my iudge, and yet he neuer ceaseth to be my father still. But as a miserable offender that is condemned, is as it were dulle when he is drawen to the gallows, and is like as a blocke of wood vnable to receiue cōfort though it be offered him: euen so yee see that we are in the same taking, when God doth by the said horrible extremitie begin to shew him selfe against vs. For [out of hand] we conceiue eternall death, which is so combersome to vs, as it overwhelmeth vs with suche darknesse, that we haue not so much as one little sparke of good comfort to come vnto him. VVe bee forepossest with suche a fearefulnesse, as we haue not the witte to say, alas my God, yet giue thou space of repentance to thy silly poore creature which presenteth him selfe before thee. Therefore wee haue great neede to returne vnto God after the example of Iob, praying him to indite vs before he condemne vs: that is to say, to deale so mildly with vs as we may haue respite to bethinke our selues. And heere ye see why Ieremy likewise saith, Lorde chastize thou me, howbeit with measure. For he saith wel ynough, that if God listeth to deale rigorously with vs, we should be vtterly overwhelmed, we were past recouerie. Therefore he beseecheth God to chastize him with measure: that is to say, that the chastizemēt may be tempered and moderated in such wise, as he may reade and quietly examin his faults, to be sorie for them: and that therevpon he may also take hart to returne vnto God in hope of forgiuenesse at his hand.

Ye see then how it behoueth vs too do: and it is more than necessarie for vs to do it. For wee see howe Gods scourges are continually sent abroad through the whole world: and the cause of the mischief is the same which I haue shewed alreedy: that is to witte, bycause men consider not why God scourgeth them and beateth them after that fashion. Agayne we see men are befotted with such a presumptuousnesse, yea and with such a foolish rage: as they thinke themselves alwayes able to iustifie themselves before God. Then seeing that this pride is so deeply rooted in our nature: we ought too bee so muche the more prouoked to make the said petition which I haue spoken of: that is to witte, that God shuld shew vs wherefore hee sueth against vs: that is to say, that he shoulde make vs to feele our sinnes in such manner, as we might be driuen willingly to confesse our selues guiltie, and afterward be taught to returne vnto him. But yet for all this, whensoever it shall please God to shew men wherefore he pleadeth against them, there is not that mā which hath not his enditement throughly framed alreedy (no not euen the rightuouest man vpon the earth) I say euen according to the rule of the lawe, so as God needeth not to bring vs to his high iustice which is incomprehensible to vs: but only that we looke vpon our owne life on the one side, and on the other side considering what Gods lawe requireth, comparing our works with the rule that God hath lent vs: and then shall wee be driuen to vtter confusion. Wherefore is it then, that men presume so much both vpon their works, and vpon their vertues, and vpon their merites? It is bycause they neuer knew what Gods iustice is. For wherof cometh this hypocrisy in the popedome, that mé shal preach free will, merits, & satisfactiōs, & set vp their bristles in such wise, as beare theselues in hand that they may come perking before God, yea and preace thither like shamelesse strumpets. They be full of filth and vncleannesse, and yet notwithstanding they preache their owne merites: and they beare themselves in hand, that when they haue done amisse, they can well quit themselves againe by satisfactiōs. And wherof cometh such pride, but bycause they were neuer rightly cited before the saide iudgement seate to feele how guiltie they be?

Therefore lette vs marke well, that when wee desire God to shew vs wherefore he pleadeth against vs: the iustifying and quitting of our selues must not be the marke that wee must shoote at: but rather we must yeeld ourselues gilty that we may be receyued to mercie. For behold the onely remedye which is lefte vs, is too desire God to pitie vs, bycause that we for our part can bring nothing to I iin but our owne confusion. Thus yee see what we haue to marke in this streime. But by the way Iob addeth, Is it good for thee to do me wrong, and to cast away the worke of thy hands, and to make the determination of the wicked to shine. Or [is it a pleasure to thee] to be priate or of counsell with the wicked? Heere Iob speaketh of the nature of God, euen to the intent to obtaine his request. As I haue touched heretofore, God suffereth vs to vse such manner of speech as this, when wee come vnto him that is to witte, [he giueth vs leaue] to speake familiarly. neuerthelesse, this must be done with all lowlinesse. For when God is so freendlie as to abace himselfe to the intent we should not aliedge that we be set to farre off from him: it is not to giue vs boldnesse to overshooote our selues so as we should come scornefully too him and disdayne him. No but it is to the end that oure sorrowe should not ouerwhelme vs in suche sort as wee should not be able to take breath, and be out of all hope that God will regard vs. Thus ye see the mane that wee haue to find some easement when it shall seeme that we are vtterly vndone as in respect of our selues: whiche is, that we cease not for all that, to lay open our harts so familiarly vnto God, and to make our moane vnto him as a little child gets him to his father, seeing he giueth vs leaue so to do.

Ye see then how the faith of Gods children may be well stablised, not in pride and ouerweening, but in true lowlinesse: And now lette vs come too that whiche Iob saith Shal thou gayne any t'ng by doing me wrong? or by casting away the worke of thy hands? Gods righteousnesse is tried by this, that he is not like men who are led by affection. VVhereof commeth it that men do wrong, or hurme, or some other anoyance by guile or malice to their neighbour? It is by cause it profiteth them selues. VVherefore is it that a iudge is brybed: VVherefore will he oppresse good men, and support wicked men? VVill he be led by credite or fauoure? It is by cause it seemeth to be for his profite, or to win the good will of some person, or else to auenge him selfe. But none of these things can fasten vpon God. VVe see then that his righteousnesse is prooued on the one part. For when God scourgeth men, doth he bend him selfe against his enemies? No: he addresseth him selfe to his creatures: for wee are the work of his hands, he hath created and fashioned vs. VVill he then destroy that which he hath made. No: And therefore it behoueth vs to conclude, that God cannot vse eyther wrong or crueltie towards vs. He cannot vse any wrong: verely because he requireth not any thing at mens hands, but that which is due to him. And they are convicted thereof. For although they be malicious and stubborne: Yet haue they alwayes some respect vnto him. True it is that some are so ouerboid in naughtinesse, and giue themselves so wholly vnto it: as they thinke not at all vpon God. Notwithstanding, (as I haue said) euen nature imprinteth alwayes this vnderstanding in men, that if they know it not to be for their commoditie and profite to do extortion and wrong to their neighbours, they will nor do it. Then if men being euill of themselves, do no euill but to their owne profite: can God who is the fountaine of all goodnesse, and the rule of all righte, be moued to do vs hurme and to punish vs wrongfullye, without hauing any profite by it? So then we see heere one prooue of Gods righteousnesse. Agayne it is manifest that he can vse no crueltie against vs: we are his workmanship inasmuch as he hath fashioned vs. It is certaine therefore, that forsomuch as we be his workmanship, he will not destroy vs without cause. VVe see that when a workman hath made a peece of work, he wold haue the same to be preferued still. But God hath put vs into this world: and we be as it were the record of his power, righteousnesse, goodnesse, and wisdom. VVill he then destroy vs without cause? It is a doctrine greatly for our behoofe, if so be that we be able to applie it well to our instruction. Yea: for Satan will tempt vs at all assayes, to be offended with God as who should say he vsed ouergreat rigoure towards vs as if he were vnrighteous. But wee must haue the stay to say, how now wretched creature? against whome bendest thou thy selfe? imaginest thou that thy God doth thee wrong? is it possible for him to do any? thou art full of sinne, thou art full of malice, craftinesse, and deceit: and yet notwithstanding thou hast an eye to thine owne profite whē thou dost any man hurme. If thou anoy or impeach any man, it is too further thy selfe by another mans losse and hindrance. And can thy God gayn any thing by thee? VVilt thou make him co-partner of thine vnrighteousnesse and sinne? Then if we can consider thus farre: it is certaine that we shall be horribly afrayde to treat after that sort of Gods righteousnesse, or by any meanes to bring it in question. Furthermore if we consider our selues and say, how now? God hath set thee in this world, and he hath spred out his gracious gifts and the great treasures of his goodnesse vpon thee, whiche if thou marke in thy body, thou shalt haue matter ynough to rauish thee into wondering: Must thou not needes be very vn sensible, yea and possessed with the deuill, when thou shalt charge thy God with any crueltie, who hath shewed him selfe so gentle and louing towards thee? Ye see then howe wee must practize this lesson, that we may haue skill to profite ourselues by it. But the saying that is added is yet more to be practized. For there is nothing more rise with vs, than to be out of pacience when we see the wicked and the despizers of God to be in their ruffe, as though they had the world at will: and to make their triumphes in skorning of God and of the Gospell, and of vs that professe it. As how? God afflicteth his Church: and by and by ye see the wicked are in suche triumph as they thinke they haue wonne the goale, and it seemeth that God fauoreth the.

Alterward ther commeth some trouble: things go cleane backward, and where as we ought to be confirmed more and more, that the number of the faithfull shall increase, and whereas we ought to be strengthened in faith and in all goodnesse: we see that many whiche made pretence too beleue the Gospell, slippe their heads out of the collar, and become much more wicked and outrageous than the open enemies. VVe see other things also whereof there is no hope at all that they shall amende to the better, and this is it that greuet vs.

And howe is it (say wee) that GOD suffereth this geere? It seemeth that hee is minded too aduance the wicked heere, and that hee is willing too open their mouthes that they may spew out theyr blasphemies against him: It seemeth that he is altogether againste vs, and that it is a pleasure to him too haue vs vexed and made a laughing stocke to all men. And will God so cleere the deuises of the wicked? VVill hee take their part? will hee be a partner of their corruption and filthynesse?

Loe what geere maye runne in oure heades. So muche the more therefore behoueth it vs to be fenced againste suche temptations, according as Iob setteth downe both twayne of them in this sentence. For on the one syde hee confesseth that it came thus too bys imagination. Howe nowe? it seemeth that GOD taketh the wicked mens part, and that hee hath made a compacte with them too gyue them so muche the more boldnesse. Iob then confesseth, that this tempta-temptation came in his head, howbeit that he withstood it. For hee confesseth it too bee impossible that God should not bee vterly against euill, bycause he naturally hateth it: otherwyse he should bee fayne too deny himself. So then forsomuch as God is the iudge of the world: he must needs hate all vnryghtuousnesse. VVherfore let vs assure our selues, that he will neuer cleere the intent of the wicked, that is too say, hee will neuer shewe himself too allow it. VVhat will he doo then? He will exerceyse our patience in the meane whyle. Therefore let vs be armed against all stumbling blocks. VVhen we see the wicked, the enimies of the truthe take occasion to scoffe at God, and at vs, by reason that things are so confounded in the world: Let vs say, well, yet is not God on their side for all this, for in the end they must bee confounded in their pryde: But it behoueth vs too looke further. Behold now is the tyme of darknesse, as our Lord Iesus Christ termeth it, when the diuell hath such a libertie too doo mischief, that the wicked haue the reynes of the brydle looce in their necke. He sayeth it is the kingdome or reigne of darknesse when things are confounded as it were in the dark. But God will chase away the darknesse, and giue vs lyght at length, according as we haue most certaine promis of it. Then let vs tarye, and bee quiet, and conclude that it is impossible that God should fauour the deuises of the wicked, howsoeuer he seeme to dissemble the matter in the meane whyle towards vs. And therefore wee must bee patient too the end. For in tyme conuenient he will shewe vs that wee haue not ben deceyued in wayting his leysure. Lo what we haue too note concerning this text. Now as touching that which Iob addeth: that is too wit, Whither God haue such eyes as man hath, or else whether his tyme bee as the tyme of a mortall man: it is too shewe that God needeth not too make long inquests against vs: as if he should say, Lord, thou knowest all things, yea and they were present with thee before the creation of the world. Therefore thou needest not to vse the ordinarie course of earthly iudges, who make long processe whyle they hold offenders vpon the racke. For they doo so bycause of their ignorance: but thou haste no neede too doo it. So then, wherefore handlest thou mee so rigorously? Iob speaketh verie well of Gods nature, but he concludeth verie ill. For he bewrayeth his excessiue passion as I sayd afore. But the cheef poynt is that wee should consider how too apply this lesson too our owne vse. VVheras Iob desireth too be eased bycause God hath not the eyes of a mortall man. Let vs vnderstand that when God scourgeth vs, he doeth it not to boult out the certaintie of aught that is vnknown or concealed from him: but to make vs too vnderstand it. VVhy doeth God suffer vs to pyne away by processe of tyme, seing he cā make cleane riddance of vs at the first blowe? Hee doth it too the end we should bethink our selues the better. And heere Iob is contrarie to himself. VVherein we see that mennes passions are so diuers, that oftentimes they speake against themselves. Euen as we see the waues of the sea doo breake one another with their violence: euen so doo our passions which are contrarie and repugnant one against another in vs. VVe see it not awaite. But if we would shore vp our eyes, wee should fynd there is such contrarioussnesse in our selues, as we speake one whyle one thing, and another whyle another.

And behold what happened vnto Iob. He sayd euen now, condemne mee not, but shewe me wherefore thou sewest mee. VVell, God ment to shewe him why, but he on his side knew it not. Howbeit he sayeth that he is pressed ouerfore, not that he had not patience continuallye (as I haue sayd) but the same was not so perfect as were requisite. So then whensoeuer and as oft as wee shall happen to bee smitten by Gods hand, and that as sone as we be escaped out of one wo, wee enter into another, so as wee continue in lingering paine, and see no end of our miseries, but when wee tynk too plucke the one foote out of the myre, the other sinketh further in: Let vs acknowledge that God afflicteth vs, not bycause he taketh any pleasure profit or aduantage by it, but bycause it is his will to drawe vs to him by that meane. And so let the same make vs to think those afflictions sweete and amiable, seing wee perceyue them to tend to our saluation and welfare. In any wyse let vs not bee out of hart, when he scourgeth vs diuers wayes. And when he hath giuen vs one terype, if he turne againe and strike vs twyce or thryce more: Let vs say, well Lord, seing it please thee to hold vs as it were vpon the racke. Suffer vs not too bee rooted in naughtinesse as wee should grynd our teethe against thee though wee bee conuicted of our sinnes: but make vs too come with ryght meekenesse to sue for thy mercie, that we may find thee fauorable and pitifull towards vs.

Behold (I say) how wee ought to doo. And bycause wee haue none accessse to God but by our Lord Iesus Christe: let vs repayre vnto him, praying him too put vs in such redinesse, as we may bee receyued at his hand. And although wee must be fayne to indure manie troubles and miseries during this present life: yet if wee beare them patiently, let vs not doubt but all shall turne to our welfare, and serue vs in stede of salues and medicines.

And now let vs present our selues before the maiestie of our good God, in acknowledging the innumerable faults whereof we be gilty in his sight: praying him that after he hath made vs too perceyue them, hee will also withdrawe vs from them, and so gouerne vs by his holie spirit, as we may fyght in such wyse against the temptations of our flesh and of the world. that when we haue ouercome them, wee may come to the triumph of glorie which is prepared for vs in heaue. And so let vs all say, Almighty God our heauenly father wee acknowledge in our selues, &c.

The xxxix. Sermon, which is the second vpon the tenth Chapter.

7. Thou knowest that I cannot do vvickedly, and that no man can deliuer mee from thy hād.
8. Thy hands haue made mee, they haue fashyoned me vvholly round about, and doost thou destroy mee?
9. Remember that thou haste made mee as of clay, and that thou shalt bring mee intoo dust againe.
10. Haste not thou poured mee out like milk? haste not thou set mee toogether like cheese?
11. Haste thou not clothed mee vvith skin and flesh, [and] knit mee toogether vvith bones and sinevves?
12. Thou haste giuen me life and grace, and thy visitation hath preserved my Soule.

13. These things haste thou hidden in thee, and yet notwithstanding I knowe that it is so with thee.
14. If I haue sinned, thou wilt imprison me: thou wilt not suffer me to scape unpunished.
15. If I haue done amisse, vvo is me: If I haue bin righteous, yet shall I not liit vp my head, seeing I am filled vvith shame, and knowving mine affliction.

Ob going forward with that which was declared yesterday, telleth God heere, that he needeth not to make inquisition after the manner of earthly iudges. Why for: Thou knowest (saith he) that I can do no euill, and that no man can deliuer me from thy hand. If men haue an offender in ward, they will bee afrayde least he should do worse than he had done afore, if he escape, and specially they labour to reuenge themselues of that which is past. And that is the cause why men are fayne to kill those in whome there is no hope of amendament afterward. But Job saith that it is not so with God. Wherefore: Thou knowest (saith he) that I can do no euill, and thou knowest that although thou deliuer me from this punishment, I am alwayes subiect to thee, whensoever it pleaseth thee thou canst bring me agayne to this wretched plight wherin I am now. Seing it is so: what should prouoke thee to put me to so many torments? As I haue said alreedy, all these requests may well be made vnto God, so it be with al lowlinesse, that we stand not in contention as though we would blame him for handling vs to rigorously, or else alledge some reason in our owne behalfe to iustifie our case withall. When we come not after that manner, but with a settled purpose and mind to say, Alas Lord, as in respect of thy selfe I know thou proceedest not after the maner of men: for what should leade thee to do so: Thou knowest what I am, thou knowest what is in my hearte: againe it is in thine owne power to bridle me: though I were the wickeddest caitif in the world, yet could I not escape: what shall I gayne then by striuing against thee? For who am I? I am but dust, I am a poore mortall creature. (Lo heere a speciall poynt.) And moreouer, if thou do but blowe vpon me, I shall be right nought at al. Lord I know therefore and conclude, that thou art not led by fleshy affection when thou scourgest: What remaineth then? Make me to feele thy goodnesse. VVhen we be well assured of Gods rightfulnessse, and therewithal haue this full purpose to incline our selues to stedfast trust in him: Let vs not imagin that he heareth vs not, or that he will not shewe vs mercie. Thus ye see how we may vse Iobs talke. And after he hath said so, he addeth: Thy hands haue made me, they haue fashioned me wholly round about, and yet for all that wilt thou destroy me? Heere he returneth to that which was declared yesterday. For this matter hath bin touched afore, and nowe hee confirmeth it new ageine, and not without cause. For it is a matter that ought to comfort vs greatly, that if God vse rigoure towards vs, he doth it not of any crueltie. VVhy for: for hee hath a regard of his owne worke and of the thing that he made. Therefore as oft as God striketh vs, we must alwayes thinke thus: VVell then, I made not my selfe, God listeth not him selfe vp against a straunge thing, I am the worke of his owne hands. And sith it is so, it becommeth me to say that he hath good reason to deale thus with me. For he is not cruell: it is certaine that he acknowledgeth his owne work. God doth (as a mā might say) looke vpon him selfe, and behold him selfe in men as it were in a glasse: and it is not without cause that he looked vpon all that he made and found it good. But man is his principall work, and the excellentest of all his creatures.

It was his will to vter that thing in him, which he had put but in small portions both in heauen and in earth, and all liuing wights: in somuch that man is termed as the little worlde, wherein wee see so many wonderful things, as a man must needes be astonied at them. Sith it is so: we must alwayes beleeuue, that God beholding hys owne workmanship in vs, will bee moued and inclined to do vs good and to maainteine vs. For we know what is attributed to him in the holy scripture: namely, that he preferueth that which hee hath made, and bringeth the thing to perfection which he hath once begonne. Then seeing the case is so that he hath vsed so singular fauour towards vs: there is no doubt but he will continue the same to the end. Now we see that this matter (that is too say, this our considering that God made vs) ought & can stand vs in great stead, if we applie it to good vse. And heere ye see also why Job maketh a larger discourse of it. In this verse he saith, Lord, wilt thou deuoure me, (for so signifyeth the hebrew word which we translate wilt thou destroy me) seeing thou best fashioned me wholly round about: He meeneth that ther is no fault at al to be found. For one may well make a goodly peece of work, but it shall not be so perfectly polished alike throughout, there will be some part of it wherein he hath not vsed the like cunning. If a man make a peece of faire tapistrie, ther shall be no more but the outside of it bewtiful to the eye, that which is out of sight shall be altogether il fauored. But as for man, we see he is polished through out from top to toe, so as there is one orderly workmanship in him thoroughout, (yea according to the order of nature) & ther is no exception to be taken in him euen to the tippes of his nailes. Job therefore ment to expresse heere the infinite wisdom of God which vtereth it selfe in the shape of man: as if he had said, Lord, wilt thou destroy so excellent a work wherin a man may see thy wisdom, thy power, and inestimable goodnesse to thy glory: VVilt thou take pleasure so, in defacing thine owne glory which appeereth and shineth in men? Now we see what his meaning is: howbeit hee addeth that which I haue touched: that is to witte, That God hath made him as clay, and shall bring him to dust agayne. As if he should say, Lord, were thy workmanship taken out of me, what shoulde remaine? for my beginning is of the mire of the earth. True it is that ther is none but Adam that God made fro out of the earth. But hereby ye see fro whence we haue our first beginning. VVe must al of vs come backe thither. VVhe we bethinke vs fro whence me are come, & wherof they be made, that is to wit of the earth: let vs assure ourselues that the same is verified vpon vs al in generall. Now seeing that god hath made vs of the earth: let him take away that which he hath put to vs, (that is to say, let him withdraw his power, wisdom, & goodnesse which he hath shed out vpon vs) and we must needes retourn: from whence we came. The case then standing as it doth, will God destroy vs? were it not as much as to deface his owne glory? Yes, if he did it without reason why. For when he destroyeth the wicked and vnrighteous, it is because that (as much as they could they haue blotted out the image that was printed in their nature. And in deede Moyses declareth that God was soie whē he saw that me were corrupted after that fashion Behold (sayth he) God repented that euer he made man. Not that ther is any

Psa. 36. b. 7.
Or. 138. b. 8

Gen. 6. b. 6.

is any changeablenesse in God too repent him of his dooing: for he had well foreseene all things before the world was made. But Moyses sheweth there, that God miliketh men when they bee so peruerted and turned away from the soundnesse and rightuoufnesse which he had put into them. Hereby then we see that God doeth alwayes acknowledge his woorkmanship in men: howbeeit that therewithall he doeth alwayes vtterly mislike of their sinne, the which proceedeth not of him, nor can be fathered vpon him. And after this Job addeth: Haste not thou powred mee out like milke? Here he speaketh of mannes begetting, which is a woonderfull thing whereat all our witts are confounded. For to say, that of mannes seede there should ingender a liuing wight, a wight so polished as there should appeere such an orderly disposition in him, as might rauish mennes mynds and make them astonished at it: ought not God to be magnified thereat? what difference is there betweene the originall of a man and the making of a cheeze? For wee see, that of milke, after it is set together and curded, folk make cheeze. But who can say that a liuing creature, a creature that beareth the image of God in it, a creature that is so well framed, shall proceede of that which is the groundwork in the begetting of men? For so much then as there seemeth to be no likelyhode that a man should be formed out of mannes seede: so much the more is it too be seene that Gods intent is to be glorified therein. Therefore let vs bee as it were rauished too say. Lord what a workman art thou, that men should be compacted after such maner of dung and filthinesse, and yet notwithstanding become so excellent a thing? For when wee looke vpon a man, we must needs be abashed whither we wil or no. And whereof commeth that? Of a shamefull thing and such a one as men are loth to speak of. Ye see then that God hath so abaced vs in our begetting, as he will haue his power, ryghtuoufnesse and wisdome the better knowne therby. Lo what Job hath vttered here. And for the same cause he addeth, Lord thou hast clothed me with flesh and skin. Now, doo these things proceede of mannes seede? It is nothing but infection and filthinesse, and yet notwithstanding behold how skin, behold how flesh, behold how sinewes [come thereof,] which are things whereat all the world may be amazed. Seing then that God hath packed so many miracles together in one body, and sheweth vs there so sayre and liuely an image of his maiestie: haue not we cause to say, Lord, here are things that farre passe all our witte and reason? But after that Job hath spoken of mannes begetting, he addeth: well then, Thou hast giuen mee life and grace, and thy visitation hath preferred my Soule. Herein he sheweth how God thought it not ynough to haue fashyoned him in his mothers wombe and to haue giuen him so excellent a shape. But besides this (sayeth he) thou hast giuen mee lyfe and grace: By this woord lyfe, he meeneth the liuelinesse and power that is in the Soule. For the bodie of it self hath no mouing: it is but a dead thing. Thou therefore o Lord halte quickened mee: that is to say, the shape of my hodie is not the cheef thing that ought to be magnified in thy woork: True it is that euen in that, a man may see thy woonderfull power and wisdome. But the Soule is yet more, that passeth. And herewithall, the Soule hath not the commo life, such as is in the brute beasts, whose soule hath power to feele and moue, to eat and drink, and to go and come: not only these outward senses are in mā, but also there is reason, and vnderstanding in him, and there is trithe in him. For we see what a nūber of things the mynd that is in man doeth comprehend. Lo why Job matcheth the woord lyfe with the woord Grace: meening therby that the brute beasts are not parttakers of the life that is in men, but that there is in men a dignitie farre greater and of much more value. And successiuecly hee declareth that God is the continuer thereof. Thy visitation (sayeth he) [or thy looking too it] hath preferred my soule. For when God hath set vs in good state: yet can we not co inue vnlesse he haue his hand alwayes reached out ouer vs. What is too bee doone then, that we may continue in the state wherem we be once stablished: God must be sayne to breathe his power into vs without ceasing, and be continually at hand with vs. Thus ye see why Job vscth this woord visitation [or looking too]: as if he should say, Lord, were it not that thou lookest vpon mee with a fatherly eye: it is certaine that I should bee vndoone euery minute of an houre. But thou lookest to mee continually, thou knowest my needs, and thou providest for them. Lo how I am preferred and maynteyned. And in the end he addeth: Although the things be bidden in thee, and thou keepest them in thine owne mynd: yet knowe I wel that it is so with thee. As if Job should say, Lord I knowe these things are so hygh, as I cannot reache them at all: but yet notwithstanding, needs must I haue some ame of them: I knowe it is so with thee: that is to say, I haue not so perfect a knowledge as were requisite: but yet neuerthelesse, I knowe it is so. I haue some taste of it on my part: which suffizeth to make me conclude, that thou halte layd foorth the so greate treasures of thy wisdome, goodnesse, and power in mee: as it is impossible for mee to value and esteeme them as they deserue. But now I see how thou handlest mee. For I am vn-happie, thou halte shet mee here in prizon, and I shall neuer be able to get out. And why so? I looke vpon the trouble wherein thou haste set mee: and by cause I see no: the end of it, behold I am so abashed, that although I were rightuouse, yet durst I not looke vp to excuze myself before thee. I am vtterly barred of all [plea]: like as when a iudge will not admit any allegations, but barreth the partie of his plea, then must the partie needs be condemned, notwithstanding all his replications. Euen so is it with mee, sayeth Job. For I see that although I perceyue not my self to be faultie: yet notwithstanding thou halte punished mee greuously as now. But this is spoken in respect of the excessiue hartgrief whereof wee haue treated: and yet neuerthelesse he acknowledgeth therewithall, that if he should come to the sayd rightuoufnesse of God which is incomprehensible vnto vs: there hee would not think it straunge to bee handled so. True it is that he could not conceyue that thing in his owne naturall vnderstanding: and yet neuerthelesse whē he shall haue considered all things well: hee must needs resist the sayd temptation. Ye see then in effect what is touched here. And now wee haue to consider and beare in mynde, what Job declareth here concerning the creation of men, and concerning, Gods grace whereby they be mainteyned in their state. Then mark it for a speciall point when he sayeth, That God hath created vs as of Clay, and that we must bee brought to dust again, when he shall haue withdrawen his grace which he had spred out vpon vs, and this must teach vs lowlinesse. For we see how mee set much by themselves, and euery one of vs could find in his hart to be aduanced aboue the clouds. Why so? he that knowes him self wel, setteth little by himself. But men through desyre to purchase estimation, do shet their eyes, and forget themselves, and passe not to consider what they be, nor what their state is. It is a woonder that wee should loue so well to beguyle ourselues: and yet we do so neuerthelesse. So much the more must we mark this lesson, which bringeth vs backe to that point which we would not come at by our good will: that is to wit, too knowing that God tooke vs out of myre and dirt. Behold what we be. Let men go vaunt themselves, and say they haue some woorthinesse and vertue in them: yet must they be fayne in the end to knowe that it is but dirt and myre. And will not this serue too make vs stouper? we must returne to the same state againe. Not that God will leaue vs there, for wee hope for the resurrection: but I speake as now of that which is in our owne nature. I say that all that euer is woorthie to bee made 10 account of in our bodie, is but as a building of mud. If we haue any liuelinesse in vs as now: foothly, it is but as the greenesse of grasse, as the prophet Esay sayeth. Esai. 40. b. Wee flourish awchyle: but our flourishing fadeth out of 6.7. hand. So then, if we looke but to the order of nature: death dispatcheth all that euer is of any woorthinesse in men, in so much that all returneth into myre, and dirt, and earth. Sith the case standeth so: let vs lerne to record this lesson oftentimes, that we may shrink in our hornes, and not be puffed vp with vayne ouerweening as 20 most men are, but take our selues too be beholden vnto God for all that we haue, and hold it of him, and doo him homage for it, without lifting of ourselues vp against him. For we should bewray too villanouse an vnthankfulnesse in vs, if we should take vpon vs the honour that belongs to God, or vsurp the thing wherein wee haue no part at all. So then let vs be fully resolved of this: namely too know from whence wee came, and whither we must returne. The thing is meetly common of it self: howbeit so: as much as we praetize it so flyghtly: there-

 30 fore the holy scripture speaketh often of it. Furthermore on our part also, let vs lerne to consider Gods infinite goodnesse towards vs, better than wee haue doone, because wee bee so defyled. For if wee looke vpon the metall whereof men are made, and vpon the shape that is giuen them, and compare the one with the other: the same will giue the greater glosse too that which God hath put in them. If God had made vs of the substance of the Sunne, or of the Starres: or if he had made some heauenly substance to take men out of: truly we myght 40 haue cause to say that our beginning was honorable and thereby the face of God should also bee somewhat disgraced: but when men bethink them of dirt and myre, who will regard that?

Behold a thing that importeth reproche: men will scarce vouchsafe too cast their eye vpon myre. If we haue any dirt hanging about vs, yea euen vpon the hem of our garment, we be defiled: if wee haue it on our hands, we cannot abyde that: but if wee haue it on our face, that mislikes vs worrit of all. And yet what are we? we 50 are all wholly of clay. Wee haue not so much as one rag of our garment, or heele of our hope, or peece of our shoesoles, but it is clay: wee are nothing else but dirt and myre bothe within and without. And yet notwithstanding, when we come to the considering of the wonderfull woorkmanship wiche God hath put into vs (as I haue sayd alredie) therein we haue occasion to acknowledge Gods goodnesse, power, and wisdom so much the better and cleerlyer. Ye see then that when men behold from whence they came, they ought to cast downe
 60 their heads, and vtterly to abace themselves. And againe considering who they be, and to what state and degree of honour God hath aduanced them: they ought to be rauished vnto wondering, and to magnifying of God, acknowledging themselves so much the more bound too him, for that he hauing taken them out of so base and despyzed a kind of matter, hath notwithstanding put into them his so precieuse, hygh, and noble grace, that of force

(euen spyte of their teethe) they must needs confesse. Behold here how God vttereth himself to the full. And so, as oft as we think vpon our selues, let these two things come to our remembrance: namely the matter whereof wee be made, that the same may rid vs of all pryde and bereeue vs of all loftinesse: and also the woorkmanship that God hath put into vs, to the end wee may the better knowe, how much wee be beholden and indetted to him: and let euery of vs crye, Alas Lord, we be not able to comprehend the hundredth part of the benefits which thou bestowest vpon vs.

Thus ye see what we haue to remember for the first place. And herevpon it behoueth vs also to consider what Job addeth here, when he sayeth: Thou hast poured me out like milk, thou hast fashioned me like a cheefe in setting me together, and thou hast clothed me with skin and bones. Truly his phraze of speeche seemeth somewhat straunge at the first blush. And howso? Had the helie Glorie no fitter things to say? had he no better kynd of speeche to 20 expresse what the begetting of men is? These are things that seeme not answerable nor agreeable too the maiestie of God. But it is not for nought that Job speaketh so. For (as I haue sayd heretofore) men must be alased be they neuer so loth, or else they would alwayes be so puffed vp with pryde, as they could neuer come too this consideration (which notwithstanding is needfull) too think, what is it that God hath put into vs? and what would become of vs if he should withdraw his grace, and quite separate him self from vs? Men will neuer
 30 come so farre, but by force. And therefore it behoueth vs to be brought to this myre and dirt, that are spoken of here. True it is that they which are suttile, (that is to say, which weene themselves to be wise in their owne brayne) will take exceptions heere, that this maner of speeche (too their seeming) is not such as they would haue wisshed it. For if yee aske the philosophers: they will speake after another fashio. But God knewe what could edifie vs best. For the matter standeth not vpon 40 disputing of suttile schoolepoynts, nor vpon making of vs philosophers: but vpon lerning how much we be bound vnto God, and vpon the exerysing of our selues in the twoo points that I haue touched: which are, that on the one side we should be ashamed of our selues, and of all that is our owne, and be abashed by beholding what our owne nature is: And that on the other side wee should be rauished with the knowledge of Gods goodnesse and grace, in making vs such as wee bee, and of so goodly and excellent a woorkmanship.

This (I say) is the thing whervnto it behoueth vs too
 50 apply our indauer: and not to be curious in inquiring by peece meale for the causes reasons and meanes that are in the begetting of men. For why? can our wit attayne to them? Verely when the philosophers disputed of these things they sayd that Gods working in the begetting of men must needs be extraordinary. For there is no apparant reason how he should take so perfect and excellent a work as manes bodie is, out of a thing that is so base of it self. And although the philosophers say well, that if a man will haue any thing in nature, it must begin of corruptio: yet notwithstanding ye see it is a fayre beginning, & that 60 is cleane contrarie to mannes reason. It is true. But it was Gods will to shewe them, that euen the wisest of them shall be graueled, when they come to the beholding of his works. Neuertheless God graunteth to the philosophers in the meane whyle, too vew and consider many things, which shall not be vnderstood of the comon peop'e & the vnlearned sort: but Gods meening here, is not to call vs too such a schole. What the meēt to shewe the thing that is a way-

auaylable for our saluation : which is, that we should first knowe what we our selues are, and of what metall we be made : and secondly, that in respect of the woorkmanship that is in vs, we should behold the shape that God hath giuen vs to glorifie him withall, to the end that none of vs, nother great nor small, lerned nor ignorant and simple, should haue any excuse at all. For if God had treated of things ouercunningly: the great clerks would haue surmyzed that they had atteyned too such knowledge by their owne studie, or by reason of their great discretion about other men. But God setteth downe things here in such a sense, as there needeth no descanting vpon them afterward, nor any such great speculation, as the vnlearned myght say, I neuer went to schoole. There needeth no great lerning nor skill too vnderstand what is sayd here. Yee see then that the great clerks shall be the more blame woorthie, if they perceyue not the things which the ignorantest persones ought to knowe. And they also which haue not gone to schoole, shall haue no excuse too cloke themselues withall, because the things that God setteth downe here ought to be knowne to vs all. Thus ye see how wee ought too inure ourselues to the speeche which the holie Ghost vsfeth here by the mouth of Iob, when he sayeth, that God hath clothed man with skin and flesh, and knit him together with bones and sinewes. For it serueth too expresse better, what hath ben sayd afore: that is to wit, what difference there is betweene the feede of man, and that which we see in mannes bodie. Ye see the feede is but filth and corruption: and ye see the flesh is liely: ye see there is skin, there are sinewes, there are bones. Let vs consider a little what maner of woorkmanship there is in mannes skinnes. The very heathen were forced to say, that such as knew not that there is a soueraine Godhead, myght be conuicted thereof euen by one onely nayle of a man without going any further. Ye see our nayles are as it were superfluous in our bodies: and yet notwithstanding, if we looke well vpon our nayles, we shall see a wonderful woorkmanship in them. For they serue to arme the fingers, that they may be put to woork, and hold what focuer is necessarie by bowing of the fingers. Therefore it is certaine that a mannes nayle which is but a superflurie, is a looking glasse of Gods providence to vs, so as in the same we may perceyue, that he hath wrought in such wyse in vs, as it is vnpossible for vs to knowe the hundredth part of the woorkmanship that he hath put in vs. Ye see then what is vttered here: namely that there is greates odde betweene the feede whereof men are begotten, and the things that are to be seene in mannes bodie. But yet the cheefe thing is the Soule. And that is the cause why he sayeth, Thou haste clothed mee. For hereby Iob meeneth, that the cheef part of men consisteth not in the shape that is seene with our eye, but in that which dwelleth within it. For what importeth this maner of speeche, and what is ment by saying, Thou haste clothed mee? It must needs be some guest that is lodged in our bodie. And who is this guest? It is the Soule. VVe see then that the cheef part of men is the Soule which God hath put into them. There is so excellent woorkmanship in the bodie: as we must needs be astonied at it: and what is to be thought then of that which surmounteth it, and is farre hygher, and of much greater woorthinesse? Behold the degrees which wee haue to remember. So then although this maner of speeche (as whereby God ment too teache the veryest idiots) be rude and grosse: yet notwithstanding we see things still in them which are able to moue vs throughly to set our whole mynd vpon them, though we were the sharpestwitted and finestheaded in the world. But yet Iob expresseth further what the excellencie and woorthinesse of the Soule is, when he sayeth, Thou haste giuen me life and grace, and thy visitation hath preserued my Soule. VVhen he sayeth, thou haste giuen me life: he sheweth that the hodie were nothing (no though it haue so goodly and woonderfull woorkmanship in it) if it had not the liuelinesse that is shed into it. For so much then as God hath quickened vs: therein he hath vttered his great goodnesse, and we ought to glorifie him the more therein, and to acknowledge ourselues bound vnto him beyond all measure. True it is that wee haue much more in vs than common lyfe: and if there were no more but that same mouing: it were much of it self. Let vs behold the brute beasts. It is a great matter to say, beholde a beast shall come of feede, that is too say of corruption: and although it haue not that which is in man, (I meene euen as touching the bodie) yet hath God put this mouingnesse into it. VVe see that in the nourishment of beasts, when they haue eaten grasse, the same turneth into blud, into milk, and into flesh, and afterward when the beasts be killed, they feede vs lykewyse. VVhen wee behold all these things, euen that verye Beastlife (as a man may terme it) beare witness of Gods most excellent power and wildome. But there is much more in men than life. And that is the cause why Iob sayeth expressly, that God had giuen him life and grace. For hereby he doeth vs to wit, that the lyfe of men is matched with vnderstanding and reason. And therefore it is sayd in the first chapter of Sainct Iohn, That lyfe was the light of men. VVhen Iohn declareth that all things are quickened by the woord of God, and that the sayd eternall wildome which is in God is the wellspring of life and power: he sheweth that men haue not only life, so as they can eat and drinke: but (sayeth he) there is also a light shyning in them. By this woord lyght, he meeneth that the image of God is imprinted in vs, because we haue vnderstanding and reason, because wee discern between good and euill, and because men are borne too haue some order and common societie among themselues, so as euery manne hath a conscience of his owne to tell him what is euill and what is good.

Ye see then how God hath graunted men a prerogative which is, not only that he hath giuen them life: but also inlyghtened their myndes, in such wyse as they iudge and discern, yea and take hold of eternall life. Then if we consider well what is in men: it is certain that wee shall woonder. But there is nothing whereat wee shall bee more astonied, than at the reason which God hath put into vs. For yee see that if a man heere of things that he neuer sawe, he conceyue them in his mynd. VVhen men looke aforehand vnto things that are too come, and compare them with things past, they commit all of it vnto memorie. And againe when any thing is red or reported too them, they also iudge of it.

Thus see you how God hath indewed men with a grace that cannot bee valewed sufficiently. And therefore let vs lerne to consider well what God hath giuen vs, and wee shall haue cause ynough to glorifie him, yea and we shall not neede to passe out of our selues for it. And heere also ye see why Sainct Paule in that goodly Sermon which he made in the citie of Athens, sayeth that men neede not too go farre too lerne too knowe God. For (sayeth he) it is in him that wee haue our being, life, and mouing. And if we bee blinde, let vs but fall too groping, and grope with our hands as a poore blind man doeth in the dark. For although he see nothing at all: yet he gropeth about him, and thereafter taketh his way. Therefore if we be blinde (sayeth Sainct Paule) yet may we grope out Gods works, inasmuch as he hath giuen vs wit and reason: so that we bee vtterly vnexcusable if we make not this grace auaylable, whereof mention is made here. And in conclusion wee must also mark well how Iob sayeth heere, It is thy visitation

ô Lord, that hath preferued my Soule. Hithere to he hath spoken of that which wee may see in our creation or begetting. VVhen any of vs is begotten: then doeth the myre shewe it self: that is too say, wee be full of infection and filthinesse. And therewithall appeereth also the sayd workmanship which God hath put intoo it, bothe in respect of bodie and soule. But what for that? If God preferued vs not, wee should needs perish euery minute of an houre, as it is sayd in the Psalme:
 Lord, when thou sendest forth thy Spirit all things are renewed: and when thou withdrawest it, all things go too wrecke and decay. God then must bee sayne too maynteyne vs, too looke vnto vs, and to bee alwayes at hand with vs: or otherwyse wee bee vtterly vndoone.
 Behold heere a poynt that is well woorth the weying:
 namely this visitation of Gods in looking too our Sou-
 les. And the Soules are spoken of precysely by name.
 VVhyso? If he had sayd, Lord thy visitation preferueth my bodie: my bodie shall not go to the graue at the first brunt, and whyso? euen bycause thou maynteynest it by thy power: if there had ben no more but that sayd, it had ben much: but it is farre more without comparison when Iob speaketh of the Soule. And why? For it seemeth vnto vs, that our Soule hath of it self the power to quicken our bodie, and to giue it liuelinesse. And this is partly true. But it behoueth vs to vnderstand more-ouer, that our Soules are not immortall of their owne power, nother is the lyfe of them inclosed in themselues as though it had his roote there. VVhere is their lyfe the?
 In God. So farre foorth then as God, putteth any droppe or spark of life into ménes Soules: so farre foorth haue they liuelinesse in them, and not otherwise. Thus ye see what wee haue too mark vpon this streyne. And specially let vs hearken what the holy ghost ment too expresse by this woord visitation: which is, that God mainteyneth vs continually, & looketh to vs to preferue vs, or else we should go to wrecke. The philosophers can well say, that God hath created and fashyoned vs, & that we haue our being of him: but therewithall they are of opi-niô that after God hath set vs in our race, euery mā guy-deth & gouerneth himself. Lo how they deface the goodnesse & power of God: and vnto the same leudnesse are all men inclined. So much the more then standeth it vs in hand, to mark well this woord visitation: which importeth as much to say, as when God hath put vs intoo this world, he letteth vs not alone there, as if hee should say, walke ye euery one as ye can: but hee aby-deth with vs continually, and hath his hand alwayes stretched out to breathe his power into vs, to the intent we shold not miscarie. Therefore seing we cannot continue, except he haue his eye alwayes vpon vs to visit vs and looke to vs: we must lerne to rule our lyfe in such wyse, as if wee were euermore in his presence. And forasmuch as the same assureth vs of Gods infinite goodnesse which hesheweth towards vs: let it make vs too walk in the feare of him, to magnifie him, and to yeeld him his due prayse.

And nowe lette vs caste our selues downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults: praying him to make vs perceiue them better, that we may bee sorie for them, and bee so greued, as we always seeke the remedie of them, which is, his reforming of them by his holie spirit, that like as he hath created vs mortall men, so he will make vs members of our Lord Iesus Christ, that we may bee repayred after his image, and that he looke not at that which he hath put intoo vs by nature, but at that which hee hath put intoo vs by grace, which surmounteth all, specially seing he hath vouchsafed too make vs new creatures to inherit his heavenly kingdome. And [further let vs beseeche him] not only to continue the good that he hath begonne in vs, but also too increace the same till it bee come to full perfection, and in the meane tyme beare with our infirmities, that although wee bee gilty before him, yet he will not condemne vs with rigour, but receyue vs as his children, accordingly as he hath vouchsafed too adopt vs in the name and by the meane of our Lord Iesus Christ. That it may please him too graunt this grace, not only too vs, but also too all nations of the earth, &c.

The .xl. Sermon, which is the third vpon the tenth Chapter.

This Sermon is yet still vpon the xiiij. and xv. verses, and then vpon that which followeth.

16. Let it increace, come thou as a Lyon and shevverthy selfe maruelous vpon mee.
 17. Thou renevest thy plagues against mee, thy vvrath increaseth about mee: the svvoorde of change and the multitude are vpon mee.

Yesterday we saw how God preferueth vs in the state wherein he hath set vs: and that it is not ynough for him to haue created vs at the firste, nor too haue giuen vs liueli-nesse: but that he must be sayne to continue it also. Now if this be to be acknowledged in respect of this present lyfe: muche more reason is it that God should be prayzed for renewing vs by his infinite goodnesse, for repaying his image in vs, and for leading vs as it were by the hande, vntill suche tyme as wee haue finished our course. For it behooueth him too worke with a greater power in that behalfe, than in the order of nature. Therefore let vs learne to magnifie Gods gracious giftes in such wise as wee perceyue them to bee. And further let vs marke well, that if Iob hauing felte that God had bestowed so many benefites vpon him, ceased not to be so greued, as he was sayne to bewray his excessiue passions: the same may muche more befall vs, when wee shall not haue minded Gods goodnesse as becommeth vs, and the gracious giftes which he dealeth out too vs dayly. For (as I haue declared heretofore,) the true remedie too as-swage all our miseries, is too feele how bountifull God is vnto vs, and what riches of his goodnesse he poureth out vpon vs. If wee knowe this thoroughly, it is ynough too remedie

remedie all temptations, in suche sort as we may be able to take courage to call vpon him, euen when we shall be as it were in hell. And well did Iob knowe these thyngs, howbeit that this affliction was so great and terrible, as it ouermastered him. Therefore let vs bethinke our selues well, and let vs marke that God will punish vs for oure vnthankfulnesse, if we make not account of the benefits which he dayly bestoweth vpon vs. And there shal neede no great tribulation to ouerthrowe vs: but we shall be dispatched out of hand as soone as we feele any little aduersitie: And for prooffe heereof, let vs come too that which Iob addeth. If I haue sinned (saith he) thou wilt imprison me, and thou wilt not let me go vnpunished. As if hee should say, Lorde, thou holdest me as it were vpon the racke. For he matcheth imprisonment against some sodaine punishment, which God mighte lay vpon him, and which should be easier for him to abide: at leastwise too his owne seeming. VVe knowe that the present harmes are greuouser to beare. He that indureth bitter colde, could find in his hart to be broyled with heate: and if he be hote, he desireth extreme cold. So then, Iob being pressed with such violence by the hand of God, as there seemed not to be any hope of recouerie: wold fayne: that God shoulde haue killed him out of hand, and that he might not haue pyned any longer: like as when a wretched offender is condemned and seeth he cannot escape, and yet is let alone vnexecuted: his miseries are encreased in that he feareth to be put to torture, and that hee shall be charged with new matters from day to day. Iob being in such cace, complayneth that God persecuteth him, and saith he oughte too take him out of the worlde without any more ado. Heereby we are admonished, that if God moderate not his roddes when he mindeth to chastize our faults, or to exercise our pacience: we are so dismaide, that in sted of profiting vnder his correction we shall do nothing else but storne, and there shal be nothing but turmoyling and rebeliuousnesse in vs. Iob was patient, and yet for all that, he sayled not to make a great broyle, as though he had bin minded to stand at defyance with God: And his infirmitie had driuen him therevnto, if God had not preserued him by the grace of his holy spirite. Sith the cace standeth so: let vs marke well, that it standeth vs in hand to pray vnto God, that whensoever he shall be minded to chastize vs, or to trie our pacience, it may please him to vse suche mildnesse towards vs, as we may learne chiefly to know his hand, and to profite our selues thereby, and not to be caried away by our ouerheady affections: and further, that although God suffer vs to be tossed too and fro, and our owne flesh to carrie vs away: yet neuerthelesse it may please him to succoure vs, and that we may haue wherewith to fence our selues, that we giue nothead to our affections. And in the meane while, let vs not be out of hart when we feele turmoyling in our selues, though it seeme to vs that we be skirmishing against God, and that it is vnpossible for vs to returne vnto him to yelde oure selues vnder his obedience. VVe see heere what happened vnto Iob: and therefore let vs call vpon him that is able to set vs vp againe, when we be vtterlie ouerthrowne. And thus ye see what we haue to marke in this streine. But now let vs come to the wells head. If I be wicked (saith Iob) wo is me. If I be righteous, yet may I not lift vp my head, seeing my trouble and being filled with reproch. Iob goeth on foorth with the matter which I haue expounded already heretofore. For he considereth, that if he be wicked, the lawe of God shal condemne him: and that if he be righteous, there is yet another righteousness aboue that, whereby he shal not misse to be condemned. That is a thing which is not so well knowne as this: and no maruell. For although God haue told vs in his law, that we are al damned, and the thing is manifest of it selfe: yet shall wee hardly find one of a hundred, whiche commeth to that point. And why so? For hipocrisie hindreth vs, and blindfoldeth our eyes, yea and vtterlie blindeth vs, so as wee cannot knowe that which ought to be best knowne and most familiar vnto vs. Behold, Sainte Paule confesseth that although he had bin trayned vp from his childhood in the lawe of God, and one of the order and companie of the doctors in great reputation. Yet notwithstanding he vnderstoode not what was the meening of gods law, but flattered him selfe, so as he was puffed vp with pride, supposing him selfe to be righteous. I liued (saith he) that is to say, he thought him selfe righteous before God, and had an ouerliking of his owne merites. And why so? Bycause he had not the power to enter into his owne hart, and to say that God hath giuen vs the lawe for euery man to view him selfe in, that all men might know how there is nothing in them but vnrighteousnesse, and be ashamed thereof. Saint Paule was not come so farre forward. If a man that had bin trained vp in Gods lawe, and therewithall liued a blamelesse life, was neuerthe later dazeled with pride: what shall come of vs? VVhat shall become of such as haue no care at all to thinke vpon God nor vpon his word, but are saped in their vices & leade a lawlesse life: or what shall become of those that vaunt them selues and yet haue no cause at all? According as at this day we see these monks, and these hypocrites, and all these chaplaynes of the papacie: and as we see the whole rable of these superstitious cloysterers which haue their gay deuotions: and yet in the meane while, some of them shall be whorehunters, some drunkards, some full of crueltie, and other some full of treason and enuie. So then they cease not to reckon themselves for righteous, and they haue merites to sell and to depart with vnto other folkes. Therefore we must not thinke this straunge, seeing that Saint Paule was so abused in that behalfe. And hereby ye may see, that there is so grosse hypocrisie in men, as it is a wonder how God should be so patient, as to beare with them so long as he doth. But if this condemnation which God setteth out vnto vs in his lawe, be vnknowne vnto vs: how should we attayne to the conceiuing of the iustice which is higher and traunger than that: when it is said vnto vs, Thou shalt loue God with all thy hart, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength, and thy neighbour as thy selfe: there is no man but he confesseth it to be good reason, that we should keepe this rule. For very nature teacheth vs, that we be created to the end we should mainteine the common societie that he hath ordeyned among mankynd. These then are things that ought to be commonly knowne euen vnto little children. But let vs come to the comparing of our life with that whiche God commaundeth in his lawe, and we shall find that euery one of vs is guiltie for his owne part. And we come so farre short of performing all that God appoynteth vs: as we be not able to performe any one point, no not euen so much as to thinke to do good. For (saith Saint Paule) we are not able to thinke a good thought: and we find it ouermuch by experience. VVhen we haue made this comparison, yet do we continue dull still. VVhich of vs feeleth him selfe wounded with so deadly a wound, as too saye, Alas I must be faine to come before my God, hee must be my iudge, and I haue nothing to aledge, but I must be driuen to confesse that I am more than conuicted: VVho is he that thinketh thus? No man. Although men haue not done any deede that is to be condemned

Mat. 5. d. 28.
c. 22.

or to be blamed: yet notwithstanding, they cease not to be giltye inasmuch as it is saide vnto vs, Thou shalt not hurt God hath not only forbidden vs to be murtherers, theeuers, whomongers, blasphemers, and rebels against his word: but he hath also forbidden vs to consent to any euill. VVhosoever shall but cast aside an vnchaste looke: the same is a lechor before god. VVhosoever shall haue slandered his brother, or rayled vpon him, or priuily hated him. behold, he is a murtherer. VVhosoever wiltheth other mens goodes, although he neuer go about to take them: yet is he a theefer already. And God hathe not only forbidden the desire to do amisse: but he passeth yet further. For he hath forbidden lust, that is to say, if we be but tickled and stirred vp to any euill desire or liking, fourthwith we be transgressors of Gods lawe. But finally do men consider this as I haue said heretofore. Seing we bee so blockish as to haue no regard of oure selues, and that the lawe is so cleere and large a looking glasse for vs to behold our selues in: I pray you who is he that can boast him selfe to be righteous, and that he is able to performe all that is in the lawe, and all that God commaundeth? Therefore we must not thinke it strange if we cannot clere ourselves of that which is conteyned there. And furthermore, that we may take profite of this doctrine, it behoueth vs to call to remembrance what we haue declared afore: namely that Gods lawe is a sufficient perfect rule whereby to liue a good and holy life, that is to wit, in respect of vs. Let vs marke then that the righteousness which is conteyned in the lawe, may well bee termed a perfect righteousness: yea in respect of men, that is to say, according to their capacite and measure. But this righteousness is not answerable to the righteousness of God, nor equall with it, it cometh farre short of it. As how? This will bee better knowne by the Angells. Ye see the Angells haue no lawe written, and yet they frame them selues to the obeying of God. And heere ye see also why we say in our prayer, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heauen. For there is no gaynsaying, God is obeyed fully, and he reigneth in Heauen. Then do wee desire to be conformable to the Angels, and that ought to be ynough for vs: for then shall we haue such a perfection as ought to be in creatures. Yea but is that as much to say, as the Angels haue a righteousness that may fully match and be compared with the righteousness of God? There is a great odde betwixt them, as there is distance betweene heauen and earth. Although the righteousness of the Angels be perfect in respect of creatures: yet is it nothing but smoke when it cometh beefore the infinite maiestie of God.

Leuit. 18. 4. 5.

Therfore let vs marke wel, that the lawe which was giue vs, is a full and certaine rule whereby to liue well. And when we can once do and performe that which is ioyned vs there: then shall we be taken and reckened for righteous before God in all perfection and goodness, but yet for all that we shall not be so righteous as to say, there is any worthinesse in vs, so as wee might deserue any thing at his hand. And why? It is of his owne free fauoure that he saith, he that doth these things shall liue in them. For God might exact what he listeth at oure hande, and yet notwithstanding we can neuer say that we be not in his dette. For wee bee his, and what soeuer we bring vnto him he will not accepte it excepte he list, Although wee take it to be as righteous as any thing can bee, and that (to oure seeming) there bee no faulte in it. Yet will not God vntersafe to cast his eye vpon it, except he list: that is to saye, excepte his owne meere grace and bountifullnesse do moue him to do it.

Now then wee see, how there is a double righteousness in God. The one is that which is set fourth to vs in the lawe, wherewithall God contenteth himselfe, because it pleaseth him so. And there is another secreete righteousness, which surmounteth the wit and capacite of all creatures. In this respect Job saith heere: If I be wicked, do vnto me. VVhy so? For it is said, Curfed be hee that performeth not all the things that are conteyned in this booke, Curfed bee hee that worshippeth not God. Curfed be he that breaketh the Sabboth. Curfed be he that honoreth not his father and mother. Curfed be he that stealeth other mens goodes, or taketh them away by force. Curfed be he that killeth or hurteth his neighbor: and all people must answer Amen. That is to say, all of vs must confesse, that we haue rightly deserued to be curfed and cast away at Gods hand. For albeir that the lawe (perchance, were not written in Jobs time, (as we knowe nothing thereof.) yet was this record ingrauen in mens hearts. Then do ye see wherefore hee saith, that he is vn-happie if he be found wicked, that is to saye, if hee shall haue withtoode Gods will, and led a loose life. And secondly he addeth, Although I were righteous, yet will I not lift vp my head. VVhy so? Because (saith he) I see mine affliction, and am filled with shame. VVherby he meeneth, that Gods increasing of his afflictions, is as much to say, as he hath soueraine authoritie ouer all men: and that although they be righteous, yet may he execute such rigoure vpon them, as may be thought straunge: and yet that howsoeuer the case standeth, men shall gaine nothing by checking against him: they may well pleade and alledge this or that, but yet must they be fayne to be confounded, and God must haue the maistrise of them. For this cause Job saith that he wil not lift vp his head though he be found to be righteous. But by the waye a manne might aske a question heere, how Job meened that hee should be found righteous? For that is impossible. Hee skarce knew himselfe if he meant to chalenge such a perfection as were the true fulfilling of Gods lawe. And why? As I haue said heretofore, so long as men continue in their owne nature, they are so farre wide from discharging their duetie to Godward, or of anye parte thereof: that there is nothing else to be found in them but rebelliousnesse: according as Saint Paule saith, that all the affections of our fleshe are enemies vnto God. Shall we then follow our owne nature? Then go wee cleane ake to Gods will, and we haue not so muche as one thought but the same is wicked and damnable. And so vntill God reach vs his hand, we shall neuer come vnto him. But hath hee begonne to giue vs that grace? Yea partiye: and verely so farfoorth do we labour towards hym, as he draweth vs vnto hym, and as hee guideth vs: and yet for all that, we come not to him so fast as were requisite. For we may haue some good inclination: but the same shall be but weake: we shall limpe and make many false steppes: we shall stumble, and oftentimes start aside out of the right path. Ye see then in what plight men be.

Rom. 8. b. 8.

But let vs come too the highest degree of this righteousness. Let vs take Abraham, or the other holy fathers that haue walked in suche perfection, as if they had bin Angels. Is it too bee sayde that these menne haue fulfilled the lawe? No. There is none of them all but hee shall fynde him selfe blameworthy when hys lyfe is examined before God.

And how is it then that Job saythe heere, that if hee bee righteous, yet wyll hee not lift vp his head? True it is that God accepteth them for righteous which are not righteous: that is to saye, when hee hath gyuen vs the

the grace to waike according to his will: although there be faults in vs: what thee hee passeth not for that, nother will he be rigorous towards vs. Though we haue not performed our ductie in al poynts to the full, hee shaketh vs not off, but beareth with our weaknesse, allowing and accepting that thing for good in vs which is not good. Ye see then how God dealeth with his faithful ones. But in this place Iob hathe spoken of an impossibilitie, as if he should saye: True it is, that I am not so righteous as that I maye come before God to saye, let vs fall to account, and let my life be well tried, and it will be found that I haue not offended awht, but haue fully discharged my selfe from one side to tother: this were impossible: But although I had fulfilled the lawe, yet durst I not lift vp my head. And wherefore? I see beere mine affliction, I am filled with reproch, as if he should saye, God holdeth me in such awe, as I wote not what to do, and if I reple, I shall gayne nothing by it. Heerein Iob bewrayeth his passion. For he should haue confessed well, God is righteous, and not only his lawe will serue to bridle me, but also I know there is another higher righteousness, than that which is knowne to vs by his will and by the record of good and euill which he giueth vs to rule our life by. I knowe then that God hath another higher righteousness than this, and therefore it behoueth me to submit my selfe vnder him. Iob oughte too haue spoken so: but he bewrayeth, that it is as it were by constraint, that hee acknowledgeth a higher righteousness in God, than the righteousness of the law. For he saith, I see mine affliction, I am filled with reproches, and therefore I will not speake a woord. If this befell to such a person as he was, what shall become of vs? Then let vs inure our selues to consider well Gods true and peculiar righteousness which is incomprehensible to vs, and let vs honoure him in all his secrets, and let vs not conceiue the things that are in him, after our owne witte: for we see our owne smalnesse. And to be short, what must we do? Truly, for the condemning of our selues, wee neede not to climbe so high as to say, God hath a righteousness which cannot be comprehended by creatures, and wherevnto mans witte cannot reach. VVee haue not too do with this for the condemning of oure selues: for the lawe will be ynough for that matter, as hath bin shewed already. As often then as a man shall be so proude as to thinke he can mainteine himselfe before God by his owne works, let him bethinke him selfe well, and looke vpon Gods lawe. For it is not for vs too say, we be righteous bycause we seeme so to our selues, or bycause men find vs to be so and allow of our doings. No, but the triall must be made by the lawe of God. VVhen all the world shall haue canonized vs for saints, it shall nothing boote vs if the heauenly iudge condemne vs. For God will not haue vs to go any whither else than to his lawe: he will not bow nother one way nor other. And therefore as oft as we bee tempted, eyther with pride, or with hypocrisie: let vs bethinke vs what the lawe saith to vs, and we shall find so great and so honorable shamefulness in our selues, as there shall remaine nothing for vs but euerlasting death.

Thus ye see how wee ought to practize this lesson. VVo vnto vs if we be wicked. For then shall wee not neede to come to the second poynte, That if we be righteous, yet dare we not lifte vp our head. And why? For where is he to be found, that is righteous? Furthermore let vs marke well, that when we be righteous, that is to say, when we be not vtterly wicked and out of al square: all the righteousness that is in vs, shall be but a franke and free acceptation. As how? True it is that the faith-full are called righteous, not only bycause God forgyueth them their sinnes, and receyueth them to merite: but also bycause he liketh well of their life. It is said that Simeon was a good and righteous man: and Zacharie and Elizabeth his wife were righteous also. And why? Bycause they walked in Gods lawe and commaundementes. The same is said also of the holy patriarks. Yea but let vs marke, that it was bycause God of his owne free goodnesse receyued them, and layed not their sinnes too their charge. VVhen wee saye that men are made righteous by fayth: it is as much too saye, as God forgyueth their sinnes, and cleerely acquiteth them for our Lorde Iesus Christes sake.

Likewise it behoueth vs to vnderstand that wee are righteous in oure woorkes, bycause God accepteth vs too fauoure. For oure woorkes deserue too be alwayes refused at hys hande. I speake not of the works which men do of their owne power: for in them there is nothing but all villanie and rebellion. But euen when a man is gouerned by Gods spirit, and by hys grace doth walke in good woorkes: yet are all hys good works vnperfecte, and God maye call them off: yea and they are so farre off from any worthynesse or deseruing (as the Papistes imagine) as there is nothing but fylthynesse in them. Neuertheless yet God receyueth them. Yea euen as a father receyueth that whiche commeth from his child, though it be nothing woorth. So then, although we be righteous: that is to say, although wee haue some lykely hooode of righteousness: let vs marke well that the same deserueth not to be accepted so before God. And why? Bycause it is written, cursed be he that performeth not all the things which are conteyned in the booke of the lawe. Nowe, there is no man that performeth so much as any one thing, I meane that performeth it with a pure and perfect mind.

And therefore it foloweth that God maye damne vs all. And so, wee must be fayne to holde downe oure heades, yea euen without going any further than to the lawe: and yet is that nothing if we come to Gods righteousness which is incomprehensible to vs. Let vs put the case that a man behaued him selfe in all poynts as became hym: what might he do? might hee therefore pleade agaynste God? No: he must come short of that. And why? For God oweth vs nothing. That is true: but he hath promised that whosoever doth those things shall liue in them. Yea, but we must vnderstande, that he hath made that promise of his owne free bountifullnesse. VVee see how our Lord Iesus Christ saith, that when a seruant shall haue done all that he can for hys master, (he speaketh of the seruants that were in those days, that is to witte, of slaues that were in bondage too be bought and sold:) then if a slaue do all that he can for his master: shal his master rise from the table and say, I will nowe serue thee another whyle? No. For it is the seruants ductie to serue his master, and not that the master should abace him selfe to his seruant, or be bound vnto him in any thing. Euen so (saith Christ) whē ye haue done al that is commanded you, assure your selues ye are still vnprofitable seruants. And in so saying, Iesus Christ meeneth not that there was euer any man found, or that any can be found to haue performed all that God commandeth: but he putteth the case that it were so. So also must we do. Let vs put the case that a man had fulfilled the lawe yet behoueth it him to reuerence God with all humilitie, saying, Alas Lorde, I will still submit my selfe vnder thy hande. for I knowe well that all that I haue done is of thee, and that there cannot so muche as one droppe of goodnesse procede out of me.

And

Luke. 1. 1. 5.
2. d. 5.

Gen. 6. 6. 9.

Deut. 7. 26.

Leui. 18. 2. 3

Luke. 17. 6. 7

And although thou accept me : that is not bycause I am worthy, or bycause I haue deserued it: but it is of thine owne free fauour. Lo how we ought to deale. Furthermore let vs be well ware of the excessiue passion that was in Iob. It behoueth vs to conceiue the soueraine righteousnesse of God in such sort as I haue said. And that must be to the end we may be the more induced to humilitie: and not to say, If I be righteous, yet will I not lift vp my head, seeing mine affliction. For it is certayne that God will performe whatsoeuer he hath promised, yea euen in that he hath said, he that doth these thynges shall liue in them. And certainly, if we be able too performe the lawe to the full: let vs assure our selues, that God hath his reward redy to reward vs with. Then must we not say as Iob doth, that seeing our reproch, and seeing he scourgeth vs: we be confounded by a power that we knowe not off, and that although the same be farre out of measure, yet we dare not grudge against it, bycause we shall win nought by so doing. No: let vs not be caried away so farre, but let vs thinke that God neuer chastizeth his seruants without iust cause, yea though hee haue no eye to their sinnes, as it is certayne that Iob was not punished as a wicked offender. True it is that God had iust cause to punish him an hundred times more: but god had not that respect and meaning with him. VVhat then: his intēt was to trie his pacience, and to c'care him of the slander that Sathan made of him in saying, Iob obeyeth God bycause he is in prosperitie: and therefore God meant to shewe the contrarie. So then when wee speake of Gods soueraine iustice, let not our talke be to thinke that he presseth vs out of measure, nor to auance our selues against him by force: but let it be to honour him in his wonderfull secrets, yea euen in suche wise, as we may be fully resolved to say in our selues, Alas, it is not for vs to alledge, that though we be righteous, yet we will not be so bold as to lift vp our head: for wee haue good cause to hang downe our heads continually. For although God set not him selfe downe in his throne to condemne vs: we haue our iudge within vs. Cannot euery man condemne him selfe? hathe not euery man the witte to perceiue him selfe to be more than blamable? Let vs marke then that there needes none other cōdemnation for vs, than that which is contained in the lawe, wherewith both great and small ought too be well acquainted. And after Iob hath spoken so, he addeth, that he wold sayne that his plage were increascd. Yea but what then? Although it increased (saith he) yet wilt thou come vpon me as a Lion, and wilt shew thy selfe maruellous against me Heere as before Iob treateth of Gods secreete iudgements, which man cannot reach vnto, by reason that the same do farre passe his vnderstanding and wit. And that is the cause why he calleth God maruellous. True it is that we shal alwayes find Gods lawe straunge, bycause it wakeneth vs vp beyond our imagination. And we our selues also see, that when the wisest men do speake of soundnesse and perfection, they come short of the rigour of Gods lawe. Also when God teacheth vs by his word, he doth it stil aboute our ordinarie capacite. But when we haue once bin taught, to know how the matter goeth: we be fully conuicted that it is so. If God haue laide the bridle loose in oure necke, so as we haue not bin at hys schoole to learne his will by his lawe: we be well neere as good as brute beasts in that behalfe. But whē we once know that a man must loue God with all his hart, with all his mind, and with all his strength, and his neighbour as him selfe: then we see that God requireth nothing at our hands, but that which we owe him. And why? For we are his, and we haue not any thing, whiche we haue not receiued of him. Thus ye see how we shall find nothing straunge if we referre all to Gods word: but [contrariwise] that all Gods doings are according to reason and equitie. But when we come once to the righteousnesse that is vnknowne, to say that although we had performed the whole lawe to the full, yet had we done nothing in respect of the righteousnesse of God: that is yet a farre straunger thing, in somuche that we knowe not what to say, but all our wittes faile vs, and are amazed at it. And that is it whiche Iob meant in saying, thou wilt shew thy selfe maruellous against me. Now although God be maruelouse in his wonderfull iudgements, yet must the faithfull sort learne to thinke it nothing strage. As how? Let vs take example in Gods election, in hys prouidence, and in all the things that he doth aboute our vnderstanding. Behold a part of Gods secretes which are as a bottomlesse pit vnto vs ward. God choseth whome he listeth to bring to saluation, and forsaketh the residue. He findeth vs all alike, so as no man can vaunt him selfe to be better than his neighbour. And wherefore then are we so sholed asunder, as to say that God choseth the one sort to make them inheritors of his kingdome: and forsaketh the other sort to make them go to destruction: what is the cause heereof but only his will? At the firste blush we thinke this very straunge, saying: How now? is it any reason, that whereas we be all of vs Gods creatures, and there is no difference betwixt vs as in respect of our selues, but one of vs is as lightly preferred as another: yet notwithstanding God hath pitie on whome he listeth, and forsaketh the residue? Is there any reason in so doing? Lo how men shal be tempted to grudge against God. But good reason it is that this should be wonderfull to vs. For if it were not wonderful, we would alwayes haue our wittes intangled in many questions, and in the end we wold spew out blasphemies as we see these priuie repiners do, who are alwayes arguing and making phantasticall discourses, and could find in their hart too condemne God bycause he worketh not as they would haue him. Then if man speake to vs of Gods election, it must needes be a maruellous acte: and yet we must not be astonished at it. And why? to the end it may prouoke vs to honour him, and to say: Alas Lorde, wee cannot reach so high as to enter into thy secreete purpose and to know what is inclosed therein: but it becometh vs to reuerence that which is vnknowne to vs as now. The must we confesse that thou art righteous and good, yea euen though there appeare no reason of it vnto vs. VVhen we be come to that point: we shall not fling out rashly and at all aduentures to iudge of Gods secrets after our owne fancie, but we shall do as we see the faithfull of all times haue done. Verely when they dispute of Gods election, they do it soberly and modestly, and they crie out with Saint Paule, O howe wonderfull are thy iudgements. Ro. 11. d. 33. They be rauished at them, and they inquire not curiously of this and that, but they thinke well, as now we knowe Gods doings but in part, but the day will come that all shall be reuealed vnto vs to the full. Lo how the faithfull haue alwayes reasoned of Gods election, and not raunged abroad to inquire of things curiously. Certesse they thought it very straunge and it was maruellous to the: but their so doing was to yelde God his due honoure, knowing it to be too greate a loftinesse for his creatures to presume to attayne so high. And in so doing they continued quiet, they were rauished with wonderment, these doings of God were marvellous vnto them, and yet they were not ouerstrange to them. They were marvellous too them, bycause they knewe that in them there are secretes which surmount all capacite and vnderstan-derstanding of man. And agayne they were not strange to them, by cause that by their election they knew Gods goodnesse and mercie in that he had chosen them too saluation, by calling them vnto himselfe, and by casting off the rest. Behold what we see in Gods election. As much is to be said also of his providence. It is said that God disposeth all things in the worlde. VVell then, is it possible that when warres come, they shoulde bee of Gods stirring vp? or that God should guyde them that are tossed with outrageous passions, such as the princes 10 be that are full of ambition, couetouse, bludsheders, rakers, extorcioners, in somuch that there is as it were a hellish conuzion, and they that serue them in that behalfe, make no conscience nor sticking at all to flea, rob, and pill?

Ye see then that menne are as ill as wilde beastes, and much worse. And should God vse such instrumentes? Howe shoulde that be possible? Ageyne we see that the Church it selfe is turmoyle: ye see what persecutions it is put vnto: and who is he that raiseth them vp? Fur- 20 thermore we see that the doctrine of the Gospell is as it were troden vnder foote by the tirannie of wicked caitifes, so as lies reigne in stead of truth. And who is it that maketh such troubles? It is the rightfull vengeance of God. VVe see not the reason of it, we see not how nor in what wise it woorketh: but wee must perceiue hys hand by faith. This is strange to vs, and so must it needes be, to the end it may humble vs. But when wee shall haue bin instructed in Gods word, although wee knowe not the reason of his woorks, yet shall we custo- 30 mably magnifie them, assuring our selues that hee doth not aught without iust cause. Ye see then how it standeth vs in hand to practize this sentence wherein it is said, Thou wilt shew thy selfe maruellous against me. But Iob passed measure: that is certaine: hee sheweth heere that he was tempted of an outrageous passion. For he saith, thou wilt shewe thy selfe maruellous: [whereby] he declareth and confesseth that for his owne part hee was vtterly dismayde, and thought it very strange that God should scourge him so. But we must beware that 40 he be not maruellous to vs after that sort. True it is that when we perceiue Gods maruellouse and secrete dealings, we may well be so abashed as to say, Alas Lorde, we see our owne weakenesse and rudenesse, in that wee thinke the woorks of thy hands to bee strange. But what for that? Thou shalt enlighten vs by little and little, vntill we be come into thy Sanctuarie. VVe haue one foote there already: truly we are but at the courtins, wee see thee but aloofe: but the time will come that thou shalt giue vs a more familiar knowledge. And there- 50 fore let it not greeue vs that God shoulde haue his secrets in such wise, which surmount our capacitie. But yet dothe this amaze vs: for a man maye alledge, and how so? doth not all our welfare and happinesse consist in the knowing of God and of his will? Yes verely, so farre foorth as is expedient for vs.

But let vs marke, that God hath giuen vs a way too know him, which is conuenient and fit for vs. He could well giue vs the full and perfect light at this day: but he seeth it is not for our profite, and therefore hee giueth vs but a certaine portion, and he applieth him selfe 60 vnto vs. And therefore, let it not greeue vs too haue this knowledge of God as yet by measure, as it is giuen vs in the scripture, and to wait till he haue bereft vs of this mortall body, and specially till he haue wholly re-fourmed our mindes that they maye bee no more so wrapped in these worldlinesse, and earthlinesse, and specially in the sinfulnessse that proceedeth of the sinne of Adam. And by and by for a synall conclusion, Iob declareth, wherein God shewed him selfe maruellous agaynste him: that is too witte, In that he will reuiew bys stripes and fall to chaunging. True it is that the hebrew worde whiche is put for Stripes, woundes, or plagues: signifyeth as much as Records, witnesses, or witnessings: and not without cause. For the plagues whiche God sendeth vpon men are as it were witnesses broughte foorth agaynst them, and proofes that God maketh to bring things to knowledge. But in this place Iob speaketh of Stripes, woundes, or plagues, whereby he meeneth the chastizementes that God had layd vpon him. Therefore hee saithe they were renewed, in somuche that he had new chastizementes layd vpon him. This is a thing well woorthy to be noted. For although we find Gods woorking to be strange to our vnderstanding: yet notwithstanding there is nothing that hindereth vs more from the knowledge of Gods righteousnesse, than this temptation doth. That (I say) is the thing wherein men find themselves most hindered. True it is that as oft as any man alledgeth any peece of scripture to vs, which is not to our liking, the same greeueth vs, and by and by we fall to arguing agaynst God. But specially we shewe our stubbornesse when wee bee smitten and beaten by the hand of God, and we cannot be broughte to confesse that God is righteous in all his chastizementes. Beholde (say I) a thing wherevnto we cannot be made to agree. And so ye see why Iob hauing spoken of Gods wonderfull woorking, addeth, Thou doublest thy plagues against me. But forasmuch as this matter cannot be discourfed at length to day: let vs marke that there is nothing else for vs to do but to flee vnto God, praying him to giue vs suche a tast of his word, as we may quietly receiue whatsoever is conteyned in the same: and yet that whensoever it shall please him to vse rigoure to- 40 wards vs, he will so moderate his roddes, that although he make vs feele the smart of the, yet we may not cease to haue recourse vnto him as to our father, to the ende he may alwayes receyue vs as his children.

And nowe let vs kneele dowae before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying hym to make vs knowe them in suche wise, as we may not anye more be blinded with hypocricie, or with pride, or with the fonde folies whereof oure heads are full: but that beeing vtterlye ashamed, wee maye alwayes haue recourse too the remedie that is giuen vs, whiche is to embrace the redemption that is purchased vs by the death and passion of oure Lorde Iesus Christ: and that wee knowing the same too bee the only meane whereby wee may bee reconciled vnto god, may come to it with assured trust that he will heare vs: And therewithal that it may please him so to aide vs with his holy spirit, as he may make vs to walke in the feare & obedience of him, vntill he shall haue restored vs fully, and that there remaine no more sinne and corruption in vs. That it maye please him to graunte this grace not onely to vs, but also to al people and nations of the earth, &c.

The .xlj. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the tenth Chapter.

18. Why hast thou brought me out of the womb? O that I had died before any eye had seen me.
19. That I had bin as if I had neuer bin, and that I had bin caried from the wombe too the graue.
20. Shall not the portion of my dayes come soon to an end? Let him withdraw himselfe quickly, that I may take my breath agayne.
21. Before I go into the countrie of darknesse and into the shadowe of death, from whence there is no returning agayne.
22. Into the darke countrie where there is nothing but darknesse, euen thicke darknesse, where there is nothing but disorder, and when it should shine, there is nothing but darknesse.

We must cal to mind what was spoken yesterday concerning Gods changing of his plagues: that is to witte, that when God scourgeth men, he hath diuers meanes to do it: and when hee hath vsed one kind of correctiō, he hath another a wayes in store. Therefore let vs not thinke we be scaped his hand when he hath deliuered vs from some one trouble: but let vs prepare our selues till it please him to shew vs mercie. For behold, the only meane to set vs at rest, is to stand in Gods fauoure. Otherwise he wil make vs feele that which is conteyned in the song of Moyses, namely that he hath diuers sorts of chastizements in his cofers and storehouses. But in the meane while we see that Iob being sore pressed, desireth God to put him to death out of hand. VVe haue seene the same sentence heeretofore. And heere he confirmeth his matter therewith, as if he should say, it is not without cause that I wish so, seeing that God persecuteth me so sharpiy, as I haue no ease nor respite by any meanes, but am vtterly confounded. And whereas Iob saith Wherefore hast thou taken me out of my mothers womb? no doubt but he sinned in so saying. For it is a poynt of vnthankfulness in men not to acknowledge them selues very much beholden to God in that he hath made them and fashioned them, notwithstanding that they liue neuer so miserably in this world. And is it a small thing, that God hath put vs into this world to reigne therein, to haue the fruition of all his creatures, to beare his image heere, to knowe him to be our father, yea and to fynd him to be so by experiece? Ought we to ho'd skorne of such an honour as he doth vnto vs? VVe see then that Iob is not altogether to be excused, whē he wisheth to haue bin caried from his mothers womb to his graue, or rather not to haue bin borne at all. True it is that he made not this conclusion to rest fully vpon it: but that he bewrayeth the passions where-with he was moued, although he cōsented not to them. But the popish doctors say, that that is no sinne, but so to say is a great beaultinesse in them. They hold opinion, that if a man be prouoked in himselfe to vengeance, or to robbrie, or to any such other things, the same is no sinne so hee rest not vpon it, ne fully purpose it in his hart but rather they esteeme it as a vertue because they say they be such battels as a man outstandeth. Verely they graunt, that before baptem it is sinne: so as if a Turk or a heathen man be tempted to do euill, he is forthwith gilty before God: But they say, that all such sinnes are so skoured out of vs by baptem, as wee rather deserue praise afore God for not consenting to such temptations than to be esteemed as sinners and to haue done amisse. But (as I erst said) it is to brutish a beaultinesse For too whome doth God speake when he saith, that men must loue him with all their hearte and with all their strength: Speaketh he not to the Iewes who were of his Church? And doth not the same belong vnto vs at this day? Is it not a rule common to vs all? If we be bound to loue God with all our strength and with all our minde, and [on the other side] if it be so that looke with howe many lewde affections we be combered, so many strivings and enmities we haue against the loue that we owe vnto God: we must needs conclude also that they be as many sinnes, or else that it is no sinne at all to rebell against God and to haue transgressed his commaundements. Ye see then a thing against nature. True it is that our sinnes are not layde to our charge: but yet it ensweth not therefore that we be not woorthie to be punished before God, were it not that he of his owne meere goodnesse doth take vs to mercie. Let vs vnderstand the that whensoever oure fleshe tempteth vs vnto euill, although there be no resting or determining vpon it: yet may God iustly punish vs: neuer the later he of his owne free goodnesse spareth vs so as the same commeth not to account. Iob therefore did amisse. And on our side let vs know, that God may cal vs to iudgemēt and account, if we haue a temptation that doth but make vs to swarue a litle: and although we bring not the same to effect, nor be ouercome of it, yet are we already gone astray, and it behoueth vs to confesse our fault: but yet notwithstanding it behoueth vs also to settle our selues vpon the free mercy that God graunteth in forgetting and buryng all those things. And now let vs come to Iobs talke. He saith, Wherefore hast thou taken me out of my mothers womb? Verely if we looke no further but too the life of man, we shall alwayes be fayne to come to this proverbe which is common among the heathen, or at least wise among the most parte of them: namely, that it were good for men neuer to be borne, or else to die out of hande. They that haue reckned the miseries and inconueniences whereto we be subiect while we liue heere by lowe: haue thought, how now? It were better for men neuer to be borne. For what else is the beginning of their life but weeping and wailing? The litle babes before they haue any vnderstanding, do shewe there is such a seagulle of miseries in vs, as it is a pitie and terroure to behold: and afterward as we growe in yeeres, so do our miseries increase in number and quantitie. Therefore it were better for men that they might neuer be borne: and if they must needs bee borne, it were good for them too die quickly, that they might haue no long iourney to make. And this talke hath partly some reason, howbeit it is not without vnthankfulness. And why so? For although the miseries be innumerable wherewith men be oppressed: yet must we wey them in the balance with the honour that

Deut. 32. c. 34.

that

that God doth vs in making vs Lords ouer his creatures to haue dominion ouer them heere by low, as his childrē, whome he maketh to feele him as a father towards vs, and moreouer bycause his setting of vs heere in this world is to aduance vs aloft, that is to witte to the heauenly life, wherof he giueth vs some perceyuerance and feeling afore hand. If this be thoroughly knowne, surely it ouercommeth all the miseries and troubles that can happen to men in this world. And thus ye see why I said that this sentence (namely that it were best for men not to be borne at all) might seeme to be grounded vpon some reason, and yet it was not without vnthankfulness. For we must not forget what God giueth vs to recompence it withall. But so farre off is Iob of coming to that point, that he had leuer not to haue bin borne at all. And why? Bycause he was so combered, his mind was so amazed, and his hart was so seized and forepossessed with griefe, as he could not consider that God had neuertheless created him after his owne image, that hee had kept him in the world as one of his childrē, and that he made him tast of the euerlasting life wherunto men are allured. Iob could not come to that point. And why? His hart was so closed vp with sorrowe, as he had none eye but to his miserie.

And therefore lette vs marke well, that if our afflictions bee greate, wee are alwayes subiect to this fault whiche Iob bewrayeth in Iim selfe: whiche is, that we forget Gods gracious benefites: and that although we be put in remembraunce of them, yet we fynd no tast nor sauour in them, they touch vs not to our comfort, or to assuage our sorrow that we might take breath to say, Lord although I be beaten by thy hand, and that it be too heauie a burthen for me to beare: yet notwithstanding I consider on the other side, that thou hast bin so good vnto me, that I perceiue thee to be a merciful father to me, and that is it that cheereh me vp and comforteth me. Ye see the how the thing that we haue to marke in the first place, is, that we should know that this vice is naturally rooted in vs, so as if God did not succoure vs and giue vs the said comfort to sweeten our sorrowes with, we shuld not misse to bee diuened too suche an afterdeale, as there should be nothing but despaire in vs, and we wolde wish that we had neuer bin borne. And nowe Iob addeth, Or that I had bin caried from my mothers womb to my grave, and that I had bin as though I had neuer bin. This is the second part of the prouerb whiche I said was vsed among the infidels: namely that when men be borne, it were good for them to be soon dispatched and rid out of this lyfe. But as I haue touched alreedy, that wer a smal regarding of the honoure that God doth vs in giuing vs such dignitie and preheminence ouer all his creatures. And if there were no more but this, that he as it were mustreth vs in the rank of his children and heires, were not that an inestimable priuiledge which ought to appease all the grefes that can betide vs? Specialy let vs mark to what purpose God will haue vs to liue heere in this worlde. For if we die in our childhood, we haue nother vnderstanding nor reason: but as we grow in yeares, so learne we that which was vnknowne vnto vs: namely that god hath made vs after his owne image, and giuen vs vnderstanding to knowe, not onely that wee must passe away heere by low, but also that there is a continuing life in heauen, and that that is the thing whereto he calleth vs. But if wee be taken out of the world as if wee had neuer bene, we be disappoynted of this great benefite of knowing that God will bee our eternall sauoure, and that he giueth vs alreedy some tokē of his fatherly loue while we be in this earthly wayfaring. Therefore ye see it is an intolerable vnthankfulness when men wish to haue bin rid out of the way as if they had neuer bin borne. For wee must not thynke vpon the lyfe of manne simplye in it selfe: but wee must set our eye vpon the ende wherunto it tendeth: which is, that we shoulde bee led too the hope that is as yet hidden vp in heauen, wherof GOD giueth vs some tast already, so faire soorth as oure rawnesse is able too comprehend the same.

Also heere is too bee noted in what wise wee may wish to die, and in what sorte we must not onely bee willing too liue, but also cheere vp oure selues, though wee lyue in lingering payne. As it hath bin shewed heeretofore, wee maye desyre deathe in respecte that wee cease not too offende God: and forasmuche as wee bee compassed about with so manye corruptions as is lamentable too see, wee may well mourne and desyre God too deliuer vs from suche bondage: and thys is not onely lawfull but also requisite for vs too doo. For if Gods spirite gouerne vs, wee must hate sinne and all euil. Neuertheless so long as man is in this worlde, hee ceaseth not to displease God. I saye, take euen the vertuouslest man that is, and there shall alwayes bee some fault too bee founde in him. Therefore in hating oure naughtinesse and sinne wee must needes be weerie of our life. And why? Bycause it holdeth vs in the thraldome and prison of so manye infirmities that are contrarie to Gods wil. Ye see then how the faythfull are alwayes weerie too lyue and linger in this worlde sith they cannot serue God fully as they would wishe. And I saye that this is not onely lawfull but also needefull for vs to do.

Vvee see also how Sainte Paule sayth not that hee could haue done so: but declareth that it was best for him that God shoulde take hym quickly out of thys world, if he had had no further respect but to him selfe. And specialy when hee saithe, wretche that I am, who shall delyuer me, hee confesseth that if hee looked not further than too hys owne presente state, hee was vnhappye. And when hee d. fyreth too bee delyuered from hence, he speaketh it not through humane passion: but of zelousnesse wherewith hee was driven by the holye Ghost, and of a singular regarde that hee had to gyue him selfe to goodnesse. For hee sawe that that coulde not bee done till hee were quite and cleane rid of this flesh. And that is the cause why hee was weerie of his life.

And heere ye see howe wee ought too proceede in that behalfe: that is to witte, that our misliking of oure life must be bycause we knowe our selues to be sinfull. Howbeit for so muche as men cannot atteyne therevnto, GOD is fayne too pinch them, to make them abhorre sinne. And forasmuche as wee bee fayne to be driuen to it by force: ye see that this is one fault in vs: And agayne although God chastize vs, and that by suche corrections wee bee warned to mislike of our sinnes: yet wee hate them not, excepte hee continue in making vs too feele the smart of them. For if hee withdrawe his hande, we fall to our olde byasse, and wee could find in our harts to sit still in our owne woorkes if he would let vs alone.

Yee see then heere the second vice. And further, oure hating of this present life is bycause wee cannot lyue heere, after oure fleshy lustes, whiche notwithstanding are wycked and corrupte. Vvee wolde haue God to giue vs leaue too offend him, yea if wee coulde make such a bargaine with him, our life shuld be sweete, and we wold desire nothing but to tarric heere.

Vve

Phil. 1. 23.
23, 24.

Rom. 7. 6.
24.

VVe see then that the cause why men are weerie of their liues is for that they cannot compasse their desires. They hate not the euill that is in them, nor the corruption of their nature which intangleth them: but yet they besorie that God giueth them not full scope to do what they lyst, ne suffereth them to take their delightes and pleasures heere after their owne inclination. Againe there is yet one other thing too bee condemned, which is that wee keepe no measure: and that although we haue good reason to hate our life: yet if wee fall to mislyking of it, it is done too farre out of square. But Saint Paule in the place that I alleadged afore, leadeth vs to the cleane contrarie. For although hee call himselfe wretched or vnhappie, & desire to be deliuered out of the pryson of his body. Yet he commeth backe to this poynte, that he contenteth himselfe with the grace that God giueth him. Beholde (saythe hee) I thanke my God through Iesus Chryste. For he knewe well, that God woulde not leaue him without helpe: hee knewe that God woulde gyue him power to withstand the euill: and finally that the infirmitie which was in him was buried before God so as it shuld not be layd to his charge. S. Paule then misliketh not his life as a man that stomaked at it, and were impatient, neither dothe he cast himselfe into suche outrage as to checke against God: but cleane contrariwise he yeldeth himselfe vnto Gods good wil. He contenteth himselfe in that God layeth not the euil to his charge, and in that he holdeth him vp with a strong hande that hee bee not vanquished by Sathan nor by sinne. And euen so ought we to do, but we do it not. Thus ye see how it may bee lawfull for vs to hate this present life, bycause (say I) that God holdeth vs in the bondage of sin. And again it behoueth vs to holde this measure of languishing vnder Gods hande so long as it shall please him too holde vs in this worlde, knowing that it ought to suffice vs that he is neare at hand with vs to helpe vs at our neede. But wher as Iob sayth, I would I had not bene borne, or that I had ben caryed from my mothers wombe to my graue: it is an inordinate manner of speech, and although he rested not vpon that poynt for a doo: yet he offended God. And here ye see good cause to marke well that which is sayd here. For we shall neuer keepe any measure and euen hand in hating this present life, except we consider howe it is giuen vs of God to the ende to make vs passe further by making vs too feeble his fatherly loue. This present life is a witnesse, that God by shewing himselfe good towards vs, doth already warrant vs that which wee see not yet, namely the immortal glorie which he hath layde vp for vs. But wee thinke not of that: wee couet not to liue for that: wee passe not for seruing of God, nor too doe as is shewed vs in the examples of the holy fathers, namely I will liue to sette foorth the prayse of the Lorde: I will liue to come to the temple to magnifye my God. VVe haue not that regarde with vs, and no maruall at all, for wee bee vtterly corrupted, and haue forgotten the excellencie of our fyrste creation. VVhat then? Our desiring to liue is through a brutishe affection, too bee at our owne ease, to eat and drinke, and to fulfill our owne lustes according as euery mannes complexion leadeth him. Loe how men are straitened in themselues without hauing eye vnto God, and it is a poynt of vtter wickednesse, if our being weerie to liue bee but bycause wee lue not at our owne ease. It is not for that wee bee heere hild in sin: but bycause God pleaseth vs not, and bycause we haue not whatsoever our flesh desireth. For we could find in our hearts that God should be subiect to vs: and bycause he wil not be our vnderling, so as things fall out cleane contrarie: beholde, it greeceth vs, stingeth vs, and tormenteth vs, and wee caste foorth our choler euery where. And therfore so muche the more must we mark this lesson: whiche is, that wee muste honor this present lyfe, bycause God hath set vs in it, to the intent it should be as a recorde to vs, that he taketh vs for his children, & wil be our father: And secondly that we so consider what is in our selues: namely that we be corrupted in Adam, as we are always hild there as Satans prisoners and ceasse not to doo euill: vpon the knowledge whereof we must euen in the midst of our weerinesse prouoke our selues with a good and holy affection to returne alwayes vnto God, assuring our selues that he will remedie all our inconueniences, and that when he hath once made vs feele his fatherly loue, hee will continually increase his gracious giftes more and more, and throughly bring too passe that which he hath begonne. Howbeit forasmuch as we bee so fore inclined to repine against God, let vs be well ware that we haue his benefites alwayes throughly printed in our mynde, that wee fall not into the temptation that is spoken of heere, which is, too wishe that wee had neuer had life. True it is, that it were better for the cast-aways to haue bene borne dead, or too haue bene swallowed vp into the earth, or that they had neuer bene begotten: as our Lord Iesus Chryste speaketh of Iudas. But yet in the meane whyle wee muste holde this rule, that the life of mā is in it self so precious and noble a gift of God, as it deserueth wel to be had in estimation. For we must alwayes come backe to this poynt, that God neuer createth man, but he imprinteth his image in him. True it is that this image is defaced: neuerthelesse, as in respect of the order of nature: the goodnesse of God taketh alwayes the vpper hande, and ought to haue such preferment and preheminance among vs, as too magnifie and acknowledge the same accordingly. Nowe let vs come to that which Iob addeth. He saith, that if hee hadde bene caryed after that sorte from his mothers wombe too his graue, no eye hadde seene him. That is yet one other vnthankfulnessse. For this life ought too bee well lyked of, not onely bycause euery of vs knoweth vpon what condition and too what ende he was created: but also bycause God ought too bee glorified in vs. VVhen wee looke vpon a creature whome GOD hath sente into the worlde, haue wee not therein as it were a mirrour of his goodnesse? Then as often as we may behold a man with our eyes, we must make the same to serue vs to glorifie God in that behalfe. But Iob woulde haue bene deade at the fyrste dashe, and that was as muche as too darken Gods glorie: whiche thing was not without a smacke of vnthankfulnessse. And soo wee see howe hee ouershotte himselfe in all thinges, and that hee hilde not the measure whyche hee oughte too haue doone, and therfore haue wee the more cause too bee well aduised. For if this temptation befell vntoo suche a manne as hee was, howe muche more shall wee bee caryed awaye beeing soo frayle as wee bee? Immediately hee saythe: O that God woulde withdrawe his bande from mee, and gette him awaye a while, that I myghte haue some respite, before I gee downe into the darke cuntry, into the shaddowe of death, where is nothing but confusion. VVe see heere howe Iob is still caryed awaye, that is too witte, bycause Gods iudgemente laye fore vpon him. And this is it that I sayde afore, namely that hee not onely felte the bodily aduersities as euery of vs shall feele them: but that his chiefe grieffe was that God was agaynste him, as if hee hadde bene at deadly feud with him. Thus yee see what did pinch Iob with such distresse & what tormeted him in such wise, as he was not so patient as was requisite. To be short, when god bringeth vs

Psa 118. c. 17
 Esa 38. d. 20

to these spirituall battels: then doth he proue vs and trie vs to the quicke. And it is a thing well worth the noting. For we take our selues for stout men of warre and too haue bene tried too the vttermost, when wee haue indured some sicknesse, or some other aduerfitie: and wee thinke then that God ought not too begin newe againe with vs, but that we be quite discharged, and are become stout champions. And yet notwithstanding, all the bodily afflictions that wee can indure are nothing in respect of the distresse that a poore sinner is in when he perceyueth 10 that God is as it were a partie agaynst him, and persecuteth him, so as hee can finde no meanes to come too attonement and agreement with him. Therefore when our finnes come after that fort before vs, and the diuell maketh vs too feeble Gods wrath, and againe on the other side oure owne conscience reprobeth vs, so as God seemeth too be vtterly angrie with vs: that (say I) is a farre greater and dreadfuller anguish, than all the miseries are, that we can indure in our flesh. And therefore let vs prepare oure selues too suche spirituall battelles, praying 20 God to strengthen vs, for wee see how all mans strength fayleth in that behalfe, so as wee shall bee quickly overwhelmed if wee bee not propped vp from aboue, and lifted vp by GOD when wee bee falne, and set agaync in too the right way when we bee stepped out of it. By the waye when Iob sayeth, Let him get him from mee a while: VVee see yet better howe miserable the state of poore sinners is, when they haue this conceyte that God persecuteth them and is agaynst them. For wherein lyeth all oure welfare and all our ioy, but in that GOD is neere at hande too vs, and in that wee feele howe his gracious fauour is neuer separated from vs? But cleane contrarie, when a poore sinner is so scared with Gods iudgement: he desireth nothing but too hyde himselfe, and too finde some secrete nooke, that God might see him no more, and that hee might not make him feele his hande any more. And so the greatest benefite that poore sinners could haue when they fele theselues so tormented with Gods iudgement, is too preace neerer too him, too craue helpe and succour at his hande: and their vtter vndoing is to shrinke away from him. VVee see then what men are when God sheweth himselfe angrie with them. For they haue none other shift than to heape wickednesse vpon wickednesse, and to enter into hell. For it is a very hell when we bee shrunke away after that fort from God. And yet notwithstanding when God holdeth them at that poynt, beholde howe all poore sinners wishe that hee would make them perceyue how there is nothing in him but his wrath and curse. But heereby we must bee prouoked too pray 40 God, that whatsoeuer vengeance wee haue deserued for our finnes, yet we may not forget this grace whiche hee offereth vs, namely that wee shoulde alwayes haue recourse too his goodnesse, and that although he haue good right too be angrie with vs, yet neuertheless we may assure our selues that he ceaseth not to allure vs too him. For his goodnesse surmounteth the rigour of his iustice which is due to vs for our finnes: and thereby let vs be comforted, vntill hee haue withdrawne his hande from vs: Then let vs not shrinke backe when hee absenteth himselfe from vs, but rather let vs say, Lorde withdrawe thine anger, for if thou shewe vs thine angrie countenance: it is all one as if wee were drowned already in hell. Lo what we haue too marke in this strayne. And therefore let vs bethinke vs too profite our selues by it, that we quayle not when God listeth too trie vs and too proue too the quicke what our strength and constancie is in such temptations. And heere ye see howe we may say with Sainct Paule, neyther things present, nor things to come, nor life, nor dearth, nor any thing else is able to separate vs from the loue of God, That is too say [nothing can disappoynt vs] that wee shoulde not alwayes feele his fatherly loue which he vseth towards vs, too asuage and to sweeten our sorrowes withall. Sainct Paule ferreteth downe things to come, as if he should say, true it is that men are subiect to infinite miseries, as we can neyther number nor measure them. The miseries that are in our nature, are as it were a maze: and yet for all that, if wee holde our selues by our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is the bande betweene God and vs, and looke vpon him as the partie that knitteth vs too God his father: There shall be nothing to hinder vs that we shoulde not be alwayes merie. Lo what we haue to desire at Gods hande, when wee knowe in what plight wee bee. Nowe in the ende Iob speaketh of the state of suche as are departed, saying, Before I go intoo the darke country, and intoo the lightlesse pitte, where there is nothing but confuzion and disorder, and where is night when the day ought to shine. Heere Iob speaketh like a man that hath no beleefe, eyther of the immortalitie of the soule, or of the resurrection that is promised vs. VVhere is hee become then? Let vs marke that in this place he expresseth the pangs of a wretched sinner, whiche feeleth nothing but Goddes wrath, as I haue touched heere too fore, but yet haue we neede too bee put oftentimes in mynde of it, bycause it is for our behoofe. Iob then is brought heere to such a hell [of mynde, as hee thinketh that] God is his iudge, and himselfe as a reprobate before him, so as there is no hope of grace or forgiuenesse for him. Lo wherefore in speaking of death, hee feeleth nothing but confuzion. And howe so? For death serueth too turne Gods order vpside downe, like as sinne had turned all things vpside downe. For when God created man, it was not too the intent he shoulde haue bene mortall. True it is that wee shoulde not haue liued euermore in this worlde in the same state that Adam was in. For God would haue changed vs intoo glorious immortalitie. But yet notwithstanding, wee shoulde not haue bene fayne to haue dyed, neyther should our mortalitie haue needed to haue bene renewed. The state of Adam should haue bene suche, as when hee had liued [his full tyme] in thys worlde, hee shoulde haue had his euerlasting heritage with God. But sinne stepped in, And beholde, God added death out of hande, yea euen a death wherein there is nothing but confuzion. And why? For thereby man coulde perceyue nothing but Gods curse vpon him, which hath after a fort cutte off man from the number of creatures. Ye see howe God who hath settled vs in this worlde to liue heere as his children, taketh vs away when hee bereaueth vs of this life, whiche is all one as if hee shoulde driue vs oute of his house, and shoulde shewe howe hee myndeth not too reckon vs any more in the number of his creatures. See ye not an horrible confuzion? And so the case standeth, that when wee haue no further knowledge but of our finnes and of Goddes iustice, wee muste bee faine too rest there. So then wee must not thinke it straunge, that Iob speaking of death, should say, that men go into a darke coast, where there is nothing but darkenesse and disorder. And why so? For hee matcheth sinne and Gods curse together with death: and so long as God holdeth him locked vp in distresse, there is as it were a certaine hartburning, so as hee seeketh not the meane of grace, which is the true remedy to shew vs that there is light euen in death, and some order also in darknesse how darke soeuer it be, bycause that after we haue once bene brought too dust, wee shall bee rayzed vp agayne. Job perceyued not this. And why? Bycause it behoued God first too make him feele hys sharpe and fore rigour, and afterwarde to comfort him againe. And it is a text which wee ought too marke well. For if wee mynde too receyue the grace that God giueth vs, and offereth too vs continually in oure Lorde Iesus Christ: wee must first feele what wee oure selues are, and in what plight wee bee. Are wee desyrous (I say) too taste what the heauenly lyfe is? First wee muste knowe too what ende wee bee borne, yea euen according as wee bee sinners in Adam. And in good sooth it is not without cause that Sainct Paule sayeth, that that whiche is corruptible goeth formost. For hee speaketh not onely of the order that God holdeth in nature: but also of that whiche it behoueth vs too consider on oure part. Therefore wee must vnderstande that although wee bee borne into this worlde, and be as noble and excellent creatures of God as any can bee: Yet notwithstanding by meanes of sinne, death hath as it were abolished and razed out that noblenesse, in so muche that God mistykeh vs, and disclaymeth vs, as though he had not fashioned vs, bycause wee bee disfigured and the Deuill hath sette his markes and stampe vpon vs, and furthermore beeing subiect too the curse that was pronounced vpon Adam, wee are as good as banished oute of the whole worlde, so as there is neyther heauen nor earth, but it abhorreth vs. This (say I) is the thing that wee haue too marke in our selues. But if wee enter intoo that battell, it is certayne that wee shall bee confounded vtterly. Yee see that the cause why men stande so muche in their owne conceyte, is for that they cannot bethinke them of Goddes iustice as they ought too doo. But yet must wee come too that poynt. Howbeeit when wee shall haue considered howe wretched oure lyfe is, and that death is yet more wretched, bycause it is the great gulfe that serueth too shewe vs of what importance the curse is which God pronounced agaynst vs with his owne mouth: I saye when wee shall haue considered that: we must also beware that wee bee not vtterly swallowed vp of heauineffe. And what remedie is there? The remedie is too turne our eyes too our Lorde Iesus Christ. For the meane whereby God inlighteneth vs in the middes of darkenesse, is howe our Lorde Iesus Christ offereth himselfe vntoo vs, in whom wee haue the true daysunne of rightuoufnesse. Nowe then if wee haue that regarde with vs: no death can bee dreadfull vntoo vs. And heere yee see why Dauid sayeth, that Gods sheepehooke shall comfort him in the shadowe of death, and in the darkenesse. VVhen as he speaketh of Gods sheepehooke, hee meeneth that hee shall bee afrayde of nothing so long as God sheweth himselfe a sheepehearde towards him. And howe shoulde he shewe himselfe a sheepehearde, but in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ? So then let vs first consider of what mynde Job speaketh heere. He knoweth that if men bee considered in themselves, it is their verye nature too haue nothing else but all maner of confuzion both in their lyfe and in theyr death. Howbeeit seeing wee haue the sonne of God, although oure state seeme neuer so wretched, insomuch that wee bee but as poore woormes subiect too corruption and rottenesse: yet come wee too the tasting of the benefite whiche God gaue vs, when hee made light to issue out of the middes of darkenesse, according as it is sayde in the creation of the worlde, that God turned the darkenesse intoo light. Seeing wee knowe this, wee haue too reioyce, in that by the meanes of his onely sonne, hee hath caused his goodnesse and grace to shine foorth in our death, yea euen more than in our lyfe. For when it seemeth that wee shoulde enter intoo the dungeons and gulfes of hell: Then dooth God open vs the gate of hys kingdome: and euen then hee maketh vs too enter into the dwelling place, whereoutof wee bee nowe after a fort banished. And Christ inlighteneth vs, not onely in death, too the intent that the darkenesse which is there shoulde not darken vs and quite ouerwhelme vs: but also in our life. This present worlde (as the Scripture telleth vs) is full of darkenesse, and wee bee poore blinde soules in it: and yet in the meane while Iesus Christ ceasseth not inlighten vs by his Gospell. VVee haue the lawe and the Prophetes, which are as burning Cressettes too vs. And wee haue the Gospell, which is yet a farre greater light, yea euen as it were the light of high noone. Yee see then howe oure Lorde Iesus Christ will bee a sufficient light for vs both in lyfe and death, so we looke vntoo him: But as I haue touched heere toofoore, wee must first feele what disorder and confuzion inuironneth vs rounde aboute, vntill suche tyme as Iesus Christ haue reached vs his hande. Furthermore, when Iesus Christ hath inlightned vs, so as wee shall haue walked in hope of the euerlasting lyfe while we bee in this worlde: although God take vs hence, and death be before our eies: yet let vs not therefore ceasse too call vpon God, and to tarie his leysure till he comfort our soules in his owne Kingdome. For they bee alwayes incombered and haue not theyr perfect ioy, so long as they dwell in oure bodies and till that God take them vp to himselfe for a doo. True it is, that if wee thinke vpon death alone by it selfe, without lifting vp oure selues anie higher, God maye now and then bring vs to the same point that he brought Job. Job had both faith & hope of the euerlasting life: & yet for a little while he was ouerraught with such a feare, as hee conceyued nothing else in death, but all confuzion and disorder. For when hee looked too his graue, hee sawe hell open to swallow him vp. And the hauing of such conceytes greued Job muche more than all the tormentes that he coule indure in his bodie. But like as God did plucke him out in the ende, and giue him victorie agaynst suche temptations: so will hee doo too vs lykewise. Neuerthelesse wee bee warned heereby, that wee had neede too walke warely, praying oure good God, that when it shall please him too call vs too accounte in his iudgement, it may not bee too handle vs rigorously, and according as wee haue deserued: but that it may please him too make vs feele the fauour whiche hee vseth customably towards his: and that wee may alwayes come backe too this poynt: namely that although wee muste bee fayne too walke in this worlde, as it were in the middes of darkenesse and of the shadowe of death: yet wee may not bee afrayde seeing wee haue Iesus Christ before our eyes, who is the true daysunne of rightuoufnesse: and that the same may cause vs labor toward the heritage of heauen, wherevntoo God calleth vs to make vs partakers of his glorious immortalitie.

Nowe therefore let vs fall downe before the Maiesie of our good God, with acknowledgement of oure faulces, praying him too make vs perceyue them in such wyse, as wee may thereby bee prouoked too sighe and gone continually, beseeching him of pardon: and that wee maye not bee so astonyed at hys iudgements as too faynte at them, but that beeyng condemned by them (as wee bee woorthie of ryght too bee condemned) and beeing ashamed in our selues, wee may returne too our good God that hee may make vs too taste of his inestimable loue, which he vseth towards vs by shewing himselfe

1. Cor. 15. f.
46.

Psal. 23. b. 4

Gen. 1. 4. 3. 4
2. Cor. 4. b. 6

himselfe to be our sauour in the persone of our Lorde Iesus Christ his sonne : so as we may be stablished in the hope which he giueth vs of our saluation, and grow in it more and more, vntill such time as hauing incourented a-gaynst all the assaults that we haue to indure here by low, we may come to the euerlasting rest which is prepared for vs in heauen . That it may please him too graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people. &c.

The. xlij. Sermon, which is the first vpon the. xj. Chapter.

AND Zophar the Naamathite answered and sayd,

2. Should not men answer a man of much talke, or shall a babbling person preuaile?
3. Verely thy wordes shall make men holdeth their peace: and vwhen thou hast mocked no man shall do thee shame.
4. Thou hast sayde, my dealing is rightfull, and I am cleane in thy presence.
5. But I would that God would speake to thee, and that he would open his lippes against thee:
6. That hee would discover vnto thee the secretes of wisdomie: for his iudgement is double rightfull, and God hath forgotten thee for thine vnrighoufnesse sake.

That we may the better profite our selues by this doctrine, wee must call too minde what hath bene sayd heeretofore: namely that the matters which are set downe here, are true in themselves, notwithstanding that they be misseapplied to the person of Iob. Thus see ye an instruction that is good and profitable for vs, so bee it that wee haue wisdom and discretion to know howe to vse it aright. And in effect we be done here to vnderstande, that whensoever we debate after what maner man may stand before God, wee must not alledge our owne prittle prattle, nor thinke too preuaile by vayne rhetorike: but we must be beaten downe and dismayde by considering the Maiestie of God. To bring this to passe, let vs assure our selues that it is not possible for vs too serch out that wisdom which wee cannot comprehend, but that all the worlde must humble it selfe vnder it. Thus then ye see in effect what is shewed vs heere. And had this doctrine bene well hilde and practized, wee shoulde not at this day haue such disputings as reigne in this worlde, in what wyse men may bee iustified and saued before God. VVhy so? For they that stablish any deseruings to purchase fauour in Gods sight, and too make men beleue that they maye saue themselves by their owne power, knowe not the Maiestie that is spoken of heere, but brabble aboute sonde trifles. For if the case stode vpon dealing with men: there would not be so much boldnesse as we see vsed in debating what the meane is whereby wee might stande before God. To be short, men haue bene so befotted, as they wist not what iustice, or iudgement, or any thing else is, when it came too debating after what maner God loueth vs, and is mercifull towards vs, and after what sorte wee might present oure selues before his Maiestie too finde fauour at hys hande. And therefore so much the more standeth it vs in hande too marke well this doctrine, when it is sayde, Shoulde not men answer a man of muche talke? or shall a babbler preuaile? Heere wee see howe mens talkatiuenesse is dashed, yea though they like well of themselves, and haue store of their vaine and sonde Rhetorike. For beholde what beguileth them: namely that they can iustifie themselves before men and beare the countenance of Angelles, whereas there is nothing but want and filthinesse in them. True it is, that they may haue some apparant reasons that men shall like well of: for in verie deede, according too mans reason, when it is demanded what rightiounesse is: it will bee answered, that a man muste liue vnblameably, hee muste discharge his duetie, hee muste doo euerie man right. Yee see then what rightiounesse is. If it bee sayde that a man is rightuous before God though hee bee a wretched sinner, and that his finnes are forgiuen hym: beholde that is a straunge thing and suche as cannot sinke in mans fleshly vnderstanding. Howe so? Too say that I am accepted for rightuous, and yet that the same rightiounesse is all the while out of mee: that I muste bee fayne too borrowe it of another: and that although God knowe mee too bee a wretched and damned creature, yet notwithstanding hee will saue mee: To what purpose is it? Therefore when the Sophisters and Hypocrites stablish mens merites, and beare them in hand that wee bee able too winne Paradise by oure owne power: it hath somewhat a fayre colour, and is easily receyued by the moste part of the worlde. And heere ye see what causeth them to harden & ranckle so much the more. For too their seeming, in asmuche as men take their sayings in woorth, and accept them for good, God also ought too holde himselfe contented wyth them. But wee shall not further our cace therby: and although that for a time God suffer vs too tell many a fayre tale, inso-muche that it seemeth that wee haue ouercome all: yet in the ende all must be fayne to come downe againe. For when God appeareth in his seate, then must all these disputings bee fayne too cease, wherein men soade and vaunte themselves somuche nowe adayes. VVhat muste wee then doo? VVhen wee debate after what sorte men maye stande before God: wee must not alledge lykely reasons, and suche as the worlde receyue: but euery of vs must enter intoo himselfe, and intoo his owne conscience. That is the poynt wher at wee muste beginne. This will bee yet better vnderstoode, if we lay soorth the matters in some familiar order. I haue tolde you already that when men come too debating, in what wise we become rightuous: by and by, according to mans reason, it will be sayd, that we must liue rightuously. True it is that (to speake properly) rightiounesse is when mens lyues are well ruled, so as there is no fault to bee founde in them, and that they performe Gods law and all that hee commaundeth them too the vttermost. Yea, but (as shall bee more fully declared) wee muste proceede further too haue another rightiounesse, by-cause wee come short of this. But in the meane while, when men perceyue that it behooueth them too performe theyr duetie, and too walke after God and hys woorde: they fall too imagining thus wyth themselves: VVell then, it standes mee on hande too fulfill Goddes lawe: And they are of opinion that they shall bring it about. And notwithstanding that that they be vnable to stirre one finger: yet it is a wonder to see how they beare themselves in hande that they be able to carie great mountaynes vpon their shoulders, when as they be not able to lift so much as one straw. Neuerthelesse they be so full of sonde ouerweening, as they strayne themselves to perforce Gods lawe by their owne free will. Verie well, in the ende they must be fayne to perceyue their weaknesse by their owne experience. True it is, that for a tyme they puffe out their blastes: yea, and there is another vice, namely that men surmize themselves well able too make themselves righteous without fulfilling of Gods lawe. As howe? By their foolish deuotions, as wee see that in the papacie when men are desyrous too become holy and righteous, there is no mention of framing their life too the commandements of God. VVhat then? Euery man takes vp a toy of some good deuotion in his owne head, then shall Ceremonies, and then shall Superstitions reigne vnder the name of Gods seruice. So they heare Masse euery day, so they mumble much, so they fast often, so they doo this and that: the poore hypocrites beare themselves in hande that they haue well quitte themselves before God, yea and they take him to be bounde vntoo them for it. And heerein they sleepe for a time: And if a man tell them it is but lost labour, they are scarce vpon him, and it spyteth them, [saying: ] Howe so? Can so goodly a thing be vnprofitable? Or can God be vnrighteous? Then must hee needes accept the seruice that I offer vnto him with such payne and carefulnesse. Lo howe the Idolaters pleade agaynst God: and it seemeth to them that he doth them great wrong, if he doo not accept and take in good woorth all their pelting trash wherewith they beguile themselves. Lo what a doziness reigneth in mens braynes for the tyme: but yet (as I sayde earst) in the ende they muste be fayne too graunt that all this is nothing. And when God preseth them and putteth them to tryall, then they shall be faine to acknowledge, Alas it is to little purpose to haue heaped vp so manie Ceremonies after that sort: and (whiche more is) when I haue done all that I can, yet dooth mine owne conscience reprove me, that if I haue serued God well in any one poynt, I haue missed in manie others. Men then beeing reprooued by their owne consciences, doo therevpon seeke for remedie, saying: VVell I see that if God shoulde enter intoo accounte with mee, I shoulde be verie sore indaungered vntoo him. Howe shall wee doo then? VVee fall too finding out of Satisfaction: lyke as in the Papacie euerie of them will confesse that no man liuing is able to fulfill Gods lawe, and yet in the meane while they ceasse not to sleepe still, bicause these wretched Hypocrites beare themselves in hande that they are able too make God amendes by bringing him some by payment. True it is (say they) that in this behalfe I haue done amisse, but God will be contented with mee when I shall haue made him amendes after such a sort, or such a sort. And heere yee see wherevpon grewe the inuention of all their woorkes of ouerplus or supererogation as they terme them, that is too say, the woorkes which they yeelde vntoo God ouer and besydes his due. VVhen men doo so, they thinke not that euer they must come to account before such a iudge, but that they may easily say, VVhat? VVe do all that wee can: for wherefore take wee suche paynes bur too serue God? And shall wee thinke that all this geere shall be reiected at his hande, and that hee will make no reckening of it? Moreouer although we be weake and that there be faultes and imperfections in vs: yet if wee labour too make amendes for our sinnes, God must needes haue regarde vntoo that. After suche sort will men prate, supposing themselves too bee throughly well discharged. And (as I sayde afore) they conceyue rancour and hart-burning agaynst all warnings. Nowe wee see what the holy Ghost condemneth heere: that is to wit, that men doo so flatter themselves and rocke themselves asleepe in their vaine imaginations, as it seemeth too them that they haue gotten the goale when men like well of their dooings. But all this is nothing. For when wee come before the heauenly throne, none of these pedling tryffes shall take any place. VVhat muste bee done then? VVee must knowe, yea and wee muste firmly beleue, that all the rightuoufnesse of the worlde is but abomination, and that God maye reiect it as filthinesse: and so in verie deede, although hee haue graunted vs the grace too labour vntoo goodnesse: yet are wee not as yet come vntoo it. For although we trauell thitherward, yet is it with such feeblenesse, as wee bee ouermuche too bee condemned. And wee muste call too mynde howe it hath bene declared heere too fore, that if wee bring but one poynt for our selues, God will haue a thousande too confounde vs with. Yee see then what wee haue too marke in this streyne. Yee see also why I sayde that the matter standeth not vpon babbling, nor vpon the alleaging of some reason that maye carie a fayre colour before men: but in especially that euerye of vs enter intoo himselfe, and examine oure owne life howe wee bee cyted before God: and then will all babbling ceasse, and euery man will thinke more neerely vpon himselfe, knowing that wee haue none other meane too bee quit before God, but by condemning our selues and by being vtterly abashed. But for the better vnderstanding of this matter, let vs nowe come too that which he addeeth: Thou hast sayd my dealing is iust and rightfull, and I am founde in thy presence. Heere Zophar sheweth what the babbling is which hee condemneth. Verely (as I haue warned you afore) hee misapplyeth this matter too the person of Iob, and hee doth him great wrong by accusing him vniustly: neuerthelesse the doctrine in it selfe is good, holy, and profitable. Let vs marke then that all suche as minde too iustifie themselves and to bee seene without blame, haue nothing but vaine babbling, no though they be taken for wise folke too the worlde-ward. And it is a poynt that wee ought too marke well. For if men come not too the applying of it, it will be too small purpose too say, well, there muste be no babbling when men come too treat of Gods secretes, and of his worde: it is too holy a thing for men to dalie with at their pleasure, they must go too it with all sobernesse and reuerence. Verely this may be a good warning. Bur Zophar sayth heere precisely, that all such as minde too aduance the power of men, and too perswade that there is nothing in them but rightuoufnesse before God, are no better but babblers, how fayre a shew focuer they make. And therefore let vs learne that there is no doctrine so well settled and grounded, as to be able to stande before god, saue only that which vtterly defaceth men, & sheweth how they haue not any thing whereof they may make their boast, & (to be short) (which confoundeth the in such sort, as they haue none other refuge but only to the meere goodnesse & mercy of God. Heerewithal we haue heere two articles to marke. The one is, that whensoever we talk of the holy scripture or of any thing that pertaineth too religion, wee must learne too speake soberly, and not let oure toungs runne vpon partins too dispute thereof at pleasure. I say, let vs keepe our selues from such vnauidnesse: for we see that this vice hath bene

the cause that Gods truth hath bene vtterly peruerced and turned into a lye. And for prooffe hereof, what els is the Popish Diuinitie than a heathenish fashion of vtter scoffing and rayling at all the Secretes of God? For in poperie it is lawfull for men to babble as if they were tofing of some tennisball. And in good sooth the Papistes say very true when they vse this bywoorde, That the holy Scripture is too them as a noze of waxe. Lo howe they blaspHEME God, and are not ashamed too fet it downe in their bookes. Yea and when they meane to proue that men should not holde themselues to the holy Scripture, and that we haue no assurance of our beliefe by Gods word, but that we ought to receyue that which is decreed by men, See (say they) is not the holy Scripture a noze of waxe? True it is that in respect of themselues they haue made it a noze of waxe, by turning and wresting it foreward and backward to make a playne mockerie of God & his truth. And how is this come to passe, but bicause they haue not knowne, that Gods vttering of his wil vnto vs, is to the intent that euery of vs should enter into himself and examine wel our owne cōsciences, and apply to our owne vse & instruction all that is conteyned in the holy Scripture, assuring our selues that God ment not to feede our curiositie, nor to tickle our eares, but to edifie our soules, yea and that as might bee most for our behoofe. So let vs beare in mind this article, that is to wit, that when we speake of God, we must do it with al reuerence and feare. But in especially let vs come to that whiche is spoken here: namely that whosoever will magnifie men to acquite them and to iustifie them before God, is but a babbler, no though he can alledge neuer so fayre reasons. Let vs marke then that all such as are puffed vp with presumption to allow of mens merites, were neuer yet throughly wakened to know what God is, and howe much wee be indetted to his iudgement. And why so? For whosoever shall once haue examined his owne conscience well, muste needes haue his mouth stopt, and he cannot but knowe that all mankinde is out of order, and that wee haue nothing but cursednesse in vs. And herevpon wee may boldly say, that all the teachers in the papacie are vtterly befotted, and become scornors of God and despyzers of his rightuoufnesse. And why? VVee see how they be bolde to aduance Freewill, too magnifie the strength of men, and too make vs beleue that wee bee able too deserue this and that: so as if wee haue committed any sinnes, yet may wee well purchase our selues forgiuenesse of them by our owne good woorkes. For asmuch as they talke so, there needeth no more but the saying that is set heere, to shewe that they bee despyzers of God, and bauling curres, that neuer had so much as one remorse or scruple of conscience, but are vtterly blinded by the Diuell. And why so? For had they any feeling or incling of Gods iudgement, certainly they woulde not babble so too aduance their owne merites, whiche are but pelting trash. But on our side, lette vs learne too go to a better schoole, if wee intende too stande vp before God. And why? For (as it is sayde heere in the ende) wee shall haue suche an answere as shall serue too ouerwhelme vs vtterly. If in these dayes wee sharpen our beake too vaunt our selues of our owne rightuoufnesse, and be puffed vp with this vayne opinion (or rather outrage) that wee bee well able to stande afore God: in the ende he muste bee fayne too answere vs, yea he must be fayne too answere vs after suche a sorte, as wee shall be confounded therewith, according as it is sayde here, shall a babbling persone preuayle? VVe may perchance weene it: but wee shall bee beguyled. And why? For

(as I haue declared afore) he that will make himselfe righteous in Gods sighte, is but a vayne babbler: that is to say, he bewrayeth that hee was neuer touched too the quicke, that his conscience is still a sleepe, that hee knoweth not what it is eyther too doo well, or too lye well, that he taketh holde of the shadow in steade of the bodie, and finally that he hath not considered that God muste be his iudge. And thus yee see what caueth men too recken so without their host, as it is sayd in the 110. uerbe. But now e lette vs come too that which Zophar addeth. Yea I would fayne (sayeth he) that God woulde speake agaynst thee, and that hee woulde open his mouth. Beholde howe menne are reprovod to their confusion: that is too witte, when God openeth his mouth. So long as wee reason but with men, well, euery one of vs may thinke his owne halfpenie too bee good siluer: but as soone as God openeth his mouth, wee haue nothing to replie. All that (say I) which wee beleue to bee as substantiall stuffe as any can bee, muste needes go too the grounde, and washe away, and all our reasons shall bee but froath. There may be great bubbling and boyling, but yet doth it washe and vanish away by and by. Therefore lette vs wey well this sentence, that God muste bee fayne to speake, to put men to silence, and to make men vtterly tungtyde in this behalfe, namely that they may not presume any more too alledge aught of their owne fantasies. And after what sorte shall God speake? He hath already spoken ynough in his holy Scripture to humble vs withal. For there wee see how all men are condemned, and cursed in Adam, (marke that for a special point) and therevpon that it behoueth euery one of vs peculiarly in himself to yeelde himselfe too too biameworthy, seing that God sheweth vs that our sinnes are so horrible, as wee cannot mislike ynough of them, and that although a man be greued in himself, and lothe his owne life: yet knoweth he not the hundred parte of the euill that is in him. God telleth vs this. And wee see how S. Paule putteth all men vnder shame, so as when we reade Rom. 3. b. 1. that texte of his, our heare ought too stande vp vpon our heades, to see how wee be condemned there too all naughtinesse, and that although euery one of vs bee not guiltie alike in fact, yet all of vs haue the seede thereof within vs. Yee see then how God hath giuen sentence of damnation vpon al men. And this ought to be ynough too make vs shinke downe our heades, and too make vs vtterly tungtyde as I sayde afore. But what? men are so stately, as they cannot stoupe, though the Scripture confounde them, according as wee see, that notwithstanding this, men thinke still to iustifie themselues before God. And that is the greatestt difference that is betwixt vs and the Papistes: namely that if it bee demaunded what is the meane of our saluation, the Papistes will haue nothing but their owne freewill, merites, and Satisfaction: and on the otherside wee say, that man being vtterly voyde of al rightuoufnesse, and hauing not aught in himselfe but cursednesse: must flee for succour too the onely mercie of God, and seeke that thing in our Lord Iesus Christ, which is not in our owne persones. VVee see then that at all the things conteyned in the holy Scripture concerning our sinnes and the humbling of vs before God, are not able to ouermayster vs, nor to take away this pride and presumptuousnesse of our flesh. And therefore God must be fayne to speake after another fashion: that is to wit, he muste make vs feele that by experience which is conteyned in the holy Scripture, to the ende we may knowe howe it is vnto vs that he telleth his tale: and specially that he take from vs the towell of Hypocrisie which keepeth our eye faste shet and clozed vp.

For when wee reade in the holy Scripture, that there is not one which seeketh God, but all are giuen too euill, and all are filthie and infected with their finnes and corruptions: and therewithall that there is nothing else in men but vanitie, that al their wisdome is but foolishnesse, and that al their thoughts and affections are but wickednesse and enmitie agaynst God and all rightuousnesse: when we heare this: (we say in our selues,) I uis, this is spoken of the wicked, I am none of that number, euerie man exempteth himselfe. Furthermore, wee surmyze 10 that wee haue I wote not what goodnesse in vs: and if there bee but one poore drop, we stretch it out farre and wyde, so as we beare our selues in hande that we be able too content God throughly. And therefore must God come take away the sayde towell: that is too witte, that wee may not imagine or surmyze our selues to haue any abilitie, but assure our selues, that all the curses whiche are conteyned in the Scripture, doo agree and pertaine vntoo vs, and must needes wound vs as mortall plagues, that wee may knowe our confusion. Thus ye see what 20 wee haue too marke in this strayne. So then whensoever wee desire too knowe what rightuousnesse is, that is too say, howe wee become rightuous, and howe wee maye obteyne fauour in Gods sight: wee must consider well that the cace standeth not vppon seeking that which shall seeme good before men, or which may bee allowed by mans reason, or by all that euer may be alledged before creatures. What then? Let vs heare God speake: that is to say, let vs receyue the holy scripture, and let euery of vs submit himselfe therevnto: let 30 God speake, and let vs holde our peace without making of our accustomed replies. Furthermore forasmuch as there is the sayde Hypocrisie in vs whereof it behoueth vs too bee clenzed: let vs consider also that Gods iudgement must bee dreadfull too vs, and that wee muste bee astonished at it. And therefore let vs beseech him that when hee hath spoken terribly vnto vs, hee will comfort vs therevppon, that wee may take some taste of his goodnesse. When we once know this: it is certaine that we shal not make much disputing about the sayd article, nor bee curious in serching after what fort men may become rightuous. For first of all it behoueth vs to vnderstande, that there is nothing but all euill in vs, and wee heare howe it is sayde, that euen hee that dareth vaunt himselfe most, shall finde nothing but cursednesse in him, from the crowne of his heade to the soale of his foote. Againe, though God should find vs throughly well disposed too walke in his feare: yet what is that too the purpose? VVee shall bee alwayes vnperfect neuerthelessse. But the mischeefe is, that whatsoeuer God 40 sayeth in his woorde, yet wee continue alwayes still at one poynt, wee haue oure eyes still shette: and it seemeth too vs that howe soeuer the worlde go, there is alwayes somewhat in vs, and that wee may warrant oure selues by our owne workes. God therefore muste bee fayne too set himselfe in this cace before our eyes, and to shewe vs that there is nothing in vs whereof wee may be proude. Howe shall men do then when they bee so confounded? It is certayne that they are neuer a whitte hindered thereby to runne vnto our Lorde Iesus Christ. 60 But if we be puffed vp with pride, wee shall haue no lust to do so: it will be with vs as when ones stomacke is full of winde, whereby it is so weakened as it cannot receyue any thing. Contrariwyse if wee be cleare from all presumptuousnesse, wee will be a hungred, and wee will desire nothing so much as that God should remedie our diseases. So then, all they that haue hearkened vnto God with a good will, (that is too say, which haue first sought that which is shewed vs in the holy Scripture, and afterward labored to applie the same to their owne instructiō, assuring themselues that it is vnto them that those holy wrytings speake:) all such (say I) do easily consent to this doctrine, namely that we haue no rightiounesse in our selues, sauing that is giuen vs by the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ: and that although God finde vs cursed, forlorne, and damned sinners, yet he redeemeth vs out of the sayde confusion, whereof the raunsome was payd when Iesus Christ shedded his blood for our redemption and saluation: and that nowe henceforth forsomuch as the obedience which Iesus Christ hath yeilded to God his father, is set ouer vnto vs, it is all one: as if wee our selues had fulfilled the whole lawe. Thus ye see howe wee may doo our selues good by this lesson. To bee short, a man shall neuer knowe what is ment by beeing iustified by sayth, vntill he haue heard God speake, yea and that his hearing of him hath made him too humble himselfe and to bereeue himselfe of the sayde foolishse haultinesse, wherethrough men take so much vpon them, and wherewith they are so besotted. Lo what Zophar ment by saying, O that God would speake and open his lippes against thee. And he sayth exprefly, that God openeth his lippes. In deed it is an Hebrew maner of speaking, and it importeth a vehemencie of speach, like as when a man treateth earnestly of a matter, so as hee not onely speaketh a worde or twaine at a glance, but layeth it forth at large, so as he maketh a full conclusion of it. But I haue tolde you that this must bee throughly well weyed because we see howe men hearken vnto God but by halues. True it is that peraduenture we shall well heare euery worde: but what for that? That is no matter of great weight so long as we holde not all that God sheweth vnto vs too setle our selues throughly in all that he sayth to vs. Therefore it is not ynough for vs to haue yeilded the one care vntoo God, and to haue heard euerie woorde that hee shall speake vntoo vs: but wee muste bee heedfull to follow all that he sayth throughly in all poyntes. Then if hee shall haue once opened his lippes to condemne vs, we wil be no more giuen to babbling: that is to say, we will bee no more so presumptuous and ouerhardie, as to bragge of our owne rightuousnesse: for wee shall bee vtterly ashamed of our selues. It is sayde afterwarde, That God will reueale the secretes of wisdom. Verely in saying so, hee sheweth that Iob might well haue bene punished double: that is to say, that hee might haue had twice as much iustice executed vpon him, and God might haue fore gotten him for his iniquities sake, or else might haue serbed him, for the Hebrew worde signifieth to Exalt, and some 50 tymes also too requyre an account, and such other lyke. And therefore a man might expounde it, that God was able to charge him with such things as hee shoulde perceyue himselfe to be double in his daunger: and al cometh to one ende. But first of all, whereas it is sayde that God will reueale a wisdom, that Iob wist not of before: it is to shewe vs, that the knowledge which we haue of our finnes, & of the inestimable goodnesse of our god, passeth al our capacitie, & is a wisdom that can neuer be attayned vnto by mans reason, but must come to vs frō aboue out 60 of heauen. I haue warned you a readie, that this geere is misapplied vnto Iob: & indeed he knew welynough that men muste not measure Gods rightuousnesse by their owne wit. Iob hath well opened that poynt himself, and (as I haue shewed) he had a good cace, howebeit that hee handled it amisse. But the tyme that wee must go by, is this: namely to take this presēt doctrine generally, that we may be profited by it. Behold then a speciall poynt: which is, that the things whiche the scripture telleth vs of the righturighteousnesse by fayth, are a higher secret than men can attaine vnto. VVhat is to be done then? God must reueale it vnto vs. And that is the cause why the Papists cannot assent heere vnto. For they hold themselues continually to their owne imaginations. They know what is rightuoufnesse after the maner of the heathen Philosophers. For if a man aske an heathen Philosopher what rightuoufnesse is: It is a life wel ruled in al vertuoufnesse, will he answere. And euen so also do the Popish diuines reason of it. VVe say that the same is true in it selfe: but wee must steppe yet further: that is too wit, to another rightuoufnesse which is not in men, and whercof there is not one drop to be found there. Then must they be fayne to haue an other rightuoufnesse, which is, that hauing condemned vs in our owne persons, should take vs too mercie for oure Lorde Iesus Christes sake: that by his meane we may be acceptable and holy to him, for so much as the obedience which Iesus Christ yeilded vnto him, is set ouer vnto vs. But (as I haide) this geere entreth not into mans brayne. And heere ye see why they that take themselues too bee most wittie, put their trust in their owne strength, bicause they purpose to comprehend it by mans reason. But what? Let vs not thinke it straunge, seeing it is sayde that it belongeth onely vnto God to reueale his owne wisdom. As if it were sayde, True it is that so long as mentye themselues to the imaginations of their owne witte, and will needes iudge after their owne liking, they shall neuer vnderstande what it is too bee righteous before God, they shall doo nothing but babble: and when they haue set neuer so many faire colours vpon the matter: all of it shall bee but smoke. And why so? Bicause that too knowe after what sort wee become righteous before God, is an inestimable wisdom, and hidden from mans reason, vntill such tyme as God haue spoken vnto vs, and disclozeth too vs what is oure confusion, and vntill he haue made vs perceyue that we be not able too stande before him, but are vtterly cast away as cursed creatures, and that there is none other meane for vs to haue accessse vnto him, but only by coming vnto him in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ his onely sonne. Then till such tyme as God haue shewed vs this, wee shall alwayes be giuen to babbling: that is too say, wee shall bee giuen to this sonde presumptuousnesse wherewith we be moued and tempted. And therefore God must bee fayne to reueale vnto vs the wisdom which we are not acquainted with, to the ende wee passe not our boundes and the things that we ought to know. Ye see in effect what is touched heere. Let vs learne then as oft as we be tempted with the sayde ouerweening, that our owne vertues ought to beare some sway, and that we may well satisfie God by oure owne desertings: let vs learne (I say) to returne too that which is spoken heere, namely, that it belongeth onely vnto God to discloze his owne secretes vnto vs, and to teach vs his wisdom. And so farre are wee off from being able too attaine to such knowledge through our owne power, that wee see it as much as is possible and blindfolde our owne eyes, to the intent wee might put away all perceyuerance and feeling of Gods iudgement from vs. So much the more therefore behoueth it vs too marke well the rigour that Zophar speaketh of heere in the name of God, as a messenger or Herauld sent by him, too summon vs to our iudgement state, that wee may knowe what manner of rigour the same is, that is too witte, that it is intolerable whensoever God listeth to vse it towards vs. What must we do then? VVe must learne to know what we be, and to humble our selues, that wee may returne to our God with hartie repentance, who desyreth nothing but that we should come to him in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Then let vs go to him mourning for our sinnes, and so wounded with the inwarde conceyt of his iudgements, as we may desire nothing but that he should take vs too mercie, and receyue vs vnto him, not onely too forgieue vs our sinnes past, but also to amend in such wise for the time to come, as we may walke in his obedience: howbeit that the same walking must not bee to the ende to pay him with our merites and workes, but to make vs returne into his fauoure, and too beseech him too gouerne vs in such wise by his holie spiite, as we may continually call vpon him and sue too him as too oure Father.

And nowe let vs cast our selues downe before the presence of our good God and father, with acknowledgement of our sinnes: praying him that his making of vs too feeble them, may bee too amende vs in such wise, as wee may not desire any thing so nuche as too come neerer and neerer vnto him, vntill we bee come thither in full perfection. And so let vs all say, Almighty God and our heavenly father we knowledge and confesse in our selues, that we are not, &c.

The .xliij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the .xj. Chapter.

7. Shalt thou finde God in seeking him? Shalt thou finde the full perfection of the almightie?
8. It surmounteth the height of the heauens, vvhath wilt thou doo? It is deeper than the bottomlesse depthes, howe wilt thou comprehend it?
9. The vvydenesse of it is broder than the Earth, and the largenesse of it is greater than the Sea.
10. VVhen he moueth himselfe to shet vp or to leaue out, vvhoshall let him?
11. And seeing hee knowveth that men are vaine, and seeth that they bee of no force shall he not perceyue?
12. That an emptie man is indued vwith hart, and a man is borne like a vvilde Ass?

Forasmuche as it is no easie matter for vs too conceyue howe too humble our selues: therefore ye see how God standeth the more vpon this doctrine, to the ende wee may haue so much the more occasion to put the same in vre. Yesterday we sawe that if God punish vs, wee must not replie agaynst him: for in the ende we shall finde that hee hath borne with vs already, and that hee might of right vse greater rigour towards vs. And if he heare vs not, it is bicause our sinnes haue separated him from vs, and wee are vnwoorthie too bee heard, but are forgotten at his hande by reason of oure sinnes, according as it is sayde that the wicked shall gayne nothing when they thinke they go not to him vnfaynedly. And as for the good if God heare them, it is not oute of hande, or at least-

P/4.18.f.42

wife he suffereth them not too perceyue it, bicaufe it is good that they shoulde be meekened. After the setting forth of this article, that it is not lawfull for men to iustifie themselves before God: now in generall it is sayd, that we labour in vaine if we go about to seele out his wisdom. Why so? For it ouerreacheth the Heauens, it is deeper than the bottomlesse pittes, and the wydenesse of it stretcheth through all. Let vs haue an eye too our owne measure. Beholde howe man who woulde ouerreache the whole earth, needeth no more than sixe foote to conuer him. Man is desyrous too inclose the whole sea in his imagination: and in the meane while hee himselfe is nothing. Hee woulde fayne surmount the heauens: and howe shall he come thither? Hee woulde gage the bottome of the depthes: and what meenes hath hee to doo it withall? Neuertheleste let vs put the case that mans mynde were able too stye aboue the heauens, and that nothing coulde bee hidden from it: yet should wee come short of Gods wisdom, bicaufe it is infinite: It cannot bee compared eyther with the deepes or wyth the heauens: for it farre outpasseth them all. And therefore let vs assure our selues that our presumption is foolish when wee go aboute to knowe the reason of Gods doings. Thus yee see in effect what is shewed too vs heere. Wherefore let vs marke, that this woorde Wisdom, is taken heere for Gods purpose, determination, or intent, which wee bee not able to comprehend. True it is that wee may well taste some little portion of Gods wisdom, like as when wee beholde his creatures, there he sheweth himselfe vntoo vs, howbeit but partly. Let vs no more but take a braunche of some herbe, and wee shall see after what sort and with what cunning God hath wrought there: The same is a verie looking-glasse of his wisdom. Then is it much more reason, that when wee come too his greater and choycer workes, we shoulde there perceyue that Gods wisdom is a wonderfull thing, if we haue any taste at all of it. But by the way, the perfectnesse thereof is spoken of heere: that is to wit, that if we will needes knowe why God doth all things, or if a man be desyrous to see what end God setteth afore himselfe, and what cause moueth him therevnto: wee must needes bee vtterly confounded. But heere first of all we bee admonished of the rawnesse of our wit and vnderstanding, to the intent wee passe not our boundes, nor play nor the horses that are broken looce, as wee see that the ouerweening and pryde of oure nature driueth vs therevntoo. But heereby wee haue also too consider the goodnesse of oure God, who applyeth himselfe vntoo vs, and to our feeblenesse, that wee at least wyse taste of that whiche is incomprehensible vntoo vs: and although we conceyue it not throughly, yet taste it fully: yet hee sheweth it to vs, and maketh vs to seele it so farre forth as is for our profite. Thus see you twoo articles which are well woorthie to be marked. As touching the first, I haue tolde you howe it behoueth men to consider how rawe and how weake of vnderstanding they bee, that they presume not to thrust themselves too farre forward too make inquisition of Gods workes, more than hee willeth them and giueth them leaue to do, I say more than he willeth them, & giueth them leaue to do. For (as I haue touched already) God of his goodnesse doth not vtterly barre vs from hauing any perceyuerance at all of his wisdom: but it behoueth vs to keepe measure. Then let vs be well aduised that euery of vs haue an eye to his owne habilitie and too marke howe futtle and sharpe witted wee bee, and howe greatly giuen too this ouerbaldenesse wherevnto oure owne nature eggeth vs continually. How is that? VVe woulde alwayes bring God to account of all his doings. When wee meete with any straunge thing, and men say vntoo vs, such is Gods good pleasure bicaufe he hath ordeyned so: and therefore we must not pleade agaynst him: yea say wee? But why dooth he not otherwyse? For suche an inconuenience will infue heerevpon, and the matters may drawe quite and cleane awke from that which might bee for our profite. Thus we see howe that at euery push we woulde fayne haue God to yeeld vs a reason why he dooth this or that. Moreouer although we haue not any thing too alledge: yet woulde wee that God should not conceale any thing from vs, but that wee myght enter intoo the greatest secretes that hee hath. And wee see howe fore our hartes are tickled in this respect. True it is that some bee more sharper set than other some be, but yet it is a common vice wherewith we be all of vs infected from the greatest too the least. Therefore let vs marke well howe it is tolde vs heere that Gods wisdom ouerreacheth the heauens, and is deeper than the depthes, and also that it is in vaine for vs to desire to comprehend it in our brayne. For that measure is farre too short: insomuche that if a man had a hundred tymes more vnderstanding than hee hath, yet could hee not atteyne to the hundred part of Gods wisdom. Seing then that wee bee nothing, and Gods wisdom is a bottomlesse depth: haue we not so much the more cause to hold our selues short, and not to followe our owne fancies in seeking more than God giueth vs leaue to do? Then let it come to our remembrance to say, whither goest thou thou poore creature? thou entrest into a bottomlesse pit, wherout of thou canst neuer escape. This is the warning that we haue to follow in this sentence. But by the way let vs also beare in minde that which hath ben declared concerning the fauour that God sheweth vs in applying himselfe to vs, and in shewing vs his workes, so farre forth as it is for our behoofe and profite to knowe why he doeth this or that. And Gods applying of himselfe after that sort vnto vs, is not bicaufe he his bounde to vs: (for what bonde can there bee? or howe can wee challenge him to do it?) But in so doying hee sheweth howe greatly hee loueth vs, seeing hee commeth neere vntoo vs so familiarly. VVe heere howe oure Lorde Iesus Christ Iohn. 15. c. 15 sayeth too his Disciples, I will no more call you my seruants, ye bee my freendes by reason of the secretes that I haue shewed you: for I haue familiarly tolde you all that I had in commision from my father. And so seeing that God commeth so familiarly vntoo vs: wee haue a great and singuler recorde of his loue. Therefore let vs learne to inquire of Gods woorkes no further than hee himselfe leadeth and ruleth vs so to doo. And this is well worth the marking: for we see men incline continually too some extremitie. I tolde you already that there is suche a pride in mans heart, as hee woulde fayne knowe all things, so as nothing might scape him: and that euery one of vs is giuen to that vice. VVell then, God sheweth vs that wee must not bee too wyse, and that wee must with sobernesse [content our selues] to know that which he disclozeth vnto vs. Now hope we to keepe our selues from that vice, and therewithall enter into the contrary extremitie, saying: then must we shet our eyes & inquire of nothing. Nay: there is great difference betwixt a meannesse and nothing at all. For God hath not made vs after his owne Image too haue it sayde, that we should become brute beastes by his consent, & that we should haue so little regarde of the light that he sheweth vs, as it should be quite quenched in vs: but let vs learne to know so much as it pleaseth him to teach vs. If God be our schoolemaster and we giue eare to his speech, he is able able to giue vs wisedome and discretion to comprehend his learning, and wee cannot do amisse in it. But if our Lord shet his mouth, we also must shet vp our wittes and holde them in prison, that wee take not libertie to say, I would know this, or I would know that. For God will not haue vs to know more than he hath shewed vs. Seing then that these two vyces reigne in the world: it standeth vs so much the more in hand to marke what I haue sayd: that is to wit, that we should vse the grace and priuiledge which God giueth vs when he sheweth vs that which is for our profit to know. Some will vse the common Pro-uerbe, That Gods secretes are not to be searched. True it is that they are not to be searched, sauing so farre forth as he maketh vs priuie to them, and then are they no more secretes. As how? Ye see howe S. Paule calleth the Gospella wonderfull secrete which hath bene hidden in God, yea in somuch as the Angels haue bene rauished and amazed at it, and highly honored it. And yet neuer-thelesse the same is an easie doctrine to vs. For there God vttereth his wil vnto vs, yea and (as ye would say) so fore-cheaweth our foode, as there is nothing for vs to doo but to swallow it downe: he boweth vnto our rudenesse, & sheweth himselfe exceeding homely. VVe see then that the Gospell is in it selfe so high a wisedome, as wee [of our selues] can neuer atteyne vnto it, seing that the Angels comprehend it not: and yet notwithstanding it is such a doctrine asought to be knowne vnto vs, yea euen to the rude and vnlearned sort, (according as Sainct Paule sayeth in another place) that is to wit, for somuch as God hath there applied himselfe vnto vs. But there are other secretes which are hid from vs, and wherevnto God giueth vs no leaue to atteine as yet. True it is that at the last day, we shall know all things: but as now wee muste bethinke vs of that which S. Paule sayeth, that is to wit, that we know now in part yea and darkely: so as God giueth vs some foretast of that which shall be reuealed perfectly vnto vs when we be fully transformed into his image and glorie. So long therefore as we be clothed with mortall flesh, let vs acknowledge our owne small capacitie, and content our selues with what soeuer it pleaseth God to giue and discloze vnto vs. There are then some secretes of God, which he will keepe priuie from vs during this mortall life, like as we cannot know what he hath determined to doo with this man or with that. As for the faithfull, they haue a sufficient witnessse that God hath chozen and adopted them to be his children and to inherite saluation. But yet for all that, they cannot see the registers of heauen, to know whither they be written there or no. It is ynough for them that God hath giuen them a good copie of their election to looke vpon in our Lord Iesus Christ, insomuch that being his mēbers they doubt not but God will auow them to be his children. Howbeit we know not who be the companie of the chosen: wee know not who be the castawayes as yet: wee know not wherefore God doth one thing or other: and if we discourse of Gods prouidence and of the things that we see through the whole worlde: wee shall be confounded in them. For that streyt and secrete ordinance of God is to high for vs to atteyne vnto. Yee see then that as concerning the secretes that are hid from vs, men muste learne to vse modestie in them. To be short our wisedome must be to herken vnto God, and to follow simply that which he sayeth without going any further. There are (say I) two things wherein the true wisedome of men consisteth: That is to say, To heare God speake, and without gainesaying to follow whatsoeuer is conteyned in his woorde, so as the same may haue authoritie to make vs feare God and too humble our selues vnder him. Lo here a good meane to become wise. But like as it behoueth vs too obey God, and to follow that which he sheweth vs: so also must we not desire to know more than is contayned in his worde. For when mé wil needes be wise against God, they become starke mad. VVe see what befall to our fore-father Adá, yea euen in the time that he was most pure & soūd, being created after the image of God, when he was in far more excellent and noble state than men be now adayes: for the image of God is so darkned in vs, as there is no more light nor almost aught els than darkenesse in vs. Adam could not content himselfe with that state, but was desirous to haue a higher perfection: and whereinto is he falne? Into so foule a sinke as we ought henceforth to be ashamed of our state. Now (I pray you) if we climbe still to the sayd highnesse wherwith Adam was tempted, and the wretchednesse whereinto we are falne or rather tumbled cannot meeken vs: must wee not be punished double? Therefore lette vs learne not to couet to knowe more than God sheweth vs, as I haue sayd already. Yet notwithstanding let vs not ceasse to searche the secretes that are conteyned in the holy Scripture, nother let vs do as the Papists do, who say that their forbearing to know aught, is bicause the doctrine of the holy Scripture cannot be throughly comprehended of all men, and bicause men are in great daūger to be intangled in many errors and heresies: and bicause they see how all the confusednesse of the world springeth of this, that men are caried away with a fonde desire of knowledge (as they terme it) and haue not the modestie to content themselues with an ouerwrapped faith of beleeuing simply whatsoeuer is hilde by the holy Church. It seemeth at the first blushe that this hath some colour: and yet all is but cursed blasphemie against God. And why? for (as I haue sayd already) although the doctrine that is in the Lawe and the Gospell be so high as our mindes are not able to reache vnto: yet hath not God published his Law in vaine, neyther is it for naught that he hath cōmaunded his Gospell to be preched to all creatures, yea euen to the ignorantest sorte, for he disclozeth himself there after so louing and gentle a fashion, as there is no man but he may be familiarly acquaynted with that which is shewed there. So then let vs not be vnthankfull to our God, let vs not accuse him to haue spoken out of the bottom of a bottle. For he protesteth by his Prophet Esay, that he calleth vs not to him in vayne, and that he hath not spoken in huddermudder: but that his voyce foundeth lowde & cleere, so as it ought to be heard of all men, and all of vs ought to receyue it. Then sith the case standeth so, let vs hardily studie Gods worde, let vs applic all our wittes therevnto, and our labour shall not be vnprofitable. And furthermore let vs vse the sayde sobernesse that I haue spoken of. And here ye may see why S. Paule meening to correct the foolishhe and rashe curiositie that is in men, sheweth them whereto they ought to apply themselues: that is to wit, to know throughly what the loue is which God hath shewed vs in our Lord Iesus Christ, so as wee neede to do nothing els all our life long, than to seeke diligently the sayd grace that is shewed vs in our Lord Iesus Christ, as how we be rescued from Satans tyrannie, and set free from the bondage of sinne and death: howe that whereas wee were vtterly damned by nature, and wretched and lothely sinners before God: wee be now become righteous before him, so as he receyueh vs and liketh well of vs: How wee be gouerned by his holy spirit, to the ende wee should fight against the lustes of our owne flesh: and how we be preserued vnder his hande and protection, so that although the Liuell practize to ouerthrowe vs euery minute of an hower, yet wee may N.v. be

Eph. 3. b. 9.
10.

Rom. 1.

1. Cor. 13.

Marke. 16.
c. 15.Esay. 45. c.
19.

Eph. 3. d. 18

be able to driue him backe, bicause we be in the shep-10<sup>n. G. d. 37</sup> folde and keeping of the good shepheard Iesus Christe, 39. & 10. e. who hath promised that he will not suffer any of them to 26. 29. perish whom the father hath put into his hande. Therefore let vs get the knowledge of these things, and further also how we ought continually to preace vnto God, how it is lawfull for vs to call vpon him with open mouth, bicause he hath giuen vs a mediator who maketh vs way vnto him, and how that Iesus Christ beareth woorde for vs, so as God doth out of all doubt heare vs when we pray to him in Christes name. If wee know these things well: then is our time well bestowed. For this cause S.
 Paule addeth what is our height, our depth, and our breadth: and (to be short) he willett men to beholde how they may bee perfectely wise: namely by knowing thro-rowly the grace that is vttered and wrought vnto them in our Lord Iesus Christe: Herewithal let vs learne too know that wee must not induer to clymbe so high as to vnderstande what the wisdom of God is in it self. For it is a deepe gulfe: and who is he that can attayne to it?
 Let vs be sure that all our strength will be shorte of it.
 Therefore men must humble themselves. And so lette vs beare in minde what S. Paule sayeth to vs, namely that when we shall haue steyed vp aloft aboute the heauens, we shall not attayne to know aught else than the fatherly loue of our God, assuring our selues that therein wee shall haue the perfection of all wisdom, which shall stretch out it selfe high and deepe, faire and wise, and on all sides. In these wordes S. Paule taunteth these curious heads that are fisking here and there, desirous to stie vp aloft, and to sinke downe low beneath, & to search things ouer and ouer: and yet in the meane while there is nothing but vanitie in them, and the nimbler they be, the lesse surenesse and firmenesse is there in them. S. Paule therefore checketh men for making their discourses so fordy, and therewithal sheweth them that if they were giuen to the holding of that which is for their profite, they would cōtent themselves with that which is shewed them simply in the Scripture. And here yee see also why 12. Moyses after he had published the lawe, sayeth: Aske no
 30. c. more questions, saying, who is he that shall climbe into hea-
 12. uen? who is he that shall go ouer the sea? who is he that shall go downe into the deepe? For ye haue the woorde in your mouth and in your harte. S. Paule applieth this saying to the doctrine of the Gospell, and not without cause. For the Law is in it selfe very darke, and could not haue cōtented men nor giue them that which was need-full for them, if God had not sent them to Iesus Christ.
 But now haue we that which the fathers of old time had but in part. For God putteth his woorde into our mouth and into our hart, not by giuing vs some litle taste of it, but by filling vs with it to the full, if so be that our owne lustes were not insatiable, according as mennes lustes are verie gulfes, I meene in all things. For when wee come once too inquiring and searching: behold what an vnmeasurable gulfe is in vs, so that wee could finde in our hartes too swallowe vp the whole maiestie of God, and to packe vp his glorie all in one litle sardell, and that he should reserue nothing to himselfe. Seing then that we be such: lette vs remember well Sainct Pauls saying,
 and let vs apply al our studie that way as long as we liue, and lette vs profite more and more in the knowledge of our Lord Iesus Christ, too the intent that when he hath once grafed vs into his bodie, he may increace his giftes in vs from day to day, vntil we bee thoroughly filled with them. Lo what wee haue too marke in this streyne.
 Worthwith it followeth: Who is he that can let God, if he list too sbet vp? If he list too let loose, if he list too remove *all, if he list to make a newe order: who is he that can disappo-point his purpose? VVho shall set himselfe against his good pleasure? After it hath bene told vs that we ought not to bee ouer inquisitiue of Gods wisdom, further-forth than he giueth vs leaue and licence: Here the same knowledge is declared too vs: namely that it is not law-full for vs to grudge against his doings, as though it were in our power too restrayne him. The reason is for that wee ought too like well of all that euer God doth, although wee knowe not why he doth it, but that he hyde it from vs: not that he is loth to haue vs conceyue the reason of his workes: but bicause it behoueth vs to haue him tie our obedience, that wee may know what we be.

 If God should giue vs a full declaration of his workes here as nowe: who should bee able to indure our pryde?
 what would wee thinke our selues to bee? For although wee see our wite to be so weake, that we seele our selues to be wrapped in darkenesse or cloudes, and that our vnderstanding wil not reach threefoote afore vs: yet a man may see how wee cease not to auance our selues aloft:
 and therefore what would become of vs if God should not reyre vs short? Moreouer what honour yeelde we to God, when wee will comprehend all his doings? It should seeme that we would bee hayle fellowe well met with him. For wee see what pryde is in vs already. And therefore it is good that God should trie our obedientnesse, too the ende wee may learne to glorifie him in all our doings, yea euen though they bee things too vs vn-knowne, and though we find them so straunge at the first pushe as they make vs to say, by all like, yea God thus ought to go otherwise. But lette vs say, seing that Gods good pleasure is so: it behoueth mee to yeeld thereto. VVhen men are once come to such a discretion, then haue they greatly profited. Yee see then what the cause is that God sheweth vs not why he doeth this or that. Furthermore where as here is mention made of Remouing, sbetting vp, and letting out: it is as muche as if it had bene sayde, If God should chaunge and transpōse all that euer we see:
 yet ought not wee to gaynesay it, nor presume too striue with him, or to alledge any thing against him. True it is that when wee beholde the order of nature that God hath set already, wee ought of right too glorifie him for it as it is. And certainly God hath set vs in this worlde as on a great stage, too beholde his workes, and to con-fesse that he is wise, righteous, and mightie, yea euen after a wonderfull maner. For it behoueth men not one-ly too be taught too giue him glorie with all reuerence:
 but also too bee thoroughly rapted aboute all their senses and vnderstanding to acknowledge and crie out with Da-
 10. uid, that it is impossible to atteyne to this wisdom of
 124. God, which appeereth in his workes: and that although God should chaunge all the orderinesse wherein it is his will that wee should beholde him, and wherein it is his will to keepe vs occupied at this day: yet neuerthelesse it should behoue vs to submit our selues thereto, [and to say] that he doeth it not without cause. If we thinke it straunge: then (as I sayd afore) let vs learne to say, yea:
 but who art thou wretched creature? I pray you if a mā haue gotten great vnderstanding and skil, and yet knoweth not himselfe: will men say he is wyse? I say if a man haue applied his minde too learning, yea and haue practized himselfe in assayes, in somuch that he is able too giue another man good counsell, and yet in the meane while is as a starke foole, and vtterly witlesse in things that concerne himselfe, and which touche his owne persone: will not men say, that such a one hath no witte?
 True it is that he hath witte and remembrance for other men: but he hath no discretion for himselfe. Euen so is* it with those that would restrayne Gods mighty power to their own fancie. And why? For they thinke themselves able to cōprehend all: & they sayle in the cheefe poynt: that is to wit, in that they know not theselues. For he that entreteth into himself, & looketh vpon himself throughly: shall find himself to be vterly vnskillfull, and as weake as can be, & therefore that he hath great neede to walke modestly and humbly before God. Ye see then how men are caried away and haue neither reason nor discretiō, when they go about after that sort to cōprehend Gods mightie power by their own cōceyts. So much the more therefore behoueth it vs too marke well this lesſon, that whether God shew vp or let out, or change a l: we must not therefore cease to honour his mightie power after such manner as he sheweth the same vnto vs: And that although we know not the reason why he worketh in that wise: yet notwithstanding wee muste learne to glorifie him in all points, saying, Lord it is good reason that all things should be lawful to thee, & that thou shouldst vse thy creatures as it pleaseth thee, so as thou mightest pul down the hea- 20 ues and rayse vp the earth aloft. To be short, whensoever thou dealest as thou listest with thy creatures, thou passest not beyond thine owne right, neither vsurpest thou any other mans right. For all of it is thine owne due. Behold (I say) after what sort me ought to glorifie the goodnesse & mightie power of God. But yet for all this, we must not father a lawlesse power vpon God, as the Popish teachers terme it. For that were a cursed & diuclish thing to doo. They cōfesse in their schooles that God might of his absolute power thunder vpo the Angels & damne the: but they call this absolute power of Gods, a wrongful & ty- 30 rannous power. Let vs take good heede that we surmize not God to be as a Tyrant: for he doth all things with indifferēcie & vprightness. Neuertheless he hath his own purpose which is hidden frō vs: and therefore it becōmeth vs to honor his rightuoufnesse though it be vnknowne to vs, and that all our wittes and vnderstanding be vnable to attayne therevnto. And this is it that we haue to remember in this streyne. Seeing then that the case standeth so, as it is not for mortall men to lift vp themselves agaynst God, to withstande his mightie power, or too finde fault 40 with his rightuoufnesse, no though it shoulde please him to alter the order of nature, and too remoue and shift all things: I pray you muste we not needes be vnthankfull and froward if we murmur agaynst God in this present orderlesse which we see to be so beautifull, and wherein there is nothing to be found fault with: Let vs put the case that God turned the light into darkenesse, that the Sunne tumbled downe into the deepe, that the earth mounted vp on high, and that all things were cōfounded together: yet ought we to glorifie God, & to say, Lord it is so that we are astonished, & these things are right strange to vs, but what for that? vouchsafe thou to hold vs in awe, vntill thou haue shewed vs that this is good. Thus yee see what we haue to doo. But nowe there is such an orderly disposition in the world, that spite of our teeth we be forced to say, that it is such a workmanship as no creature is able to atteyne vnto: and muste not our mindes then be ouermalicious, when wee cannot glorifie God with all lowlinesse? True it is that we see some confuzion in the present order of nature: and whereof commeth it that God disposeth not things as it were to be wished, but it seemeth that all should be turned vpside downe? wherof cometh that? Of our sinnes: we are the cause that God continueth not things in the same order that he had set them at the beginning: for wee make many confuzed mediēs. Yet neuertheless wee must in this case deeme God to be an vpriht iudge. Herewithall let vs beare in minde that he confoundeth not the order of nature in such wise, but that he maketh vs to feele his fatherly goodnesse and mercie continually: and therefore so much the more ought we to be inducd to humilitie, when we see that the greatnesse of his goodnesse and mercie passeth the hougensse and enormitie of our sinnes. Thus much concerning this sentence. And he addeth also, That God knoweth that men are but vanitie, and that men are nothing worth: and how then should he not vnderstand that man who is borne as a filie wilde Affe, knoweth not himself, and yet thinketh himself able to match his mightie power? This is the conclusion of the doctrine that wee haue heard. Discourse hath bene made concerning Gods mightie power which reacheth about the heauens, and is deeper than the deepes: and therefore when men take vpon them to be too inquisitiue of it, they must vnderstand that they be as it were swallowed vp of it: and if they will needes giue their curiousnesse the bridle, to search the bottome of Gods power: he must be fayne to shew them that it is not lawfull for creatures, to lift vp themselves agaynst him whatsoever he do. Thus yee see now a declaration which serueth to apply this generall doctrine to the present purpose: which is, that God on his side knoweth what is in men: and on the other side that men are no such things as they should haue cause to aduance themselves to call God to a reckening. For what are we? Let vs a little consider our birth. Men are like wilde Asses, that is to say, they haue none vnderstanding except God giue it them. As touching the first poynt, it is not without cause that he sayeth, that God knoweth that men are but vanitie, & that they be nothing worth. For it is to the ende wee should learne not to value our selues by our own reason, and after our ordinarie maner. VVhen men value themselves, it is after their owne fancie: they beleue this and that of themselves, and thereafter do they giue their verdict. But all this is nothing worth, wee must esteeme our selues according too that which God hath spoken. For there is none but he alone that may be a cōporent iudge to know what wee be, nor that hath authoritie to say it: which thing wee ought to marke well. For when men haue valued themselves by their owne imagination and opinion, what shall they haue gayned by it? It is like as when a foole calleth himselfe king of some countie, and in the meane while euery man laughes him to skorne for his labour. VVe be double fooles when we weene our selues to be any thing, and therewithall God sheweth vs how there is nothing but vanitie in vs. Then let vs beare in minde, that when me are desirous to know what they be, what their state is, and of what estimation in effect they be: they muste turne them to God, saying, Lorde thou knowest vs, for thou hast made vs. And at his hand we shall haue a short and resolute answer. VVe see how the Scripture sayeth that all the wisdom which men suppose themselves to haue, is starke follie: the wiser they weene theselues to be, the more dullardes are they: God laugheth their fondnesse to skorne: when they thinke to climbe vp a high, then withdraweth he himself frō them, and they must be faine to wanze away in their own imaginatiōs. Lo what the Scripture pronounceth. And so let vs assure our selues that there is none but only God that knoweth vs, and can truely tell what wee be. And that is the cause why it is sayde that God knoweth. It seemeth at the first blishe, that this is but a common thing: for euery man wil easily confesse that God knoweth me too bee but vanitie: but yet for all that, wee consider not the substance which those woordes import, bicause men haue their eyes stopped, they knowe not themselves to be full of vanitie, and therefore God is fayne to make them then feele what they bee, that they may learne to humble themselves. Thus much for the first poynt. The second is, That the emtie man shall bee indewed with harte;

and shall be like a wilde Asses colt. Here wee bee brought backe to our birth, to do vs to vnderstande that all the wit which we haue is Gods gift besides our nature. And why?
Let vs looke vp<sup>o</sup> the power of men. VVhen a little babe commeth out of his mothers wombe, what wisdomē bringeth he with him? Verily some Philosophers haue well supposed, that all the vnderstanding which we haue of our selues is but onely memorie: and that it was requisite for vs to haue one sence inclozed in vs aforehand.
But yet is it too be seene, that a childe hath lesse wit than the silliest beast that is. Let a man looke throughout all and he shall not finde any beast so brutish nor so vnpur-veyed of reason & vnderstanding as men are at their cō-ming into the world. Yee see then that man in himself is as it were the sole of a wilde Assē. Lette him make as great account of himselfe as he listeth: but yet wee see what he is neuerthelesse. And howe is it that wee haue the spirit of vnderstanding when wee come to full age?
God must be fayne to giue it vs. And so yee see why it is sayd, that the emtie man shall be indewed with hart. For in the Scripture, this woorde Harte importeth vnderstand-ing. Let vs marke then how it is shewed here, that when we haue any wit or reason, the same commeth not of our owne nature, nother doo we possesse it as though it grew vp with vs: but it behoueth vs to know that is an excellent benefite which God bestoweth vpon vs. Seing then that we haue it at his hande, what an vnthankfulnesse is it of vs to abase it againit him? Therefore let vs acknowledge his benefite in giuing vs wisdomē and discretion

when we come to age, to know both him and our selues, and to honour him. Let vs learne then to holde our selues in humilitie, and according as it pleaseth God to giue vs vnderstanding, let vs acknowledge the same to come of him: and let vs pray him to make vs to apply our wittes to such vse as we may alwayes walke after him, and hold our selues vnder his awe, vntill that being set free from this bondage of sinne, we be conueyed into the heavenly glorie, to behold him perfectly as he is.

And now let vs cast our selues downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs perceyue them, and to graunt vs
the grace to apply all our wittes and indeuer to consider what we be, that is to wit, wretched wayne and vnprofitable creatures, vnable to do any thing of our selues, so as he must be fayne to furnish and strengthen vs, or els wee must needes vitterly quayle. And that such knowledge of our owne weakenesse and feeblennesse may prouoke vs to returne with greater desire to the grace whiche our good God offereth vs, seeking nothing but to be filled with the same, to the ende we may honour and magnifie him in all respectes, vntill he haue broug't vs to the perfection wherevnto wee be called, without swaruing one way or other, for feare of turning out of the right way of saluation. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations, &c.

The .xl.iiij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the eleuenth Chapter.

13. If thou prepare thine hart, and stretch out thy handes vnto him,
14. If thou put the iniquitie from thee vvhich is in thy hande, and that no vnrightuousnesse abyde in thy tent:
15. Then mayst thou lift vp thy face vwithout spotte, and thou shalt bee sure, and shalt not bee afrayde.
16. For thou shalt forget thy miserie, and shalt no more haue it in remembrance than the vva- ters that are passed by:
17. And a tyme shall spring vp more bright than the noone day, so shalt thou shine and be as the morning.
18. Thou shalt be safe, bicaufethere is hope, thou shalt dig a pit and lay thee dovvne safely.
19. Thou shalt rest thee, and there shall be no man to make thee afrayde, and many shall sue to thee.
20. But the eyes of the vvicked shall fayle and forgo their refuge, and their hope shall be [tur- ned into ] anguish of minde.

We haue seene heretofore the low-linessse that ought to be in menne
when they thinke vpon Goddes woorkes: that is to witte, that they muste not presume to iudge of the after their owne fancie, but they must vnderstand that forasmuch as Gods wisdomē is infinite: therefore they cannot comprehend the reason of his doings: and that forasmuch as he is able to doo all things: noman ought to presume to let him, but to giue him leaue to do what he thinketh good, and all men ought to stoupe vnto him. And now behold a second poynt which Zophar addeth: which is, that if we be desirous that God should be fauorable and mercifull to vs, we must seeke him with a pure and right meening minde and without hypocrisie. Thus yee see in effect what is declared here. And afterward for a cō-clusion he addeth, that suche as are smitten with Gods hande, cannot excuse themselves (howsoever the case standeth,) that theyr owne sinne should not be the cause of all the miserie that they indure. But verely such things are misapplied too Iobs persone: and yet notwithstanding, the same ceaseth not to be good for vs: Therefore let vs bethinke vs to profite our selues by it. And first of all, whereas it is tolde vs, that God will be gracious to all such as seeke him vnfaynedly: the same is often ynough warranted vs through all the holy Scripture, and God allureth not mē vnto him to deceyue them when he sayth, Turne vnto mee, and I will turne vnto you. Hereby he declareth that he is alwayes willing and readie too do vs good, if we let him not on our side. So then, let vs mark, that whensoever wee seeke God he will be at hand with vs, yea euen with all grace and blissing. But wee muste also marke the meane of seeking God. For we see how men beare themselves in hande that they haue desired nothing but that God should be mercifull to them, and that they haue bene desirous to yeelde themselves vnto him, and that their cheefe desire is to honour him: and Zachar. 1. 4.

3.

ye

yet for all this, they draw quite and cleane backward. But in this text is declared in what wise God will be serued, and what he requyeth and alloweth. And therefore he sayeth that first of all, wee must settle our hart and stretch out our bandes vnto him, and afterward, put all wickednesse out of our bandes, that none may dwell in our bowes. Behold (I say) how men may obey God, and not turne aside from him: namely by beginning with the soundnesse of the hart, bicause God abhorreth all dissimulatiō. But contrarywise we see how hypocrisie reigneth in such wise in our nature, as our hart shrinketh alwayes backward, & we make many cōtēnāces & many apish toyes and mowes, so as it shoulde seeme wee be altogether on fire with zeale to Godward, and outwardly all shall be full of Ceremonies & apparāt pretences, whereas notwithstanding there shall be no truth nor right meaning inwardly in the hart. Yee see howe wee haue so much the more neede to marke what is sayd here, namely that such as go about to seeke God, do not any thing that is aughtworth, but in steede of going forward, draw backward, except their hart be disposed that way: that is to say, except they haue a pure and single affection, and not a double hart. But for our better confirmation in this lesson, wee muste bethinke vs of other textes of the Scripture where God auoucheth that he is not like too mortall creatures, who rest vpon the outward shewes of things. Bicause we be fleshy, wee make much of that which seemeth gay: but God is not such a one. Therefore wee muste not measure him by our metyard. But forasmuch as it is his peculiar office too searche the bottome of mennes priuie thoughtes, and all must needes be layd open before him: Therefore his eyes looke vnto faithfulness and truth, as it is sayde in Ieremie. To be shorte, the seruice of God ought to be grounded vpon the singlehartednesse wherof the Scripture speaketh so oft in saying, Thou shalt be found before mee. And not without cause did God giue that rule to Abraham, but he gaue it to the end it should bee general to all the faithful: and the often repeating of it, is to shew that whē God mindeth to shoale out his owne children by some certaine marke from the hypocrites: alwayes he setteth downe the sayde soundhartednesse. Therefore let vs marke well, that forasmuch as God is the truth, he will be serued in spirite and truth. Now seing that Gods seruice is spirituall, all fayning and vntruth must be farre from vs: or other wise, although our workes please men, and be neuer so much commended of the worlde, they be no better than dung and vanitie: and God will reiect all that we haue, if wee haue not first indeuered to put our harte in order. True it is that the Papiſtes take holde of this text to prooue their Freewill: and it seemeth to them that they haue a fayre colour to say, sith men are exhorted to order their hartes aright, therefore it is in their abilitie and power so to do. But it is to fonde and trifling a reason to measure mens power and abilitie by the things that are commaunded them. For when God sheweth vs what we haue to do, he respecteth not what wee are able too do, or what is in vs: but he respecteth what we be bound vnto and what is our duetic. VVhen he willet vs to loue him with all our hart, with all our strength, and with all our power: is it bicause he findeth any man liuing that is able to yeelde his whole hart to the sayde loue? VVe see the flat contrarie. For our nature is fully bent against God. So then if God ment to requyre nothing at our handes but that which wee were able to performe: he should let vs go streight to destruction. But let vs not thinke that God lozeth his right bicause wee haue not wherewith to pay him. For put the case a man were in dette, were it reason that his creditours should loze their right bicause he is false in pouertie by waſting of his goodes in riot and excesse? True it is that they shall not be able to recouer it at his hande: but doth the dette remayne alwayes vpon his head. Seing the case is such, doo wee thinke that God wil bee defeated of his duetic bicause men be altogether leude and froward, or bicause the Diuell holdeth them in bondage, and they be giuen ouer to all mischeef and wickednesse? Then must we not conclude that men are able to dispose of their owne harts and of themselues at their pleasure through their owne motiō, bicause God commaundeth them so to do. He doth but onely shewe that we be bounde to do so, and that all that euer we be able too attempt shall not be esteemed nor receyued at Gods hande vntill such time as wee haue the sayd purenesse of hart whereof mention is made in this place. But now let euery man examine himselfe, and we shall finde our selues to haue hartes of stone, so as there is nothing in them but hardnesse, nother reigneth there any thing in them but naughtinesse, and such a continuall stubbornnesse as can by no meanes be bowed to obey God. Sith the case standeth so, God muste be fayne to put to his hande, as he hath also promised to do. For he sayeth he will giue vs fleshy hartes that shall be soft and plyable, so as we may serue him. He sayeth he wil ingraue his law after such a sorte in our hartes and in our bowels, as wee shall giue our selues to that which he alloweth, so as there shall be one conformitie and agreement betwene all our desires and affections, and betwene the rightuousnesse that is conteyned in the lawe. That (say I) is the peculiar worke of God: & therefore it beloueth him to dispose vs to the seruing of him, bicause we are vnfit for it on our belialfe, drawing altogether backe from it, and hauing not aught in our lustes but contrarietie to all goodnesse. Lo how it belongeth to God to apply vs vnto himselfe, and to make vs fitte and able to serue him, seing we haue not any abilitie nor meane in our selues to do it. Now after he hath thus spoken of the purenesse and rightfull meaning of the hart, he sayeth that wee muste stretch out our bandes vnto God. This importeth very much. For vnder one particular, Zophar ment to comprehend in effect the cheefe poynt of Gods seruice, and of the first table of the Lawe. For what els is prayer than a recorde of the fayth that wee haue to Godward? For by calling vpon God without hypocrisie, we witness openly that all our welfare lyeth in him, and that he is the onely partie too whom we ought to flee for succour: and (to be shorte) by calling vpon God wee yeelde him the glorie that belongeth vnto him, and whiche he reserueth to himselfe. And so let vs marke, that vnder this one particular poynt of calling vpon God, Zophar ment to comprehend the whole contents of the firste table: which are, that God telleth vs that he onely must be worshipped of vs, and cannot abide to haue any copartener, and that we must not abuse his name, nor vnhalowe it: but that wee must render him the honour which he is worthie of, and followe the order which he hath appoynted in his Church. Then if all things be throughly considered, it is certaine that by calling vpon God we protest that we haue none other Gods but him alone, and that we renounce all Idolatrie and superstition, shewing that our truste is fetled vpon him alone, and declaring that all rightuousnesse, power, and life are al wholly in our God, that he is the fountain whereout of it beloueth vs to drawe, and that wee be so greatly bounde and indetted vnto him, as it is impossible for vs to discharge our selues towardes him. Beholde after what sort his name shall be honored? Againe, the yeelding of our selues ouer to him and to his prouidence

Ier. 17. b. 10.
& 5. a. 3.

Gen. 17. a. 1.

Iob. 4. c.
24.

10

20

30

40

50

60

Deut. 50. b.
6. & Iere.
24. c. 7. &
31. f. 33. &
Ezech. 36.
f. 16.

in our prayers, is the very meane to obserue the spiritual Sabbath or rest. Besides this, prayer importeth a confessiō of our fayth. Also we not onely desire God to vouchsafe to succour vs: but also we yeeld him thanks for the benefites that we haue receyued at his hand. And so wee see, that vnder our calling vpō our God, is cōprehended whatsoeuer pertayneth to his honour. But hereby we see that in Poperie, the seruice of God hath not onely bene peruerted and marred: but also as good as vtterly abolished. True it is that men wil easily say that they ought to pray vnto God: but after what maner? Before we come thither (say the Papistes) we must runne and rote from Sainct to Sainct: the virgin Marie must be the modēt of mercie and the treasure of saluation: euery Sainct must haue his office, & thither must men haue their recourse, there must they repose their trust. God must haue but a little sprinkling, in so much as he shall hardly be knowne in so great a number. And wee must not in any wise begin at him, for they beare themselves in hand that if they go not first to the Heefainets and Sheefainets: God shaketh thē off. Of Iesus Christ there is no speaking, nor of seeking vnto him as to the mediator, that he should make our way too God his father: of all this geere they haue no skill what it meeneth. Seing then that the principall poynnt which pertayneth to Gods honor, is not obserued there: let vs assure our selues that it is euē so with all the rest that are inferiour. And therefore let vs thanke our good God for drawing vs out of these horrible dungeons, and for shewing vs that it is he to whom we must hold our selues, & whom we must call vpō as our father, that we take heede to keepe the way wherby he sheweth vs to come to vnto him, namely by assuring our selues that his seate is not terrible vnto vs to make vs shunne it, but rather amiable for vs to come vnto, in as much as our Lord Iesus Christ reacheth vs his hand: & that his office is to make intercessiō for vs: & that God also hath opened vs the gate, desiring nothing of vs frō day to day, but that we should come vnto him. Lette vs (I say) acknowledge, that the same is an inestimable benefite vnto vs: & therewithall let vs haue pitie vpon these blinde wretches which go astray after that maner, in so much that if it come to the poynnt of calling vpon God, they wote not at which end to begin. And verely herely it appeereth, that their state is most miserable. For wherin lieth at the welfare of men? wherin is al their happinesse, but in that (as I haue sayde) they haue their recourse vnto God, according as it is sayd, that whosoeuer calleth vpō the name of the Lord shall be safe. But the case standeth so with the wretched Papistes, as they wote not what the calling vpō God is. Therefore it must be concluded, that they must needs be bereft of al hope of saluation, and banished out of Gods kingdome, seing they know not what it is to call vpon God. And it appeereth: for they come not to it but with doubting & trembling: and therewithall they haue a thousand windlasses before they come at God, because they haue not Iesus Christ to their guide and foreleader. So then let vs marke well this streyne wherein mētion is made of stretching out our handes vnto God. Why so? For in as much as we cannot stye vp into heauē by reason of our infirmitie, it behoueth vs to haue some signe that may serue to make outward protestatiō of the inward & secreete doing. Ye see our hartes cannot be seene [of mē.] But if we pray vnfaignedly, our hart listeth it self vp aloft, & that is as much as if we came before God to lay forth al that euer we haue within vs. This doing (I say) is inuisible. Neuerthelesse, by holding vp our handes vnto God, we declare that it is he to whom we haue all our refuge. Thus we see why Prayer is betokened by the signe of it,

Joel. 2. g. 32.
Rom. 10
6. 13.

in the holy scripture: not that the same signe is the whole or the principall poynnt of prayer. For the Hypocrites can skill wel ynough to stretch out both their handes & their armes too: and it seemeth that al that euer is in them were burning fire: & yet for al that there is nothing but faishod in them, and they do but mocke with God. Therefore it behoueth that this signe be true, & the scripture also presupposeth it to be so. And here ye see also why it is sayd, that our Hart muste be dispozed. If Zophar had sayd no more but Stretch out thy handes vnto God, men might haue alledged that God is contented wī cō they come to him but with Ceremonies. But when as he sayeth, that afore all things, our hart must be seurd so as there be no wything nor crokednesse in it: it is as much to say, as the same must be layd as a foundacion wher vpō to build. And herely we see that the lifting vp of our hāds vnto heauen is nothing, vnles our hart go before it, so as the hāds may be a true recorde of that which is in the man, and of that which God himself knoweth to be there. For as concerning the residue of our life: peraduenture mē wī regard vs, and we may haue some regard of thē. But verely that must not be for desire of any prayse: for if we desire to be allowed of creatures, we receiue our wages, as sayeth our Lord Iesus Christ. Yet notwithstanding let men see vs in al the rest of our life: but when we pray vnto God, euery man must retire & shrinke into himself, that he may acknowledge, behold I am before God, behold I am at the throne of his maiestie: and so of al the doings of our life prayer must be remoued furthest off from hypocrisie & vntruth. But in the meane while this is verry ill put in vre. For let a man marke how the hypocrites in the Papacie play mockeholiday with God: there shall be store of liplabour: and that is the thing wherein they bewray themselves most. Though there be hypocrisie in all their other things: yet is there most of al in the prayers of the Papists. And on our side, would God there were the like consideraciō as I haue spokē of: that is to say, that euery of vs retired into himself when he cōmeth to praying vnto God, & that we were (as it were) locked vp in that behalf, so as we had no respect at al of the world. Thē should there be another maner of perfectnesse in our prayers than there is: & those that haue no feare of God durst not be so bold as to call vpon Gods name with full mouth as they do. How? They cal vpon him before men: to their seeming it is ynough if the world thinke they haue a good will to returne vnto God: & in the meane while God seeth no sparke of such good will in them. Furthermore, although it behoue vs to be withdrawne [into our selues] when we pray vnto God: it is not ment that in our cōmon prayers we should not stirre vp one another by our example. For then were it sufficient that euery man prayed in his own chamber, or in his lodging. But God will haue vs to pray together in cōmon, and as it were with one mouth, to the end there may be one solemne confession of our faith, & euery mā may be edified by his neighbour. Neuerthelesse our open praying must be after such a sort, as we may be withdrawen into our selues, and euery man haue his eye vpon God aboue, as if we were there before him. Thus much then concerning these woordes, of lifting vp our handes. And by and by after, Zophar cōmeth downe to the secōd table of the Lawe and sayeth, That we must put away al iniquitie from our handes, and that it must not dwell in our houses. It is a maner of speaking rise ynough to say, VVe haue cleane handes: for by our handes we meddle and deale with the matters that are betwene vs & our neighbours. And therefore he that robbeth his neighbour, or doth him any violence or any annoyance, hath foule handes: like as on the cōtrarie parte it is sayd, that the children

Psal. 26. b. 9
dren

dren of God do wash their háds when they keepe equitie and vprightnesse, so as they giue not the selues to misdealing, but rather haue a regard to serue euery mans turne. And Zophars meaning in this place is, that the man that wil be blisfed of God, & prosper, must withhold his hand from al vnrightfulnessse, or driue away all vnrightfulnessse from his hands. Haue we then called vpon God? haue we protested that it is he onely at whose hands we looke for saluation and al welfare? haue we glorified him as becometh vs? Then there remaineth that we communicate with our neighbours also without doing any man wrong, so as nomá may complaine that we haue put him to losse or hinderace: & that we be cleere fró al violence & guile. If we liue with our neighbours after this maner: behold, God wil also draw neere vnto vs. Thus ye see how wee shall perceiue that he is readie to bestow all good things vpon vs that we can desire, and which are meete for our saluation. But forasmuch as men do willingly beare with the selues, yea and that to excuse our selues in euill doing, we seeke so many shifts and startingholes as it is horrible to behold: it is sayd that misdealing must be chased & banished out of our tentes: that is to say, men must not only do none euill directly so as it might be cast in his teeth to his shame: but also he muste beware that none euill be done vnder his shadow. As for exáple, if he be the master of a household, let him holde his wife, his children, & his seruants in awe, & let him take good heede, that there be no wrong done to any man, by ouerthwart meanes, or by wicked dealings. Thus ye see why it is precisely added, That misdealing must not dwell in our Tentens. And now haue we in effect that which is sayd here. But now remaineth that euery one of vs thinke better of it than we haue done. For this doctrine consisteth not in woordes, but must be put in vre by euery má, and euery of vs must thinke vpon it thoroughly. There is nothing here which ought not to be very comon and familiar to vs, and why then are we so farre off from it? Euen bicause the more parte of vs are contented to heare speake of it, and yet notwithstanding leaue the cheef point of it. To the intent therefore that we may be touched the better & the more to the quicke, let vs marke first that we must not go about the bush with God, but keepe the right way that is shewed vs here. My saying of this, is to draw vs out of all the superstitions & fond Apes toyes wherewith men beguile themselves tootoo wilfully. For as for these general principles men can finde in their harts to confesse them wel ynough: namely, That it is good reason that God should be honored and serued: and that without we do so, he wil curse vs and cast vs away: and that it ought to be no wonder though he punish vs and cōsume vs with aduersities in this world. For seing that we worke spite against God, must not he needes ouerwhelme vs? Euery man (say I) will well confesse this. Againe for the seconde poynt, it will not be denied but that God will haue pitie vpon vs when wee turne vnto him: and that if we serue him as we ought to do, he will not deale so hardely with vs but we shall finde him by experience to be both a father and Sauour to vs. Men will well ynough say so. But when it cometh to the deede doing, it wil be well perceyued that there was nothing but hypocrisie in all these goodly protestatiōs, and that men were very farre of from God, so long as they thought to content him with their fonde fancies. Then let vs learne that the true turning which God alloweth is not a tormenting of a má's selfe in vaine and superfluous things: but a comming vnto him with a rightmeening soundnesse. But let vs now looke vpon the lurkingholes of our hartes: I say let euery man examine what is in himselfe: let vs not flatter our selues to make our selues beleue that blacke is white: for we shall winne nothing by so doing. Seing then that we haue so many startingholes in our selues, we haue good cause to fight against the. For it is no easie matter to haue a cleere hart and such a soundnesse as God requireth. When men haue indeueded themselves thervnto all their time, it is much if they come to the middes of their iourney before they die. Yet neuertheless we must trauell still, and desire God to strengthen vs, that we may compass our intent by the power of his holy spirite. Marke that for a speciall poynt. And for the bringing hercof to passè, let vs take heede that we bee angrie with our selues as oft as we feele any hypocrisie or feynednesse in our selues. For if euery man looked neerely to himselfe, it is certaine that we should sigh a hundred times in a day, wheras now we be false asleepe, yea and will mightely and stoutly iustifie our selues. There are many that would fayne haue men to thinke that they seeke God with a pure and freeharted affection, and that they apply all their indeuer thervnto: and yet in the meane while if they searched themselves thoroughly, they should see that which the other men see. For it would be manifestly perceyued, that they be full of hypocrisie, and that there is not one drop of good zeale in them. Seing that the worlde findeth this in them, ought not they rather to finde it in themselves, if they did not beguile themselves wilfully? So then, if euery of vs (as I sayd) examine himselfe as he ought to do: it is certaine wee shoulde not fall a sleepe, but rather that wee should be pricked and prouoked to proceede more and more in the right way. And let vs make speede while God calleth vs to him, and giueth vs leaue & boldnesse to stretch out our handes vnto him. And let vs not abuse such a benefite, which is inestimable. For if God preuented vs not with his infinite goodnesse & gaue vs not way vnto him: which of vs durst prece vnto him? And in very deede wee should be shaken off. For it were a Diuelish malapertnesse, if a man should of his owne selfe & of his owne head prece vnto God, and hauing no leaue of God. A man durst not come neere a mortall Prince who is but a dead carkeffe: and how shall we prece before the maiestie of our maker. Yea verely, considering that we are his mortall enemies, and that wee cannot come thither but wee shall bring as much sinne as can be: he muste needes abhorre vs by reason thereof, and it spiteth him to see vs, according also as he renounceth and disclaymeth vs to be his creatures in respect that wee be sinners. Therefore he must be fayne to giue vs leaue, and to call vs, and to tell vs that wee shall be wel come, and to open vs the gate: and it behoueth vs to know that it is needefull for vs to be dealt with as I haue sayde afore: that is to witte, that we flee to our God for refuge, assuring our selues that wee be destitute of all goodnesse, and as needie and wretched as may be: and furthermore that wee may well seeke here and there for that which we lacke, that we shall finde nothing but emptinesse in our selues, so as we shall be famished, & such as weene to supply their want by seeking remedie at the handes of creatures, doo but feede themselves with winde. Then let vs go to our God and seeke the meane to come to him: which is, that our Lord Iesus Christ make intercession for vs, & cause vs to finde fauour there. For in our owne persones God must needes hate vs, yea and of good right also holde vs accursed. But we please him and he is fauorable to vs in that we come to him in the name of our Lord Iesus. And if this thing were sayde vnder the Lawe when the shadowes were yet so darke: ought wee not to bee much more affectioned now adayes, seing that the veyle of the Temple is rente asunder? If this present doctrine serued

Math. 27. serued for the time of the Lawe, when the people abode
f. 51. in the porche of the Temple and stood aloofe, and had the veyle also to hide al things from their sight: how earnestly ought we to praçize it at this day? True it is that Exod. 28. b. the high Priest bare the names of the children of Israell 12. & 29. vpon his shoulders and vpon his brest: but now, behold, Iesus Christ hath rent asunder the veyle of the Temple, and opened the way in such wise as wee may shewe our Hebr. 10. d. selues before God to looke him in the face. For the way
 20. is continually open by his blood (as the Apostle sayeth) so as there be no bushes nor brambles to let vs, nother is the way so rough nor so shrubbie that wee shoulde be fayne to leape ouer many lettes. No no: but the way is now altogether playne and leuell, so be it that we go it by the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ. Thus much concerning this poynt. Furthermore let vs marke well also, that to call vpon our God purely by shewing that we make a true confession of our faith, and yeelde him his due honour: we muste also communicate with our neighbours by al maner of vpriight dealing. For if our neighbours be made like vnto the image of God, and yet notwithstanding we fleece one, and eat vp another, and euery man is giuen to himselfe: I pray you do we not spitte at God as far as is possible for vs to do, when we worke any annoyance to those that are shapen after his image? If our ney-bours be members of Iesus Christe, and wee offer them wrong & violence, so as we haue no eye but to our owne profit: is it not a renting of Iesus Christes body a peeces?
 And will he after that forte leade vs to God his father to make vs finde fauour there? Lette vs marke then, that if 30. we will haue accesse vnto our God, wee muste liue with our neighbours in all vpriight dealing. And here is expresse mention made of the hands, to the end we should know which is the meane whereby God proueth what maner of Christianitie is in vs. For euery man will inable himselfe with his tung: there is none of vs al but he will be a good seruant of God, if we may be beleued vpon our woorde. But when it commeth to the deede doing, there a man shall see the cleane contrarie. He that hath preached of Charitie, and spoken maruelous well of it, 40. will shew that he is wholly giuen to himselfe when it cõ-meth to the point that he must ioyne with his neighbors.
 As in good sooth there are none so shamelesse, but they wil alwayes be speaking of Charitie. They haue bene accustomed to haue so much charitie vsed towards them:
 as they preach none other thing. But if a man aske them that which they owe: he shal get none other reason of the but charitie, charitie. And how? They make no remorse to pill and poll other men of their goodes, and to do what they list, so as they be blameworthy both before God &
 50. man: & yet they are not ashamed to preach charitie. Yea, but that shall be to pilfer other mens goodes. Therefore here is expresse mention made of the hands. For behold, the true trial whither we loue God to honour him as becõmeth vs, is by making it knowne that there is vpriightnesse and equitie in vs, and to be short, that there is kind-nesse in vs, so as we liue after such a sort with our neighbours, as euery one of vs according to his state & abilitie do employ himselfe to succour those that haue neede, to the intent that by this meanes the league & aliance that God hath set and cõsecrated among vs may be obserued.
 Thus ye see what we haue to marke, in that it is sayd we must cast al iniquitie far from our hands. Is one a handycraftes man? well, let him do his businesse faithfully and content himselfe with an honest gayne of the woорke of his hands. Let him that buyeth thinke thus with himselfe:
 I must haue another mans labour: seing my brother tra-uels & takes payne for me, it is no reason that he should lose his time. Otherwise it is all one as if I should go plucke the bread out of his mouth. For God hath set his sustenance in the labour of his handes. If I do him wrong, it is as much as if I sucked the blood out of him whome God hath cõmended vnto me, and whom I am bound to releue. Yee see then how euery man ought to haue an eye to his estate: and I haue alleaged examples, to the end that euery one of vs should lay it forth by peccemeale, & that according as any of vs haue to deal with our ney-bours, we should behaue our selues in such wise, as wee might giue noman occasion to complaine of vs: and furthermore also that euery man should haue an eye too his owne household. For before God it is not ynough for a faithfull man to forbear euildoing directly himselfe: but also he will haue al croked wayes to be faire from vs, and specially that we haue a care to gouerne our houses, that God may be honored both of the childre, and of the husband, and of the wife, and of the master, & of the mēser-uants, and of the maydseruants. And would God that this were thought vpon better than it is: For where the heads of a house go astray and haue no feare of God nor religiõ in them, there it is to be seene that al goeth to wrecke, and that the children also do no honour to their father & mother, for they become not better, but before they can haue any discretion, ye shall see them rooted in naughti-nesse: and the men and maydens shalbe full of corruptiõ.

 True it is that maysters and mistresses can tel wel ynough
 how to finde fault when their seruants commit any lewd pranckes, or filche any thing from them, or serue them not as they would haue them: but in the meane while if God be offended a thousand wayes, it makes no matter, that shalbe let slip. So much the more therfore behoueth it vs to marke well that which I haue sayde: namely that we must not thinke to content God by being carefull to serue him al onely in our owne persones: but wee must also haue an eye to those whom we haue charge of, that we keepe away euill in any wise, assuring our selues that if we consent vnto it, wee muste be wrapped in the same damnation that the wicked are. But if we be so diligent 40. as to take heede to it: let vs not doubt but our God will regarde vs with mercie, and be neere at hande to vs with all blissing and grace according as is promised here. Verily we haue yet one poynt more to marke: which is, that Gods fauour will not shewe it selfe alwayes at the firste brunt. The promises that are contayned here, are taken out of the Lawe, or at leastwise are of the same effect.
 For (as I haue tolde you) wee knowe not in what time this booke was written. But howsoeuer the case stande, wee see that the spirite of God spake to them. For ye see here a doctrine whiche is conformable to that which is conteyned in the lawe of Moyse, where our Lorde promiseth to blisse those that serue him, and to dwell among them, and to make them perceyue howe auayleable his presence is, that is to witte, that their life shalbee happie by it. But lette vs beare in minde that which I haue touched: that is to wit, that God maketh vs not to feele his fauour at the first push. Therefore whereas it is sayd, that such as walke in the feare of God shalbe blisset, and he will make them to prosper: it is not ment that God visi-60. teth not his seruants in such wise as he seemeth to be alienated quite from them, and that although they cal vpõ him they must be faine to linger in paine so as they wote not where they be, but that (to their seeming) God hath vtterly forsaken them. Then must we be fayne to walke in this world through many afflictions, notwithstanding that wee serue God. But herewithall we haue a double comfort: which is, that on the one side it is certayne that although our hart tende vnto God, yet notwithstanding foral-

forasmuch as it is not with such zeale as it ought, nother do we serue him with such affection as we be bound to do: therefore we must be faine to suffer punishment and correction for our sinnes: but yet by that meanes God maketh vs to consider our owne wants, that we mighte humble our selues, fall to amendment, and returne vnto him when we haue bin exercised after that sort with the troubles that he sendeth. Lo heere one great comforte. The other is, that we be made like vnto our Lord Iesus Christe, that like as he is entred into the kingdome of heauen by tribulation and death: euen so we that are hys members do now beare his marks in being troubled in this world, to the end that he may cause vs to come too the glory of his resurrection. VVe see then that all oure aduersities are turned to our welfare. And heerewithall we ought also to comforte our selues in this, that oure

1. Co. 10. c. 13

God will not put vs to further triall than he knoweth is meete and behofefull for vs: and that although we must be faine to endure many wants and miseries, and that our state seeme to bee the wretcheddest in the worlde, yet will not God cease to make vs feele continuallye that hee is neere vs and hathe not forsaken vs, but watcheth alwayes ouer vs, and will defende vs to the end, if we seeke it at his hande, and indeuer too serue and honoure hym, so it bee with a pure and right meening minde, vtterly voyde of all hipocrisie, as I haue declared alreedy.

But let vs cast our selues downe before our good god and father with acknowledgement of our faultes and sinnes, praying him to bring vs backe vnto him selfe, and that forasmuch as he seeth such an vntowardnesse in our nature, that all our thoughtes and all our affections are bent to euill: so as there is nothing in all our intentes but vanitie and leasing: it may please him to resourme vs in such wise, as we may become new creatures: & that we knowing our selues to be destitute of all goodnesse, may seeke in his fauoure for all that belongeth to oure saluation, yea and to our bodily life: I say that wee maye seeke it in him, according as it is his office to giue bountifully vnto vs, specially in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ: and that being gouerned by hys spirite, wee may call vppon hym as our father, and therewithall be ioyned and knitte together in one true brotherly affection, so as wee maye declare thereby that we be hys children, and that wee growe more and more in true vnion and charitie, vntill that beeyng receyued into the heauenly heritage, wee maye enioy the true vnion whiche is begonne alreedy in vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The .xlv. Sermon, which is the first vpon the twelfth Chapter.

1. IOb answered and said.
2. Yea, you are a people, and vvifdome shall die vvith you.
3. I haue vvit as vvell as you, and I am no vvhit inferioure to you: and vvho is hee that knowveth not the things that you alledge?
4. I am a iesting stocke to my friendes, to him that calleth vpon God, and vvhome he her eth: the righteous and perfect are skorned.
5. As a torch that is despised of a rich man, vvhose foote is at the point to slip from him.
6. The tets of robbers do prosper, and they that hold God in their hds do boldly prouoke hi. n.

I seemeth at the firste blush, that these two sayings, (namely that such as feare God shall be blisfed of him: and that the wicked shall be in prosperitie) are cleane contraries. And in deede, Iob in answering as we haue heard, (that is too witte, that the despisers of God liue oftentimes at their ease) gain sayeth that which was propounded heeretofore by Zophar. But Iobs answering contrarie to that which hath bin said, is to shew that this doctrine, although it bee taken out of the law, is neuerthelesse misapplied. Therefore it behoueth vs to consider well how it is too be vnderstoode. VVheras God declareth and auoucheth in his law, that he will keepe the good vnder his protection, that he will giue them their hartes desire, that they shal want nothing, and that them selues, their cattell, and all their goodes shall bee blisfed: he meeneth not that the good shall neuer be troubled. For where then were patience? and how should it be knowne that he riddeth his seruants out of trouble? If all things should fall out too our mind, we should not know what it were to call vppon God and to desire him to pitie vs, nother should we feele his goodnesse in reaching vs his hand. Then let vs marke well, that God hath nor promised the faithfull such a prosperitie in this world as should be vtterly exempted from all the ordinarie troubles wherevnto it behoueth vs to be subiect: but all such promises of God serue to do vs to vnderstand, that commonly God will make them to prosper which walke in his feare. And this we see. Howbeit by the way wee haue these two poyntes too marke: that is too witte, that oure sinnes make vs vnworthy that God shoulde blisse vs after all sortes and at all times. For there is no man but hee prouoketh God, no not euen the perfectest, in whome (too our seeming) there is no fault to be found. For euen the rightuouslest do find them selues blameworthy before God. And therefore if he chastise them, he doth it iustly. Againe, it is not said, that God doth alwayes measure the afflictions which he sendeth, by the sinnes that we haue committed. He hath other reasons why too visite vs: namely he will mortifie the euill that is in vs. For oftentimes God is faine to preuent the vices that lurke in vs. Although wee haue not as yet offended, yet doth God see well that we will fall into some euill, and therefore he steppeth afore it to remedie it. Besides this, he intendeth to humble vs, that we may not put our trust in the world, nor be tied to the earth. Moreover he meeneth to know whither we will be obedient to him in aduersitie as well as in prosperitie. Also he purposeth to know what our faith is, and whither we will flee to him for refuge. To be short, he will make vs to haue an eye to the kingdome of heauen, to the end we should know that oure welfare is there. So then, if these two points be well considered: it will be easie for vs to conclude, that God blisfeth such as keepe his commaundements, and sendeth them whatsoeuer hee knoweth to be for their behoofe. Yea but that is not after their appetite: it is after his own knowledge: he is alwayes iudge of that. Furthermore if he scourge them, he doth it for some cause: and the same is no let but that they feele his fauoure and goodnesse continually, and haue whereof to reioyce in him. Thus ye see how all the promises of this present life are to be taken: not that God bindeth himselfe to handle vs after one indifferent rate: but in effect his meening is, too shewe that wee shall perceiue him to be fauorable and neere at hand to such as are his. Seeing then that it is said in the lawe, that we shall liue in peace and rest if we follow Gods lawe: what is the cause that men vex vs and trouble vs, but for that we haue made warre against god? VVhen a mortall man aduanceth him selfe against his creator, it is meete that he also should haue enemies too vex him and annoy him. Are we then persecuted by mee? Let vs looke if we haue kept peace with God: let vs consider that we haue prouoked his displeasure: and therefore let vs not maruell though hee giue men leaue too vex vs after that sort on their side. And here ye see why it is said in the lawe, that God will send warre vpon those that haue in such wise incountered his will. And furthermore, although no man pursue the nor do them harme: yet cease they not to carrie their hangma within them. For among other curses of the law, it is said also (whiche is the foremost curse & that which ought to abash vs most) Thou shalt be alwayes as it were agast, thou shalt haue thine eyes sunken in thy head, thy life shall hang as it were vpon a thread, in the morning thou shalt say, how shall I continue vntill night? and at night thou shalt say, who will warrant me to passe ouer this night? Thou shalt be in continuall fearfulness (saith the Lord.) Behold a rightfull punishment vpon such as are not framed to the meekenesse of seruing God purely: namely that they are driuen to be their owne tormenters. Let vs marke well then, howe it is not without cause that in the lawe this blessing is giuen vs, that we shall liue in peace and no man shall vex vs, if we cleaue vnto God without gaine-saying. For God will hold the wicked shorte, so as they shall not be able to hurt vs, though they practize whatsoever they can against vs. Let vs marke also by the way, that although we be assailed outwardly and be as it were a pray: yet neuertheless we must assure our selues, that God will defend vs. This said promise is not deceitfull, howbeit that now and then God will not sticke to suffer the wicked too spurte vs and to gall vs, even to trie our constancie: also he wil not sticke to suffer vs to be tempted in our mindes, so as wee shall be in some doute and distrust. And why? To the end we should call vpon him, and pray him to strengthen vs. Then shall all this come to passe. But yet in the meane time, the faithfull shall feele that God will not cast them vp in the middes of their troubles, but that he will be at hand with them. And the faithlesse shall be vterly dismaide, so as in the erde they shall feele, that God hath forsaken them as they deserue. As much is to be saide of all the residue of the blessings of the law. To be short, as oft as we be troubled let vs haue an eye to our faults, and humble our selues before God, assuring our selues that the chastizementes which he sendeth are rightfull. Are we desirous that hee shoulde assuage our sorrowes? Let vs runne vnto him, and let vs cease from misdoing. Notwithstanding, (as I haue said already) we must not therefore imagin that god holdeth one ordinarie measure of punishiug offenders [after the rate of their deserte.] VVe see how he chastiseth men in this world, some more and some lesse, yea and hee reserueth many punishments to the last daye. Therefore wee must not pronounce suche a definitiue sentence in generall, as Zophar hath done. And that is the cause why Iob speaketh against him: yea (saith he) you are a people. Some haue expounded this sentence as though Iob had ment that they which had spoken, had brought nothing but suche stuffe as was knowne to all men, yea euen to the very idiots. But it is cleane contrarie. For his meening is to say, It seemeth that you are the whole world, it seemeth that wisdom shall die with you. And thinke ye that I haue no witte? Esteeme ye me too be your vnderling? The thinges that ye alledge are too well knowne. Therefore must I be faine to be despised of them that call vpon God and are herd of him: that is to say, of such as God seemeth to fauoure, and therefore agreeth to all that they wish. I must be faine too bee a mockingstocke to such folke, I must be faine to be as a torch that wasteth, which is despised of you that are rich. To be short, they that hold God in their hand (saith he) do boldly spite him and prouoke him. And all this while the tentes of the wicked and of the vnthriftes do prosper.

Leui. 26. &amp; Deut 28.

O. know-

Heereby Iob sheweth how it is a great folly to affirme generally and without exception, that God doth in thys present life punish all suche as haue offended him, and that as soone as a man hath done amisse, God redresseth it by and by, and hath his hand vp to take suche vengeance as the partie hath deserued. VVe see the cleane contrarie. This (as I said afore) seemeth to be repugnant to the doctrine of the law, where it is said, that God will curse all the transgressors of his commaundements, and that he will shewe his fauoure and goodnesse towards those that keepe them. Men see that the hauockmakers are as it were fauored at his hand: and men see that the good are despised and disquieted. VVhat is meant by that? Did God iest when he promised to blisse the faithful, and pronounced such a curse vpon the despisers of his word? No: But I haue already loozened this knot, by shewing that God executeth not his iudgements all after one rate in this world. And why? VVe must alwayes beare in mind what hath bin said heeretofore: that is too witte, that if God should punish those that haue done amisse, like for like (as they say,) so as if the faulte were great, the punishment should be answerable to it, and if the fault were light, the chastizement should be suddaine vpon them: and that the good should be delt with after their harts desire: whereto should the coming of oure Lord Iesus Christ serue, and the resurrection which we waite for? There should be no more hope: we wold conclude, beheld; God sheweth himselfe to be the iudge of the world: and let him do well that listeth, if he will receiue well at Gods hand: there wold bee no more anye heavenly life: wee should haue our heauen heere. So the wee see that God should prouide ill for our welfare, if he should make the punishments like to the offences of all them that do amisse. And therefore it is requisite that diuerse yea and the most part of punishments should be reserued. VVhen God punisheth the wicked, well, it is to make vs walke in feare and warinesse: and also it sheweth vs that we cannot escape his hand. For he iudgeth without respect of persons. Then must we conclude, that all the faultes which are committed at this daye, and which abide vnpunished as in respecte of thys presente lyfe, shall come too accounte at the ende, that is to witte, when the great assyses are hild.

Lo howe Iob speaketh not agaynste the doctrine of the lawe, but agaynste the false exposition that is giuen by Zophar, who woulde that GOD shoulde presently make suche execution of his iudgementes, as hee shoulde leaue no faulte vnfounde oute, nor wee neede too wayte for anye further dooyng.

But

But it falleth not out so, as hath bin shewed afore. Hereby wee bee taught to pray God to giue vs the spirite of wisdom, that we may applie well to our owne vse the doctrine that is true and good, so as we may haue skill to take profite by it. For heere we see a doctrine that is very profitable for our edifying, when God sheweth vs that if we serue him, we shall not lose our labour, but he will mainteine vs continually, and make vs to perceiue it all our life throughout. For what a thing were it if we should thinke that God regardeth vs not? Or that all the seruice that we do him, slippeth away without any regard had to it on his part? Therefore we must come to that whiche Esay. 3. b. 10. Esay faith. Be ye contented, for the righteous shall receive his hire. Otherwise it wold betide vs as Dauid confesseth that it happened vnto him, namely that hee was as good as slidden away, that his foote was slipped, and that he was at the poynt to fall as if he had bin vpon yce, at such time as he thoughte that his washing of his hands in innocencie and his seruing of God, had bin in wayne. Then must we vnderstand that God watcheth Psalm. 73. ouer all the world, and that hee knoweth who they bee which seeke to serue and honoure him: and also that he hath his eyes vpon the wicked, as it is said in the Psalme: so that in the end he must needs shewe, that he cannot beare so great a contempt of his grace. But in the meane season let vs tarry Gods leysure till he sende his iudgements in due time. For it is not for vs to hasten them: It were a great doltishnes if we wold haue God to punish the fautes of such as prouoke his wrath, presently as soone as the toy taketh vs in the head. Yea verely: but he will delay it till another time. Is it not in him? Is it for vs to abridge him of his libertie: Behold why I said that we haue neede to pray God to giue vs the spirite of wisdom, to the end we may not take the saide texte of the lawe after our owne imagination, but that we may bee good expounders of it, so as we do not as Zophar dothe heere, who concludeth, that all such as serue God must be rewarded out of hand, and that this present life must be as a Paradis to the, and that God must be fauorable to them that all the world may see it, and that he shew it in very deede. He doth not so, saith Iob. Why for? For ye see that the wicked are in prosperitie, and prouoke God so much the more boldly. Sith the cause standeth so: experieuce sheweth vs that God will not execute his iudgements out of hand, but holdeth them in concert and in suspence, vntill the houre that he thinketh good. In the meane while, the good and the children of God, euen they that haue walked before him with a single meaning heart, may be scourged extremely. Yet must not that be imputed to their finnes, as though they were the further Psalm. 34. c. 16. cause of iugare of all men, so as it should be said, Suche a man is punished rigorously and therefore it must be concluded that he is a heynouse offender, and that God as it were abhorreth him. It is not so but God knowes wherefore he scourgeth the good, he hath diuerse reasons too do it, and it is not for vs to giue sentence of it. It is not for vs to saye, That man hath sinned more greuously than others, seeing that God vseth such roughnesse towards him. Thus ye see how we must restryne the promises and threatnings of the lawe, to Gods prouidence, and to the curse thereof, such as we see it to be daily. The threatnings of God are true when he sayth, that he will curse the transgressors. Yea, but he executeth it not at the first day. God must do his worke as it pleaseth him selfe, in such proportion and measure as he knowes to be conuenient. God promiseth to blisse those that serue him and walke according to his will: yea, but yet for all that, he will haue authoritie to afflict them. And why?

Euen for their welfare and for their saluation. He ceaseth not to be alwayes neere at hand with them, and too heere them at their neede, and to make them perceiue how profitable their afflictions are to them: and yet for a time they be as it were plunged ouer head and eares, and they be tossed too and fro, so as they wote not where to become. And why? It is good for them to be meelened to their welfare. Lo how God is soothfast in his promises and in his threatnings, and yet governeth the worlde in suche wise by his prouidence, as it seemeth that the godly haue lost their labour in seruing him, and that the wicked haue the bridle laid looce in their necke to skoffe at God, as if they were scaped out of his hand. So will it seeme to vs if we iudge by that which we see presently, and according as wee measure things by oure owne witte. Then let vs humble our selues and say, VVel, God is iudge of the world: howbeit that appeereth not at the first blow: therefore how close so euer he keepe himselfe, yet neuerthelesse wee must haue the faith and hope in vs to conclide, that the thing which is in knowne to vs as now, shall be shewed vs in the end. But now let vs come to Iobs words as they be set downe heere. You be a people, and wisdom shall dye with you. Hereby he meant to repress the foolish haughtinesse and presumption of them that haue spoken. For otherwise there is no dealing with such as are so puffed vp with vaine trust of their owne skill: men must needs shew them their follie. True it is that oftentimes men shall nothing auaille by so doing. For he that is thoroughly sotted in his owne fond ouerweening, whatsoeuer a man tell him, will neuerthelesse be wedded to his owne opinion, and take him selfe too be that which he is not. Yet notwithstanding when wee are to incounter against such as miswrest Gods truth, we must not sticke to shewe them their follie and ignorance. Verely it may not be done as though men wolde shew whither of them are sharperwitted or of better skill. For behold, so do they that haue nothing but ambition and vainglorie in them. Euery of them wold faine make a great shew, He that beginneth wold faie amaze men with his talke, and he that answereth wold also aduance himselfe: very well, ye see a battell of fooles. But wee must not deale after that sort. Therefore if we incounter them that corrupt Gods truth and wrest it vnto vnto truth, and that we come to shewe them their ignorance: VVe must not do it to seeme better learned or skillfuller, nor to purchase our selues the more estimation: but we must content our selues to haue made way for the truth, that it may be receiued and that men be no longer wedded to such as be in reputation, to the ouerthrowe of that which was well braded. As how? At this day a man shall see many poore fine folke hold fast in their superstitions, bycause they say, what? So many great learned men haue hold the doctrine that is followe now adayes, and stand still in the same to this houre: and will they be beguiled? Behold at what point many poore weaklings are, bycause they be forepossessed with this imagination, that it is not possible for the prelates of the Church, the learned men, and the great personages, to be ouerseene. Now if we wil teach such folke, to make them come to the knowledge of God: it is requisite that they learne to knowe the beastlinesse and ignorance of those whom they haue esteemed so highly before: & that they which lift vp them selues against God (as these superstitious hypocrites, do whiche maintaine the abominations of the papacie at this day) should be convicted of their beastlinesse. For how malapert so euer they be, yet are they so doltish, that euen the little babes may perceiue their gewgawes when they be told of them: and they are in a rage when men do so. True it is that they haue skill ynough: but they are loth that Gods truth should by any meanes come neere the simple sort, and such as are already snarled in the said false opinion that I spake of. Ye see then in what wise Iob rebuketh heere the euill expounders of Gods law, and such as had wrested it to a straunge meaning. For he telleth them that (as great clearkes as they wold faine seeme to be) they had not alledged any thing at all to the purpose, nor any thing that ought not to be knowne of all menne. Finally he mocketh them, saying, You be a whole people, wisdom shall die with you. 10

 When as Iob saith, I am not inferioure to you, I haue harte or witte as well as you: he meeneth not to magnifie himselfe thereby after the maner that I haue told you that it were a fond vaingloriousnesse if euery man shoulde on his owne side be desirous to shewe himselfe more cunning and sharpwitted than others. [as if he should saye] What I pray you: who is heuereily there will be much bickering among men: but yet Gods truth shall continue itill. Iob meeneth no more heere, but to shewe that 20
 God hath giue him the grace to know and discern the truth better than they that are so full of ouerweening. And so ye see in what wise it may be lawfull for vs too boast our selues. Not to the ende that men should clap their hands at vs as at great learned men, and at men of great witte and knowledge. Away with all these fonde royes: for it is vnpossible for vs to settle our minds to the seruing of God, except we forget all that euer concerneth our selues. So long as we haue an eye to our selues, and couet to be had in estimation: it is certaine that our 30
 Lord will suffer vs to fall into many ouersights, and to become a laughingstocke to our vtter shame. For heere ye see also the hire of all such as couet to be had in estimation. And it is good reason that it should be so, seeing that Gods truth is thereby as it were laid flat vpon the ground, and in the meane while men haue no regard but to their owne honour. What is to be done then: VVe must forget our owne selues: but yet so as therewithal we aduance Gods gracious gifts, namely too the ende that when we haue a good case, the same may be maintained, 40 and that the things which we shall alledge may be receiued with authoritie. If a man be taken for an idiot, and haue nother skil nor witte, what will become of it? Nothing that he speaketh will be receiued, we will disdayne him. Then if a man intend to fare the better by aughte that is spoken, he must thinke thus with him selfe: well, God hath giuen some grace to this man, and the same grace is not to be despised: for we should do wrong vnto God, bycause it proceedeth of the holy Ghost. Sith it is so, let vs beware that we lift not vp our selues against 50
 God. Thus ye see how that the cause why we do humbly receiue good doctrine, is to know that the man which teacheth vs hath bin taught of God before. Lo to what intent Iob declareth that he had witte, and was no whit inferioure to those that did set so great price and estimation on them selues. To be short let vs learne to aduance the gracious giftes that God hath put into vs. Yea verely, not to exalt ourselues by them: but to the intent that the thing that we haue receiued may profit and bring forth frute. Thus much concerning the person of 60
 Iob. And heere withall also the faithfull are warned, that when they see a man hath receiued excellent gifts of the holy Ghost, so as he is able to aduance Gods honour, and to edify his Church: they must giue care to him, and he must be receiued with all reuerence in that which he shal say. Why so? For otherwise it were a despising of God. Now let vs come to that which Iob saith: I am (saith he) as it were despised of my friends. True it is, that as the words lie, he saith he is as it were despised of his friend & forsakē of him: but in very deed, he speketh of himselfe in the third person. Afterward he likeneth himself to a torch or a linke that wasteth & is shunned. What can a mā looke for in a torch whē it cometh to the end? For the waxe droppeth downe, & mē draw backe from it that it ray thē not, and if any of it light vpō them it is ynough to marre their garmēt. Therefore whē a linke or a torch hath lighted mē for a time, & serued men as lōg as it can: they cast it away, euery mā shunnes it, & ther is nothing more in it but slich. This is it that Iob meaneth in saying that the case stood euē so with himself. Ye see that I am redy to fall (saith he) and therefore ye despise me. He sheweth the reason of this similitude, saying: bycause ye see I am as it were at the brim of my graue. That is the cause why I am forsakē of you. And he saith also that the rich men do mocke him that is afflicted. And why? They call vpon God (saith he) & he heareth thē. Iob meeneth not heereby that the wicked waite for their welfare at gods hand, or that they seeke it in him: but hee meeneth that they haue the world at will, so as it seemeth that they haue god in their hāds & that they carie him in their sleue (as mē say) according as we shall see that he addeth afterward. True it is that some expound this sentence to be ment of the Idolaters which make God to come to their hands: but that is a foolish & vnreasonable expositiō. For Iob looked no further than to the prosperitie which the wicked haue. For al welfare cometh of God, & the wicked haue more abūdance of it than other mē: and doth it not seme then that God is as it were in league with thē, and that he 10 fortheth thē, & yeldeth himself to their lust? A mā might properly say that God flattereth them when they liue so in rest, and prosper in suche wise as they haue shortely whatsoeuer they desire. Iob then saith, that those mē prouoke God so much the more boldly, & yet in the meane while their houses are happie. VVhereby he ment to betoken that which I haue told you afore: that is to witte, that Zophar did him wrong in saying that he was a great sinner. VVherefore? For (saith he) the contrarie is to be 20 seene. Now let vs come to that which he saith concerning their contempt. I am despised (saith he) as a link or a torch that is wasted. Heere in the person of Iob wee be taughte that our Lord giueth the world leaue to skorne vs, and suffereth our state to be so miserable as it seemeth that we be vtterly forlorne: and therefore behoueth it vs too be patient. VVhy so? VVe see what befell vnto Iob: and wold we be more deere than hee. Seeing thē that so excellent a seruant of God was so giuen vp that men mocked him and tooke him to be a castaway: let vs not be astonished nor murmure against God if he suffer vs too come to the same poynt: nother let vs thinke him ouercruell for handling vs so: but let vs consider howe it is good for vs to be meekened after that sort: let it waken vs: & let vs learne that our hope must not be rooted here 30 beneath, but fastned with sure ankerhold in heauē, as the Apostle saith. Is it not a great lesson whē the mockages of the world are ordeined to our saluation? True it is that such laughers shal in the end be stong in the faces of the wicked that as now do sling thē at vs: but in the meane 40 season they be profitable for vs, in that (as I saide) they make vs to regard God and to know that our hope lieth and consisteth wholly in him. Thus ye see what we haue to remember when it is saide, I am laughed to skorne of those that haue bin my friends. Verely it is the grieuouslest temptation that can be, when they that haue loued vs heretofore, do as it were abhorre vs: it is hard to digest. But seeing that it befell vnto Iob, let vs follow his steps, & stoupe when God listeth to abace vs after that sorte. 50

 He

Hee saith expressly that his foote slid: meaning that so long as he was able to stand, he had bin as a torch or link. For it will do a man ease to haue a burning torch, and the lighte of it will do him seruice: yea so long as it is whole and able to last. But if it be once wasted, a man will cast it away into the canell: for he that beareth it must needes burne his handes, and there remaineth nothing but a little glimcing dark smoke. So then, Iobs intent is to shewe, that during the time that God hild him vp he was honored and esteemed: but nowe that hee is false, he is as it were cast away. Heereby we be warned, that sometimes we may be as it were forespent, so as men shall see no more light in vs, there shall be nothing left but a little smoke, it will seeme that we shall fall in peeces, there shall be no whole peece left in vs, and we shall come too the last cast: but let vs take it patiently, forasmuch as Iob came to the same poynt before vs. And seeing that he hath shewed vs the path, let vs follow him, and pray God to strengthen vs in such wise as we may not vterie decay. Touching this saying, That the despisers of God do call vpon him and he heareth them: as I haue told you alreedy, it is referred to the common percueraunce of men. For it seemeth that the wicked are at a couenant with God, to obteyne whatsoever they list at his hand. True it is that the veriest hypocrits and the loocest liuers do in deede call vpon God: howbeit, that is but in way of mockerie, [as to say,] O that God wold giue me such a thing. VVhen a wicked man is desirous to rob another mā of his goodes, [he prayes in his hart,] O that God wold giue me such a mans goodes. This is not a praying vnto god: but a disguising of him, and a staying of his maiestie. To be short, men are starke mad whē they be not ashamed to mocke God after that sort, by wrapping him in their sinnes. They be cursed kaytises, and yet as farre out of square as their desires be, they wold fayne haue God intermedle him selfe with them. Then is there no right calling vpon Gods name among the wicked, nother is there any true prayer. Thus ye see how it is to be taken when Iob saith heere, that forasmuch as the wicked desire what they list, and receiue it at Gods hand, it seemeth that God hearkneth too them: that is to say, it seemeth that he is willing to graunt them all theyr lusts. By the way let vs marke, that when the wicked desire of God whatsoever their hearte wisheth, yea euen without any reuerēce, or faith, or lawfull forme of prayer, but only by calling it forth at auenture as an inordinate desire: it is to their greater damnation. VVherefore? For nature teacheth vs that we ought to resort vnto God for that which we want. Verely the wicked neuer bethink them selues aforehand to say, God must be honored at our hande, hee holdeth all welfare and welth in his hand, he is the fountaine thereof, from thence must we draw, and therefore it is reason that we should craue it of him with all lowlinesse. The wicked can no skill of that. But yet doth God thrust them forward with a blind motion, so as they be cōstrayned to know how that God is he at whose hand we must demaund that whiche wee want: according as we see how they say, I wold that God wold giue me such a thing. Then haue they this knowledge ingrauen in their harts, which maketh the so much the more guiltie before God for dishonoring his holye name after that sort, by mingling him with their outrageouse desires and horrible wishes. And heereby we be warned that when we pray vnto God, wee must do it with all reuerence, calling vpon him with this full beleefe rooted in our harts, that we be wretched, and that nothing can remedie our miseries and calamities, except we flee for refuge to the meere goodnesse of our gra-acious GOD, and that it please him to giue vs of the goodes that he hath in his hād. By and by after, Iob saith That the tents of the wicked shall be in peace. verely (saith he) bycause they hold God and make him come into their hands: and yet euen those same do prouoke him the more boldly. Behold whereof commeth the contemptuousnesse of the vnbelecuers, and what is the cause that the wicked are not contented to vaunt themselves as though God fauored them, but also proudly and cruelly trample all those vnder their feete, which walke singly and vprightly, saying, what is he? and what is he? For it seemeth to them that Gods exalting of them is to the end they shuld despise others and shake them off. And heere ye see a temptation which is troublesom and hard to overcome. But so much the more standeth it vs on hand to marke well this text. Then let vs vnderstand that it is no newe case, that the wicked are now adayes aduanced, and that they raunge abroad and triumph for a time. It hath alwayes bin so: but God suffereth it to their greater decay, and he suffereth it also to meeken vs. Then if the wicked happen to haue their full scope: let vs not lose our courage for all that, but let vs serue our God stedfastly, and let vs glory in this hope that he hath giuen vs a lasting life, notwithstanding that he suffer vs to be combered as now. For if we be not miscaried when we see God aduance naughtipacks and let them as it were aboue the cloudes: if we be not ouerthrowne thereby, but continue alwayes sure and stedfast in our vocation: beholde that is a good warrant of our faith. And this is it also which I said afore, namely that it is good and profitable that God should trie vs after any sort: and that when the same happeneth, we ought not to thinke it strauage, cōsidering that it hath bin so before Iobs time. These then that make God come into their hands, euen those prouoke him most malaparty of all. This maner of speech betokeneth not that God fauoreth or loueth the wicked. No certesse, but so doe we iudge according to the fleshe, bicause we say, that God loueth all those that haue prosperitie. Neuerthelesse, al the prosperitie that the wicked haue in this worlde, is but to their destruction and ruine, bicause God is not on their side. Although they seeme to be fauored at his hande, and to be his deere derlings: yet in the ende they shall perceyue, that all that euer they haue shall be turned to their destruction. But on our side, although God seeme to shrinke from vs, and make no countenance to helpe vs, but seemeth to be separated from vs: yet let vs learne, I say let vs learne to humble ourselues vnder his mightie hande, to submitte our selues to his good will, and to follow his worde, waiting till he shew by effect, that he was alwayes nere at hand to vs. And in the meane while let our faith continue alwayes in true stedfastnesse. And although God plague vs: let vs not be weerie of seruing him, but let vs hold on our race continually, till hee haue made vs too passe out of all the incounteres, and out of all the temptations that we haue to indure in this world.

But let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgmet of our faults praying him to make vs feele them in such wise, as wee may come to submit our selues vnto him, not to stande vpon the defence of our owne righteousnesse and sound dealing: but to yeld our selues guiltie, & to desire him to vse his infinite mercie towards vs. And that forasmuch as hee hath alreedy shewed vs the way whereby wee must come vnto him, that is to witte, by bringing vnto him the obedientnesse of our Lord Iesus Christ, that by the meane therof al our faults may be buried and forgotten, it may please him to receiue vs in the said name, and not only forgyue oure finnes, but also gouerne vs in such wise by his holy spirite, as we may alwayes get the vpper hand, euen till oure liues end, yea and euen ouer death it selfe and ouer al the temptations that the diuell is able to raise. That it maye please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs but also to all people and. &c.

The. xlvj. Sermon, which is the second vpon the twelfth Chapter.

7. Aske the cattell, and they vwill teache thee: aske the foules of the aire, and they vwill tell thee.
8. Or speake to the earth, and it vwill informe thee: and to the fishes of the Sea, and they vwill report it to thee.
9. VVho is he that knowveth not these things, that the hand of God hath done this?
10. In vvwhose hand is the soule and all the breath of all liuing things.
11. Doth not the eare discern vwords, and the roose of the mouth the sauour of vittells?
12. There is vvifdome in old men, and age bringeth skilfulnesse.
13. In him is vvifdome and strength: in him is counsell and skilfulnesse.
14. He vwill throvv dovvne, and no man shall be able to build vp: he vwill shut vp, and no man shall be able to let out.
15. He vwill restrayne the vvaters, and all shall drie vp: he vwill send them foorth, and they shall ouerflovv the earth.
16. He hath strength and might in him: of him commeth both the deceiued and the deceiuer.

O shew that there was nothing but meere ambition and vainglory in al that Zophar had saide too him, Iob telleth him that hee knoweth well what Gods prouidence importeth in gouerning the whole worlde, and that it is a very manifest doctrine, 30 so as the other man needed not to haue made so greate protestation of the thing which he ment to propounde. For these (saith hee) are known things. Yea and it was a great follie in Zophar, to thinke him selfe to haue had a great witte in magnifying Gods prouidence after that sort. Iob therefore sheweth that all this geere is common and ordinarie ynough: and afterward for a second point he declareth that hee wondered that his friends did no better vnderstand the matter that he had discoursed afore. VVhereto serueth it you (saith he) to haue cares? For if you eate or drinke, your palat can welynough discern 40 your foode whether it be sauerie or no. Therefore like as the palat is given a man to tast the things that he eateth: so do the eares serue to heare words. But it seemeth that ye bee deafe and haue heard nothing. Thus much for the second point.

Thirdely it is saide, That if a man will seeke true wisdome, hee muste not stave vpon men nor vpon creatures. It is hee (sayeth hee) in whome is all wyfdome, bycause hee had bene vpbraided afore, that hee vould safed not to inquire of the auncients, nor regarded 50 the time past. Yea, (saith he) if I beleue you, I must hold my selfe altogether vnto men. But the wisdome of them vanisheth away. VVe must rather go vnto God: there must we seeke all the sure stay that we can haue to rest vpon: we shall alwayes be in a hammering vntill we be wise by being taught in his schoole. And further we must vnderstand, that all that euer he shall haue shewed vs, shall be nothing in comparison of the infinite wisdome which is reserued behind. And for prooffe here- 60 of he will cast downe, and no man shall build vp: if hee list to shut vp a man and to keepe him in prison, no man may deliuer him. So then let vs vnderstand, that there is a wisdome in God, which is ouerhigh and secret for vs. Verely (saith he) vnto him belong, both be that beguileth and be that is beguiled. As if he should say, God will send the spirit of erreure (this is a straunge thing, and suche a one as we thinke ver yhard) and he will so blind those that ought to keepe them selues from beguiling, as they shall be vterly blockish: and that commeth not to passe withoute hys will. But thys maketh vs at oure wittes endes.

Therefore wee must conclude, that it is too high a wisdome for vs too attayne too the greate secretes of Gods iudgements. And that is my meening (saith hee) to the ende we debate not heere in vayne.

VVe see now what is the effect of Iobs words. Howbeit, that we maye receiue good instruction by thys sentence, let vs marke, first that Iob meaneth that Gods glorie doth in such wise shine in the whole worlde and in euery creature: that if wee had suche discretion as we ought to to haue, the same were ynough to make vs learned. VVhat is the cause then that wee become so brutish, and that we know not what belongeth to God? It is as much to say as we marke not that which is altogether visible and open to oure sighte. Some man too excuse him selfe, will say: I am no clerk, I neuer wente to schoule. Yea verely, but ye neede no more but too learne of the brute beastes. The earthe which is speechlesse, and the fishes which are dumb, can teache vs of God: not all that is in hym, but to giue vs some vnderstanding of him. But wee are become starke doltes: and therefore wee must conclude, that there is none other let but our owne vnthankfulnesse, and that wee voutsafe not too open our eyes to see the thinges that God sheweth vs.

Beholde heere a texte which is well woorth the marking. And it is not in thys place onely that the holy Ghost telleth vs that Gods glory shewes it selfe euery where: but it is sayde, that the heauens tell it foorth. The goodly order which we see betweene day and nighte, the starres which we beholde in the skye, and all the residew are vnto vs as a liuely picture of Gods maiestic. And in good faith, although the 60 Starres speake not: yet euen in holding their peacethey crie so loude, as there shall neede none other witnesse againste vs at the latter daye, bycause wee haue not taken heede too that whyche hathe bin shewed vs there.

Yee see then what wee haue too beare in mynde, according also as saint Paule saith in the first chapter to the Romaines, That whereas God is inuisible to himselfe and in his owne being, he hath vttered himselfe openly ynough

ly ynough in his creatures, to the intent wee should bee lefte withoute excuse: and (as it is saide in the Acts of the Apostles) he hath not left him selfe without witness, but crieth lowde and shrill in his creatures, that all goodnesse commeth of him. Now if God haue created this world, and all is in his hand and vnder his subiection: I pray you is it not reason that we should do him homage, when as we hold our life of him and are wholly his? And if we do it not, needeth he to make any long proces too condemne vs? No: for our naughtinesse is too common in that we haue denied the obedience whiche is due to our maker: labored to plucke our selues away frō him: and (insted of honoring him) spied him with our vices and corruptions. Seeing then that all this is notoriously knowne: are we not vtterly confounded? Therefore let vs remember well what is said heere: namely that there is no excuse of ignorance left for men if they go about to alledge that they knew not God, and that it is to high a thing for them to atteyne vnto. Why go they not to schoole to the beasts? For they wold bee sufficient teachers for them. There is nother Assē nor Oxe but hee could teach vs what God is. Did the beasts create themselves? Doth not men see that we ynough? Now, when it is said that God made all things: do we not consider to what end: namely that he hath applied all to our vse? Doth not this shew that we be bound vnto him exceedingly? What things hath he giuen vs aboue all other creatures? Seeing he hath shewed him selfe so bountifull towards vs, is it meete that the powring out of his riches should be as it were to cast them in the mire? Is it not reason that wee shoulde fet store by the goodnesse which he hath made vs to feele? So then, the comparison whiche we make betweene oure selues and the beastes ought of right to bring vs so far as to worship and serue God, according to the discerning of good and euil, which he hath ingraued in our heart. But wee through oure retchlesnesse, dulnesse, and vnthankfulnesse do burie all things, that oftentimes it is to be seene, that the verie beasts haue more witte and reason than we haue. True it is that when it is said heere, that the beasts teach vs: that is, not by their examples: but by cause we haue to behold the glory of God in them. Furthermore (as I haue touched already) the very beastes do shewe vs our duety: they do their duety better than we: and thereby are we condemned double. And that also is the thing wherevnto the Prophet Esay sendeth vs. The Assē (saith he) knoweth his masters stable, & the Oxe knoweth his owners crib: but my people knoweth not me. We will say wee be of Gods Church and of his house, and we could find in our hart to be aduanced higher. But he saith that in his Church he makes him selfe to be herd, his voice soundeth high and cleere: and yet for all that, we know it not. And whereof commeth it that there is more witte and reason in an Oxe or in an Assē, than in mortall men? Wherefore hath he giuen vs reason? Yea why haue we bin taught his word and his will? Is not this an vtter peruerter of Gods goodnesse? We see then after what sort men may be rebuked by the example of beasts, when they be slouthfull in discharging their duety to Godward: and (as I said) that turneth to their double confusion. But in this text Iob ment that the creatures do sufficiently teach vs how we ought to honour God. And why? Let vs but open our eyes, saith he. We neede not to be learned, nor to haue any great capacitie. For we cannot cast our eye vpward or downward, but God presenteth him selfe on all sides. In what sort? I haue told you that his glory is visible throughout all things. And wherin consisteth Gods glory? In his power, goodnesse, wisdome, and iustice. We see that God hath set the world in as good order as can be. Ye see a wonderful wisdome whereat we ought to be rauished. There is an infinite power in that God mainteineth and preferueth the things that he hath made, and that the whole is vphild in his full state. For it may well seeme that that wer an impossible thing. Ye see then how we ought to reuerence Gods mightie power. There is also his goodnesse: For wherefore hathe he made the world? Wherefore hath he stuffed it with such riches? Wherefore hath he so decked it? Is it not to vtter his loue, and specially his mercie towards men? according as it is said in the Psalmes that he extendeth his mercie euen vnto the beasts. And what shall betide vs then who are much neerer to him, and in whom he hath put much more noblenesse without comparison? Ye see the how Gods goodnesse sheweth and declareth it selfe. We see his righteousnesse in that he watcheth ouer his creatures, and careth for them: and therewithall on the other side we see also his iustice: we see how he gouerneth the world after a wonderful fashion, so that although the wicked seeke nothing else but to bite at it, yet must they be faine to be confounded by it. Therefore let vs learne to applie our indeuoure better to the beholding of Gods works. When the sunne shineth, let vs consider that God kindleth that light, to the end we should be led and guided vnto him by beholding the heauen and the earth and all things conteyned in them: that we should do him homage for the benefites that he bestoweth vpon vs: and that nothing might hinder vs from marking and considering them throughly. Lo how God wold haue vs to comprehend what he is. Not that we can attaine to the vttermost depth of that wisdome, (for it is too deepe a gulfe:) but yet for al that, it behoueth vs to be diligente, & to do our indeuoure that we may prooue good scholars in Gods schoole, according to our abilitie. If we do not so, doubtlesse it shall at the latter day bee cast in oure teeth, that we haue not conceiued that which the verie beasts and the dumb and wise creatures haue shewed vs. The Angels of heauen are redy to declare Gods will: the same hath bin witnessed to vs by the Prophets and Apostles: and specially by our lord Iesus Christ. If we fare not the better by it, what excuse shall we make? But although we were bereft of the holy scripture, and had no doctrine at all: Yet notwithstanding euen the thinges that the beasts do shew vs were ynough to condemne vs, and to bereeue vs of all excuse. To the intēt the that it be not cast in our teeth at the last day, that we haue wilfully shut our eyes whē God wold haue drawne vs vnto him and offered him selfe familiarly vnto vs, to the end wee should haue knowē him: Let vs bethinke vs better of this matter thā we haue done heretofore, & let vs follow this warning of Iobs, Aske the beasts & they wil answer thee, talke with the earth and it wil shew thee, the birds of the aire wil informe thee, & the fishes of the sea haue skill to tell thee, yea though they be neuer so dumb. Thus much concerning this sentēce. Now let vs come to the seconde point which Iob alledgeth heere. The palat (saith he) tryeth the tast of vittels, and the eare discerneth words. Hereby he findeth fault with his friends for letting the thinges passe which he had spokē afore, & for that they had not voutfased to consider wher vnto it tended, as if they had bin deaf. Iob the blameth the for such retchlesnes: but the matter pointeth at vs all. For prooffe hereof let vs mark how quick a tast we haue to discern our food: euery of vs hath skill to say, This is good for me, I haue a good appetite to this. And not only our palat, but also all the rest of our senses are futtle ynough. For if we spie a thing that delighteth vs: our eies are neuer off of it. If we haue a mind to go to runne any whither: we spare nother hands nor legs. To bee short, a man will be sharpe witted ynough yea and ouersharp witted, in all things that like his flesh, and are to the contentation of his foolish lusts. But whē he commeth to the iudging of any doctrine that mighte be for our soule helth, and whereby we should receiue edifying: there we bee such dullards, as it seemeth that we be but blocks of wood. And wherof commeth it that we be so doltish, but bycause we bestowe not all oure whole witte in such wise as were requisite we should? <sup>10</sup> Moreouer, our eares shew that they keepe not an egall measure. For if a man tell vs a foolish tale, or vtter any lewde talke, which is as a poyson to infecte vs with (as 1. Cor. 15. d. 33. Saint Paule saith:) we haue our eares attentiuē to it, a man needeth not to tell vs one thing twice, wee vnderstand him incontinent. For we come with a hungrie appetite to such things, so as we cannot bee satisfied with fond things and trifling toys, no nor with things that are hurtfull and wicked. Yee see then wherevnto a man casteth him selfe altogether. But in the meane season if <sup>20</sup> God tell vs any thing that is good to edify vs: there wee fare as the Prophete Esay sayeth, that if a man tell vs a thing two or three times, yet we let it slip away, and perceiue it not. For the prophet Esay likeneth those that are so vnjustie and dulheaded (bycause God bereueth them of witte and reason for their naughtinesse sake) vnto little babes, to whome folke say, A. A. And rightly: for when a man hath told it them fower or fīue times, and well harped vpon it, they will perchance say, A: but if a man aske them what letter that is, they know not awhit <sup>30</sup> more. Afterward one wil come with B. b. So long as a mā is pronouncing of the letter to them, they can say B. for once. But if a man aske them anone after what letter it is. They by and by forget it. The Prophete Esay saith that a man must be sayne to repeate things after such a sort to those that haue not profited in Gods schoole, as hee must chaw euery word and euery sillable to them, and yet they will be neuer the wiser, nother will the thing euer sinke into their heads. Euen so fare we also. VVherfore let vs marke well that the holy Ghost by the mouth <sup>40</sup> of Iob heere, doth not only blame those three men: but also condemne vs all for being so attentiuē to heare of things that belong to our bodily life, and that in that behalf a mā needeth not to tarrīe til we haue bin at schoole, and are become clerks. For euery man can be a master and doctor for his owne pleasure and profite. If [we can say,] This comes well to my purpose, this is for mine owne tooth: incontinently we haue concluded vpon the matter. There neede no long perswasions, and muche lesse any long talke about the matter. For we preuent it, <sup>50</sup> we be altogether vpon the spurre, and there is nothing more nimble than our witte when it is to be applied too fond things. But when we come to Gods doctrine, wee be worse than beasts. And whereof commeth that? Our mouth can iudge of our foode, but Gods doctrine shall haue no fauoure with vs. VVe tast it not, inso much that we cannot discernē betweene truth and vntruth. Let vs marke then that at the last day there shall neede none other thing to confound al mankind, but only this article, that we haue bin so much giuen to worldly things, as we <sup>60</sup> had no leysure to giue eare to the things that were for the euerlasting welfare of our soules: and that wee haue heere degenerated into brute beaſts, by reason that our wittes haue bin tangled either in riches, or in pleasures, or in other vanities and wicked affections. Looke vpon a mā that coueteth the goodes of this world. VVhat wil he do? A man shall not beguile him of one penie: hee is alwayes in his recknings, and counting vpon this and that: and nothing scapeth him without looking to: I may gayne by this, saith he: his mind wandreth abroad: he aduentureth, and trudgeth vp and downe. And whence commeth suche wittinesse? It is bycause a mans affection leades him and carries him away in such wise, as he knoweth not where he is. VVe see as much in those that labour to come to estimatiō and to set themselues in credite and dignitie. Those also will gather all the meanes that are possible to aduance them, and they will haue reasons to alledge for them selues on all sides. Yea euen the whoremōgers that are caried away with a beastly lust, and the drūkards that are as swine, haue a skilfulnesse in their kind of tast after what manner they may compassē their wickednesse. And what shall become of vs then, when we haue no witte to come home vnto God? Doth not this happen bycause we hold skorne to vse the thing that God hath giuen vs, as I said afore? But heere is yet one other accusation against men, whiche is, that we see many now adayes whiche thinke themselues to haue a faire starting hole to knowe nothing of God and to cast all doctrine vnder foote, if they can say, O see I pray ye, I am not able to iudge, a man may beguile me vnder colour of God and of Religion, and therefore it were better for me to know nothing. Yea, and what an vnthakfulnesse is that? God hath giuē vs eares to here him obediētly: and we say, As for me, I wil make no seeking for the matter. And that is all one as if a man should say, I will not eate, for there are euill meates: a man might giue me a naughtie weede that would poyson me, and therefore it were better that I eate no meate at all. If a man should make so foolish a determination in him selfe, were hee not woorthy to starue? Lo how they deale which say, I will not knowe the holy scripture, I maye bee deceiued. VVretched creature as thou art, it is the foode of thy soule. Our Lord nourisheth mens bodies with meate and drinke: and he nurrisheth their soules with his word: and yet for all that we would refuze that foode for feare of som corruption: and is not this a manifest tempting of God? And (as I said) wherefore are eares giuen vs, but to heare and herken, and to receiue whatsoeuer God saith vnto vs? True it is that of our selues we shall not be able to do it, except God enlighten vs. But yet if wee come meckely to heare what is told vs in the name of God, and that we desire him to gouerne vs with his holy spirit that we may not be abused by vntruth: he will shewe that he hath not made our eares for nought, but to heare and receiue that which is told vs, with all feare and reuerence. Thus ye see what wee haue too marke in thys streyne. And so in effect the holy Ghost exhortheth vs to herken vnto God when he speaketh to vs, and to be diligent in receiuing the doctrine of saluation, not doubting but hee will make it preuaile in vs, if wee haue our eares redy and well disposed to heare what he saith. But now let vs come to that which Iob addeth: Wisdomē is in old men, and age bringeth skilfulnesse: In him is wisdomē, skilfulnesse, and counsell, and altogether. Heere Iob maketh comparīson betweene God and men. For the poynte wherof he had bin accused was this, that he regarded not the time past, that he considered not the things of antiquitie, and that hee bare not in minde what had bin taught by such as had liued long time in the world. And heerevpon he saith, yea verely, there is wisdomē in olde men. Truly this may bee taken in way of mockerie, as thus: you alledge me the auncient times and old men, to the end I should hold me to them: and what shal become of God? Then must God be bereft of his honoure, that tmen may take his roome. But Iob graunteth heere that there may be some wisdomē in men, so be it that they be not exalted aboue measure. As if he should say, True it is that if a man haue liued long time heere and seene much, he may haue gotten some skill: but must the same be a derogation to God? No: all the wisdome of men is but vanitie, although it deserue to be esteemed in it self. For if comparison be made betwixt men and God: all that euer they haue must needes be dashed downe, and only God must be reputed for wise, and mē must know that there is no wisdome but in him. Thus yee see Iobs meaning. But we haue a good and profitable lesson too gather out of this sentence. Firste it is certaine that we ought not to despise the wisdome that is in men, whome God sendeth to vs as helps. If there bee any folke that haue seene much, God intendeth to teach vs by them: and if we hold skorne to profite our selues by that which they shew vs, to whome do we offer wrong? Euen to the liuing God. Also if God haue giuen a man a good witte, so as he is able to giue counsell and aduice: or if he giue him abilitie and grace to teach others: if other folke make no account of all this, but refuse it: it is certaine that the holy Ghost is trampled vnder foote. For the man that is able to instruct vs, hath it not of himself, nor of his own growing: but it is giuen him from aboue, and it is gyuen him to helpe vs withall. For when God dealeth foorth his gifts, it is not to the end that euery man should keepe them too himselfe, and not make other men partners with him: but for the common edifying of vs all. Then if we be so stately, as we cannot abide to be taught by those that haue good doctrine, nor to be guided by those that can giue good counsell: in so doing we quench the lighte of God, and refuse the benefite which he wold bestowe vpon vs. Therefore when we haue men that are able to teach vs: wee must willingly heare them, and yeld our selues teachable with a meeke mind, that we be not stubborn as we see the more part are. But yet must wee not hold our selues at that poynt altogether and without exception. And why? VVe see howe the wretched world is blinded at this day with the said credit giuing, in so much that men will say, VVhat? Is not the manner of liuing that men vse now adayes, of time out of al mind? VVhat a long time haue men kept themselues to it? Hathe not this bin vsed thus long time? And heerevpon the wretched folke do cast them selues into destruction, when God is redy to bring them into the right way: according as we see that his word is preached to vs, to the intent it should haue full authoritie ouer vs, and that we mighte not be led into the snare by deceitfull words, as Sainte Paule saith in the fourth to the Ephesians, That mē should not leade vs after their lure: but that God might gouerne vs, and we become wise in obeying him. Ye see then that the way which we haue to hold, is that when wee haue receiued at mens hands, the things that they can bring as Gods ministers and the instruments of his holy spirite: VVe must neuerthelesse vnderstande that God must haue the whole preheminence ouer vs, that it is he from whome all wisdome proceedeth, to the ende we be not caried away with trusting too much vnto men, too bee tossed suddainly hither and thither, but that we may be fully settled in certaintie that wee hold our doctrine of him. For the better perceiuing heereof, we must note that there are two extremities. For wee shall see some brainlesse persons despise all the gifts that God giueth to men: and the vnskillfullest will be presumptuouslest in that case (and that is too common a thing) in so muche as they will brag of their beastlinesse. Looke vpon a mā that neuer had any knowledge: and hee will thinke that hee hath so much more cause to stand vpon his reputation. And we see diuers now adayes which wrest the texts of the scripture to aduance themselues in greater pride. Ye see it is saide that God hideth his secrets from the wise men and great men of the worlde, and openeth them to the little ones: and yet some of the are but very beastes. But yet they glory in it, as though there were no diuinitie but in them. But what? Is it Gods will that men should vaunt themselues of their slenderesse, too despise the gifts that are of him, & deserue to be esteemed? VVhence come all sciences? VVhence commeth the discretio that is more in one man than in another? Are they not all riuers flowing out of one fountaine, that is to witte out of the spirite of God? Yes vndoubtedly are they. So then let vs learne, not to despise Gods gifts when they appeere in men: but to profite our selues by them, and to apply them to our owne vse. For if we refuse all that is in men, without discretion: Surely that is too great a follie. Men say, A foolles bolt is soone shot: and are not we double foolles when we iudge without any knowledge or discretion? And yet we see many such: and diuerse will say, Such a thing was hild and obserued, yea and there is reason in it, howbeit forasmuch as it commeth of men, I refuse it. Nay, but what canst thou tell whither such a thing came first from God by the meanes of men? Therefore when a man layeth any doctrine before vs: we must not be so swift and hastie to refuse it, but we must sift it. Thus yee see the modestie that we must vse to eschue the extremitie that I spake of. But there is also the other extremitie that I touched: that is to witte, as the same whiche we see in the Papiests. Behold (say they) I will hold me to that which hath bin taught me from my childhod, I will follow my fathers and auncesters, and that is of antiquitie. And shall God forgo his authoritie in the meane while? Must men be aduanced so high that God should be thrust vnder their feete? VVere it not better that the sunne were plucked out of the skie, and throwne into the bottome of the sea? For beholde heere a greater and more outrageouse confusion. Therefore let vs keepe our selues well from offering suche outrage vnto God, as too leaue him behind vs, and to hold our selues wholly vnto men. For our receiuing of that which commeth by men, and which God giueth vs by their meanes, must be after such a sort, as God may alwayes haue his whole due, as he may be exalted, as both great and smal may be taught by him, and as we may protest that our teachablenesse towards men, serueth not to abate any whit of Gods duetie, nor of his soueraintie which he hath ouer vs: but to guide vs vnto him, and to stoppe all mouthes when he speaketh, so as we may hold our peaces & he not be hindered to lead vs whither he listeth, and that we may (without any gainfaying) receiue whatsoever proceedeth out of his mouth. Ye see the modestie that ought to be in vs. And heereby a man may perceiue what a doltinesse it is for the papiests to say, O see humilitie is so great a vertue, as it can neuer be condemned at Gods hand, Yea verely: but what manner of humilitie is the humilitie of the Papiests? It is a crouching vnto men, and shaking off of Gods yoke, yea and a spiting of him by all meanes possible. And what a diuelish humilitie is this, that the creatures should be aduanced and obeyed and the creator be as a thing of nothing? Then let our humbling of our selues be after such a sort, as that for the maintenāce of the said meekenesse towards men, we may be of a mild mind, to receiue that which is for our behoofe and profite: and yet neuerthelesse that God may reygne ouer vs, and be our only master and teacher, so as the authoritie which he lendeth to men, may be no derogation at all to himselfe. Let vs not be forepossessed with any fond imagination to say: such a man said it, and therefore it must be beleued. And who is this such a man? Is he not a mortall man? Is he not a frayle creature wherein there is nothing but vanitie? There let vs beware of sticking so much vnto men that we returne not alwayes vnto God, nor be grounded vpon him, and that the certaintie of our fayth be not ioyned and knit to his word. Thus ye see what we haue to mark. It is he therefore in whom is wisdom, and skilfulnesse, and wit, and counsell. VVhe it is sayd, It is he: it is to exclude all that is in men. For when the Sunne shineth, it darkeneth the light of all the Starres: and what can men doo when God commeth among them? And that is the cause why it is sayd by the prophet Esay, That all creatures must cease when God shyneth. And Iob ment to reapeate expressely heere with many words, that the perfection of all wisdom is in God: too the intent wee should not surmyse that it needed to be supplied: as we see men so foolish, that if they haue receyued anie blissing at Gods hand, they must be adding of somewhat to it, they must make some mingling of it. No no. there must be no patching & piecing in that matter. VVhe God putteth his wisdom into vs, it must be vsed pure and simply, and men must not adde anie thing to it whatsoeuer it be. But Iob ment to step yet farther (as I haue touched afore) namely that there is in God a secret wisdom which surmounteth all the capacitie of man, and wherevnto wee cannot attayne as yet. True it is that Gods wisdom is not diuers and of sundrie sortes as in respect of it selfe: (for his wisdom is a thing inseparable, and such as cannot be diided or parted) But in respecte of vs and to our seeming, God is wise after two sortes: that is to wit, wee may say there are two particular kinds of Gods wisdom, howbeit but in respect of our selues. And how is that? There is the wisdom which is conteyned in his woord, the which he imparteth in such wyse vnto vs, as wee become wyse by receyuing the instruction that he giueth vs, and that is the wisdom which he communicateth to his creatures: and moreover there is that wisdom which he keepeth still in him self. And what maner of one is that? It is the wonderfull Prouidence wherby he governeth the world beyond all that wee can con-

Esa. 24. d. 23.

ceyue. Behold God dispozeth the things which we take to be verye confuzed to our vnderstanding. VVhen tyrants beare sway (as shall be sayd hereafter) when wicked men seduce filie folk, and carie their soules to destruction, and when the other sort are faued: all this is doone by the wonderfull prouidence of God. But if we seeke what is the reason of all this: then are we in such a gulf, as all our wits must needs be swallowed vp. Thus ye see a wisdom which God keepeth to himself wherof the maketh not men partakers, according also as it is vnpossible for them to attaine vnto it. Sothen when we shall haue ben taught in Gods schoole, and are become wyse by comprehending that thing according to the measure of our capacitie, which it shall haue pleased him to teache vs by his woord: let vs knowe that there are yet other secrets in him, which it behoueth vs to honour, forasmuch as we cannot attayne to the knowledge of them, bycause it is vnpossible for vs to moue so hygh: Ye see how we ought to consider Gods wisdom two wayes. Ye see also how Iob ment too speake that thing wherof he will make a larger discourse hereafter. Howbeit forasmuch as the time wil not beare it now, we will keepe the residue till to morowe.

Now let vs kneele downe before the face of our good God and father, with acknowledgement of oure fautes and finnes: praying him to voutsafe too make vs know them better: that feeling the feeblenesse which is in vs, we may learne to humble our selues vnder him, & not presume vpon our owne strength and wisdom, but seeke in him all that we want, and walke vnder his hand and vnder his guidance. Also let vs pray him to gouerne vs in such wyse, as all our wittes and senses may be hilde prisoners [vnto him,] that hee may haue such a fountaine ouer vs, as he may raigne peasibly, and wee consent with his Angels to obey him willingly: and that in the meane season we take not any thing vpon vs aboue our abilitie, nor abuse the gyftes that hee dealeth vnto vs, but that we may always acknowledge them to come of him, to the ende we may seeke them there, and yeeld him his due prayse for them. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only. &c.

The .xlviij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the .xij. Chapter.

This Sermon is yet still vpon the .14. 15. and 16. verses which haue bene touched in the former Sermon.

When wee see the things come too passe which are rehersed here: it seemeth too vs that God governeth not the world, but that all goeth at aduenture, or rather that there is no reason or purpose why God should doo so: and we could find in our harts (if it lay in vs) to set him foorth a new lesson, and to point him what he should do, and too correct him as though he did amisse. Ye see then, that mennes wits are out of order, and that they are so rash as they could find in their harts to controll God. But contrariwise, here Iob meeneth to auow the mightie power, prouidence, and wisdom of God, whereof mention hath ben made. Therefore he telleth vs, that when we see things so out of order in the world: we must not father any thing vpon fortune, but assure ourselues how it is God that sitteth aboue & guideth all. Besides this, although we think it straunge that he should woork so: yet let vs not be so presumptuouse as to reply against him, but let vs honour the secret and incomprehensible wisdom that is in him.

Thus ye see the two points which he fathered vpo God heretofore: that is too wit, That it is he in whom is all power. and that it is he in whom is all counsell, wisdom, and skill. He hath set downe these three words purposefully, to repress mennes foolish presumptuousnesse in taking vpon them to haue more discretion and reason than God, and in misliking his doings though they find them good. Therefore it behoueth vs to mark well Iobs drift: which is to make vs knowe Gods prouidence in all things that are doone in this world. Neuerthelesse, to knowe that God governeth, is not all that wee haue to do. But wee must also graunt him the wisdom that hath ben spoken of. True it is that oftentimes we may perceiue some reason of Gods woorks, and he also will haue men to knowe why he doeth some one thing or other: but that is not alwayes: nother must we make a generall rule of it. Sometimes God blinseth those that haue forsaken his truthe: verie well, That is a vengeance that is euident, and wee knowe that men haue well deserued that God should vtterly bereue them of all knowledge, bycause they had no mind to be taught at his hand. But from

sometymes we knowe not wherefore God taketh away his woord, and it daunteth vs. In that case it behoueth vs to reuerence his secret determination: and although we knowe not as yet nother the reason nor the end of his woork: yet must we acknowledge and confesse that he cannot be but rightuouse. And yet in the meane while let vs bethink vs of the weaknesse of our wit, to the intent that we presume not to shet vp, ne bee desiroufe to measure the thing that is infinite, by our owne capacitie. Now let vs lay foorth the things particularly which are set downe here. It is sayd, that If God breake downe, no man shall buyld vp. VVherby is ment, that if Gods hand be against vs, although we had the help of all creatures, all of it shall not boote vs, but wee must needs perish. Behold in effect what is contained in this sentence. At the first blush we may well say it is so: but we be not yet touched. And for proof hereof, If God scourge vs, we bethink vs not with whom we haue to do: but wee go to seeke meanes to succour our selues, and it seemeth too vs that wee may well shift off the mischeef by our owne cunning, or if so be that men be willing too help vs. True it is that God forbiddeth vs not too think vpon our selues, to shift for our selues, and to haue a regard how to remedie things: yea hee maketh this dealing to auayle: howbeit not after such maner as wee haue ben inured to. For when God afflicteth vs, the first remedie is to humble our selues vnder his hand, and to seeke attonement with him. This doone, we may wel desire him to giue vs meanes to prouide for our necessities. But to arme our selues against him, is not the way to ward the blowes of his hand. Thus ye see what were our dutie. But cleane cōtrarie to this kind of dealing, we see there is nothing but rebelliousnesse in this world when God intendeth to humble it. Then if we minded this doctrine throughly, we should not vse such maner of dealing as we do. For it would come thus to our remembrance: will God cast vs downe: and who is he that can build vs vp againe: therefore must he himself be faine to put to his hand. And so, haue we offended him: Let vs craue pardon of him, to the end he may haue pitie of vs. And though his iudgements be hidden from vs: yet must we humble our selues vnto him, to the end that he may receyue vs so cast downe. And in deede wee ought too giue good care to the threatenings which God vitereth to this purpose against the reprobates: as when he sayeth that he wil cast downe Edom, and that if any man labour to set it vp againe, it shall be but lost labour. Herein we see that if Gods hand be against vs, all the succour that cometh to vs by men or by creatures must needs be vayne and vnauaylable. VVe may well haue them (to our seeming) to maynteyne vs: but we shall find no profit in them: all shall go cleane contrarie too our expectation. Moreouer it is sayde of Babylo, whosoever will build it vp againe, must lay the foundation of it vpon his first borne: that is too say, All they that will resist Gods iudgement, shall followe those that haue ben punished afore them, and keepe them companie themselves. Therefore let vs bethink vs well, and let vs desire to be strengthened by the hand of God, and mainteyned in our state by the same. For without that, we must needs perish: yea though all the world were on our syde, as I haue sayd alredie. And here ye see also why it is told vs in the Psalme, that men may well take vpō them to build, whē they haue all things at cōmaundement: but yet can they not go foreward with it, for God wil make al to go backward, if he |blisse them not. And no doubt but that in this word Buyld, Iob comprehendeth all that concerneth mannes state: as if he had sayd, That it belongeth only

God to build vs vp: whensoever he hath set vs in any trade, we must be stablished in the same by his power: & when he listeth to throw vs quyte downe & to bring vs vterly to nought, wee may well be dooing, but all that euer man can doo for vs shall bee vterly vnauaylable. Contrariwise if God be on our syde, wee may despyze all things that are against vs. Again, if God be our enimie: Let vs haue all the commodities that can bee, and they shall all turne to our cōfution. Thus much concerning this point. It is sayde immediatly, That if God locke vp a man, no bodie can let him out. As if Iob should say, that it belongeth only to God to giue vs libertie: so as if he list, although we seeme to haue bothe hands and feete at libertie, we shall be forelozed from all our limmes, and we shall not be able to stirre one finger: And although men labour to drawe vs out: yet shall they not auayle at all, so long as God holdeth vs inclozed and shet vp. Finally he betokeneth that which I haue touched already: that is to wit, that God must be fayne to fauour vs, or else all will go wrong with vs, so as wee shall but waxe woorse and woorse: insomuch that if wee tumble not right downe at the first blowe, yet shall we be digged downe by little and little till God haue vterly consumed vs. After he hath spoken so, he addeth foorthwith, that If God bold backe the waters, and stop them, there will be drought: and that if God list to let the waters looce, there shall be fluddes, to beare all afore them, as it were to rake vp the earth, that there shall be nother trees nor houfes left vnouerthrowen. And Iob speaketh purposely of holding the waters and of letting the go, bycause we knowe not Gods hand sufficiently when it woorketh al after one rate wherwith we are acquainted. Doeth the Sunne ryse in the morning: That is an ordinarie thing with vs, we think not of it, nother doeth it waken vs sufficiently to come vnto God. Doeth hee send any Rayne: That cometh not in our minds. VVhen we see it rayne, if a man aske vs who sent it, we will confesse well ynough that it is God. But yet for all that, this consideration pierceth vs not too the quicke, and therefore it moueth vs not to humble our selues vnder Gods providence, & to acknowledge that all is in his hād, & that he directeth our life. There are verie fewe that think of that. So then Iob hath made his choyce here of such works as are rarest and least accustomed among men. For when we see a drought that lasteth, then euery man is touched. If he make faire wether, and rayne now and then in the meane while, so as the earth doth not vterly drye vp mē think not of it. But is there come so greate a drought as men perceyue that corne cānot growe, it thriueth not, behold the seede is dried vp in the grouūd & cōmeth to nothing, there can no frute come of it: if there come such an extraordinary drought: then ye shall see vs touched. Euen so is it also with greate rage of waters. If hee send Showers and they anoy not: tush we ouerpasse it, and haue no regard at all of God. But if there be continuall rayne, so as all riuers ouerflowe their banks, and it seemeth to be as a new generall flud: then wee marke and beare that in mynd. Iobs meening then is this, that when things happen in such wyse as it may seeme that the order of nature shall change, and that there be so excessiue droughts as it may seeme that all shall be burnt vp: we must knowe that God hath not layd the brydle looce in fortunes necke, but that it is he himself that woorketh after that fashyon. Also when there falleth so great rayne as it is likely that all shall go to hauocke, let vs assure our selues that it is God which woorketh it. But certesse as drought may wel come sometimes for notorious sinnes, Leui. 26. c. 19 so as mē may perceiue wherfore Gods vengeāce lighteth in: Deu. 28. c. 23

according as he threateneth vs in his lawe to shet vp the heauen in such wise as it shal be as brasse, that no droppe of moysture can be gotten thence: and that the earth shal become as hard as yron, so that the feedes shall dwine, and the ground shall yeeld the no nurrishment nor hart: and also that the ayre shal be deaf, that whē the earth openeth his cranyed mouth as if it were a thirst, the ayre shall not answer it. Our Lord then doeth rightly manace vs in his lawe, that he will execute such punishments vpon vs, verily for our finnes sake. Neuer the later it will some tymes fall out, that we cannot discernē why God woorketh so, we shall not haue any such knowledge as may leade vs too iudge that it is God which sheweth vs the reason thereof. Neuer the less it becometh vs to honour his power and wisdom, although the end therof be vnknewen to vs. Thē must we humble our selues in all sorts: whether we se the earth as it were drowned with water, or whether it be seered vp with dreght, let God be alwayes glorified. And after what maner? Euen by confessing that it is he which doeth it. For first it behoueth vs to acknowledge his power, & afterward we must match his power with such wisdom, as we do not grudge against him, nor blame him of tyrannie and outrage. For it is not all one to say, It is true that God governeth the world, & therewithall to imagin a tyrannicall power in him. But (as I haue touched alredie) if we will glorifie God aright, we must acknowledge him to be almightie: and therewithall we must also honour his infinite wisdom wherunto we cannot atteyne: in consideration wherof, the same ought not to bee made subiecte to our vnderstanding, nother ought God too yeeld vs an account of his dooings. But Iob repeteth againe, That in him only is all power, and all skill, and rightnesse. The second word which is set here, commeth [in the Hebrue] of Being, so as it signifieth Being: and therefore a man may take it for all things that haue anie seeming to be, & yet are not firme and substantiall: like as the creature may wel make some shewe and seeme to flourish, howbeit the same is but a shadowe, it perisheth out of hād, & they theselues vanish away vnlesse God mainteyne them. But in God there is an euerlasting firmnesse: for it is he that euer hath ben and euer shal be: it is he also that giueth power too all creatures so as they continue in their state. This sayd woord therefore is wel deriued of Being. Neuer the less it is oftentimes taken for Gods lawe, and for instruction: and it is also taken for a princes commissiō or proclamation. But we haue seene heretofore, that Iob speaketh not onely of Gods mightie power, as who should say, he hath all things in his hand, but also he sayd that he is perfectly wise, and that his providēce is wōderful. Thē let vs mark well, that in this streyne he meeneth not to speake of Gods Being, but rather of the vprightnesse or gouernmēt which he vseth. For we knowe that inas much as he is the iudge of the world, he must needs gouerne all things vprightly. And so it is nothing but a repetition of the matter that had ben delt with before: howbeit not without cause doeth Iob repeate it. For although Gods works be before our eye: yet is it hard to come too the consideration of them: and when we are come to it, we forget it by and by if the remembrance thereof be not refreshed in vs. Then let vs mark well, what this sentence meeneth: that is to wit, that in God is all power, and also that the government of the world belongeth to him, to order all things with indifferēce and vprightnesse. VVhē we shall haue recorded this lesson throughly, wee shall haue profited greatly, not only for a day, but for all the tyme of our life. Also there is one speciall cause for which Iob repeteth this lesson. For his intent is to enter into other of Gods iudgments which are straunger to vs than those that he hath spoken of, and specially when he sayeth, That bothe he that deceyueth, and he that is deceyued are bothe in Gods hand. Yee see here a thing that seemeth against all reason, namely that God hath the deceyuers in his hand, and that he driueth thē therunto. This seemeth to be a point vtterly repugnant to his nature. Iob thē hath purposely vsed this preface, as it were to brydle vs, that we should not rush headlong against God: and that although we bee troubled with some temptations at the first brunt: yet notwithstanding we might be restrained, that we become not like many wild beasts which lift vp themselues against God, rayling at him, and blaspheming him if hee wil not spoyle himself of his owne mightie power: inas much as we see how they are not ashamed to stush out this villanous and cursed speche. That they wil not beleue that God is rightuouse, if he be the doer of all things, specially so farre foorth as to driue forward the euill. For by that meane (say they) he should be the author of sin: and who is he that hath shewed that vnto them? It is euen as much as if they would frame God to their owne fancie, by cause they comprehend not his wonderfull wisdom to honour the same though it bee hidden from vs. Yee see then how they bee but arrogant beasts, which cannot agree that God should be almightie, except they might make him subiect to their owne fashion and fancie. And (as the common prouerb sayeth) none so bold as blind bayard. O (say they) beheld I conceyue it not. And who art thou? we haue seene this in sillie fooles. For although they play the doctors in some one science or other: yet notwithstanding they be so ouerignorant, as it is pitie to see, and a mā may perceyue how there is nothing but beastlynesse in thē, yet neuer the less they will be so bold as to say, I vnderstand it not, & therefore I cannot agree thereto. But although it were the wisest and wilyest man in the world, yet ought men too spit in his face and to abhorre him if he dare set vp his bristles after that maner against God. Now then we see that Iob hath giuen vs a good and profitable lesson: namely that wheras he ment to say, that God hath bothe the deceyuers and the deceyued in his hād: he did put this preface afore it, that all power and skill is in him. Now let vs come to make cōparison betweene our wits, and Gods mightie power. Are we able to inclose it in our brayne? If a mā should go about to inclose it in heauen and earth, it were to narrowe a roome for it. And yet will a man aduance himselfe thither: and I pray you, is it not a monstrousnesse, whē a man knoweth no more whether there be a creator or no, ne passeth what apperteyneth vnto him? Then let vs remēber well what is sayd here, namely that although we think it verie hard, that God should haue in his hand bothe them that deceyue and them that are deceyued: yet is it so neuer the less. VVhy? For God were not almightie if things might be doone in this world against his wil, and without his meddling in them. For how were he almightie? Yes truly, but (wil some man say) what reason is there in it? Thou must seeke the reason otherwise: and by cause thou canst not atteyne vnto it: thou must withal lowlinesse honour that which surmounteth thy capacite: thou canst not stye aboue the clouds. God must be acknowledged to be wise and almightie: and if thou perceyue not the reason, well, tarie thou his leysure with silence and quietnesse, vntill he discouer that thing vnto thee which as yet is vnknewne. For what is ment by this saying, that we shal be old that thing face to face, which we cannot see now, but as it were through a glasse or dimly? would we make the scripture false? These vain-glorious beasts that deface and darken the prouidence of God

God vnder colour that they conceiue not the reason of it, and that they cannot brooke that which is cōteyned in the holie scripture, would haue God to referue nothing to the last day. And why do they not find fault with him then for not making them greater clerks, seing that men perceyue them to be so ignorāt and dulheaded: Although they make a greate shewe, (for they haue nother iudgement nor discretion in deede) & although men haue thē in estimaciō, whither it be in way of skorne or otherwise: yet is it to be seene that they be as dull beasts as can be. 10
 Why blame they not God for not giuing them a finer wit: and for not giuing them the meane to profit better in his schoole: For they seeme too themselues too be the worthiest men in the world: and yet hath God giue them ouer. Why do they not blame him for not handling thē after their owne lust: For in their owne opinion they be so wise men, as the world ought to make them too ryde triāphing in chariots: & yet in the meane whyle they are seene what they be. So then they wil haue store of replies to find fault with God, when they take in hand to bring him to an accōt. But on our part let vs keepe that which is sayd heere. namely that we must be so simple as to honour Gods prouidēce and wisdome, notwithstanding that the same be hidden from vs. Furthermore let vs come to that which Iob sayeth heere concerning him that is deceiued and him that deceiueth. VVheras he sayeth that both twayne of them, as wel the deceyuer as the deceiued are in Gods hand: he meeneth it not in respect that they be his creatures and haue their life of him. For that were a verie cold saying, and should impert nothing. VVee 30 knowe he treateth here of Gods iudgements which are incomprehensible, and wherunto our wits are not able to reach. Now then were it so straunge a verdit to say, that God hath made all men, & that he beholdeth as well the wicked and deceytfull as also him that is deceyued: This were no whit at all without the cōmon order of nature. But we see that Iob ment to wade further: that is to wit, that whē anie man erreth & is deceiued, the same cōmeth not to passe without Gods wil & ordināce: and also that whē a deceiuer bringeth his crafts & suttleties about, god 40 gouerneth them from aboue. As for those that would excuse God of vnrightuousnesse, vnder colour that he suffereth the things that are done by men, but yet doeth thē not himself: I beseeche you do they resolue this questiō: For after that Iob hath sayd, that there is power and vprightnesse in God, he addeth that bothe the deceiued & the deceiuers are in his hand. Lo how Iob auoweth Gods mightie power, and that he hath the gouernment of the world, in saying that bothe the deceiuers & the deceiued are in his hand. If there were but a single sufferance, Iob 50 had spokē verie ill. Then must it be concluded, that God guideth all things in such wise as nothing is done otherwise thā he hath ordained. But by the way we must beare in mynd that which I haue touched already. namely that God wil sometimes haue mē deceiued, & the reasō why he wil haue it so, is apparāt: but sometimes also we know not at al wherof it cōmeth, nor wher to it tendeth. And in this case it behoueth vs to hold our wits in, & to bridle them, acknowledging ourselues to ignorant and feeble-witted to atteinē so high. That it is Gods wil that deceits 60 should reigne & that men should be beguiled: the holie scripture sheweth. It is not told vs there that God doeth but only giue leaue, as if he shuld say, I passe not, I wil not medie with it: but that he cōmaundeth it: in so much as he sayeth, who is he that shal go out to deceiue: Behold how God seeketh for deceiuers, and wil haue deceits to haue their ful scope: for so speaks the holie scripture. VVhat glofe cā be alledged to darke so euident a text: And the diuel offereth himself, saying: I wil go & be a lying spirit in the mouth of al the prophets to beguile Achab. Ther vpo God sendeth Satā forth, and willet him to deceiue and to blind both the king & al the people. Now then we see wel that God shrinketh not into a corner to say, I wil suffer it to be done: but ordeineth & disposeth it. For other wise (as I sayd) he were not almightie. VVhē the scripture giueth that title vnto God: it meeneth not that he can do it if he list, & that he is at rest in heauē & doeth nothing: but it meeneth gods mightie power matched with effect: that is to wit, that he is present in all things, & that there is not anie thing done otherwise than he disposeth it. Ye see then after what maner God is almightie. And as for them that babble so, to disceate or to restraine Gods prouidence, they deny the first article of our faith, like witlesse folk as they be, possessed with diuelish rage. Therefore, vnicesse we wil make the scripture false, it is a settled point and we must hold vs to it, that God wil haue men to be deceiued. And it is not sayd so in this text only, but also throughout the whole holie scripture. Aboue others there is a notable place in S. Paule which ought to be so much the more familiar to vs, by cause we haue the experience and proof of it. For S. Paule treating of the state of the christian Church to come, sayth there shal be a falling away, so as mē shal become renegats, after the gospel hath ben preached vnto thē, & they shal renounce God, & there shal be a horrible scattering through the whole church: which thing we see. Yet notwithstanding the Papiits forbearē not to say, hath God suffered the church to erre so lōg a time: Behold, S. Paule telles vs it shuld be so. Now if the same come of God, is it but a single sufferance: No no, But S. Paule sayeth exprelly that God wil send effectually error. He sayeth not only that God wil let Satā looce to deceiue mē: but he sayeth that the deceits and leasings must take effect, and that mē shal not be able to keepe themselues frō being beguiled. Then see we gods horrible vengeance before our eyes, in that men haue bē blinded, so as they haue not perceyued the lyes and deceits of Satan, but haue ben caried away by thē like brute beasts. VVhose doing was that: Gods S. Paule auoucheth it exprelly. Howbeit it is trewe that in that behalf there is a manifest reason. For S. Paule sayeth, that the sayd scattering shal happen for mēnes vnthankfulness: by cause they haue refused to honour god, therefore they must be faine to beare the yoke of men & be subiect to their tyrannie. They had no mind to obey the truth, & therefore god fed 80 them with lies, according also as it is shewed in the first chapter to the Romanes. For so much thē as the world couereth to be deceiued, yea & sh: teth his eyes whē God goeth about to inlightē it by his word: needs must Satan beguile & misleade it. But sometimes the same shal come to passe and we not know why: if a mā demand the reason of it, when he hath made long discourse, he shal be at his wits end. Then let vs mark wel that although we perceyue not the reason why God doth a thing, yet must we stoupe downe our necke (as they say) and reuerence his mightie power, assuring our selues that the same is ruled with al vprightnes & indifferency, notwithstanding that we be not priuie to it: yea euē at such times as God blindeth mē, and raiseth vp deceiuers to beguile them, so as 90 false doctrines, abuses & heresies haue their full scope, & god giueth Satā ful power to punish our sinnes. Furthermore a man might moue yet many other questiōs. How: Is it possible that God should serue his owne turne by Satā: There is nothing but malice & naughtinesse in him. And besides that looke vpon a wicked mā that hath none other intent but to ouerthrowe all goodnesse and to destroy it: and yet he doth it and bringeth it to passe: Seemeth it not that hee is acquit, by cause his seruice hath ben to the accomplishing of Gods will: Men will moue such

2. Thef. 2.6. 9.
10.

Rom. 1. d. 38.

such questions as these, which serue to grauell our wits: and for that cause, Iob (as I sayd) hath vsed this preface, Power and dominion are in God: that is to say, that forsomuch as he hath al things in his hand: it is reason that he should dispoze of his creatures at his owne pleasure: & that forsomuch as he is iudge of the whole world, therefore he can not do amisse, nother it is imposible for him to swaue one way or other from ryghtdealing. For his will (although it be vnknowne to vs) is the fountayne of all rightuoufnesse. VVhen a man hath doone any thing, 10 his doing is examined. VVhy so? For we haue a rule aboue vs, and verely our wits are changeable from good to euill: yea and (which worse is) they be naturally altogether euill, crooked, & vntoward, and there is no rightnesse at all in the. For we be subiect to be caried here & there by our owne fancie. By reason wherof our dooings had needs to be examined, and that there should be a hygher rule ouer the. For if me should haue the rule of theselues, it is certain that there would be nothing but cofusion in their state. And here ye see why the heathē me theselues 20 sayd, that the lawe ought to be as a God ouer vs, and that God ought to be our lawe. But the cace standeth not so with God. Therefore when we come to his will: it is the rule of all right. The rightuoufnesse wherby we must be ruled and wherto we must be subiect, is aboue vs, but is Gods will aboue that according as I haue shewed alredie that Gods rightuoufnesse is after two sorts: the one as he hath shewed vs in his lawe, by the which he wil haue the world to be ruled: and the other incomprehensible, inso- 30 much as now & the we must be faine to winck whē God worketh, and be content to knowe nother how nor why he doth it. And so whē the reason of any of Gods doings is not reueled vnto vs, let vs vnderstand that the same is a point of the rightuoufnesse that is in his secret will, which surmounteth the rule that is manifest & knowne to vs. Verely this doctrine wil be verie hard to many me but let vs cōtent our selues with that which is auouched to vs. Seing that the scripture speaketh so, all of vs must answer Amen, and acknowledge the thing that is told vs here: that is to wit, when we see folk erre, and deceyuers 40 to haue their full scope: the same happeneth not without Gods prouidence. But besides this that hath ben sayd, let vs also bethink vs of the warning that Paule and also the prophet Esay giue: which is, that if men looke well vpon themselves, they shall not be so hardie as to lift vp them selues against God, and to checke against his truth. For what are we? We be earth and dung. And what an authoritie hath God? So then if men looked well vpon their owne state, surely they would not presume to lift vp theselues in such wise against God: and also, these dogges 50 which forbear not too bark though they cannot byte, would not be so bold. But let vs leaue them at that point. If they cōtent not theselues with that which the holie scripture speaketh, let the go seeke their answers otherwheres. For there are that take greate paines too answer their quētions: but that is to no purpose. And why? For we tempt God manifestly if we desire to passe our bounds. Behold, God telleth vs that he doth many things, wherof the reason is cōcealed frō vs as now. If we be desirous to know the same, is it not a forcible breaking of the wal that God hath set against vs? He hath barred vs frō it as if he should say, ye shall not passe beyond this: now if we passe it, is it not a plaine despizing of God? So then let vs not ouerlabour our selues to content the fond curiositie of those that auance theselues after that maner against God: but rather let vs lerne to confute them after the fashion & maner of S. Pauls speeche, saying: who art thou 60 o man? That one word (Man, Man) is ynough to stop the

mouthes of all such as lift vp themselves in that wise against God. For vnder the word Man is cōprehended so much wretchednes as we ought not only to cast downe our heads, but also (if the earth could open) we should be swallowed into the bottomlesse pit, whē we haue this diuelish pride in vs of lifting vp our selues against god. Moreover let vs mark that this doctrine bringeth vs greate comfort, if so be that we can applie the same to our vse. VVhen it is sayd that bothe the deceyuers & the deceyued belong vnto God: therby wee vnderstand that God bridleth Satan & all deceyuers, so as we cānot, (without his will,) be troubled with false doctrine nor with heresies, nor with anie other darnell that serueth to turne vs aside frō the purenesse of the Gospel. And why? For God holdeth the deceyuers in his hand: yea euen from Satan who is their head, vnto all the that serue his turne. Seing that God holdeth them so in his hand, it is certaine that they cā attempt nothing farther than he giueth them the bridle. And although they attempt, yet haue they no aduantage ouer vs, bycause that those which are deceyued are likewise in the hand of God too. Now seing we be in his hand, let vs referre our selues vnto him, & he wil not suffer vs to be of the number of those whom Satā overthroweth: but we shall alwayes get the vpper hād of the lies which he shall trūp in our wayes. Lo how we ought to practize this doctrine: not in murmuring against God, nor in desiring to make a fond shewe and foolish brauerie to say, Tush I wil dispute against all this, and if a man cannot yeeld me a reason of it, I wil neuer bow. Let vs beware of making such brags: and (as I haue sayd) let vs rather hūble our selues to honour that thing with al reuerēce, which we know not. And although we see things so cofuzed in the world, as there remayneth nothing for vs but to fall into destructiō: let vs not be afrayd, but forasmuch as God gouerneth all things, and hath soueraine dominion ouer all creatures: let vs warrant our selues in that. For God can wel ynough disappoint the policie of our deadiy enimie Satan, & all the crafts and deceits of men, so as we shal haue the vpper hād. On the other side, although God list to assist vs, and suffer heresies to run abrode, so as many troubles insue, and we see all things cōfounded in this world: yet can he full well preferue vs that we shall not miscarie. For it is he that must giue Satā error effect: if he do it not, we be fenced wel ynough: and (as our Lord Iesus Christ sayeth) it is imposible that euer the chozen should be turned out of the way of Saluation. Seing then that the cace standeth so, let vs put our selues into Gods protection, and forsomuch as it pleaseth him to cōmit the charge of our welfare to our Lord Iesus Christ: let vs cōtēt our selues therewith, let vs be at rest, & let vs not be tossed with vnquietnesse to say, how shal we scape? we be in daunger of vndoing. True it is, that we ought to stand vpon our gard, and be carefull to call vpon God: but whē we haue called vpon him, walking in purenesse of life, let vs not doubt but he mainteyneth vs in such wise as all the troubles in the world can doo vs no harme, that we should not alwayes abyde stedfast in his truth, and the same truth be an inuincible fortresse to vs, according also as S. Paule speaketh.

But let vs cast our selues downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceyue what maner of ones we be, & what our rudenesse and brutishnes is: to the end we may lerne to humble our selues vnder him, and to glorifie him in all caces, and to walk after such sort in his feare, as we may think all to be good and rightfull whatsoeuer he dispozeth of vs and of all other creatures. And so let vs all say, Almighty God our heavenly father, &c.

The

2. c. 9.
3. g. d. 20.

M. t. 24. d.
24.

The .xlviiij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the .xij. Chapter.

17. He putteth counsellors to the Spoyle, and maketh iudges dull vvitte.
 18. He loozeneth the bande of kings, and girdeth their reynes vwith girdles.
 19. He putteth Princes to the spoyle, and distresseth the mightie.
 20. He taketh avway speeche from the fait hfull, he taketh avway courage from princes.
 21. He poureth out contempt vpon the noble, he taketh avway strength from the mightie.
 22. He bringeth hidden things to light, and the shadowe of death vnto open light.
 23. He increaseth people and destroyeth them: he enlargeth nations and streitenech them.
 24. He taketh avway the harts of the gouerners of the earth and maketh them vvander as in a vvildernesse.
 25. He maketh thē to grope as in the dark without light, & he maketh thē to rele like drūke men.

like as yesterday we sawe that God hath in his hād both the deceiuers & the deceyued: so now Iob procedeth to declare, that the changes and turnings that are seene in the world, come not to passe by haphazard, but by Gods disposition, and that it stādeth vs in hand to knowe, that when the world is so turmoiled, there is a secret bridle frō aboue, so as things are neuer so confounded, but that God disposeth thē as he thinketh good. And he taketh the notablest things, that we might therby perceyue Gods prouidence the better. It should seeme that princes are priuiledged aboue the rest of the world, & that they are (as ye would say) sholed out from the cōmon rank of men. But Iob sheweth that God doth there cheefly vtter his power, and wil haue it to be cheefly knowne there. If some poore man be afflicted, or if there light any aduersitie vpon him, there will be regard had of it: for we be cōmonly inured with such matters. But whē a prince that seemed to be hoyssed vp aloft, is cast downe, there we be more touched, and wee must needs espie Gods prouidēce if we be not to blockish. Also whē they that haue the gouernmēt of the people become so dulwitted as there is nother vnderstāding nor reason in thē: that also is wel worthie to be marked, & we looke neerlier to it than if they were priuate persones. And specially when men haue had good wit, when they haue had some learning & experience, and whē they haue bē wholly fashyoned to deale with publik gouernment, and after ward are sodeinly become dullards, & are no more the men they were afore: such maner of change is so notable, as it cōstreineth vs to looke vp vnto God. And that is the cause why Iob speaketh not heere of the cōmon people, but of the gouerners. He speaketh not of the simple idiots, but of those in whō men haue knowne greate wisdom, insomuch as they seemed to haue bē able ynough to haue gouerned a whole world, & yet notwithstanding are destitute of wit and reason. Lo in effect what is shewed vs heere. Howbeit forasmuch as the talk cōcerneth notable thigs, & such as import much matter: Iob thinketh it not inough for him to vtter his mind in a word or twaine, but he repeteth it, saynig, that God putteth the princes, the strong mē, & the mē of might to the spoyle, & that he vntiech their bād, so as ther is no more subiectiō to thē, their alliances are nothing worth, whē they haue their sword by their side it shal fal to the ground: & (to be short) the meanes which the princes of the earth haue, shal not serue thē to any purpose whē God listeth to pull thē downe. Iob therefore stādeth vpon that point, bycause [that on the one side] there is such a laziness in vs, and that on the otherside he seeth, we be so blind in the thing which we ought to consider moste of al. For although we do partly knowe it to be gods doings when such chaūges happen: yet cānot the same sink in our minds after such maner as Iob speakes of: and although we haue well be-thought vs of it, yet can we not make our profit of it. Neuerthelesse it behoueth vs to know that if God do so gouerne the cheefe stats of the world, his arme is also stretched out to the lesser things, so as nothing escapeth him: Lo what we haue to mark in effect. But (as I haue sayd) whē the cheef states be chaūged, euery mā wil be moued, but anō after we wil think no more of it. And in deed we see the stories are full of that which is cōteined heere: & yet the world fareth not so much the better therby, as to be so persuaded as it ought to be, of gods prouidēce, and that he hath foueraine dominion ouer all things. This thing was neuer yet throughly well knowne. And what hath bē the let of it but our owne blockishnesse? For let vs mark well that God delighteth not to chaūge, as men imagine the wheele of fortune, nor as heathenish folke say, that God playeth with mē, as a mā tosseth the balles at a tennis play. It is not so: but these chaūges happē because mē cānot suffer God to cōtinue his grace towards them. VVhē al things are settled in good plight: behold, men are wearie of their ease: they friske, and kicke like horses that are too wel fed. They that are in authoritie forget themselues & despise God, & they imagine that ther is no more any bridle vpō thē. Lo, our Lord sendeth chaūges into the world because we cānot abide that he should hold one euē & cōtinual rate ouer vs. Againe it is for our behoofe that he make vs to know what a one he is, & that we should perceyue him to be the foueraine of all his creatures. For although Princes & such as are in honour, abused not their state in auancing themselues to al vngraciousnesse: yet wil they be puffed vp with pride, & thinke themselues woorthie to come to that high degree, & haue purchased the same by their owne policie, so as God is nobodie at all with them. And on the other-side we would be of opiniō, that nothing els reigneth but fortune. God therefore muste bee fayne to discover the things that were as good as buried, to the ende wee may know how he hath the ordering of al things. And that is the cause why so great alterations happen in the world. VVhen a man readeth the Chronicles, he would wonder how it should be possible, that whereas had bene so great a monarchie, things haue bene ouerthrowne in so smail time, & after so strūge a fashō. & mē would neuer haue thought. Let vs loke vpō the first monarchies which wer of the Assyriās & Chaldies let vs take that which was so great as the state might well haue seemed to be euerlasting, & should neuer haue ben ouerthrowne: & we shall find the same thing that I spake of. Looke vpō the Perriās & Medes, who reigned ouer all Asia, in somuch that if a man had won a hundred leagues of that Countrie, it was nothing. Armies of fiew hundred thousand mē were in a readinesse. And these things are sufficiētly warrated, so as they be no fables nor things inuēted: but (as I sayd) the certentie of thē is euident ynough. But yet for al that one

Prince with thirtie thousand men discomfited one hoste of threehundred thousand, & another of seuenhundred thousand. And how was that? A mā would wonder at the reading of such things. Yea, but God had blinded those which had erst thought themselues to be so come to the toppe of all strength, as (to their owne seeming) no man durst open his lippes at thē, & that they had ben able to haue ouerwhelmed all their enimies with a blast of their mouth. God ment to mocke such a pride. And by that means this greate monarchy was ouerthrown, as if God should breake a mānes girdle asunder & his sword should fall away from him. Euen so (say I) did it befall to the Persians and Medes. VVell then, hath great Alexander gotten such victories on al sides? Is he like a thunder-clap which ouercommeth a man whē he doth but heare the noyse of it? It is seene that God tooke him out of the world in the flower of his age. And what remayned of him? He had heires males, he had a wife, a moother, and brethren: to be short he had so greate a kinred, as it might seeme that his race should neuer haue fayled: and he had gotten such an Empire, as at leastwise his children were woorthie to haue succeeded him. For he was no more taken for a mortall man, he was honored as a God, and his men of warre yelded him such a reuerence, as would not haue sticket to haue dyed for him and for all his linage. But yet for all that, there was not one tayle of his whole offspring left, all were fayne to go to the slaughter, and the blud of them to be shed, like as he had filled the earth with blud by his crueltie: God rooted out all his howse. VVhen we see this, see we not wonderfull iudgements? And as for them that neuer red the holie scriptures, may they not espie so diuine a power, as they must (spite of their teethe) cōfesse that there is a God reigning in heauen, who executeth such iustice as neuer was looked for? I haue alledged but one example: But (as I sayd) all Stories are full of these things: and yet for al that: how little do men fare the better by them? If a man come to the Empire of Rome: it is a state settled in such wise, as there was no likelyhod that euer it should be removed. For they that bare authoritie in the common welth of Rome, had neuer suffered any other bodie to impeach their state, and yet neuertheless the same was fayne to come to passe. And how came it to passe that the Empire fel vnto him that obreynd it: verly euē by force of warre when libertie was oppressed. But he that had it, had nother heire nor succesor after him, that could bee sayd to be prince or Emperour, in somuch as it was to bee hoped that things should haue bē set again in their former state. Notwithstanding, things were so turmoyled, as a child became Emperour. For whē Augustus Cæsar begā to reigne, he had nother wisdom nor wit, nor any thing else, so that the Empire was as it were cast into his lap as hee was asleepe. And in deede when he should haue fought in the feeld he was in his bed, and he had much a doo to ryze. Therefore it seemed to him that the Emperourship fell to him as it were in his dreame. Yet was not this done by haphazard, but it was Gods will too abate the pryde that was in the citie of Rome, so as afterward a neateherd became Emperor, the sonne of a brothell, who could brag of nothing but that he was his owne brothers sonne and that his moother was an vnkindly incest. And of whom came they? or of what aunceters? No man can tell from whence they came, whether they were bred out of the earth, or out of the water. Ye see then so shameful things, as would make a mannes heare to stand vpon his head to heare the stories of them red. But God ordeineth it in such wise, to the end it might the better be knowne that such chaunges happen not but for men-

nes instruction as it is sayd more fully in the hundreth and seuenth Psalme. Then let vs mark wel how it is not without cause that Iob standeth so much vpon this point when he sayeth, That God blindeth Princes so as there is nother wisdom, nor discretion nor aught else in them, but it seemeth that they be bereft of their wits, yea & that that thing shal light vpon them in the minute of an houre and afterward he will cut asunder their girdle, and their sword shal fall from them, in such wise as there shal be no more force in it. Besides this, if men haue had thē in estimatiō: God maketh thē despised, in somuch as it is sayd, that he poureth out reproche vpon them. Here are three things: wherof two are visible in mainteyning of princes, & the third is secret. The two visible things are Force & wisdom, ye see a king reigneth: & whēce hath he that authoritie? If he be wise, or if he haue skilfull counsellors so as things be wel guided, and that they aduise him in his affaires and lay for them aforehand: behold that is one meane. The other is, when a king hath men and greate furniture of warre, is wel ayded, and hath strong holds in his countrie. Thus ye see the two things that we perceiue to be the standards of the kingdomes, Principalties, and states of this world, that is to wit, Force and wisdom. But God ouerthroweth their force, & so becommeth it nothing worth. And he wil take away the wisdom of those that be of greate forecast, & ye shal see thē all so daūted, as they haue lesse wit than little children. There is a third thing which is secret to the world: which is, that God imprinteth a certaine maiestie in princes, so as they be honored & it is not knowne why: according as it is sayd in Daniel, that whē God minded to stablish the great Empire of Chaldie: he put a feare & terrour of it into al creatures. Looke vpon Balsazar and looke vpon Nabuchadnefar who were kings. God magnified them in such wise, as the birds of the ayre stode in feare and awe of them. And wherof came such a conceyt: euen of that, that God had printed his image in thē. Considering the pryde that is in all men, let not vs think that kingdomes could stand stedfast, except God mainteyned them by the meanes afore sayd. Euery man would be a Lord, and no mā would beare the yoke. There is such statelines in the nature of all men, as euery man esteemes himself worthie to bee a king. How cōmeth it to passe then, that mē suffer a smal number or some one alone to reigne ouer them, but by cause it is Gods wil that that order should be among mē? And now it is sayd, that God wil poure out contempt and reproche vpon those that haue ben noble, and whō men haue reuerenced, so as God wil make them a laughingstocke, in somuch that men shall flout them, and make none account of them. VVy so? By cause it belongeth to him to set vp, and to pull downe. Therefore let vs mark well the three things that are spoken of here. Do the princes of this world trust in their munitions, and fortresses, in their people and reuenues, and in all that cā be had to mainteyne them? O, it is sayd that God will cut their bands asunder, abate their forces, and vn buckle their girdle. So then, it is in vayne for princes to think that they shal cōtinue euer by cause they be well stored fenced & furnished with all things at their harts desire. For as soone as God shall but blowe vpon thē, nothing shall auayle thē. If princes trust in their wisdom, it shal happen to them likewise. And we see also how the prophets mocke at the vaine ouerweering that was in the vnbeleeuers & enimies of God. VVhere are the sage counsellors of Pharao: Hath not Egypt had the renoume vntill now, in such sort that if there were any greate policie in the world it was there? And behold they be dulled & bereft of discretion, and how are they vanished away in that wise? who would

Psal. 107.
d. 43.Dan. 2. c. 37.
38. & 4. d.
19.Esa. 19. b. u.
12. 13. 14.

would haue thought it? It is God that hath done it, sayeth the Prophet Esay. So the, let those that be the great ones of the worlde learne to humble theselues, & let them not be caried away with this fonde ouerweening, as though they were able to mainteyne theselues by their own wisdom and strength: for wee see that all that geere is but smoke before God. But if the great men of the world cannot yeelde themselues therevnto: nor herken to this doctrine, at leastwise let their example serue for our instruction: let vs thinke vpon it, & be it knowne vnto vs that God hath shewed vs no small fauour in that he setteth Kings & Princes vpon the scaffold to teach vs, to the end that euery of vs should humble himselfe & walke aduisedly, knowing that God gouerneth all things, and that he disposeth of his creatures at his owne pleasure. Then shall Princes be blinded: but in their persones God giueth vs a profitable instructiõ if the fault be not in our selues. The little ones therefore must vnderstand that it is a singular fauour that God sheweth them when he teacheth the so in his schole, & in the meane while leaueth those a far off that are highest aduanced in the world. Herewithal also let vs marke well, that if God do so change the states of Princes, and abate the force of those that seeme to be so puissant & strong as all things quake vnder the: what shall become of such as are nothing in cõparison of them? Let vs go boast of our owne greatnesse and strength. Looke vpon these great Kings and Monarkes that haue Lorded ouer al men, how God hath cõfounded them, in the twinkling of an eye: and I pray you what shall become of these glorious fellows that haue nothing in cõparison, when vnder colour of I wote not what, they thinke theselues to be maruelous men, & beare themselues in hand that they ought to stie about the clouds, because they haue but one peece of a finger vpon other men, and yet are but as Idols theselues? God needeth not in that cace to vtter any great iudgement & worthie of remembrance: for their foolishnes is a laughingstocke euen to little children. And thinke we then that God leaueth such ouerweening & pryde vnpunished, seing it stinketh so in the sight of the world that it can not be abidden, & moreouer hath no ground nor colour? And as for vs that are priuate persones, let vs be well ware that we set not vp our bridles. For it is Gods peculiar office to daunt the proude & to resist them. And the more they labour and striue to aduance themselues, so much the rougher must Gods hand be to cõfound them. Therefore let vs bee afrayd to lift vp our selues against God: for his hande is ouerheauie if wee come against it. Furthermore, (as I haue touched already) wee muste vnderstand, that men must not glorie in their owne skill and wisdom. For we see what is sayd here of Iudges, Cõsellers, & Kings. God, to mainteyne cõmon weales, (which is a holy thing in this world) bestoweth of his spirit vpon those that are not worthie of it. Kings, or their Cõsellers, or such as haue charge too gouerne the people, may haue some wisdom, howbeit not of themselues: but for so much as God setteth them in that state, it is requisite for them to haue some peculiar thing which is not of their owne nature. And God doth this although men bee not worthie of it: the reason wherof is that he intendeth too maynteyne the order which he hath set. Neuerthelesse he sayleth not afterward to bereeue Kings and Princes and their Cõsellers of wit & reason. If he deale thus towards those on whom he bestoweth his spirite extraordinarily: what shall betyde to priuate persones? So then lette vs learne to walke modestly, and not to thinke our selues so well appoynted as to do any thing of our owne witte and reason. For God is able to bereeue vs of all. True it is that now and then God will leaue men witte and reason, and yet in the meane while it shall take none effect, as wee see in the example of Achitophell. God suffered him to bee alwayes a man of great aduice as he was in deede, & there was great policie in the counsell that he gaue to Absalom. Well then, yee see that Achitophell had a very politike wit of his owne, and God abated it not a whit, and yet he brought not his enterprife to passe. And why? For God blinded as well Absalom as also all his counsell, so as Achitophell was not beleeued. VVee see then that God abridgeth the effect and force of them that are craftie & wylie to the sight of the worlde: And sometimes also he maketh them dull and doltish, as Iob speaketh here. Euen so likewise befalleth to priuate persones if a man looke vpon them. How? Yee shall see a man that can so good skill to lay aforehand for his owne matters, as there is no fault to be found with him: and yet for all that, he prospereth not. And why? God hath cut off the effect of such a mans wisdom, and made it too no purpose. Therefore when this befalleth, we perceyue the prouidence of God. Howbeit it may also come to passe, that a man which is very politike and of great forecast, shall do so fond an act as shall irke men to see it. Is it possible (shall men say) that so forecasting a man which hath giuen counsell to all other men, should fall into such and so grosse a follie? And what is the cause of this? God hath wrought it. So then, what is to be done? If God giue vs wit and wisdom: first let vs vse it as we ought to do: that is to say, lette vs not apply our wit vnto euill, to beguyle men, to deale deceitfully with them, nor to do them harme or hinderance: but let it serue to maynteyne goodnesse, and to repress euill: and therewithal let vs still pray God to stablish the wit which he hath giuen vs, assuring our selues that it is no continuall heritage, but God had neede too continue his grace as he hath begonne it. For wee may be vtterly bereft of it too day ere to morrowe: [and therefore wee must thinke thus with our selues:] my God, thou haste assisted me, and I am so much the more indetted to thee: but yet take not thy spirit from mee. If a mans owne wit haue serued his turne well, a day, a yeere, or the whole tyme of his life: let him yeelde the honour vnto God, saying: Lord, I am beholding to thee for this, and I haue not stood by my selfe: therefore thou must be fayne to vphold mee still, for I can do nothing at all of my selfe. Yee see then what wee haue to doo whereas it is sayde that it is God that taketh away the witte of those which were well aduised before: Making them to grope as in the darke, in such wise as they bee both blinde and drunken, and the power that they had tofore is vanished away, and they are become nothing, so that if God listeth, they must needes come to vtter decay. VVhen we heare this, let vs take example by it, as I haue sayd. But we must not leaue the other first article, namely That God poureth out reproch also vpon such as were noble before, and which were had in reuerence and honour, vpon them will God spred out contempt, and then shall they be so full of shame, as men shall skoffe at them, and they shall haue no reputation any more. Hereby we be taught, that although wee haue all that is possible to be wished, nothing shall serue vs when this contempt commeth: but we shalbe as if we had nother shape, nor fauour, nor aught els, when men see vs in such contempt. And if it be demanded whereof that commeth, noman can tell why. I say yee shall see men aduanced to great estate and dignitie, yea euen of the mightiest Kings of the world, and yet they shall runne in contempt, not for want of good iudgement and aduisednesse, or for want of any meanes of force and policie: but men know not why. I therefore when they be so imbaled and runne in contempt, may not men perceyue that the

2 Sam. 17. 14.

Psalm. 18. e.
28. 1. Pet.
5. b. 5. &
Iames. 4. b. 6

hand of God is vpon them? Let men search & they shall find that Princes haue sometimes bene so shamefull and looceiluers, as they were not worthie to haue bene in the bottom of an alehouse or of a brothelhouse: & yet for al that, they were maynteyned in authoritie: & that other-some hauing erit bene men of age and of great wisdom and authoritie, were by God made despyfed, so as there was no shifte for them of themselves but to fall downe. Hercin then let vs behold Gods iudgements, and learne that if such things happen vnto those that are aduanced 10 about the common aray of men: God may well abace vs when he wil & fill vs ful of shame, although we had bene in great dignitie and reputatiō. Furthermore Iob hauing spoken so of Princes and of the chaunges that happen to their states, addeth, that we must also behold Gods iudgements in the bodie of the people. He hath spoken of the heads, and now he cometh to the bodies. Behold a people (sayeth he) that is grown great and mightie, & see how God bringeth thē to nothing. Againe another people inlargeth and spreadeth out their bounds very far, and then 20 God hemmeth it in. Certesse men do comonly father this thing vpon fortune: but that is bicause men blinde themselves through their owne vnthankfulness. For if wee would open our eyes, it is certaine that Gods iudgements are so manifest in this cace, as men could not gaynsay thē. And that also is the cause why it is sayd in the end of the
 107. Psalm, (where Gods prouidence is treated of) that the mouth of vnrightuousnesse shalbe stopped. The wicked may well deface Gods Maiestie to the vttermost of their power, but yet must they needes be conuincid: and 30 when they haue well considered the doings of things here through the whole worlde, they must needes haue their mouthes stopped. And like as I sayd that when God smiteth vpon the high & proude heades, the small ones must needes take occasiō to tremble & to humble themselves: So when God visiteth the whole bodie together, (that is to say, the people) what shal become of euery seueral member & euery seuerall persone? God spareth not a whole cuntry: and what shal become of me. Thus ye see how we ought to applie the great things vnto the small, to the 40 end that euery man seuerally may learne to walke hūbly vnder the mightie hande of God, and to frame himselfe thereafter. For, if we acknowledge God to be our whole foueraine: he wil handle vs after another fashion than is spoken of here: that is to wit, so as we shal perceyue that his protection is wonderfull towards vs. For if men offer themselves to God and suffer him to gouerne them: he wil stretch out his had to maynteyne them in their state: he wil alwayes vphold them by his power: & he will be a shield and defence to them against all euill aduentures.
 50 But if men will needes stie to high: God muste needes stoppe them. So then, must not euery of vs needes crouch when we see that God smiteth whole nacions after that sort? But first of al it standeth vs in hand to be thoroughly perswaded of that which is cōteyned here. For how shall we els take instruction by that which I haue layde forth? let vs assure our selues that whē the Lord shal haue multiplied a people, he can wel diminish them againe to lesse than nothing. And when there happen any great alterations in a realme, let vs assure our selues that the same cometh not to passe by hap hazard, but that God is the wor-60 ker of it. Therefore wee muste be thoroughly resoluēd of those two things. True it is that we may wel talke of thē: but that shall neuer be in good earnest, till wee haue well studied this lesō, and that euery of vs be well practised in them, in such wise as the same may neuer be blotted out of our remembrance. Let vs assure our selues, that how soeuer the world goeth, God ruleth al things in such wise

Psalm. 107.
d. 42.

as we ought not to be so witkisse as to father any thing vpon fortune. That (say I) is the poynt whereat we ought to begin: namely at the hauing of the full assurednesse of Gods prouidence, & then to apply the same to our owne wise. But I sayd that we must make our owne profit by it, bycause we see that when some fantastical heads talke of Gods prouidence, it is to none other end but to intangle themselves in such speculatiōs as are so grosse that is a pitie to see thē, & they bring no edification at al. They can wel ynough say, God chaūgeth & God remoueth: but what for that? It is not to be edified in his feare. But the very truth is, that when the holy Scripture speaketh to vs of Gods prouidence: the intent of it is that therby we should know his mightie power. And in what wise know we it, and to what end? To honour him that holdeth vs in his hand, & hath ful soueraintie ouer life and death: that is to say, to be subiect vnto him, seing he hath all authoritie ouer vs. On the other side the Scripture sheweth vs that God is wise in gouerning the world, according as I haue sayd already. Then is not for vs to say, God doth what he listeth, and we wote not whither it be good or bad: But contrariwise we must cōfesse that all that euer he doth is wel done, and although we know not the reason of it, yet must we honour his secret wisdom. And in conclusion we must tarie his leysure till he shewe vs wherefore he chaūgeth and shifeth the states of the world in that sort, and therewithal we must haue our eyes open when things are manifest. Behold, God blisseth a people. And wherefore? Euen for his owne mere goodnesse sake: we must not seeke for any deserts in men when God sheweth thē any fauour. So then, whē we see God spred out his goodnesse vpon a people: he is to be magnified for the same. But if a people be outrageously giuen to euill, and God visit them: must we not also thinke what is the cause in that behalfe? like as in these dayes we see so great confusions in the world as would greeue a mans hart: but we see also how wickednesse is become like a flowing flud. Yee see a Cuntry farre out of square in great and outragious vices, and Gods scourges followe by and by, that is to say within a while after: muste wee not needes in that cace acknowledge God too bee a rightuous Iudge? And wee may iustly condemne them that perishe. But haue wee once condemned them? Then must we streytwayes come to our selues. For the principall poynt is, for vs too profit our selues by other mennes coste, when God doeth vs the pleasure to warne vs aforehand, to the end that euery of vs should come home againe. Yee see then after what sorte wee may fare the better by Gods prouidence according as is shewed vs in this streyne. But it is sayd immediatly, That God bringeth the darknesse into light, yea euen the darknesse that is as darke as death: that is to say, which is as the darknesse of Hell: the same wil he bring too light when he listeth. Here Iob expresseth what his meaning is: namely to reherce vnto vs those workes of God which are most famous. For if he should speake of comon and ordinarie workes: we would be as it were a sleepe, and it would not touche vs a whit, as I haue declared already. Therefore wee must be warned in such sort, as our wittes may be astonished at it, yea and as wee may be quickened vp, how lasie or dulminded so euer we be. Thus ye see what Iob ment by saying that God will bring the darknesse of death vnto light. He might well haue sayd, God maketh his sunne to shine euery day: we see how the night hath his course, & the day succeedeth. Lo here is a great and wonderfull chaunge. Iob might haue spoken so. But forasmuch as that is an ordinarie thing among vs: we passe not of it. Therefore he intended to touch the extraordinarie things, as if he had sayd:
 God

God maketh such alterations, as if Hell were aduanced vp aloft or as if death were set vp on high for men to behold. Now when darknesse chaungeth so into light, it is a strange fashion and such a one as neuer was looked for. But thereby God wakeneth vs and giueth vs cause to thinke better vpon his power than we haue erst done. So then let vs remember this lesson well. But wee be neuer the better for all the instructions that God giueth vs fro day to day: yea and although he worke such miracles as ought to moue vs throughly when we do but thinke vpon them: yet are we no whit touched with them. VVherefore he must be fayne to worke after another fashion, & to crie out aloud. VVe be like as when a man is layd in his bed and salne fast asleepe: a thousande things may be spoken to him which he heareth not: folke may talke and discourse of many matters, and he that is asleepe shal know neuer a whit of it. But if one make a great noyse, then ye shall see him wake, and a man cannot speake so softly but he will heare what is sayd. So standeth the case with vs. For God sheweth vs many things that ought to serue for our instruction: but we haue our eyes shet: he speaketh to vs, but we heare nothing. And why? Bicause we be a sleepe. And therefore he must be fayne to make a great noyse to waken vs, to the ende wee may thinke so much the better vpon his prouidence, and acknowledge that it is God that weakeneth vs, therefore it is not now for vs to be sluggish: so as we should not haue regarde of him to profit our selues by the iudgements that he sheweth vs. VVherefore let vs aduisedly shroud vs vnder his protection, doubting not but that in asmuch as he hath al creatures in his hand, (yea euen vnto the litle sparrowes, which are of small value and estimation) he will neuer forget vs: not only forso much as we be his creatures fashioned after his owne image: but also bicause we be his children, according as he hath adopted vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ.

But let vs fall downe before the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying to make vs feele them better, that we may abhorre them & condemne this slothfulnesse which is in vs and in al our senses: & to inlighten vs by his holy spirite, bicause we be blinde, euen in the lightfomnest and manifestest things. Therefore [let vs pray him] to open our eyes in such sort, as we may behold the great secretes of his heauenly kingdome: yea & that we may behold his maiestie so far forth as is expediēt for our welfare (according also as he sheweth himself to vs by the meanes of our Lord Iesus Christ) vntil we may come to the full & perfect sight of it, which shalbe at the last day, when we shall see him face too face in such wise as it shalbe fully fashioned like vnto his glorie. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs: but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The .xlix. Sermon, which is the first vpon the thirteenth Chapter.

BEhold, mine eye hath seene all these things, mine care hath heard and vnderstoode them:

2. I knowe as much as you: I am not inferiour to you.
3. But I vvill speake vnto God, and reason vvith him.
4. Yee be forgers of lies, and Phisitons of no value.
5. O that you vvould hold your tungs, and that should bee counted to you for vvisedome!
6. Heare my discourse, and vnderstand vvhat I debate.
7. Neede you to alledge iniquitie in Gods defence, and to speake vnto truth for his sake?
8. VVillye pleasure him? vvill yee pleade his case?
9. Is it good that hee shoulde allowe you? and that you shoulde vsurpe vpon him as vpon a man?
10. He vvill reprove you if you fauour him in secretes.

IT is a very euill thing when euery of vs will set out himselfe and will not be inferiour to his companion. For when we haue this fond desire to seeme and to be counted wise, it is possible that the same shall ingender much strife among vs, as

Phil. 2. 4. 3. Paule also speaketh of it. This vaine gloriousnesse is the Sea and wellspring of all debate. For men shal neuer agree quietly among themselves, except euery man yeelde meekely to that which is good and reasonable, and be voyde of desire to aduance himselfe aboute others. But if euery of vs be so fond as to steppe before others to be the more esteemed: the fire muste needes be kindled out of hande. Furthermore wee see how the Scripture telleth vs that wee must esteeme the giftes of God in those that haue receyued them. VVherefore let euery man thinke vpon his owne infirmities and finnes: and that will make vs to stoupe, and to esteeme those whom wee haue presumptuously shaken off: & let vs be afraid to do God any wrong by despising such as are not vtterly destitute of his gracious giftes. But it seemeth here that Iob ment too preferre himselfe before them that had spoken. I vnderstand as much as you (sayeth he) I am not inferior, mine care hath heard these things, myne eyes hath seene them. It seemeth here that Iob would haue more reputation of wisdom & skilfulnesse than those three to whom he spake. But he was not ledde with desire of prayse, his doing so is bicause these men would beare him downe with their presumptuousnesse, yea and peruert Gods truthe after their owne fancie. Iob therefore was constraigned to say that he vnderstood those things better than they: and he doth it to the ende that if these men be able to profit themselves by it, they should do it by humbling them. For vntill such time as men bee made to stoupe so lowe as they may bee no more puffed vp with the sayde presumptuousnesse: it is impossible too winne any thing at their hande, for all that euer a man can shewe them, for they set too muche by themselves. Then if a man minde too make himselfe fit to heare Gods truth, and too receyue it: hee muste bee humbled afore. That is the thing whereat Iob ameth. But for asmuch as they with whom hee talked, had bene hardened and were settled in the blind ouerweening of their owne wisdom: Iob will haue the truth heard, and not to ceasse to haue authoritie still, notwithstanding that these men reiect it. Thus yee see Iobs meaning in effect. According herevnto, wee see how Sainct Paule is forced sometimes to make comparison betweene himselfe and those that were of estimation among men. It is certayne that S. Paule was not prouoked thereto by vaingloriousnesse, nother was hee ledde with such a minde as to desire & couet to be esteemed among men. VVhy then cōpareth he himself with such as had bene wont to magnifie themselues? If they be Hebrewes (sayeth he) so am I: if they be of aūcient li-rage, I also may well account my pedegree: If they bee earnest followers of the Law, I am so too as well or more than they, I haue liued without blame: if they boast theselues too haue any knowledge, I also haue bene well taught frō my childhood, and I haue had a good mayster.

 It seemeth there, that S. Paule gathereth together all the things that are wont to be esteemed: to the end that men should clap their hands at him, and take him for a great man, and set much store by him. But he ment no suche thing. For he himselfe auoucheth it to bee starke folly.
 VVell (sayeth he) you compell mee to play the foole, and to do as they do which spred out their wings, & be med-ling with euery thing to be magnified among men: I am faine (sayeth he) to deale so, but not of mine owne will.
 And why? For he saw that the Corinthians & such other like were forepossessed with a fonde reputation of men that were nothing worth, & loued none but such maner of teachers, bicause they had itching eares, by meanes wherof Gods Gospell was despised, and those troublers had their full scope. And they that had nother wisdom nor discretion to consider what was for their profit, suffered themselues to be led by such as had nothing but faire glozings without any holinesse. S. Paule then perceyuing this, telleth them. No no, If these maner of men purchase themselues estimation by these meanes: I may do so as well as they, but I wil not: For that is not the thing wherin we must be esteemed: according as he concludeth in the end, that if any mā wil be cōted to be of Gods Church, he must become a new creature. Ye see then (sayeth he) that the estimation is to be had at Gods hande, and not by these braueries wherwith mens heads are buzied. Neuer-thelesse, S. Paule (as we see) ment to shew, that he was not inferiour to those that pretended greatesyles to bee in some preheminece and dignitie to the worldward, after the same maner that Iob doth here. He sawe that those men ment to treade Gods truth vnder foote, bicause they were in reputation. But Iob for his parte telleth them he vnderstoode the things as well as they: and there-vpon he purposed to warne them to be more lowly and to yeelde themselues teachable. And although they had bene vtterly vnamendable and stubborne in their folie:
 yet neuerthelesse Iobs mind was, that Gods truth, which had bene in maner peruerced by them, should haue full authoritie as it deserueth. Thus much cōcerning the first poynt. And by the way we must bee warned not to seeke prayse or reputation afore men. For if wee intend that, it is certayne that in fledge of maynteyning the truth, we shall marre all: and God also will suffer vs to be for-ted in our owne folie, and too be made a very laughing-stocke. Then lette vs bee well ware that wee seeke not our owne prayse. But when our Lord giueth vs the grace to teach others, let the same tende to this marke, namely to honour him, and to cause the thing too bee well accepted which cōmeth of him, so as men may submit themselues vnto it, and we our selues shew example to others to do so: according also as our Lord Iesus Christ setteth
 the same thing downe for a marke too discerne the good and true doctrine by. For when a man seeketh the glorie of God, men knowe thereby that he is a minister of the truth. But if he desire to be exalted and esteemed:
 he must needes disguise and marre all, and the pure doctrine must needes bee detaced through his vaingloriousnesse. Marke this for a speciall poynt. But nowe let

1. Cor. 11. c.
 22.
 Phil. 3. 4. 5.

2. Cor. 11. c.
 16. 17.

2. Cor. 5. d.
 17.

Iohn. 7. c.
 18.

vs come to that which Iob sayeth. Yee are (sayeth he) forgers of lyes, and pelting Phisitians, and I would sayne that yee should all of you holde your tungs: for that were moſte wisedom for you. VVhen Iob calleth them forgers of lies which had spoken afore, we see straytwayes to what purpose he sayeth it. Nowe let vs take the saying that is added, namely that they bee pelting Phisitians. VVhy so?
 Bicause they misapply their medicines as we haue seene.
 It hath bene tolde you alreadie that the doctrine whiche hath bene set downe by these men, was good and holy, howbeit that it was ill applied to the persone of Iob. It is as if a Phisitian should chooze good drugs, but yet (without knowing the parties disease, complexion, or nature,) should say to him, Lo, here is a good medicine, and a well tryed, and therefore it shall doo this man good.
 But if he deale so: whereas he saueth one, he shall kill another. Therefore it behoueth a Phisitian to be wise, that he knowe his patients complexion and disease. But these men here had no such regarde. And thus yee see why Iob called them pelting Phisitians of no value. And behold here a texte well woorthie too be marked. VVee knowe that Gods woorde is the ordinarie foode of our Soules: but yet must the same serue vs also for Phisicke when wee be diseased. Bread hath alwayes his accustomed vse: but Gods woorde must not onely feede vs, it must furthermore heale our diseases and clenze vs. And therefore there must be discretion vsed in the applying of it. For without that, we shall confound all. As how? If a poore man be desolate, and haue a troubled conscience,
 & we see him at the poynt of despayre: if one should set Gods threatenings and vengeance afore him: what were it els but to send him headlong forward? I see a wall that shaketh alreadie, and I beate at it with great strokes of a mattocke: is it not the next way to throwe it downe? The must wee marke how they be disposed with whom wee haue to doo. For if a poore man be already dismayed at Gods wrath & know not where to become he had neede to be comforted and cheered vp with the promises that God giueth to wretched sinners in calling them too him so sweetely. This medicine then must be applied peculiarly to suche as haue neede of it. But there are others which are shamelesse, & despise God, and scoffe at al that euer is sayd to them: now if a man come to cocker them in it, by offering them the mercie of God, and by setting afore them the pittie that God hath of vs: were it not a foolish proceeding? For such folke haue neede too bee touched to the quicke, and to be threatened, yea & to be wounded euen to the bottome of the hart if it bee possible, that they may know what it is to stomacke in that wise against God. Now then we see, that the holy Scripture, beyng the spirituall Phisike of our soules, must be applied according to euery mans dispositiō. And now let vs marke in what state Iob was. He was extremely pressed with the affliction that God had sente him, and wee haue seene the reason why, namely for that it behoued his pacience to be exercysed. God giueth him pacience, howbeit not but that he should haue much infirmitie therewith: for like a wretched man, he starteth out of square, & casteth forth bubbles and froath against God.
 Not that he leapeth quite out of his boundes, but he holdeth not such an euennesse and measure as he ought to haue done. Then how soeuer the case stode, there was infirmitie in Iob. He knew well ynough how it was God that afflicted him: howbeit forasmuch as he sawe not the cause why, he thought that God pressed him too sore, and that he ought to haue spared him more. And what do they that come to comfort him? They tell him that God is righteous: and that is true. Herevpon they concludē

conclude that God punisheth not men without good causes, and that his handling of them so roughly is by reason of their finnes: all this is true. But they misapply it particularly in concluding that God handleth every man according to his desert, for we see the flat contrarie. Out of a generall principle that is good and true, they drawe an euill consequence. For although God be iust, and men bee sinners, and haue deserued it: yet doth it not follow that God punisheth them thereafter to the full: or that he keepeth one continuall rate, so as he shoulde presently punish those that haue offended, and referue nothing till the latter day. Also it followeth not that Iob was a wicked man, and an hypocrite, & that God shewed evidently that he was shaken off, or that he had nothing els but hypocrisie in him before. All these things are false, notwithstanding that these men take them and deriue them from a true grounde. And so ye see wherefore Iob calleth them pelting Phisitions. This streyne then warneth vs to pray God to giue vs wisdom, that we may take the holy Scripture to such end as it pertayneth, and that we may haue the discretion to applie it in such wise as wee may do good with it, and that it be not pulled too and fro by the toppe (as they say) according as many men abuse it. Furthermore when wee take in hand to teach our neyghbours: let vs consider well what is fit for them. The holy Scripture (sayeth S. Paule) is fit to teache, to incourage, to warne, to reprove, and to redresse. Yea but it must be considered what maner of one the partie is that it muste be applyed vnto, as I sayde afore. If wee see a poore sinner that is cast downe and mourneth for his finnes, and desireth nothing but to returne vnto God: let it be shewed him that God is ready too accept him and receyue him. Yee see then how wee ought too deale in that behalfe. Contrarywise if wee see one that is prowde and stately: wee knocke vpon his harde pate with a beetle too make him meeken himselfe before God. And if wee see a slouthfull persone: hee muste bee pricked forewarde like an Asse. Thus ye see how the holy Scripture may bee profitable too vs. But in the meane season wee must also keepe the same maner of proceeding on our owne behalfe. For wee muste be the same to our neyghbours that we be too our selues. VVee see that when their conscience is combered, and themselues are disquieted in minde, they feede their owne humour. For they take Gods threatenings so rigorously, as they thinke they shoulde neuer come soone ynough to despayre. Let vs keepe vs from such dealing. And when wee spie Sarans wylineffe in making vs beleue that we be vtterly paste recouerie, and that there is no helpe too recomfort vs: lette vs resist it, and applie the remedie therevnto. It is Satan that worketh: and therefore wee on the contrarie parte muste seeke some asswagement too bring vs backe vnto God, wee muste enter into his promises, wee muste giue heedfull eare vnto them, and wee muste set all our wittes vpon them. Moreouer, when we see there is too much slouthfulnesse in our selues, so as wee haue neede too bee pricked and spurred: lette vs take vs too the exhortations that are in the holie Scripture. Thus yee see how we may be good Phisitions bothe towardes our selues and towardes our neyghbours by considering what is meete and conuenient for vs. And as touching that Iob sayeth, that he would fayne that his frendes would holde their peace, that they might be counted wyse men: it agreeth with the common

2.Tim. 3. d. 16.

Prouerb. d. 23.

it priuillie: neuerthelesse it is a beginning to doo well when a man hath holde of himselfe and can rule his tung: for it is a token that he delighteth not altogether in his owne folie. True it is that some can couer their folie for a time: but in the ende they bee fayne too bewray themselues, and too make menne too knowe what they bee, that is to witte, fooles. Neuerthelesse if a man haue skill to keepe silence, although he be but of a weake wit, and haue not such discretion as were requisite: yet is it a great poynt of wisdom that he knoweth it, and fodeth not himselfe in his vyce, but rather laboreth to amende it. I say, although such folie remayne in a man: yet is it a great poynt of wisdom when he auanceth not himself, but knoweth himselfe in such sort as he misliketh of it and humbleth himselfe. But if a man bewray himselfe to bee a foole by his owne tung: it is a token that he is a starke foole: according as we often see, that such as haue least skill, are babbling without reason, so as a man cannot by any meanes hold them from it, but when he hath talked with them a whole houre together, he shall finde them to bee the same men still. Therefore when men are perceyued to bee at that poynt: it is a signe of extreme folie. And therefore let this Prouerbe put vs in minde of that which S. James telleth also: that is to wit, that it is a great vertue when a man can skill to holde his tung and to vse it soberly. And why? For if wee be too hastie to speake, it hindereth vs fro hearing that which is for our profit. VVhat is the cause that many men profit not at all in the woorde of God? It is bycause they are too hastie, that whereas they ought to be quiet, and whereas onely God ought to haue the hearing: they step forth with their bubbles and caste forth their talke, yea euen at randon. Therefore they shet the gate in such wise against themselues, as they cannot be instructed though the doctrine be offered thē. For this cause let vs marke well, that when S. James counseleth vs to brydie our tungs, his meening is that we should be quiet & discrete to heare, if we purpose to profit by that which is sayd vnto vs: and further, that among men: we must not be to talkatiue, nor wearie them with our vprofitable babbling: and this must euey one of vs put in vre. It is not needfull to make long sermons of it, for these are such things as shoulde rather be continually minded than set forth at large with many woordes. And the more that we perceyue it to be harde to frame our selues vnto the sayde vertue: so much the more ought wee to esteeme it in the man that can skill too speake as much as he ought and no more. But now lette vs come to the cheefe poynt that is touched here, Iob sayeth, That he will neuerthelesse talke with God, and that he will reason against him: but he blameth those that had gone aboute to ouercome him by their disputations, as who should say they would speake in the defence of God. Thinke yee (sayeth he) that God hath neede of your leasings? or that you should come here too be his proctours and aduocates? hath he neede that men shoulde defende him after suche a fashion? Thinke you that this shall auayle you when he commeth to trie you? ye must bee ouerwhelmed by him for all your pretence of desirousnesse too iustifie him. He will shewe that he abhorreth such dealings, and that he wil be maynteyned by his owne rightuousnesse, without borrowing of any meanes to be acquitted at mens hands, and without borrowing of their leasings, and of the excuses that they shall haue forged. VVhereas Iob sayeth he will talke with God and dispute against him: verely there is some excessse in that saying: but lette vs also marke the good that is in it, that wee may discern it from the euill. Beholde, the good that is in this saying of Iobs, is that he will turne away from men. And why? For they with whom he had too doo perceyued not the spirituall battell that he had in himselfe, and that he could haue found in his hart too haue indured a hundred times more, so be it that God had sweetened his stripes with such comfort as he might haue knowne, that God is fauourable to me, and he will neuer faile me. Had Iob bene thoroughly perswaded of that, and that God had hidde him by his mighty hande: no doubt but he had bene readie to haue indured a hundred times more. Howbeit forasmuch as he perceyued nothing in God but rigour, so as it seemed to him that God was vtterly against him, and persecuted him with extremitie: he woteth not where he is: behold, he is out of his wittes. But such spirituall battels are not easie to be knowne of men. And therefore Iob sayeth, that he will talke with God: that is to say, that he will shrinke into himselfe, and that being so gathered close in secretes, he will holde himselfe there. For men take these wordes at randon and wrest them as they list themselves: but God knoweth well ynough to what ende his speaking tendeth. Marke this for a speciall poynt. And further let vs also marke, that when the case standeth vpon the framing of our selues vnto pacience: if we indure any aduersitie, we must comfort our selues in God: and if we be tried, so as the Diuell tempteth and thrusteth vs forward to despayre, there is nothing so good as to gather our wittes home. And why so? For so long as we gaze at men, we shall nothing awayle, but (which more is) we shall doo our selues harme. If I be troubled that I can no more: well, if I comfort my selfe with fayre shewes onely, and make great protestations before men: God will laugh my fordwelthe to scorn, in so much that when I come to my selfe againe, and am alone, my conscience will pinche mee, and then shall I feele how all that euer I pretended was but smoke. And why? Bicause I haue had more regard of men than of God. So then, when a man intendeth to frame himselfe vnto pacience: it is good for him to withdraw into himselfe, as if he were separated fro the whole worlde, and to reserue himselfe wholly vnto God, and suffer himselfe to be gouerned by him. And truly seing we are in such necessities, we haue good cause to call vpon God: but how shall we call vpon him, if we be not as it were cut off from men? For so long as I am fastened to this or that: so long am I turned aside from God. VVe see then that we must cut off al these cordes that hold vs backe, and present our selues before the maiestie of God as the onely partie whom we haue regard of. True it is that we must regarde our neyghbours also, both too edifie them, and to receyue comfort at their handes. But in the meane whyle we muste beginne at this poynt: that is to wit, at the laying open of our hartes before God, that we disburden all our matters, sorrowes, and cares vnto him. Yee see then how our talking with God muste bee to the ende that men drawe vs not hither and thither: but that like as God seeth vs, so we haue our eyes settled and fastened vpon him alone, and all that is hidden in our hartes may bee clenzed and voyded away, when wee bee come to that poynt and are appeared before him. Thus yee see the good that wee haue to gather out of these woordes of Iob, and howe they be profitable for our instruction. But there is also euill in them: which is, that he will enter into disputation with God. True it is that sometimes God giueth vs leaue to reason with him: yea, but our disputings muste not bee long: and besides that, the conclusion of them must alwayes bee to glorie him. As howe? VVe see that the Prophets finde faulte with the calamities and desolations which they sawe: for they say, Lorde, howe can it bee that thou shouldest destroy thy people? wilt thou suffer things too bee confounded after this sorte? wilt thou neuer sette them in order? Thus yee see one kinde of disputing or reasoning with God. Yea, but the Prophets and holy men rested not in that poynt. For when they had bewrayed their infirmities after that maner, they alwayes concluded, doo thou therewith and dispose thou thereof according to thy wonderfull wisedome: it is not for vs too replie against thee, and therefore we will patiently wayte what shall become of thy worke. True it is that wee bee sore amazed as nowe when wee see things go too suche confusion. Yet notwithstanding Lorde, thou wilt provide well ynough for all, and in such wise as thy name may be prayseed: vntill such time as all bee set in order againe, wee will as it were shrinke downe our heads too the grounde: according as it is sayde, I will lay my mouth to the dust, and the Saynets muste bee humbled in that wise. Ieremie was in horrible extremitie when he sayde so: for he sawe the vtter desolation of Gods Church, in so much that his couenant seemed to bee abolished, his whole seruice turned vpside downe, and the hope of the whole worlde buried. And therefore after that Ieremy had made his moane, hee sayeth he will lay his mouth too the grounde, and rather eate dust and dung than lifte vp his beake too lette his tung at large against God. Yee see then how it is lawfull for vs sometime too reason with God: howbeit so as it bee very myldly, and that the winding vp of it bee as I haue sayde: that is to witte, too glorie God referring our selues wholly vnto him. Lo in effect what wee haue too marke. But lette vs come backe agayne too Iobs persone. He intendeth to dispute against God: and after what maner? It is after suche a sorte that although he knowe there is a double rightuoufnesse in God: (that is to witte, the same which is manifested to vs in his lawe, and the other which he keepeth hidden:) yet he coulde not conceyue the cause why God tormented him after that sorte, but it seemed to him that God ought too haue borne with him. Therefore in this disputing, Iob vexeth himselfe, and this passion of his is farre out of square, and the disputation is ioyned with it and dependeth vpon it. Yee see then that Iob doeth amisse and is to be condemned for reasoning after that sorte with God. Then let vs marke well that whensoever God handleth vs roughly, and we be tempted to grudge and fret against him, we must bridle our selues. True it is (as I haue sayd) that God beareth with vs if we vtter our griefs ynto him, & say, Alas Lord, thou seest what I am, I can no longer hold out, shall it be thus with mee euer? must I yet linger still a longer time? VVe may (say I) make such meanes to God: but when he hath giuē vs such libertie, yet will he haue vs neuerthelessse to conclude thus: Lord, we are thine, and thou shalt do with vs what it pleaseth thee, and it is not for vs but to glorie thee in all respects. Lo what wee haue too marke, not only when the matter concerneth our persones, but also generally when it shall seeme too vs that Gods workes haue no reason in them. For example: if wee see greates stumblings, and that the wicked haue their full scope, and that God provide not for the good, but suffereth them to be afflicted without giuing them any ease: by and by we say, How now? God hath declared that he wil ayde those that call vpon him, and we see the cleane contrarie. VVe cease not too haue recourse vnto him, and yet is he as it were deafe for any prayers that wee offer vnto him. Againe he hath promised to defend his Church, and behold how it is left vp to the spoyle. VVe see that horrible tirannie beareth the sway, and where is Gods had which should succour those that are his? doth he shew himselfe willing

James. 3. a. 2.

Lam. 3. 4. 29

willing to mainteyne his owne cace, when men see his Church is openly oppressed, and the enemies of all religion reigne now adayes in suche outrage as it is pitifull to see, and yet God represseth them not? Then if suche temptations come to our minde, let vs learne to get vs away and not to fall to reasoning with God. Thus yee see what we haue to marke vpon this streyne. Nowe lette vs come to the second poynt. Iob sayeth, that those which bad spokenment too curry fauour with God, as when we would support a mortall man: for the Hebrewe woordes that is set here, signifieth too like or accept ones face or persone. VVhat is the cause that wee accept perones in matters of iudgement here in this world? Though a man haue an euill cace, yet if he be our kinsman or freende, if he be commended vnto vs, if we may looke for any profite at his hand, or if he be in authoritie: well, we be moued with such a fleshly regard towardes him, and wee be so caried away with it, as the cace of the partie is nothing with vs, but the fauour of him blindeth vs. Also this word Face or Personne, is referred to the outwarde things that may serue to incline our mindes eyther to the louing or to the hating of any man. Thus then doth Iob speake: It seemeth to you that God hath neede of your helpe to support him, as a mortall man that hath an euill cace. And truly if one bee miaded too shewe him fauour, he will say, he is my kinsman, he is my freende, he is commended to me, he hath pleased me, or he will pleasure mee. Herevpon he disguyseth things after suche a sorte, as he proceedeth no more by right and equitie, but indirectly. And I beseeche you (sayeth Iob) hath God neede to be hilde vp in that wise, and too bee supported after the maner of men? It behoueth vs to marke wel this poynt, that it is not Gods will too haue his cace handled so. For he abhorreth all accepting of perones. VVe know that he telleth vs, that if wee will iudge rightly, wee muste be turned quite and cleane away from all worldly respects. For those considerations doo vterly bereeue vs of the vprightnesse and discretion which wee ought too haue. Howe happeneth it that when a man maketh a lawe, he will make it reasonable: and when he sitteth too iudge a cace, he will oftentimes giue a forked sentece? For when he maketh the lawe, hee hath his eye vpon the matter, he looketh vnto vprightnesse, and he cannot turne aside that he shoulde not followe that which is good. True it is that all menne haue not this consideration: but yet for all that, when wee haue no respect vnto menne, if a man propounde a cace vnto vs in suche wyse as the perones bee not medled with it, wee will iudge vprightly when the cace is layde naked afore vs. But if the twoo parties come before vs, and that the one bee riche or of our kinne, or that there bee some other like respect, and the other is a poore man, or not so well recommended vnto vs: Then is the iudge caried away, yea and he reuerfeth all the matter euen when the cace hath bene layde open before him, and that he hath giuen right iudgement vpon it. And why? For the perones bereeue him of the vprightnesse which he had. And here also yee see why our Lorde Iesus Christe sayeth, Iudge yee truely and not with accepting of perones. And he sheweth that too bee forepossest with any humane affection, whither it bee hatred or fauour, and too pronounce a good and vpartiall sentence, are thinges that cannot matche together. For our passions doo caste vs into suche darkenesse, that wee see not the right as wee did before. Yee see then howe God condemneth all accepting of perones: that is too say, the respect or regarde that wee haue too menne. Nowe if the cace bee so, that God will not haue any accepting of perones among menne, but vterly abhorreth it: will he take it in good woorth towardes himselfe seing he hath no neede of it? vndoubtedly he will not. So then wee see Iobs meening. But now remayneth that wee knowe the profite of this doctrine. For it is more profitable than a man woulde thinke before he hath put it in praetize. Let vs take the examples which wee see in these dayes with our eyes. There are that doo halfe stablishe Freewill. And why? That they may the better pleade their cace against God. But lette menne followe that thing purely whiche the holie Scripture sheweth vs. It is sayde that men are naught and frowarde, that they cannot so much as thinke a good thought, that they cannot so much as stirre one finger too doo good, that they bee the bondslaues of sinne, that all their thoughts are nothing els but a conspiracie against God, and that all their affections are enemies of goodnesse. Lo what the holy Scripture telleth vs. But there are that inferre herevpon, yea, is it so? and wherefore then hath God giuen vs the lawe, wherein he requireth that wee shoulde loue him with all our harte, with all our minde, with all our strength, and with all our power? For if wee be giuen vp to euill why doth God commaunde vs too doo well? is not this a playne mockerie? Other some say, seing wee can do no good, are wee not to be excused? For sinne ought not to bee imputed vnto vs, except wee bee able too absteyne from it. Seing then that that power is not in vs, it followeth that there is no more sinne in the worlde. Herevpon there stepe in sticklers, whiche would fayne playe the Philosophers too defende God, and to cleere him of all these slaunders. O (say they) it is true that wee bee weake, and that wee can doo nothing vnlesse God helpe vs: but his grace is readie for vs, take it who will: and wee may make it auaylable, if the faulte bee not in our selues. Beholde howe men are desirous to curry fauour with God by defacing the doctrine of the holy Scripture, as though God stoode in neede of their vntruthes. So is it also with Gods Election. VVhen men say that God chooseth whom he thinketh good, and leaueth the residue, and that it is vnknowne why he doth it, sauing that it so pleaseth him, and that his only wil ought to suffice vs for a final conclusion, and that in those whom God hath chozen we haue to consider his goodnesse and mercie: and that as touching those that are forsaken, they be as it were mirrours of his vengeance: when men speake after that maner, it is according too the Scripture. But nowe, beholde howe the malicious sorte doo ranckle and spewe out their blasphemies against God: yea, (say they) and if he chooze whom he listeth, then is he an accepter of perones. VVhy doth he chooze the one rather than the other? Verely as who should say, that God regarded our sayre eyes in choozing of vs, and that the cause sprang not in himselfe, that is to say, in his owne meere goodnesse. But yee see how men are alwayes desirous to checke against God. And herevpon come in these sticklers that I spake of to qualifie the matter. O (say they) we must not say that God doth after that sort chooze whom he thinketh good (for that should giue the wicked men occasion to runne further out of square) but wee muste rowe betweene bothe the streames too content the one as well as the other. VVell then (say they) it is true that God choozeth: but it is those whome he foresawe too be disposed to receyue his grace. And on the other side, looke whom he foreknew too bee wicked and that they woulde not bee the better for his choozing of them, them doeth hee leaue suche as they bee, knowing well ynough that they would be vndone by their owne Freewill. Tl us; ee see how the wicked sorte doo speake of

2. Cor. 3. b. 5
Ioln. 8. d. 34
Rom. 8. b.
6. 7.

Gods election, enen peruerting all truth : and yet they beare themselues in hand that God liketh well of them for doing so. But let vs rather assure our selues that God abhorreth them, as this text sheweth vs. And so yee see to what vse we muste apply this doctrine, if we minde to fare the better by it. Surely it deserueth to be layde forth more at length, and so it shalbe God willing: but as now the time will not suffer a man to say any more.

But now let vs cast our selues downe before the presence of our good God with acknowledgment of our sinnes, praying him to humble vs in such wise, that being conuicted of offending him diuers wayes, we may seeke nothing but his fauour: and that if he afflict vs for a time, and vse such rigour as may seeme excessiue vnto vs, yet wee may still keepe our mouth shut, wayting patiently till he deliuer vs from all our troubles: and that in the meane season we may giue him his due glorie, acknowledging the authoritie which hee hath ouer vs and all creatures. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations, &c.

The .l. Sermon, which is the second vpon the thirtenth Chapter.

This Sermon is yet still vpon the vij viij. ix. and x. verses, and then as followeth.

11. Doth not his Maiestie amaze you? doth not the feare of him fall vpon you?
12. Your remembrance is like vnto ashes, and your bodies too bodies of clay.
13. Holde your tungs in my presence, and lette mee speake, and lette happen too mee vvhath can.
14. VVherefore should I take my flesh in my teerh, and put my soule into my handes?
15. Although he kill mee, yet vvill I trust in him: neuerthelesse I vvill reprove my vvayes in his sight.

WE haue to go forward with the matter that wee began yesterday: which is, that the Scripture sheweth vs many things which our vnderstanding cannot brooke. For when a man speaketh to vs after that manner concerning God: there is such a scornfulnesse in vs, as (to our seeming) wee are not bounde to receyue any thing which wee finde not to be good. Herevpon there haue bene some that would fayne play the wyze men in disguising of things, too the ende that all might bee well lyked, according as I alledged two examples yesterday. The one concerneth Freewill. For beholde what the Scripture tellet vs: namely, that men can do no good at all, but are hilde prisoners altogether vnto euil. Many are of opinion, that if it were so, then sinners were excused and quitte, in asmuch as they haue no power in them too do good. And there are forgers of lies, which rowe betweene twoo streames and say, that then it were better to graunt men some Freewill, to the intent they may be blamewoorthie when they haue done amisse. Yea, but the Scripture speaketh otherwise. VVherefore is it that they flee too suche starting-hoies, if it bee not that they forge leafings too currie fauour with God? hath he neede of their lies? muste his truth be maynteyned by that meane? As much is to be fayde of those that darken Gods grace in that he hath chozen whom he thought good, before the creation of the worlde, and reiected the rest. And how is that? It is a very sore poynt, and wee see that many men haue stumbled at it. Ye see what these Sages alledge, and yet in the meane whyle they steppe in like sticklers, saying, we say that God hath chozen those that ought to be faued. And why is that? bycause he foresawe that they would be well disposed therevnto. Therefore in asmuch as he foreknew that they would be ready to receyue his grace: he marked them out, that he might say, these are mine. But doth the Scripture speake so? No, it speaketh cleane contrarie. For it sayeth that God findeth vs all alike, and that it is he which putteth a difference betwixt vs: and that there is nother barreil better hearing of vs, saying that God of his owne infinite goodnesse draweth vs out of death. Thus yee see the pure and simple doctrine of the holy Scripture. VVherefore doo men come too brabble here? As I tolde you, it is bicause they thinke too excufe God by it. Yea? muste God bee fayne to borrowe our lyes, and muste wee be his spokemen with our wrangling trickes, like as wee see that euil cases had neede to bee well coloured, and altogether turkined, that it may so bleare the eyes of the iudges, as they may bee able too knowe nothing? Is it needefull too worke after this fashon in Gods behalfe? Then lette vs marke well how it is sayde here, that when wee shall haue sought all the corners of our wite to colour that which men would els reiect and condemne, too the intent that there might be no article in all the holy Scripture, that might be misliked: God will condemne vs for such sophistical inuentions. This extendeth yet further. For wee see howe many there are at this daye that would fayne be meddling too make a meane betwixt vs and the Papistes. Verely (say they) it is true that there be many abuses in the Church, (they confesse all) and things are ouergrosse and vnable to be borne withall, and therefore it is needefull too haue some reformation. They will confesse this. But in the meane season, if they bee demaunded what it is that wee preache: they finde not any fault or peece of fault with our doctrine, but that we followe the pure simplicitie of the Gospell without adding or diminishing: notwithstanding, they see it is reiect of many, and that men cannot agree, and that it were a very harde matter to reforme all things hande smooth, and men are not so gentle too bee dealt withall. Herevpon they finde out and forge a deuise too say, It were beste then too holde a meane [betweene bothe,] as wee sawe in the Interim. VVhat hath bene the cause too bring vs this Diuclishnesse, but onely that they whiche were the deuifers of it, were desirous too play the Alchymistes or multipliers, and too finde out a newe Quintessence and I wote not what? For they haue bene sufficiently conuicted, that in Poperie there is nothing but horrible confuzion, and that all things are ouerfarre out of order. The Idolatrie there is as grosse as may be: the seruing of God is vterly defaced, wee see that men put their trust in their owne deseruings: they haue imagined that Iesus Christe was as it were buryed, they trotted too this Sainct and that Sainct, to haue them their patrons patrones before God: the Sacramentes are sette out too gaze vpon: they make chaffer and merchandize of mennes soules: they impute more too pelting trifles and too ceremonies than is meete, inſomuche that they make Idols of them. Yee ſee then that theſe Neuters knowe all this well ynough, and that it had neede to bee remedied. But in what wiſe? O (ſaye they) the thing that theſe Lutherans haue deſired hitherto, is in maner impoſſible: the worlde cannot abide ſuch an alteration: and therefore there had neede too bee ſome meane. Yea mary, it is true that men haue corrupted Gods ſeruice by leaning to that which hath bene commanded by men: and therefore it is requiſite that for obedience ſake men ſhoulde be bounde too doo ſo ſtill, howbee it not too be bounde in ſo great penaltie, nor ſo ſtraytly as before. Againe, men haue truſted too much to the merites of workes: and therefore it muſt be ſayde now, that we ought to begin with Gods grace, and that the ſame is the cheefe piller wherevpon to reſt. VVhereas Ieſus Chriſt hath bene as good as nobody, and men haue not reſorted to him for grace: Nowe hee muſt be declared to be our Aduocate, yea our cheefe Aduocate, but not our onely Aduocate. And all this while men may mingle theyr owne merites with the grace of God, and mens cominaundements muſt alwayes bee obſerued after ſome maner. Alſo men muſt not ceaſſe too haue the deceaſſed Sainctes to be their Aduocates, ſo as they may be fellow commiſſioners with Ieſus Chriſt. As for worſhipping of Images, men will bee no more ſo ſotted: but it may well be ſayde, that Images are to ſtirre vp the deuotion of the ignorant and ſimple ſort: and verely it is an ouer groſſe follie too gad after them on pilgrimage, but yet in the meane while men may keepe ſtill ſome deuotion to them for the weake and ignorant. As touching the Sacraments, men may well ſhewe that they ought not to be had in ſo great eſtimation, but men ought to knowe that they ought not to make account of them, but for the remembrance of Chriſt: but yet men may conceyue of them they wote not what. As for the Maſſe, well, that ſhall no more be ſo much aduanced, men ſhall haue no more particular Maſſes for the deade, nor in honour of ſuch a Sainct, nor for this thing and that: but there ſhall be a common Maſſe and men ſhal ſay ſtill that it is a Sacrifice: not that Ieſus Chriſt is not the true Preeſt that offereth himſelfe to God his father: but the Maſſe ſhall represent the death and paſſion of Ieſus Chriſt. Lo how theſe leazing forgers haue ſurmized themſelues too woorkte politikely in making ſuche a medlye, too the ende that the Goſpell might not bee too rough too the worlde. On the contrary part it is ſayde, that God will not be ayded nor ſerued by our leaſings. VVhat is to be done then? Let vs walke ſoundly and plainly, and let vs haue our mouthes ſhet, to the ende that when hee hath ſpoken, wee may holde our ſelues to that which proceedeth out of his mouth, without any replying therevnto. Beholde (I ſay) howe we may bee allowed at his hande. But he will condemne vs with all our ſhiftes, if we think to purchaſe his fauour after our owne fancie, and ſtep neuer ſo little aſide from the pureneſſe of his worde too miſſaſhion his iudgements though they bee neuer ſo ſtraunge to mans imagination. And now let vs come to that which is added. Do: not his Maieſtie amaze you, and do: not his feare fall vpon you, (ſayeth Iob?) And afterwarde hee addeth, That their memoriall is lyke Aſbes, and their bodies are as a bodie of Clay. Hereby hee meeneth, that when we lie in Gods behalfe, it is as much too ſay as we conceyue not his Maieſtie, and that we would make him like our ſelues, and pull him downe hither, as if we were haye fellow well met with him. Beholde (I pray you) what driueth men. VVhy are they ſo ſhameleſſe in falſifying Gods truth? Bycauſe they would meature it by their owne ſpanne. And what an oddes is there betwixt God and vs? Then let vs learne to conceyue what manner of one the Maieſtie of God is. And rhervpon let vs be no more ſo fooliſhe, as to deſire to inroch any thing either vpon his worde, or vpon his iudgements. Let vs dooke downe with our heades, and let God ſay what it pleaſeth him. And when we haue hearde his worde, let him alſo doo what hee thinketh good, and let vs honour him in all his workes, ſpecially when we enter into the conſideration of our owne feebleneſſe and frayltie, too ſay, what are wee? Thus ye ſee the two things that Iob compareth together heere. Firſt he ſayth, Doth not the Maieſtie of God amaze you? VVhen he ſpeaketh of Maieſtie or dignitie, hee ſheweth that men ought too be ſomewhat better aduiſed when they talke of God. But what? VVee ſtep to it bluntly, and it ſeemeth to vs that God will ſuffer men to play with him, as he addeth immediately after. Therefore when wee ſpeake of God, let vs learne to conceyue the infinite glorie that is in him. For when we haue once conceyued that: it cannot be but we muſt be humbled to ſay, Alas, it is no ſpeaking of God after the maner of men, nor making of any compariſon with him. For what ſhoulde bee made of him? where would we ſet him? or in what degree would we place him? VVoulde wee haue him matched with hys creatures? Is not that aſmuch as to make him a thing of nothing? And what ſhall become of his Maieſtie when men haue abaced him after that ſort? Then if wee had the wit to conceyue or but onely too taſte what Gods infinite glorie is: it is certaine that we ſhould learne too humble our ſelues vnderneath the ſame, and not be any more ſo ouerweening, as to make our ſelues belecue this or that. Furthermore let vs bethinke our ſelues. For the feebleneſſe and wretchedneſſe that are in mans nature, giue a farre greater gloſſe to Gods Maieſtie, inſomuch as hee muſt needes bee magnified the more, when wee knowe throughly what we our ſelues are. If wee had in vs the glorie of Angelles, wee ſhould approche the nearer vntoo God: but yet ſhould we be ſayne to do as the Angels doo, according as it is ſayde of them vnder the ſhape of the Cherubins, that they were ſayne too hyde their faces, & were not able to looke vpon God throughly. True it is that the Scripture ſayeth they ſee Gods face: But howe is that ſeeing of it? They are not able to abide it without caſting downe their eyes, and as it were without couering their faces with their wings: that is to ſay [they are not able to doo it] without a baſhfulneſſe in reuerencing God as their ſoueraigne, vntoo whom they are not able to attaine, and without acknowledging the ſame highneſſe to humble themſelues therevnto. Lo how it is with the Angels of heauen. And now how fare we that are but rottenneſſe? As touching our ſoules, they bee but as little ſparkes, which ſhoulde bee quenched out by and by, and paſſe away into a ſhadowe, were it not that God preferueth them in their ſtate, and that hee did it of his owne meere goodneſſe. Then haue we not in our ſelues the power to ſtande one minute of an hower, but God muſt be ſayne to preferue vs, becauſe there is nothing in vs but ſmoke and vanitie. VVhen we knowe this: it is certaine that all preſumptuousneſſe will be well beaten downe in vs, ſo as wee ſhall no more haue this fooliſhe deſire of diſputing after our owne maner, to paynt God with our colours, according as we ſee him diſfigured and rent in peeces by men. VVee ſhall no more bee ſo preſumptuous and malapart, when wee

Eſay. 6. 4. 2.

know what his glorie is, and haue well bethought vs of the weaknesse that is in oure selues. Thus yee see after what sort wee shall bee astonished with feare of him, as Iob speaketh heere. For it is impossible that this knowledge of God should be ydie in men, and that it should not cast them downe in such wise, as they durst no more be so bolde to babble of God. For when they haue spoken so at randon, it is a token that they neuer knewe him, nor felt what his Maiestie is. And why? As I sayd afore, it is a liuely feeling when wee once vnderstande that it is God that hath created vs, and that wee are of him, and that whether we looke vpwarde or downwarde, all things are in his hand, and that there is in him a wonderfull rightuousnesse, there is in him a wisdom that is hid from vs, there is in him an incomparable goodnesse. If wee knowe all these things, it cannot bee but we must needes bee altonyed, and abashed in our selues, so as we shall vterly abace our selues before him, and honour his highnesse whiche is infinite. So then let vs learne to know better what God is, to the ende wee may bee trayned to all modestie and sobernesse, and therewithal also let vs examin what we our selues are. VVhen we see our owne fleshe doth tickle vs to like well of our selues, so as wee bee inclyned too flatter our selues, and seeke to stande in our owne conceyte: let vs stirre vp our selues to say, whence cometh this vice? It is because thou hast not yet knowne thy selfe. Consider who thou art, do but enter intoo thy selfe, and bee iudge of thine owne state. There we shall finde that we haue a bottomlesse gulfe of sinfulness in vs, and that we bee wrapped in such ignorance as is horrible to beholde, which is as it were so thicke a darkenesse, as it vterly choketh and strangleth vs: and so farre off are wee from hauing our eyes open to knowe God: as we see not the thing that is before oure noze. Therefore when men shall haue bethought themselves in that wize, it is certaine that they shall be so touched with the Maiestie of God, that whereas it was seene that they were full of pride, and as it were harebraynde in speaking of God, so as there was no reuerence nor modestie in them at all: then the feare of God shall fall vpon them. In steede of the great and straunge rashenesse that is too bee seene in the worlde, men shall finde the reuerent awe of God. And why? For (as I sayde) when wee haue once conceyued what God is: wee shall stoope vnder him. Againe on the other side, when wee see what oure selues are, wee shall haue no more cause too stande in oure owne conceyte, nor to aduance our selues in any maner wise. Thus yee see what Iob ment too betoken by these two sentences. And for the greater confirmation, hee sayth. Yea, but thinke you that hee will beare with you if ye dally with him as with a man? He sheweth vs herein, that men are beguiled in that they knowing not the Maiestie of God to honour the fame, as they ought too doo, doo dally wyth him. VVhereas we ought to play in dealing one with another, that hee that can deceyue, slieth not to deceyue; and all is well ynough so it bee not perceyued. And like as we conuey our wyles among men: so also would we make our couin to passe for good payment to Godwarde: but that is too too great an abuse. Therefore let vs not thinke too dally with such a craftes mayster, and too scape vnpunished. For although he God suffer men too runne ryote for a tyme: yet in the ende he will not misse too shewe them that hee is not the partie that they tooke him for, but another maner of man. Hee is not the partie that they tooke him to bee, because hee is not lyke the creatures which ought to be obedient to the common rule in such wyse as they may bee brought too an account and measured by the lawe that hee hath giuen vnto vs: vnto vs I say, for he hath squared out his law to be our meetyard, and not to be subiect to it himselfe. Heerewithal also men must vnderstand, that he is another maner of one than they haue imagined him to bee: for they haue not had an eye to the infinite glorie that is in him. Therefore let vs beware of this dallying. For God sheweth vs that whensoever we treat eether of his worde or of his workes, wee must go to it in good earnest. And nowe Iob sayth, Holde your tongues afore mee: I will speake: and let besfall mee what can. Heere Iob sheweth that he is not like these babblers, that skirmishe with Gods worde, and with his iudgements, howbeit aloofe from handestrokes: According as ye shall see some haue their tungs well filed too talke: but that shall be but onely to debate of tryfing questions farre off from practize. But Iob sheweth himselfe to be none of those. And why so? You see (sayeth hee) howe I carie my flesh betweene my teeth, as if I were torne all to peeces, and that I were sayne too take vp my fleshe and my skinne in my teeth too carie them. I haue my soule (sayeth hee) betweene my bandes. Sith you see mee in suche plight, thinke not you that I prate like a Popiniay in a Cage. No, no: I am forced too speake from the hart. For God examineth mee by holding mee as it were vpon the racke. Then muste I needes vter my affections plainly. For as for me I speake as one that hath experience, and God tryeth mee after such a maner, as it is well seene I haue no leysure to colour matters, and too speake one thing for another. Therefore let mee speake. For yee shall not beare my burthen, it is God with whome I haue too deale, and it is hee also too whome I haue to answere: and so as for your discourses I leaue them there for so muche as they bee woorth, that is too say, for vterly vnprofitable and tryfing toys. But as for mee, I will speake according too that whiche God sheweth mee, and which hee sheweth mee by effect. Thus yee see breesely what Iob ment too say. But let vs marke heere the maner of speeche which hee vseth, namely, that he boldeth his fleshe betweene his teeth too carie it. For hee was as it were rent all too peeces, as if a mannes skinne were torne off, and hee wist not what too doo but too take it vp betwixt his teeth. Yee see then that Iob telleth in what plight hee was: and thereby hee sheweth himselfe too haue beene in so pitifull cace, as hee was no more like a lying creature. VVhereas hee sayeth that hee boldeth his soule (or his life) betweene his bandes: it is as much to say, as the fame was in vter hazarde, and as it were abandoned and left vp too the spoyle. And heerein a man may see the doltifnesse of the Papisstes, in that they haue surmized that too bolde ones soule betweene his bandes, signified too haue power too doo good or euill. Let men deuize what they list (saye they) I haue my soule in myne owne handes, that is too say, I can doo what I thinke good, I haue a freestate. To bee short, they ment too builde theyr free will vpon this sentence, I haue my soule betweene my bandes. But wee knowe that when God threatneth men, if hee tell them hee will leaue them in their owne hande: it is the forest scourge that can light vpon them. Beholde, God thundereth at vs when hee sayeth hee will leaue vs vp in our owne hand. And why? For if God holde vs not backe, there is no remedie but wee muste needes runne headlong intoo destruction. Therefore wee see howe the Papisstes were besotted, when they wrested the Scripture after that fashion. But the meaning is verie cleere in this streyne where Iob sayeth that hee beareth his soule in his hande, as if it were were alreadie breathed out. Our soule is clozed within our bodie as in a Chest, and that is the meane to keepe it: but if wee had it in our hande, it were all one as if it were left at random. Iob then declareth that hee is rather deade than aliyue, and that God handlerh him in such wise, as he is like a wretched rotten carkasse, so as there is no more liuelinesse in him, but is become lothly too all men. Lo (sayeth hee) I knowe well I am no more taken too bee of the companie of men, but am esteemed as a deade bodie. Hereby (as I sayde) Iob sheweth that he is not a speculatiue teacher, but a true practitioner of the things that he speaketh, that is to say, of Gods iudgements. And vndoubtedly, without this experience, wee can neyther knowe God, nor his hande, nor his power, nor his iustice, nor any thing else. True it is that all men shall not bee tryed as Iob was, that is too wit, with such rigour: but yet must we come to the touchstone, which will discouer vs to haue nothing but vaine speculations. If God doo not somertymes summon vs, so as wee maye feele what our sinnes, and what endlesse death is, and vnderstande that we be defitute of saluation, and shet out from all hope as in respect of our selues: wee shall neuer know to treat of God aright, I say we shall neuer know one iote of him with hartie affection. For these tryfing pratlers may well haue store of fayre shewes, and they may make their bragges before men: but there shall bee no steadinesse in them. Are we then desirous to speake of God earnestly and as becommeth vs? It is requisite for vs too haue bene exercysed aforehande and that we haue come too the tryall of it: that is too say, that God haue nipped vs, to the ende we may know both him and our selues. Thus ye see in effect what Iob hath ment in this streyne. And for the rest, let vs marke well, that when our Lorde putteth vs to such trials, wee had neede of a greater strength than is in man, to the ende we may stand. Vpon the hearing of some of Iobs wordes, wee woulde condemne him, and good cause why. But by the waye we must consider well the extremitie that hee was in, too the intent we may not thinke it straunge though hee had some temptations that ouermaystred him. Albeit that in the ende he withstoode all combats: yet had he some feeblenesse in the meane while, so as hee was in a maner quite quayled. And although his fayth fell not quite downe: yet was it shaken, and hee had some defaultes which hee well felt. Then behoued it him too ouergo such temptations, notwithstanding that they were right greuous too beare: and therefore let vs not thinke it straunge of his speech. For what man at this day can say as Iob sayd, namely that hee is as a poore desperate soule, that hee holdeth his fleshe and his skinne betweene his teeth, and that hee hath his soule in his hand. True it is that Dauid speaketh after the same maner in the hundred and nyneteenth Psalme: but yet in comparison, Iob was euen at the pittes bottome as wee see, if wee looke no further but vpon that which hee indured in his bodie, seeing hee was so broken out as a man woulde disdeyne too looke vpon him, yea and that the very sight of him was ynoughe too make a mans heare stande vp vpon his heade, and that hee was become so hideous a thing, as woulde shame a man, yea and loth his hart to heholde him. Nowe then if Iob had indured no more but these paynes in his bodie, had it not bene verie much? But the cheefe poynt (as I sayde) was the feeling of Gods iudgement, and how God persecuted him, in so much that he found no saour at his hand, but it seemed to him that God ment to adde continually plague vpon plague, till he had sent him to the bottome of death and damnation. Seeing then that Iob was layd at so roughly:

let vs not thinke it straunge that there were some temptations out of square in him. For it was meete that God shoulde in that poynt vter the perfectnesse of his owne strength in the infirmitie of man. But let vs on our side applic this too our instruction. And first of all, if God sende vs so great and excessiue afflictions as wee bee in maner swallowed vp: let not that make vs too despayre (as shall bee declared yet more at full heereafter) but let vs resist it, knowing that God doth still reserue his mercie readie for vs in time conuenient. And if wee be payned more than we woulde wishe: Let vs assure our selues that God will let the maladie rypen too heale it the better. If a man haue a plague fore: well, it is seene that the fore stinketh, and that it is ynoughe too impayre the health of the whole man: and yet for all that, the Phisition or Surgion will not launce the Byle at the first dash. And why? For hee shoulde but make it more firie, because the matter is not yet rype. But hee will lay some drawing playster too it first, too make the sore too rypen: and then afterwarde hee will be bolde to launce it. Euen so dealeth God with vs. For hee seeth that wee haue verye noysome plague sores: and what then? Let vs not thinke it straunge that hee healerh them not at the first dashe. For the disease must first bee made ripe, and then afterwarde God maye put too his hande, and finde conuenient remedies. Then let vs assure our selues that God knoweth what is good and conuenient for vs: and therefore let vs tarie his leysure with patience. But if wee bee too egre in making haste, when wee endure anye afflictions: what excuse can there bee for vs? Specially lithe wee see that Iob was come too the gulfe of hell, and yet neuerthelesse did humble himselfe before God: and that although he indured so greuous torments, and was in so excessiue sorrowe: yet hee restrayned himselfe. I say, if a man that was so punished, did still bridle himselfe: I praye you shall wee not bee too vnexcusable, if wee chafe and frette our selues in our aduersities? Then let vs consider these things, and let euery of vs haue an eye too himselfe. VVhen we see that such a seruant of God hath bene tryed after that sort to the vttermost: we must be so much the more mylde in our aduersities, and not stomacke at God as we haue bene woont too doo. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in mynde concerning this streyne. And Iob sayeth, That although God kill him, yet will hee trust in him: neuerthelesse hee will reprocue his owne wayes before Gods presence. True it is that the Hebrew woorde Lo, (which I translate In him) maye bee taken for Not, and so dooth it signifie properly. Notwithstanding, it is some tymestaken Relatiuely, as they tearme it, and one letter is changed intoo another: which is a common vse among the Hebrewes. Neuerthelesse, the meening is all one in eyther of both the wayes. For if yee reade Not: it muste bee in waye of demanding a question, as thus: Though hee kill mee, shall I not trust in him? Yes, I will still trust in him. Or else [if ye read] though hee kill mee. VVhen hee shall haue killed mee, yet will I put my truste in him: wee see that the substance of the matter is not changed. To bee short, Iobs meening is, that although hee bee ouerthrowne, and as it were enraged by his pasions: yet is it not as much to say as that he hath forgone all pacience & intendeth to stand in contention with God, or to alienate himself quite and cleane fro him, or that he is minded to stomack the matter in such wise, as he wil haue no more to do with him. VVherefore? He protesteth that hee hopeth, whatsoeuer come of it. Although hee kil me (saith he) & cōfōūd me: yet wil I not cease to trust in him: neuerthelesse I wil reprocue

my wayes in his sight. Thus am I fayne too intermeddle this vehemencie which you see, and which you perceiue, I say I am fayne too intermeddle it with the hope whiche I haue in God. And heere we haue a fayre and excellent mirrour of Gods working. For hee suffereth the faythfull to fall, to the ende that their fayth may bee the better tryed. These things seeme vnable to be matched together in themselves: but God himselfe maketh them to agree. At the first blush a man would say, lo heere is fire and water: but at the last God bringeth al things to such an end, as there is no disagreement at all. There haue beene some which in their disputations, would fayne alwayes conclude after the maner of the Philosophers, that al things are so put in order, as there is no disagreement, but a certaine league or couenant throughout all things: but such men neuer knew what it is to haue beene sifted by God, and to haue passed through his iudgements. And why? For (as I haue said) God handleth vs after such a straunge fashon, that al things are confounded in that cace. And in good sooth there are things in vs also which can neuer be made to agree. For sometimes we be desirous to liue, and sometymes wee woulde fayne die: and these are things contrarie. Yea, but the respects are diuers: for (as sayth Saint Paule) naturally we couet to bee, and consequently we shunne death. Death is horrible to vs, bicause it is contrarie to our nature. That is the thing that dismayeth a man. But on the other part we see that wee bee hilde heere as in a prison: so long as this bodie of ours compasseth vs about, wee are in bondage to sinne, and therefore we be inforced too sigh and bee sorie, and therewithall too long for the euerlastingnesse, which is promised vs after the tyme that God shall haue taken vs out of this worlde (for when wee drawe towarde death, then come wee to it, and death is the verie gate of lyfe) assuring our selues that forasmuche as Iesus Christ hath passed the same away, we neede not to bee afrayde that death shall haue any power ouer vs: for it is a rebated or blunted swoorde whereof the poynt is broken of, so as it cannot hurt vs: and although it draw some bloud of vs, yet notwithstanding, the same shall be but to rid vs from all diseases. It shoulde seeme that these affections are contrarie, and so they bee in deede. But God agreeth them verry well, in such wise that the things which wee haue conceyued by our naturall wit are put vnder foote, bicause fayth getteth the vpper hande. As much is to be sayde of that which Iob handleth in this streyne. For yee see that the faythfull are fully resolued vpon this poynt, namely, to put their trust in God, and to hope for saluation at his hande, howsoeuer the worlde go. But thys thing they cannot doo, except they hilde him for their father, and resorted to him for refuge: [as if they should say,] beholde God hath bene my father to the vttermost, and therewithall hath giuen me leaue to come vnto him. Therefore must I call vpon him, put my selfe intoo his keeping, and not doubt but he will alwayes be mercifull vntoo mee. Yea but hee scourgeth mee, and when I am in minde too come neere him, I shall not perceyue that hee hath hearde mee. Verely thys conceyte is harde and combersome too beare: but yet muste I tary the leysure of my GOD with patience, and doo him the honour to rest my selfe vpon his promises. Lo howe the faythfull are fully resolued in that poynt. But on the other side, it behoueth them to knowe themselves: and it is vnpossible that they shoulde knowe their owne infirmities, but that they must also make their moan, and say, How now? And these are things contrarie. For if wee ought to rarie Gods leysure with silence: is it meete for vs too make a disputing, and to enter intoo complaynts?

For so to do is contrarie to fayth. True it is that it is contrarie at the first sight: but God setteth them at one well ynough. For after wee haue beene tossed and turmoyled with some hartburning: beholde, fayth draweth vs in such wise vnto stillnesse, as finally we conclude thus: Out of all doubt, the goodnesse of God will neuer forsake vs howsoeuer the worlde go, but we shall alwayes find him fauourable, although he shew not himselfe so at the first brunt. Thus ye see what wee haue to gather in effect vpon this streyne. Now we see wherat Iob aimed when he sayde, although God kill mee, yet will I put my trust in him: and yet neuertheless I will reason with God, and reprove mine owne wayes. For the Hebrew worde that he vseth, signifieth to Reprove, and also to Debate, or Pleade. So then his saying and protestation is, that hee is not the man whome the parties that had spoken, tooke him too bee. For they tooke him too bee such a one as would haue played double or quit, that he woulde haue trusted no more in God, and that hee had spoken those things as it were in dispite [of God.] But he telleth them he is none such, for hee holdeth him still too his trust in God. Now then seeing that he trusteth in God, he must of necessitie submit himselfe to him. For to trust in God is not to shrinke away from him, and to holde ones selfe aloofe: But contrariwise to trust in God, is to come vnto him, and when hee seemeth farre off from vs, even then to streyne our selues to get to him: and therewithall moreouer to doo as the holy Scripture telleth vs: namely too shrowde our selues vnder the shadow of his wings, and to returne vnto him, that he may receyue vs into his lappe, as a childe is receyued of his owne father. Yee see then what is conteyned heere. For when Iob sayth, hee will trust in God continually: he sheweth that hee is not as one of these straglers that make outleapes, bicause they be desirous too play the horses that are broken looce. It is cleane contrarie (sayth he:) for I desire nothing but to be neere him, and that he shoulde haue his hande vpon mee. Hereby then is hee cleared of the false slaunder that hee was charged withall. But yet neuertheless he sayth afterwarde, Beholde, yet must I reason with God concerning my wayes: that is too say, the hope that I haue is not such as is vitely vnmingied with complaynts, so as I should not lift vp my selfe nor murmure agaynst God at all. True it is that this proceedeth of infirmitie, yea euen of sinfull infirmitie woorthie to bee condemned. But howsoeuer the cace stande, God letteth him not go altogether. For as I sayde afore, fayth ouerruleth oure affections. VVhen we trust in God, and call vpon him, it is not as much to say as we should neuer haue any bickerings in our selues. But fayth must get the vpper hand, the peace whereof Saint Paule speaketh must winne the victorie: that is to say, it must get the maystrie in oure hartes. In that he speaketh of the peace of God, and attributeth victorie vnto it, he sheweth well that wee shall haue turmoylings in vs, and that we shall be tossed to and fro. But what remedie is there for it? This peace of God must be of such power as it may get the maystrie in the ende, and all oure passions bee brought in awe of it. Then let vs marke well, that in protesting that hee will trust in God, Iob doth also confesse his owne infirmitie, and shewe that hee is not so perfect but that there is alwayes some fault to be found in him. But yet neuertheless hee fleeth alwayes to God for refuge. Sith the cace standeth so, let vs also on our side vnderstande that when we bee shaken with the prouocations of our fleshe, and our owne affections do somewhat carie vs away: wee must not therefore dispayre, nor imagine that God will helpe vs no more. But let vs plucke vp our hartes too

Psal. 17. b. 8
6. 57. 4. 2.

Col. 3. 6. 15.

trust

trust in him, and although wee doo it not so perfectly as were requisite, yet let vs be sure that hee will make vs to feele that our wayting vpon him is not in vaine. For he will strengthen vs continually more and more in fayth, and make the same to get the vpper hand of all the temptations of the worlde and of this present life.

But let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him too make vs to feele them in such wise, as being alhamed of them in our selues, we may labour to haue our recourse to him and to his mercy: And that it may please him not onely to forgiue vs our faultes that are past, but also to rid vs out of the miseries wherein we be: that being receyued into his protection and custodie, wee may neuer slip from him, and that howsoever Satan practize agaynst vs, hee neuerthelessse will bee alwayes so at hande, as wee may euer haue wherewith too beate backe the assaults that our mortall enemy maketh vpon vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely too vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The .ij. Sermon, which is the thirde vpon the thirtenth Chapter.

16. He will yet still be my helpe: and the hypocrite shall not come before his face.
17. Herken to my vvordes, and marke vvhath I shall tell you.
18. VVhen I shall haue set downe my case, I knowe I shall be iustified.
19. VVho vvill pleade agaynst mee? For if I holde my peace I am vndone.
20. Onely graunt me these two things, and then vvill I not hyde my selfe from thy sight.
21. VVithdraw thy hande from mee, and let not thy vvraath make me afrayde.
22. And [then] if thou speake, I vvill ansvvere: or else I vvill speake, and ansvvere thou.

He haue seene already the protestation that Iob made: that is to wit, that hee would still trust in God, euen when he were ouerwhelmed by his hande. And (as I sayd) that was to shewe howe hee had a deeper conceyte and feeling of Gods judgement than men commonly haue: according wher-vnto hee knewe that there was a double rightuousnesse in God. Nowe he confirmeth and ratifieth the same matter a newe, saying that God will bee his helpe: yea: For the hypocrite (sayth hee) shall not come before him. As if hee should say, I knowe that I present my selfe before God, and therefore I am sure that after he hath handled me so hardly, and afflicted me with extremitie, he will still shew himselfe to be my Sauour. VVherevpon then doth Iob ground the hope of his welfare? Vpon that hee dareth approch vnto God. True it is that the hypocrites do also approche vnto God, according as it is sayde in the eight and fiftith of Esay, This people seeketh me day by day, and they preace to me as if they would know my wayes.
VVee see that these hypocrites which haue no affection nor zeale, do neuerthelessse make many windlasses, and martyr themselues, and it shoulde seeme there were nothing but fire and flame in them to get neere vnto God.
Yea, but they do nothing else but turne the potte aboute.
It is not for that they bee desirous too come the streight way vnto God, but they woulde fayne be quit with him, without comming to him at all. As howe? VVe see how the hypocrites are very full of deuotion, and are buzie about this and that. And what pretend they therby. VVhen the Papists heare three Masses in a day, when they make muche bibblebabble, when they take holy water, and when they trot from altar to altar: it is certaine that they pretende to serue God: but their pretending of it is in suche sort, as God beholdeth them not nere at hande, but they withdraw themselues and stray farre away from him. And that is the cause why the Prophete Ieremie liketh all these braueries, and all these maskings, and all these ceremonies that are among men, vnto a theeves caue. For like as a theefe retyreth into couert, too the ende he might not be seene, and his fault come to light:
euen so doo hypocrites make fundrie colours and lurkingholes in this and that and in euery thing which they call the seruice of God. But what for that? It is too the ende that God shoulde demaund nothing of them, but let them alone as they bee, that they may couer themselues vnder that mummerie. Thus then you see that the hypocrites make countenance of approaching vnto God, howbeit that the same bee not in truth. Therefore although they bee puffed vp with sonde misweening, yet are they neuer the neerer vnto God for all that: and although they perke vp with their nebbes, and be bolde to make many protestations, insomuch as it seemeth that they would euen runne vpon God [for haste,] yet come they neuer the neerer vnto him: but [their doing so, is] bicause they are besotted, and thinke not vpon God: for if they thought vpon God, they woulde not be so bolde.

VVe see then that when the hypocrites haue playde the fooles in their owne sonde trifles, and dallied with God as it were with a little babie: they thinke themselues as rightuous as the Angels, and that there is no fault to bee founde with them: and that if God demaund any thing more at their hande, he doth but presse the to much, and that they are so farre from being indetted vnto him, that (to their seeming) he is beholden vnto them. Ye see then howe the hypocrites flash out fire and flame in such sort, as it shoulde seeme they woulde runne vpon God: But why is that? Bicause they thinke not of him, nor haue any liuely feeling of him in their consciences. To bee short, a man shall neuer come too God with a good hart, and with a pure and free affection, except hee honour him, and in honouring feare him, and in fearing trust in him. All these things (say I) must bee in a mans hart before he can euer come vnto God, and haue any acquaint-tance with him. The first poynt (I say) is to honor God:
that is to say, to knowe what his Maieslie is, and that it becommeth vs to yeeld our selues wholly therevnto, too do him homage. Vntill wee haue conceyued this Maie-stie of God which is aboute vs, we shall neuer be desirous to come vnto him. Feare must also bee matched therewithall: that is to say, after we haue graunted him all so-ueraigntie and dominion, we must be desirous too serue him, and to walke as he commaundeth. But this feare alone is not ynough. Therefore we must learne to knowe Gods goodnesse, that wee may put our trust in it, which also is the meane to come vntoo him. And for this cause Iob sayth, that the hypocrites will neuer appeare in Gods presence: that is too say, they will shunne God as much as is possible: according also as we see that when they be spoken too of death, they torment themselues, and yet notwithstanding it is the way to come vnto God, howbeit

Esay. 58. 4. 2

Iere. 7. c. 11.

bee it that they vnterly eschewe it. Iob then, after he hath sayde that the hypocrites will not come neere God, protesteth that hee himselfe is none of that number. For prooffe whereof, he commeth to God. Yea, and he seeth there is no reasoning with mortall men, and therefore he resteth no more vpon them, but had leuer that god should hearken to him, and that he might haue leaue to speake as if he were before his face. Hereby he presupposeth that God will be his helpe still. But by the way, the wordes that he vseth are somewhat straunge, as we haue seene the like heretofore, and shall see the like hereafter. Howbeit, to the end we may haue the true exposition, let vs folow the order that is hild heere. Hearken ye to me (sayth he) and receyue my wordes: for when I shall haue set downe my case, I knowe I shall be iustified. Here Iob presupposeth that he hath so good reasons to defende himselfe withall, that he shall be quitte before God if he may haue leaue to pleade his case. And he pleadeth not before men, (for he had to deale with deafe eares) but he would haue those to whom he speaketh to holde their peace, and too heare what he shall debate, and too wayte for the ende and issue of that which shall be vttered of God. VVe see then what the summe of his intent is: that is to wit, he ment to say that he should be quit, if he might haue leaue and libertie too debate his case. And wherupon dependeth this? VVee must call to minde, what hath bene declared afore: that is to witte, the two sortes of Gods rightuoufnesse: That God will sometymes iudge men by his law: for there he hath giuen vs a rightuoufnesse whiche is throughlye knowne and apparant vnto vs. God doth as it were enter intoo couenant with vs, when hee giueth vs this rule: marke howe I will haue men to liue, he that doth not all these things, cursed be hee: and whosoever persourmeth my law, shall liue. Seing then that our Lord hath so certified vs of his will, hee hath shewed vs a rightuoufnesse that is altogether apparant. But if hee shoulde iudge vs thereafter, we should be fayne to enter into an account, and to examine our life by euery commaundement, and too thinke with oure selues, Go too, wherein hast thou done amisse? Beholde, thy God requyret such a thing: hast thou performed it? No: then thou seeest wherein thou art faultie. Marke (I say) how we shall be condemned by the law. Likewise on the contrarie part, if we know our selues to haue fulfilled Gods law, (which is vnpossible, but I admit it were so) I say when a man tryeth his workes throughly, if he finde that his life hath bene conformable to Gods law, then is hee iustified after the rightuoufnesse that is apparant and knowne too vs. But yet for all this, Iob hath protested heere tofore, that there is a higher rightuoufnesse in God whereby hee coulde condemne euen the Angelles. VVherefore is that? For althoughe God allowe a mans life when it is throughlye framed according to his lawe: yet is not hee bound thereby, neyther is it as much to say as wee owe him no more seruice, and that hee shoulde holde vs acquitte. For if we compare the perfection that is in God, with the perfection that is in the creature: what will come of it? The Sunne may be darkned though it giue light to the whole worlde: that is to say, there is nothing that can suffize or satisfie that matter. So then let vs marke well that whensoever God liketh to iudge vs by his lawe, although wee know no euill nor vice in our selues, yet shoulde we not be righteous for all that. But let vs come to that which Iob sayth. VVhensoever I shall haue leaue too pleade my case (sayth he) and to lay foorth my matter in order, and to Red, e all my reasons: I know that I shall then be iustified. That is to say, If God would iudge mee but according to his law, & that I might answere to shew what my life hath bene: then should I be iustified. But I haue tolde you that this is impossible. For there needes none other prooffe to shew that al men are cursed and damned, then that God sayth, that whosoever performeth not all these things shall be accursed. VVhen S. Paule goeth about to proue that no man shall be iustified by the deedes of the law, but that we be all gilty before God, so as al mouthes must be stopped: hee alledgeth the samie sentence. Yea? But doth it follow therevpon that we are all damned? VVe must looke whether we doo Gods lawe or no. And S. Paule presupposeth that we do it not: that is to say, that there is none which dischargeth his dutie, but all of vs are farre off from it. So then what needeth Iob to say that he shall bee iustified if God would admit him to stand to his defence, as if God had not wherof to accuse him, or that he were not faultie in any thing? And we knowe that inasmuch as hee was a mortall man, hee was clothed with many infirmitie and sinnes. How then doth he meene that hee coulde be quit? First of all wee must call to minde what hath bene touched heretofore: namely that Iob looketh not simply at his owne deseruing, nor what he is of himselfe: but at Gods intent in scourging him. As how? VVee haue seene that God findeth sinnes in vs that are worthie to be punished: Go too, he beareth with them, and forgueth them, and yet in the meane while he will afflict vs for some other cause, as befell vnto Iob. True it is, that he was a wretched sinner, and that God according to his law might haue punished him extremely: but yet notwithstanding hee had no such respect. VVe haue seene afore, that God punished not Iobs sinnes as of set purpose to punish him, as if hee should say, I will punish this man bicause he hath deserued it, or bicause he hath liued naughtily. No: God had no such respect with him. VVhat then? He intended that Iob should be a mirrou to all men, to the ende that when we beholde him, we may haue occasion to humble our selues, (knowing that Gods hande is too heauie for vs to beare, and also considering our owne fraytie, and that according to his secret and incomprehensible iustice, he might handle vs a hundred thousand times roughlier than he doth,) and therewithall also haue an eye too the pacientnesse of the man. God then ment to vse Iob to all these matters: and so wee see that his intent was not too punish him. And that is the cause why Iob sayth, that if hee had leaue too speake and too open his case at large, he shoulde bee founde righteous, according too Gods intent: that is to say, as in respect of the present affliction that he endured, God shoulde not finde any iniquitie in him in that behalfe, but contrariwise allowe him for one of his seruants. But Iob in so saying reiecteth not the forgiuenesse of sinnes wherevpon all our rightuoufnesse is founded. VVee say that men are made righteous by onely sayth, bicause we bee all damned in our workes (this is true) and bring all damnation and cursednesse before God, and therefore must all of vs abide shame and confuzion. For this cause it standeth vs in hande too borrow a rightuoufnesse that God may like and allowe: which thing is done when our Lord Iesus Christ clotheth vs with his owne rightuoufnesse, and the same is allowed vs before God. Ye see then that we become righteous by sayth, bicause we be clenfed and scoured from our sinnes in the death and passion of oure Lorde Iesus Christ. And in the meane time God guideth vs by his holy spirit, and in guiding vs accepteth the seruice that we yeeld him, that is to say, he accepteth the goodnesse which hee hath put into vs. For there is not so much as one drop of goodnesse in vs, which is not giuen vs from aboue. Therefore like as God giueth vs his gracious gistes, so doth he also Zeph. b. 10.

Deut. 27. d.
10.

Gal. 3. b. 10.
Deut. 27. d.
16.

also take them in good worth. But howe can our workes please God? It is in that he hath not an eye too the imperfections that are in them. For there is not any thing in vs but it hath some blemish before God: but hee regardeth not that: hee beareth with vs of a fatherly loue. Ye see then that we may be righteous before God: yea verely inso much as it pleaseth him to like well of vs, and not that he is bounde too it, or that we haue deserued it. After that maner Iob sayth that hee shall bee found righteous: whereby he excludeth not Gods grace and mercie, which hee extendeth to those that are his, in bearing with them and in not handling them rigorously, and calling their life to account poynt by poynt. And herewithall let vs marke also, that Iob speaketh excessiue as hee hath done afore. What is the reason? Hee was as a man that raueth, and as one that is astraight that hee woteth not where he is. For this cause he disputeth not but of Gods secret rightfulness which was ouerrough to him, and therefore he sayth, it is no maruell though he be so troubled, and as it were swallowed vp of dispayre, seeing that God persecuteth him after that fashion without shewing him why, Iob then is as it were astonied in such sort as hee hath not an eye to that which he knoweth to bee true, namely that God can well make him too feeble his sinnes when hee examineth him but onely according to his lawe: but hee considereth that inasmuch as God pardoneth his seruantes that walke in soundnesse, it is a straunge thing that he hauing done so, yea euen wyth all his hart, is neuerthelessse handled so roughly, and feeleth the heauinesse of his hande. For the better vnderstanding heereof, let vs looke vpon that which he addeth. He desireth God too graunt him twoo articles: and then (sayth he) I will not hide my selfe from thy sight: that is to say, I will be readie to receyue what punishment thou listest, I will no more complaine that thy hande is too rough to me, I will no more plead with thee when thou pressest me, condicionally that I haue those twoo poynts. The one whereof (sayeth he) is that thy hande should bee withdrawne from me, and that thy terriblenessse should no more dismay mee. By this hee meeneth too saye, that hee prayeth him not too execute his iudgement before he haue indited him. Iob thinketh it very straunge that God should scourge him so sore without making him priue wherefore. It is all one therefore as if a prisoner should desire to be set at libertie, when hee knoweth himselfe to be quite and cleane shaken off, and that men wil not giue him any hearing at all. What shal he do? If a prisoner be tormented without any examination, without any question put vnto him, or without any prooffe or information layde agaynst him, if yet neuerthelessse hee be thrust into a deepe dungeon, if he be set in the stocks, (as Iob complayneth heere) specially if he bee streyned vpon the racke, so as it should seeme he were like to be dismembred: I say if a poore prisoner were handled after such a fashion: what would hee say? Iob then complayneth that God doth nowe execute such a rigour agaynst him, and yet no action commenced agaynst him. Thus ye see the first poynt whereof he speaketh. The seconde is, That God should call him. That is to say, that his case might bee layde forth orderly, as when rigour ceaseth, and men deale by order of lawe. Well (sayeth hee) let the action be commenced, and I wil no more hide me from thy sight: that is to say, I will not refuse any thing whatsoeuer it be: dispose of me as it shall please thee, and I will be patient, and obey thee in all poynts. Wee see then that Iob is excessiue as a man oute of his wittes. Why so? For had hee looked well to himselfe, it is certaine that he should haue known that he had not aught for which hee might haue shewed himselfe before God, but that hee must haue bene faine too haue come with his head hanging downe: like as when men come to that poynt, that they must be faine to acknowledge their owne wretchednesse, & stand cofounded before him. Iob therefore would not haue vsed such maner of talke, if he had not bene forepossest with a maruelous great amazednesse, so as he had no moderate discretion in him to humble himselfe before God as became him. But by the way we haue a good & very profitable lesson to gather of this present text. And first of all let vs remember that which I haue sayd alreadie: that is to wit, that if God list to handle vs after a more rigorous maner than that whiche is conteyned in his lawe: yet hath hee authoritie to do it as iudge of the worlde. Wee may well replee too the contrary: but wee shall gayne nothing by our murmurings. Therefore haue not wee good cause to humble oure selues? Furthermore, let vs consider a little in what case wee should bee if God should handle vs but according to the measure that is conuenient for vs. For I haue told you that God hath giuen vs his lawe, not respecting that whiche wee owe vnto him, nor also too viter the perfectnesse of his owne rightuousnesse: but as hauing a regarde to that which is meete and conuenient for creatures. But in steede of approuing oure life before him, when it commeth to be iudged by his law: wee bee faine to stande ashamed of it, yea and that not in one sort, but in a thousande. For our sinnes and misdoings are a bottomlesse gulfe. Seeing then that the case is so, there remaineth nothing for vs but to humble oure selues and to sigh, and too bee ashamed of oure shamefulnessse. For (as I sayde) we may well checke with God: but that will alwayes bee a cause too prouoke Gods wrath more and more agaynst vs. Furthermore let vs beare in minde, that Gods visitations are verie hard to bee borne, seeing that Iob was so caried away as hee wist not what hee did, and was as a man out of his wittes. Why so? Bicause God pressed him with his terriblenessse. And heereby wee bee warned, that if God punish vs rigorously, wee muste needes bee ouerwhelmed with dispayre, and bee vtrerly confounded. It is true, that so long as wee bee a good way off from blowes, we can be stout ynough: but when God commeth to iustle with vs in good earnest, we feeble what his force is, which wee had set light by before: and whatsoeuer wee imagined too bee in our selues, shall bee lesse than naught, and nothing else but smoke and fonde furmizing. It is requisite to knowe this. For wee knowe there is nothing more agaynst our saluation, than the said presumptuousnesse wherewith wee bee besotted. This maketh vs rash and to runne at randon: and we not onely are not contented too passe our boundes, but also wee woulde sayne theye about the clowdes. Ye see then what is the cause of our decay: namely this foolishhe ouerweening, wherewith we be dazeled. And moreover the same dooth so hinder vs from calling vpon God, that where as wee ought too resorte too him for refuge, and too broode oure selues vnder his wings: euery of vs runneth ryot, and to our own seeming we can moue mountaynes and worke wonders. Thus ye see wherin the cheefe point of our saluation halteth: that is to wit, that whereas wee ought to flee vnto God, by prayer and supplication, specially when we be pinched with any aduersitie and at the last cast: wee go too seeke worldely helpes, or else wee yeelde too oure owne fonde fancies which haue deceyued vs. Woulde wee then bee exempted from such illusions and vaine thoughts? Let vs loke vpon our selues in the example of Iob, & consider that seing he hath abiddé these spiritual battels (that is to say, seing god pressed him in such wife that he felt him as hisemie) if God doo nowe adayes shewe him selfe our iudge, we cannot shun his hande nor escape his rigour. True it is that if we haue any such conceyte, we shall be so dismayde, as wee shall see nothing but the gulfe of hell gaping vpon vs, and it shall bee impossible for vs to haue eyther reason, modestie, stay, or measure at all. And well ought wee to consider this, that we may quake at it. Yea, but our quaking must be such as the terrour of it may not continue in vs, but that we may come to the remedie of it: that is to wit, we must pray vnto God to graunt vs the grace too finde rest in him in the middes of our troubles, and that we may bee sure of it, notwithstanding that for a time hee make countenance to set himselfe agaynst vs, to destroy vs vterly. Lo howe wee haue neede to pray vnto God that he will not handle vs rigorously. And moreouer whē he sayth, Graunt mee these two things, and I will come with my head bolt vpriight, and I will not hyde my selfe before thee. Let vs marke that it is not for vs to summon God in desiring him that he should not punish vs before hee haue made vs too vnderstande our finnes. And why? For it were too great an intruding vpon his iurisdiction. Shall the wretched offender appoynt his iudge what too doo? True it is that an earthy iudge may be ouerrigorous (for a man may be pressed too cruelly:) but it cannot bee so betweene God and vs: for whensoever he punisheth vs he beareth with vs, and as for excesse, there is neuer none in him. It is true that wee perceyue not why hee doth things, neyther do we see the ballance and weights which hee vseth. Nay rather it seemeth too vs, that hee turneth all things topsie turuie: and yet for all that, it behoueth vs to honour him in his secret iudgements. And let vs assure our selues that the things which wee thinke to be full straunge, are neuertheless ruled in all vpriightnesse and equitie, inasmuch as they proceede from him, and that they shall be manifested to vs in the ende. Then neede wee not to haue this pryde of desiring too raunge God vnto our fancie, and to require him to do so or so. But let vs content our selues with his good will, praying him to giue vs pacience and full obedience, till hee haue made vs perceyue that all his doings are good. Verely we may well desire God to indite vs before hee punishe vs. *V*Wherefore? To the intent we may bee our owne iudges. For what shall it auayle vs though God punish vs euen with extremitie: if in the meane season we continue stubburne in our naughtinesse, or if we be so slouthfull and dull headed as not to thinke vpon them at all? It woulde alwayes be too our greater damnation. God should beate vpon vs, and we woulde not bowe downe our backes. Our hart would bee neuer awhit the more supple, insomuche that it woulde become like a Styth which beatech backe all blowes. So then Gods chastizements shall neuer further our wellfare, except we be our owne iudges too condemne our selues first. And howe may that be if we know not our faults? For as for those that say, I knowe I am a wretched sinner, and haue well deserued the punishment that I suffer: and in the meane while enter not therewithall into their owne hartes too feele their finnes. such are but hypocrites in saying I haue well deserued this chastyement without knowing how or wherefore. True it is that wee ought too condemne our finnes which we know not of: but yet must wee begin at this poynt, namely of examining our consciences, by seeking there for the thing which is ynough to conuict vs. Otherwise it is vnpossible that euer man shoulde humble himselfe before God, and condemne himselfe truly and vnfeynedly. So then ye see too what ende we may require God too enter processe agaynst vs

before he punish vs: that is to say, that he shewe vs the fauor to lay our finnes before vs, to the ende we may see our owne condemnation, and first of all be beaten downe in our selues. Lo in what wife we may make that request, and not by reason of astonishment as Iob did, when our affliction carieth vs away. Neuertheless although it be lawfull for vs, yea and behooffull also to make such petition vnto God, (that is to wit, that he woulde admitte vs and receyue vs to debate our case with him:) yet must we not require him to withdraw his hande. For God can well do both these things at once: that is to wit, hee can make vs our proces, and therein shewe vs that hee hath iust cause to punish vs, when we see our finnes: and therewithall also continue to make vs feele the strokes of his hande. God then can well do both those things together: And so for much as they may matche together, the receyuing of them together must not be thought straunge: But I tolde you that in this behalfe we must not be altogether like Iob. And why? For when he requireth after that manner too bee admitted too his defence, it is all one (as I haue tolde you already) as if hee woulde pleade agaynst God. For according as hee had sayde that hee shoulde bee iustified and acquitte: hee addeth nowe, That he will speake first if God giue him leaue too speake, or else hee wyll answere when God hath begonne to speake. Heere Iob maketh not his request to the ende afore sayde, that is too witte, too pray God too moderate his rigour, and yet notwithstanding too make vs too perceyue our faultes, and that when hee hath brought vs too such lowlinesse as wee can become oure owne iudges, then euery one of vs maye willingly passe vnder condemnation. But Iobs intent heere is too enter intoo a cleane contrarie case. *V*Ve see then wherein hee fayleth: and this is shewed vs too the entent wee shoulde followe the measure that I haue spoken of already. Nowe wee see the profite that redoundeth too vs by this doctrine, if wee can applie it well too oure vse: that is too witte, that when wee desire too bee heard at Gods hande, the same must not bee too bring excuses as though wee were not faultie, and that wee coulde lessen our offences, or rather make them none at all: but it must bee too enter intoo the knowledge of them, yea and too enter in such wise as we may bee vterly throwne downe, and there may bee none other shift for vs but to flee vnto Gods goodnesse: and that when wee shall haue condemned our whole life, we may notwithstanding not cease to trust in the mercie which hee hath promised too wretched sinners, when they mistyke of their finnes and condemne them, desyring nothing but that God should receyue them to mercie. Ye see then in what wife we ought too practize this sayde request. But it is hard for vs to attayne to such reason, and therefore we must streyne our selues to it. For this hardnesse must not put vs out of harte, but rather prouoke vs too runne vntoo God, praying him of his grace too touche vs in such wise with his doctrine, as by the meanes of his woorde wee may offer vp such requestes vntoo him as wee maye feele the frute of them. Our faults are tolde vs dayly, and yet there are fewe that thinke vpon them. God therefore perceyuing vs to be so slow, yea euen in such sort as he is not able to moue vs by his worde: listeth vp his hand, and sendeth vs some chastizements. And bicause that if the affliction be but smal, it is nothing to vs, wee do but shake our care at it as the prouerbe sayth: God doubleth his stripes, and scourgeth vs more and more, holding our nozes too the grindstone (as they say,) and withdrawing himself from vs, so as his spirite is as it were quenched in vs, and we feele not that he gouerneth vs any more, insomuch that wee become as poore

poore desperate soules, and crie out alas, what is this? Afterward we become so iraged that wee would sayne haue God to giue vs some releace, and if he giue vs it not, ye shall see vs vtterly past our selues, so as there is no remedie in our state. Then may we well desire God to withdraw his hand and to giue vs leaue to say, Alas, Lord, thou seeest I am a sillie creature, I feele heere thy chastizements which are ouergreate considering myne infirmitie. True it is this chastizement is due too mee, yea and I ought to feele yet much more: but my strength is so feeble and weake, as (to my seeming) I am already shet vp in the dungeon of hell. Alas my God, voutsafe thou therefore to alay thy rigour a little, that I may haue leysure to take my breath, and to bethink my selfe better than I haue doone. VVhen I haue such a releef, I will corse to thee, and my wounds shall be asswaged. For I see that the verye meane too take good by thy scourging, is that I abyde not vnreformable vnder thy hand. Behold the goodnesse that God doeth vnto vs, when hee suffereth vs too come vntoo him. Neuerthelesse when wee make such request vntoo him, it must bee doone with such condition as this. VVell Lord, it is true that the petition which I make is for my necessitie, thou seeest I am able too beare no more, and if thou preuent not the mischeef, I must needes fall into such a gulf of confuzion, as I shall neuer get out of it againe. Neuerthelesse Lord, I referre my self wholly vnto thee, thou knowest what is meete and conuenient for mee, and thou art able too remedie the extremities wherein I am, according as thou haste infinite meanes too plucke thy seruants euē out of death. Now then if we adde this condicion, God doeth well suffer vs too make such request, yea and he will like well of it. Lo what we haue too marke in this sentence. But by the way wee must not think that Iob was so farre ouerseene as too beare himself in hand that he was faultlesse, and that he was ready to enter into lawe with God and too plead against him, weening that he shuld get the better hād. Let vs not think that Iob was sotted with such a folly. VVhat thē? VVe must think that he spake without aduīement, as we be woont to do when our affections ouermayster vs. For we haue our eyes so bleared, as we discern nothing at all. As for example: If a man bee besides himself for greef and anguish as he knoweth not himself any more, some light wordes will escape from him, and if he bee told of it, he will answer it was not so. Yet is it true that he shall haue spoken them, Yea but it shall not seeme so too his owne vnderstanding, bycause his wit is troubled and confounded. For (as I haue sayd) our passions carie vs away in such wise as we be in a maner beside our selues in that cace: and yet in the meane whyle God ceaseth not too mainteyne alwayes a knowledge in vs, the which shall notwithstanding be as good as choked. VVhen a man couereth a fire with ashes and earth, if there be a greate Cole in it, it will lye hid vnderneath and a man shal not see any thing nor perceyue any heate. Euen so doeth God sometymes suffer all discretion too be as it were choked in vs, and in that cace wee see nothing but the ashes, that is to say the passions that are vppermoste, and we see some steame, but the fire sheweth not it self at all. Euen so then standeth the cace with vs. And when Iob made this protestation, he felt himself in such extremitie, that hee sought meanes too come before God, saying that he would be the first that should speake. Let vs bee sure that he spake this as a man vtterly raving in his fittes. Seing the cace is such, let vs lerne to walk alwayes in humilitie, and let vs bee well ware that our affections doo not carye vs away after such a sort, as we knowe not what wee doo or say. Lo heere a sentence that is verie profitable and full of good lerning. For first of all wee see that our affections are like wyld beastes: which dash vs against God. But let vs come too rush at him, and what shall wee win by it? Are wee harder than he? Are wee able too make him too bow, or else too breake him? Alas wee must needes bee crushed and broken in peeces when we rush against him so furiously. And not only so: but also hee will ouerthrowe vs with his blast he nedeth but his breth (as the scripture sayeth) too destroy vs, vndoo vs, and bring vs too nought. Therefore let vs vnderstand that our passions mult bee repressed, and we must hold them in awe, yea and wee must as it were fetter them: that is too say, wee must doo the vttermoste that wee can too abate the headye frantiknesse that is in them. For else what will become of it? wee see what hath happened to Iob, that holie man, the mirrour of pacience, who persisted in the mynd too obey God, and yet notwithstanding it is to be seene that there was such a violence intermedled with it, as he fell too rushing in such wise as he wist not where he was. So much the more then ought we to pray hartely vnto God to rule our passions when wee see them so vnruely as wee be not able to weeld thē, and that he will repress them in such wyse, as they may not come to lift vp them selues against him. Furthermore if we haue happened now and then too overshoot our selues, so as wee haue passed our bowndes and not hearkened vnto God: let vs not be discouraged therefore: for there is a remedie for it: which is, to pray vnto God that he will bring vs vntoo reason againe. And moreover let vs kindie again the fire that is going out: that is too say, when wee see that good conscience is as it were saine a sleepe in vs, and in maner choked, so as we haue not so much as one sparke of lyght, but are as people confounded: I say when wee perceyue that: let vs labour too come too reason againe, that we may say, where art thou, thou wretched creature? Thou seeest that thou stingest thy self here as it were at auenture, yea euen against thy God, and that there is not wit in thy wordes. Therefore it standeth thee on hād too restreyn thy self by measuring the passions which are ouer vehement and excessiue in thee. Lo how it behoueth vs too come backe vnto reason, whē we find our selues so dismayed as wee knowe not what wee say: and let vs assure our selues that that is the thing whereby wee must bethink our selues, more neerly, that we may absteyne from such excessiue speeches as we see Iob hath vttered heere, yea euen without aduīement. Then let vs lerne too moderate our passions in such wyse, as we may desire nothing but that God will giue vs the grace too take such taste of his goodnesse and mercie, that although it seeme that wee should bee confounded, yet wee may not ceasse too reioyce, and too rest our selues vpon his goodnesse, that wee may glorie in him euen in the middes of our afflictions.

But let vs cast our selues downe before the sight of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs perceyue them better, and too make all men foreward and willing to come yeeld themselves vnto him: and that when we shall appeere before his iudgement seate, we may not come with other condicion than first of all to be our owne iudges if we wil be quitte at his hand, and be receyued vnto his fauour and infinite mercie which hee hath shewed vs in our Lord Iesus Christ: and that whensoever he scourgeth vs, hee will so assuage the smart of his rodde, as we may knowe how that his chastizing of vs is too our profit, and that by

Q.

meanes

meanes thereof we may be the more stirred vp to turne agayne vnto him, and to strengthen our selues more and more in his goodnesse, euen till we be come to the place of rest where wee shall fully inioy hys fauoure and graciouse giftes which we possesse as now but by hope. That it may please him to graunte this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The. liij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the. xiiij. Chapter.

23. How many finnes and iniquities haue I shew me my misdeede and my transgression.
 24. Why doest thou hide thy face, and take me for thine enimie.
 25. Doest not thou followe after a broken leafe? doest not thou persecute drie stubble?
 26. Thou vttest bitterness agaynste mee, and makest me too possesse the finnes of my youth.
 27. Thou lockest my feete in the stocks that I cannot scape, and thou printest them in the soles of my feete.
 28. So shall he rotte as an old tree and as a garment that is motheaten.

Heretofore Iob declared a thing that is very true, as I touched yesterday: which is, that when God scourgeth vs, and we see no reason why, if we should go to law with him, for euery poynt that we could lay for our selues, he could lay an infinite number agaynste vs, so as we should be put to confusion, I meane euen the righteouslest men that are. And this is true also, that although we seeme not to be faultie by the lawe and common rule: yet must God be acknowledged and declared to be righteous, and that we shall reape nothing but shame when we haue pleaded neuer so well for our selues. And this dependeth still vpon that which was handled yesterday, that is to witte, that God hath a secret righteousness aboute that which is knowen vnto vs as it is declared to vs in his law. For if the very Angells were examined by that righteousness, they should be condemned, and there is no creature (be it neuer so pure) that is able to faulsh that. And this is it that Iob pursueth a new. For he saith, Show me my misdeedes and mine iniquities, how much I haue sinned and transgressed. True it is that heere he confesseth, that for so much as he is scourged by Gods hande, it behoueth him to humble him selfe: howbeit that he cannot patiently indure that God should scourge him withoute shewing him the reason why. And that is the thing whereto he faulsh. For if God made vs perceiue oure finnes and that we see as it were with our eyes that gods punishing of vs is because we haue offended him in such manner and such: it is so muche more, and therein hee doth vs great grace, at leastwise if we haue the wit and discretion to condemne our selues, that wee may aske him forgiveness. But if we be hardened, what are wee the better for the knowing of our finnes? Notwithstanding, if God hold vs imprisoned when wee bee beaten with his rodde: so as the stripes be hard for vs to beare, and we know not what he intendeth nor for what cause hee scourgeth vs after that manner: yet must wee not murmur: but cast downe our countenance, and saye, Lord I will tarrie thy leysure till thou shew me what is the end of this affliction. True it is that wee maye well wish it wold please God to make vs perceiue what hys meaning is, that when we know his will, we might profite by it: it is lawfull ynough for vs to make such a request. But yet therewithall wee must haue the myldnesse to hold our tungs, vntill it please him to shew vs more at large that which is vnknowen to vs. Well then, that we may fare the better by this sentence, let vs marke that Iob perceiued, howe it was God that scourged him. Marke that for one speciall poynte. Secondly hee was fully perswaded that he should not amend his case by pleading agaynst God: and furthermore also he knewe that God scourged him not after the ordinarie manner as he is wont to punish men: he handled not Iob after that fashion. Therefore he knew that that whiche hee indured was not a common chastizement, and suche a one as a man mighte bring vnder ordinarie rule, but a secret and hidden determination of God.

Iob knewe this: and he ought too haue bin patiente. In all the thinges that I haue spoken of, he failed not a whit. For it is a great matter when we not only perceiue how it is Gods hand that striketh vs, and feele the strokes of it, but also know whereof they proceede. Yee see then a thing that is good and righte profitable.

And seeing we know that God shall alwaies be found righteous, and that wee may well grudge agaynste hym, but we shall neuer further our case by it, but wee must needs be euermore condemned.

See yee not a good lesson, if wee can learne it and beare it in mynde? Also the same will serue to humble vs, so as we shall haue our mouth shut, to the ende wee may restrayne and bridle oure affections, that wee stomacke not matters agaynste God. And let vs vnderstande that there are secreete iudgements in him, which we cannot perceiue: which thing serueth also to holde vs so muche the more in awe, that we may not be prouoked through presumption and malapartnesse too dispute agaynst God.

Thus then ye see good thynges. But yet therewithall men must haue a stay of them selues, when they perceiue that God punisheth them, and they knowe not wherefore. I say they must be quietminded and tarry till God discover that thing vnto them, which as yet is concealed. In this poynt Iob failed. But let vs consider that he was forepossessed with the griefe that hee indured, so greatly as it is not too bee woondered at, though hee were astonished and desired God to handle hym at leastwise according to his finnes, and not to persecute hym any further. For when GOD bendeth hym selfe so agaynste a poore creature, and so stretcheth out his arme as it seemeth, hee will thunder vpon him: and when a man hath no respite but is tormented more and more, so as hee seeth no ende of his myserie, but is as good as ouerwhelmed in that behalfe: alas it is no maruell though some wandering words scape him, and euen so is it with Iob.

Wherefore let vs learne to pray God, that whē it shall please please him too put vs too such incounters, he will not suffer vs too quayle: and specially that when our infirmitie sheweth it self, so as we be at the point too enter into wicked imaginations, hee will plucke vs backe too himself, and bring vs again too such state as we may gloriſie him in his incomprehenſible iudgements. Thus ye ſee what wee haue too marke in the firſt place vpon this ſtreyn. But now a man myght demaund heere, why Iob vſeth not ſingly the woord Sin alone, too ſay, Shewe mee how many ſinnes I haue, but addeth Iniquities, transgreſſions, and miſdeedes: too what purpose doeth he that? It is all one as if hee ſhould ſay, when God hath examined me throughly in all poynts, he ſhall find no cauſe why to handle mee ſo roughly. Not that Iob eſteemed him ſelf ryghtuouſe (as I haue ſayd already): but he ſpeaketh out of a troubled mynd, ſo as he hath no regard of thoſe things, but only reſteth vpon conſidering that hee is no ſuch perſone as his freendes had reported him to be: that is to wit that God puniſhed him by cauſe he was a greater ſinner thā other men. And in this he hath a good cace: but in the meane whyle hee conſidereth it not at all, as he ought to doo. Fynally Iob declareth that whē God ſhall haue ſerched out throughly all the euill that is in him, he ſhal find that the puniſhments which hee indureth, are not by cauſe of his miſdoings. Some there are that in this place haue made a diſtinction betweene will full ſin, and ſin of ignorance: betweene that which is committed againſt God, and that which is committed by ouerſight as they terme it. But that diſtinction hath no ſubſtance in it. Iob (as I haue touched already) ment rather to ſet downe the cace in particulars too the full. And for the better perceyuing hereof, let vs marke that when God ſpeaketh of his lawe and of his commaundements, hee vſeth diuerſitie of termes, as Ordinances, Statutes, Decrees, iudgements, and ſuch other like: for ther are a ſeuē or eyght words that import all one thing. And why is that? Firſt and formoſt his meening is too ſhewe, that yf wee walk not ryghtly we cannot alledge ignorance. VVhy ſo? For he giueth vs full inſtruction how wee ought too liue. Thoſe therefore that goe aſtray make no reckening of obeying God. VVhat is the reaſon? If wee would ſtudie his woord well, wee could neuer doo amiſſe: for that would guye vs in all poynts and all caces. Ye ſee then for the firſt place whereyntoo this diuerſitie of words ſerueth when it is ſayd, Statutes, Ordinances, Obseruances, Proclamations, Decrees, Teſtimonies or VVitneſſings: iudgements, &c. All theſe ſerue to ſhewe that God guideth vs ſo carefully, as wee cannot make one falſe ſtep, if wee followe that which he teacheth vs. And therefore wee are the more vnexcusable if wee do amiſſe. For God hath ſet many barres in our wayes too hold vs backe, hee hath made vs a certayne path, hee hath ſet vs bounds on all ſides, hee himſelf guydeth vs that wne cannot ſwarue too the ryght hand nor too the left, and with his doctrine he giueth vs admoniſhments, conſirming the whole too our vſe. Now then if wee take the contrarie way: men may ſee it is of purpoſed malice, yea euen as if wee were out of our wits. Thus ye ſee how men are made vnexcusable, ſeing that God hath not commaunded the thing that is good, in a woord or twayne: but hath ratified and ſtabliſhed it by making Ordinances, Statutes, and Obseruances, euen of purpoſe that men ſhould be conuicted of ouerheynous rebellion when they go againſt all thoſe things. And on the contrarie part, when the ſame maner is vſed in ſpeaking of ſinne: It is to the end that men ſhould bee the better touched, and vnderſtand that they haue not committed a ſmall and light fault, but that they haue deſerued too bee puniſhed with rigour, and that their transgreſſions are horrible. As for example: VVhen Dauid in the two-andthirtieth Pſalme ſayeth, that the man is bliſſed whoſe ſinnes God forgiueth, whoſe iniquities are couered, whoſe transgreſſions are buried, and whoſe miſdoings God remembereth not any more. (See wherein mannes happineſſe conſiſteth): wherefore doeth Dauid ſpeake of Sinnes, iniquities, and Transgreſſions? Had it not ben ynough too haue ſayd in one woord, Bliſſed is the man whoſe ſinnes God hath forgiuen? But he ment to expreſſe the infinite graciouſe goodneſſe that God ſheweth vs when he forgiueth vs our ſinnes. And why? For if he ſhould call vs too a reckening, alas there would be none end, and wee ſhould not only be found in arrerage vnto him in ſome one parcell: but aſſoone as hee ſhall haue caſt vs in one poynt, he ſhall be new too begin again in another. Dauid then knewe that men were plunged in damnation as deeply and horribly as myght bee, ſauiug that God pulleth them backe through his owne infinite goodneſſe: and that when hee doeth ſo, men ought not to ouer paſſe it ſlyghtly, as if he had releaſed them but a det of ſiue ſhillings, but they muſt bethink them well of their miſdeeds, of their iniquities, and of their transgreſſions: they muſt mynd them throughly, and beare them in remembrance. By this then wee ſee why there is vſed ſuch diuerſitie of words. But as now Iob is flat contrarie: as if he ſhould ſay, True it is that men may do amiſſe many wayes, it is true that they bee exceedingly blame woorthie before God: but yet for all that, when my life is throughly examined, there will be nother miſdoings, nor transgreſſions, nor iniquities too deſerue that God ſhould handle mee after this faſhyon. But wee muſt bee heedfull too beare in mynd what hath ben ſayd: namely, that Iob ment not to iuſtifie him ſelf as though he had performed all things too the full: but only had an eye too Gods intent for the which he puniſhed him. For it is certaine (as we haue ſeene already) that God had not reſpect vntoo his ſinnes how greate they were: but ment too proue his patience. Lo why hee ſcourged him. But that wee may take the more profit of this doctrine, let vs marke firſt, that if God liſt too vſe rigour towards vs, it is certayne that for any one ſin hee may puniſh vs in ſuch wiſe, as wee ſhall not knowe where to become, and yet he ſhall do vs no wrong. Then of much more likelyhod, if he liſted to puniſh vs for all our ſinnes, there ſhould be no end. And thirdly althoughe he puniſh vs not directly in reſpect of the faultes that wee haue committed: yet ſhall he be ryghtuouſe ſtill, and it becommeth vs to ſink downe vnder him with true lowelineſſe euen in that behalf.

Theſe then be the three pointes which wee haue too marke. The firſt is, that if God liſted to condemne vs for any one fault alone, wee haue no cauſe too reply againſt him, and to ſay, the puniſhment is ouergreate. VVe ſee what it booted Cain to reply againſt God in that wyſe: ſurely he could not deny the deede, he was conuicted of it afore hande: he had already ſayde, Am I the keeper of my brothers lyfe? But when he ſawe that his inquitie was knowne: he ſpited at it, and gnaſhed his teeth, and grunting ſayd: My puniſhment is greater than I am able to beare. For behold I am as a ſolorne man, thou chaſtelt mee, and where ſhall I become? VVhoſeuer meteth me ſhal kill mee. Thus ye ſee how Cain murdureth againſt God, for that his puniſhment was too greate. But (as I ſayd) ſped he euer the better for that? No: his wickedneſſe increaſed ſo much the more. Therefore let vs keepe

Gen. 4. b. 13.

our selues from repinyng, although we wist there were no mo but one fault in vs. For it is not for vs to shewe what our sinnes haue deserued: only God is the competent iudge thereof. And therefore he must punish vs, not after our fancie, nor as semeth good to vs: but according to his owne iudgement. Marke that for one poynte. Moreouer for the second pointe we haue too marke, that as our faults are innumerable: so also wee must not thinke it straunge that God should punish vs after diuers sorts, & double his stripes, and that we should be plunged deeper and deeper into so many miseries, and there languish as folke vterly forlorne. Let vs not thinke this geere straunge. And why? For our faults are without number. That is the second poynt that we haue to beare in mind. For the third, let vs marke, That God may well vtter his hand against vs, yea euen to execute his secrete iudgements, when we haue labored to serue hym with a good conscience, and imployed our selues faythfully vpon our neighbours, yea and liued among men without fraude, without malice, and without violence. VVhen we haue worshipped and serued God purely after that sorte, and when we haue walked vprightly with our neighbours: yet if God scourge vs, we must still confesse him to be righteous. VVe see not why: but yet must not we pleade, we must come shorte of that, and say, VVell Lorde, thou wilt not shew me the reason of this miserie which I indure: neuerthelesse I thinke the time long, howbeit Lorde it is wisdom enough for me, if I can humble my self vnder thy mightie hande. And furthermore do me thou this pleasure for the time to come, that I may knowe what thy purpose was, and that I may profite more and more: and howsoeuer the worlde go, let me not ceasse too glorify thee. Lo after what manner we ought to procede. But after that Iob hath desired God to enter after that sorte as it were into ordinarie pleading, he addeth, VVherefore bidest thou thy face, and esteemest me as thine enimie? Is not that a following of a leafe that is already broken? is it not a persecuting of stubble that is already withered? Here Iob alledgeth his owne frailtie to get some ease of his afflictions, and some asswagemēt of his sores, as he hath vsed to do heeretofore and will do again heereafter. And thys maner of praying is good and holy, when it proceedeth of those causes as we see the faythfull haue done. And in deede heere ye see what we haue to bring vnto God, when we wold obtaine fauoure at hys hande to deliuer vs from our miseries and succoure vs: which is, too lay our feebleness before him. VVhereas fooles alledge their owne worthynesse, and go about too bind God vnto them: we can say nothing, but that wee bee wretched. How shall we then obtaine mercie? Euen by saying, Alas Lorde, consider what we be, thou must be faine to haue pitie of vs bycause we be thy creatures. VVhen a man alledgeth, Alas there is nothing but filthinesse in my body, Lord if thou take away thy strength, beholde I am brought to naught: and as for my soule, what hathe it: it is but a little breath, and if that thou also withdraw thy breath (that is to say, the power that thou hast giuen me) I am thenceforth nothing. And furthermore there is so much ignorance, such store of vices, and so many wantes in it, as is a woonder to see. Alas my God, when thou seest that I am so full of miseries, perceiuest thou not how there is matter for thy mercie to worke vpon? VVe see then that when we be desirous to obteyne fauoure at Gods hande, we must take the same way that Iob dooth heere: Howbeit so as it be with another mynde. For Iob was driuen with too strong a vehemencie, bycause he was weerie too be so pressed by the hande of God, and therevpon he fretted himselfe. VVe must not do so: but oure laying forth of oure miseries before God must bee to the end he may be inclined to pitie vs. And the holy scripture is full of suche texts where the faythfull say, Alas Lord what is man? Behold, Dauid saith, Seeing that my life is but a breath that passeth away without returning, Lorde, wilt thou haue pitie vpon vs to succoure vs, seeing thou perceiuest vs to be so fraile? And that God heareth suche requests, it appeereth by other texts [as by this:] he remembered that they were but flesh, a breath that passeth and returneth not agayne. Ye see then how God witnesseth that when he shewed mercie to the children of Israell, and dealt not with them according to their deserts, it was bycause he sawe they were but flesh, and that there was nothing but corruption in them, and therefore he bare with them. Seeing then that Gods will is such as to spare vs in consideration of the wretchednesse that is in vs: it is certaine that we may and ought to alledge that poynt vnto him, when we intend to obteyne mercie at his hand. Therefore let vs marke well that the words which Iob vseth are lawfull for vs, and that the same is a good forme of praying vnto God, so be it that we go to him with humilitie, and say, Lorde, consider what I am, for I am as a leafe, yea euen as a leafe that is already withered, and yet goest thou about to wipe me out and to ouerwhelme me vterly: and who am I? I am as stubble that is already drie, or as grasse that is already cut downe: there is no more life nor substance in me: alas my God, if thou persecute me moreouer, what shall become of mee? If we speake after this manner, God will accept suche complaints. Not when we come to him with such pride as if he were bound vnto vs: but when we lay our miseries before him to the end he shoulde succoure vs and remedie them: such manner of prayers are heard at his hand. And therewithall let vs beware of questioning as Iob doth: VVhy esteemest thou me as thine enimie? Iob alledgeth it as an vnseemely thing for God to do, [as if he had said:] See lord, thou art almightie: and what am I? lesse than nothiug. And yet comest thou to hold plea against me, whereas I am but a wretched rotten tree, and there is nother life nor sap more in me. VVilt thou then trie thy strength against me? as he saith heeretofore, so repeteth he his words. And that is the cause why I sayde, that we must keepe our selues from being so caried away by our affections. For although God be almightie, and we as frayle as may be: yet notwithstanding it is not for nought that he entereth into battell against vs. If we thinke that straunge, we must shut our eyes: that is to say, wee must not bee so ouerwise in oure owne vnderstanding, as too saye, I would fayne knowe the reason why God handleth me after thys sorte. Let vs keepe our selues from suche presumptuousnesse. Yea marie, but what is meante by thys, that God who hath all thynges in his hande, and with his only looke maketh the mountaines to melte as waxe agaynst the fire, or as snowe [against the sunne] who with hys onely word can destroy the whole world: dothe neuerthelesse aduaunce him selfe too fighte hande to hand with me, I say with me that am a wretched creature? VVhat meeneth that? VVell may we argue on that sorte: but God will make the conclusion to confound vs.

Then let vs not be ouerwise as I said, but let vs take Gods scourging of vs for good, how great, or how strong so euer he be, and how dreadfull so euer his maiestie be towards vs: let vs not ceasse to yeld him the glorye, assuring oure selues that hee is righteous, and that he doth

Psa. 78. d. 37.

Psa. 97. a. 5.

he doeth all things according to reason, though he bend himself against vs, and make countenance as though he would ouerwhelme vs. But in very deepe there is good cause why God should shewe himself our enimie, yea euē though we be vnable to withstand him, and that he despise vs. For inasmuch as wee bee so proude as wee will not stoupe vnder him, and will alwayes seeme rightuouse: he must needs shewe vs our lesson, yea and he must shew vs it by force: for by our good will wee will not yeeld our selues guilty, and therefore God compelleth vs by scourging vs according to our desertes. And is not this a iust cause why God should shewe himselfe our enimie? Again, put the case that God mynd not to scourge vs for our sinnes: yet if he shewe himself not to bee our enimie and bee against vs, it is to the end wee should fight against the temptation of desirousnesse too knowe why wee bee so condemned, which is a very greate and combersome temptation. Gods meening therefore is to see whether we will abyde firme and stedfast in his seruice, notwithstanding that he seeme to bee our enimie. And seing that his drift is such: why should wee not beare it patiently? Yee see then how we ought to bee restreyned from pleading, notwithstanding that God shew himself our enimie, and that there bee no power nor abilitie in vs to resist him. For hee hath iust reason to doo so, though wee bee not priuie to it, and again he sheweth vs it partly, wherefore wee ought too be contented with the small taste that he giueth vs Herewithall wee must take warning by these twoo similitudes, what wee bee: namely to the end wee may lerne to walke warely, and also knowe how greate neede wee haue too bee hild vp and maynteyned by Gods hand and too bee strengthened by his goodnesse. VVhat is a man when God leaueth him in his naturall state? No doubt but he thinks himself a jolly fellow. For wee see how men are fotted in ouerweening, and beare themselves in hand that by their owne wildome strength and all that they haue besides, they bee able to moue mountaynes and woork woonders. But what sayeth the scripture of them? Behold a broken lease, behold a withered herb, behold drye stubble. That is to say, wee bee without freshnesse, without substantialnesse, and woofse thā nothing: and whatsoever glorie wee weene we haue, it is but a blast.

Seing thé that God setteth such mirrours afore vs, let vs looke vpon our owne feeblenesse, and lerne to humble our selues and to rid and strip ourselues naked from all ouerweening. For what doo men when they challenge any thing to themselves, but deceyue themselves as it were wittingly and willingly? Lo how God commeth forth, and telleth vs he wil not haue vs so beguiled with fond and foolish opinions. And therefore hee telleth vs wee be no better than grasse cutte downe which withereth out of hand, so as we be without lyfe, and destitute of all strength and grace. Thus much concerning this point. Now Iob addeth, That God holdeth bim locked vp as in a payre of stockes: and therewithall he sayeth also, that God wryteth bitternesse against bim, and maketh bim to possesse all the sinnes of his youth: thou lockest mee in the stockes sayeth he. And why is that? He sayeth that God sheweth nothing but signes of wrath against him. And forasmuch as sentences are of tenty mes giuen by wryting: Iob hauing an eye to the commo phrase of his countrey, sayeth, that God wryteth bitternesse against him: that is to say, that hee chargeth him with the greuouslest crimes that could be deuised: Like as a iudge that abhorreth a wretched offender which is before him, inhaunceth his offences, and goeth about to shewe that they be so out-

